But to return where I left off, tho' there had been no likelihood to impeach the Emperor in his Indies by this Passage, yet considering it was like to prejudice the King of Portugal in the East-Indies, the Emperor had reason, without receiving any such Sum of Money, to hinder it; for as much as the more Nations Traded that way, the sooner they might discover those Places that were discovered afterwards, as namely, the Philippines, and other

Islands, and in time might prove his most dangerous Neighbours.

But especially the Emperor was married to the Daughter of Don Emanuel King of Portugal, who had the Reversion of all his Kingdoms, if his Heirs males fail'd, as it did, and became Hereditary to Spain.

And therefore it was most ridiculous we should conceive the Emperor ever threaten'd the King of Portugal with that Discovery, or received Money of him to that purpose, as is express'd. But I observe it is the Nature of all Men to flatter themselves with hope of a thing they would have, and will wrest Reasons and Stories to strengthen their Belief, by Example of this which they misreport; and therefore I will set down the Truth of this Story out of Authentick Authors.

There was a long Question and Debate between the Emperor and the King of Portugal, to whom the Molucco's should belong? And it is true the Emperor labour'd to find another way to the Molucco's than by the Cape of Good Hope.

Magellan was a Portuguese by Birth, who had lived Seven Years in the Indies: He left the Service of his King, and offered it to the Emperor, giving hope to find a new way to the Molucco's, tho' it prov'd the Loss of his own Life.

The Controversie to whom the Molucco's should belong continu'd between the Two Crowns of Spain and Portugal, and the Spaniards made sundry Attempts by way of the Straights, but evermore with unfortunate Success. At last Don John III. of Portugal, and Brother-in-Law to the Emperor, willingly lent him 350000 Ducats when he went into Italy to be Crown'd Emperor, upon Condition the King of Portugal should no way be molested in his Possession of the Molucco Islands till that Money was repaid, which being never done, the Spaniards never since pretended to those Islands. But there was no mention made of a North-West Passage.

Altho' there are a great many more Probabilities that the Straights have not been at any time pass'd, than otherwise, yet it is no reason absolutely to disprove a Passage, whatsoever any Man shall ground upon Philosophical Arguments, or by any Globe or Card that is extant; for except a Globemaker can as well prove by Experience that there is such a Sea as he sets down, and by the Testimony of some Men that went it, he may as well suppose what he makes Sea to be as dry Land as the Desarts of Arabia: And therefore leaving this Trial, I will proceed further.

I have perus'd all the Voyages to the North-West made by Sir Martin Forbush and Mr. John Davies, with whom I have often conferr'd touching this Passage; and I have found by them a likelyhood of it, but no more Assurance than from those that never went so far as they did: Therefore whatsoever is hitherto done, is but imaginary.

I must confess that the last year's Attempt of Hudson's has given us knowledge of 400 Leagues further than ever was known before; and out of his Discovery we are to conjecture more or less possibility of it.

And because I make this Voyage the Foundation of all others that shall succeed, I will set down, as much as I can remember, what I received from the Mouth of the Master that came home from Hudson, touching the Particular of his Voyage, and whether it will avail us or no, being discovered.

The Entrance was in 63 Degrees, and they ran in that height 200 Leagues, and finding the Streights, which was 40 Leagues over, to run South, they followed that Southerly Course, making account it would bring them into the South Sea; and here they ran 200 Leagues more, till they found the Water too shallow and unpaisable.

They Winter'd in an Island in 52 Degrees, where in the whole Winter they saw but one Man, who came to them but twice; the second time of his coming he brought with him Three Dear-skins, which he would not exchange for a Hatchet, for he priz'd them at more Value; but when he saw that he could not have it under the whole Three, he was content to let them go, and promis'd by Signs to come the next morning, but came not.

The Savage was Cloath'd in Skins, and his Arrows forked with Iron: They found the Place much subject to North-West Winds, and far exceeding any part of England in Coldness.

As they tended South, going about the Headland, they pass'd near the Shore, and betwixt certain Rocks, small Islands, and main Lands.

They found the Flood to come from the North-West, which is one of their Arguments that it came from the main Sea. The next Voyage must be to discover from whence this Current comes, and to see if, in running West or North-West, they can find a Streight to run South, or an open Sea to the Northward.

Victuals they found none from the Shore, but white Partridges; the Water they had was Snow Water, which fell abundantly into their Ships every night: Wine, Aquavite, and other Liquid Things, did freeze in an exceeding manner, tho' it was but in 52 Degrees.

I conceive Two especial Benefits by Hudson's Discovery; the one, That we have pass'd 200 Leagues more West than was ever discover'd; that hereafter we may be bold to sail 200 Leagues directly, without losing any time to search one Shore or other, which would have taken up a whole Summer if they had not intended to Winter.

The Second is, That whereas there was hope of a Passage to fall into the South Sea, not many Leagues after the Entrance into the Streights, this Discovery has put us out of doubt of it; so that I make account there is another Summer gained.

I will suppose we are 200 Leagues in the Streights, and as they say we encounter with a North-West Flood: But before we direct our Course West and North-West, let us judge of this Flood, and where they met it; if in the midst of the Channel, we may the better believe it came out of the main Sea; but if amongst Islands, broken Land or Rocks, we have no reason to ground our hopes of a Voyage upon it.

For by Experience upon the Coast of Britany, or where there are many Islands or Rocks, the Tides alter according to the Rocks and Islands; and I know Hudson's Company confess they met them amongst Rocks and Islands, and therefore no hold to be taken of a North-West Flood.

But according to the hope we conceive of this Flood, we direct our North-West Course, being enter'd the Streights, and in 62 Degrees. You must note, that in running North-West, every 28 Leagues you raise a Degree; and the further you run any Point to the Northward, the greater hazard you shall endure by Ice and Cold; the worst Wintering, if you be put to it, and the further from your Voyage, because the Course lies Southerly.

But one hope may be, That the Northern Part of America, which is made Land in the Maps, will prove Sea: Allowing it to be true, and 200 Leagues to run but 200 Leagues farther, either Northward or Westward, then let us compare the time we have to pass the Streights, and reckon our departure from England, and we shall find the Climate very unreasonable, either to Winter or to make a Factory, if we pass it not in one Summer.

From England to the Streights Mouth 700 Leagues; to the Place discover'd 200, to the Sea imagin'd 200, North-West, where I will suppose there is an open Sea, tho' the contrary is known. Now have I run 1100 Leagues, and in 62 Degrees.

And if we will know the distance from thence to the Molucco's, or where we have now a Trade, this Rule will lead us, (viz.) to measure with the Meridian Line from the Entrance of the Streights, lying in 62 Degrees, due South, to the height of 23 and a half, which is the Latitude of Cape California; then measure the distance from this Meridian to the Cape California, and from thence to the Cape Mendacina, which is the furthestmost known Part of America, and after to the Molucco's, and you shall find nothing gain'd by this Discovery; for that of necessity the Land of America must be doubled, before we direct our Course to any of the Places aforesaid.

But suppose, upon the opening of the Sea to the Northward, the Land proves, as is describ'd in most Globes and Maps, (viz.) all Land and no Sea, then are you to run due West, in 62 Degrees, as aforesaid, or as the Land shall lie, so many Leagues as you shall measure by the former Rule, (viz.) from the said Meridian Line to the Cape Mendacina, which, considering the distance and the distemperature, the Course alone would not be run in a whole Summer.

Or if, being in 62 Degrees, we find a Passage to run South-West, and to fall into the South Sea about the height of Cape California, it is great odds that Streights will not always run deep, by Example of the Red Sea, and Persian Gulph; both which want no breadth, tho' very shallow; and if this should prove deep and broad; yea tho' the narrowest Place be but one League over, we may have the Honour to discover it; but any other Nation shall reap as great Benefit by it as our selves, if we cannot make it good and fortifie it on both sides.

Let us reckon how many Leagues we shall run before we come to the Molucco's, by the Course into the South Sea; allow we be in 62 Degrees, and 900 Leagues from England, and that our Entrance into the South Sea be in 23 Degrees, South-West; then have we raised 39 Degrees, which in a South-West Course amounts to 975 Leagues; and from that height to Java the distance is certainly known, by the Navigation of Mr. Cavendish, the Pilot of whose Ship, and many ether principal Men, are yet living, and have annexed the distance of Places, the days of sailing, and their abode in every Harbour where they arrived, to the Discourse of the Voyage about the World, as thus:

From Cape California, in 23 Degrees and a half, to the Islands of Ladrones, they note 1550 Leagues; from the Ladrones to the Philippines 320; from the Philippines to Java Major 525; so that by this Computation, which cannot be disprov'd, it amounts to 4572 Leagues betwixt England and Java, by a Passage into the South Sea; and reckoning from Java to England the common way, by Observation of the said Pilot, it is but 4500 Leagues, (viz.) From Java to the Cape of Good Hope 1800 Leagues; from thence to Flores 1200; from Flores to England 450; so that we find by Demonstration that it is further by 445 Leagues by a Passage into the South Sea, than by the known way of the Cape of Good Hope, which is daily frequented.

But it may be said, by the North-West Passage we shall have the Trade of Japan and China, which will more avail us than the Trade of the Molucco's and the East-Indies, because they are many Leagues nearer. If the Passage be found, I confess there is something gain'd in the Distance, but nothing in the Navigation, allowing that this Passage falls into the South Sea; as if it does not, little good is like to ensue of it, because of the hazard of Cold, of Ice, and of unknown Seas, which Experience will teach us.

But to disprove the Opinion of such as are erroneously carry'd away with the Conceit that the Streights are like to fall into the South Sea about the Cape of California, this that follows shall give an infallible Satisfaction, by Proof that has been made upon that Coast to the Westernmost part of all America, both from Mexico within the Land, and from Acapulco and the Port of Nazidad by Sea.

Ferdinand Cortes, who was Captain General of this new Conquer'd Country of New Spain, and Anthony Mendoza at that time Vice Roy of it, the one hating the other mortally, as is the Custom where Two such Commanders have such equal Authority; yet they both preferred the Service of their Master before their own Splendor and Revenge, and jointly undertook a Discovery of Quivira, and the Westernmost Parts of America, being made believe it abounded in Riches, and had a Trade from China, and other Parts of Asia. They employ'd in this Journey one Francis Vasques de Caranaca, who arrived there by Land with a Number of Spaniards, both Horse and Foot; in which Journey they endur'd greater Famine and other Extremities, than all the rest of the Spaniards Undertakings in the Continent of America.

Some

Some of those Spaniards, tho' not many, return'd by Land to Mexico, from whence they departed, and reported the Calamities and Extremities they suffered. By this I collect, and by my Collection, will frame my unanswerable Argument, to give the World Satisfaction, That from Mexico to the Westermost Part of America, in which space, if there be a Passage, it must fall into the South Sea, in all their Journey they found neither Sea, Streight, or other Impediment, to hinder or stop their Journey by Land, but that they went and arriv'd at Sibola and Quivira, from whence they return'd; which they could not have done if there had been a stoppage by Water, either fresh or salt; neither did they carry any Provision of Boats, or other Means to transport Men or Horfe.

But for better Satisfaction to this Point, I will lay open a later Proof, known to divers Englishmen yet living, that were with Mr. Cavendish in his Glorious Voyage about the World in 1586. After he had pass'd the Streights of Mugellan, and the Coasts of Chile, Peru, and New Spain, he came to California, where he took his rich Prize of 700 Tuns of China Silks, coming from the Phillipine Islands, bound for the Port of Navidad in New Spain: This Ship had in her 150 Passengers; and after he had laden his own Ships with her Merchandize, he burnt both Ship and Goods, not being able to carry her with him; and for the Men he put ashore at Cape California, from whence they travell'd by Land as far as to the Port of Navidad, whither they were bound by Sea.

In their way they pass'd many Indian Countries, not commonly known to the Spaniards before; in all which Travel they found no Interruption, by Streight, River, or other Let of Water, fresh or salt: And for the Proof of their safe Arrival at the Port of Navidad aforesaid, besides the Relation I have seen of it, it happened that many years after, a Pilot of the said Prize taken by Mr. Cavendish, and a Greek by Nation, returning into his Country, after 20 years spent abroad, happen'd into the Company of one Mr. Lock, an Englishman, in Italy, with whom he grew acquainted, and related to him all the Particulars of his Voyage, as well what happen'd by Sea as by Land, after Mr. Cavendish's putting them ashore. But leaving this Argument, I will proceed farther.

Allow that we be in 23 Degrees, and in the South Sea, and direct our Course to the Islands of Japan, we are to run 1600 Leagues a Westerly Course, (viz.) to

Cape Mendacina 700 Leagues, and from thence to Japan 900, by the reckoning of Francis Gall, who was a perfect Pilot, and had often sail'd it; so that by this Course we shall run 3475 Leagues from England to Japan.

To prove that nothing is gain'd by this Navigation, I will allow we are at Japan, and resolve upon our Return for England the same way we went: We must so cast our Voyage, as to be sure of a sufficient time for our Passage through the Streights in Summer, otherwise we must resolve to be frozen or starv'd by the way; And what a hazard we shall run if Winds cross us, our Masts break, our Ships spring a leak, the Sails split, Men fall by Sickness: I say if any of these Accidents happen, we are left destitute of all help or hope, and the greatest Calamity or Misery that ever befel Men will light upon us; for there is no Death comparable to Hunger and Cold: And to show how unlikely it is for us to return in one, or scarcely in two Summers, let us examine the Winds and Seasons.

The Spaniards that come from the Philippines to New Spain, stand over to the main Land of America, and coast the Shore, finding the Winds all Easterly at Sea, inasmuch that they are returning 8 Months, which they are going in 10 Weeks; and this is the rather approv'd by Mr. Cavendish's sailing from Cape California to the Philippines, who never found the Wind, from betwixt the East and North-East, from the 19th of November to the 15th of January; in which time he sail'd 2300 Leagues.

So that altho' we shall arrive with a fair Wind at Japan, yet considering we shall find it against us in our return, we shall sooner by one third part, and with less Hazard and Danger, come home by the Cape of Good Hope, than through the South Sea.

Let me now appeal to the Opinion of any Mariner, whether it were not better for a Man to Sail 6000 Leagues in a certain and known Navigation, where the Winds nor Seasons never fail, than 3000 in an uncertain Sea, as we shall find to the Northward, where the Winds are variable, and the Climate unnatural, except it be in the South Sea, which I have shew'd the inconveniency of.

The delay of Voyages is commonly, when the Factor is not ready to lay his Goods aboard; for there may be time lost in seeking such Commodities, as his Merchant writes for, for a convenient time and season to ship it; some want or disability in the Ship or Company, Arrest or Stay by the Prince where they are, or many other Casualties not thought on: But when a Ship departs from any Harbor so far off as the East-Indies, and seeks to recover the place whither she is bound; it cannot be any great hindrance to the Merchant to lose a Months time in coming home, but the rather profitable, as I will demonstrate by one of those Voyages.

For if by the Northwest there be so quick a passage, and so short a way to go and come as is desired, I say the Trade in few years will be overlaid; for as it is now by the Cape of Good Hope, since we and the Hollanders have had Traffique in the East-Indies, Pepper is brought from 2 d. to 4 d. there; and when it encreases in price where it should lessen, and falls where it should encrease, what think you in time this Voyage will come to, if follow'd, either the one way or the other?

Let us likewise consider what needless Commodities they bring from thence. Hee not but this Country may live as well without Spices, as our Forefathers have done; neither are they to be had in truck of our home Commodities, as Cloth, Lead and Tin; but if the Merchant make gain by this Trade, the chiefest Stock he employs must be in Silver, which has, and will in time make such a dearth of Money in England, as all Men in general will rue it: And as I have said before, we shall have the less Money, and the greater quantity of those needless Commodities, if the Navigation should prove short and easie.

If a Man will speak truly and indifferently of the Trade of the East-Indies, it is not so fit for any King or Prince as the King of Spain, who has other Indies to supply the Silver that goes out of his Country; then what hope have we to persevere in that Voyage, who have no Mines or means by Traffique to bring Money in to this Kingdom? For this take for an inassailable Argument, that Country which receives more Commodities than it vends, the surplus must of necessity be of Money: And by reason of our wastful expence in such needless and superfluous things, as Silks, Lawns, Spices, Wine, Tobacco, Sugar, and a hundred such Vanities; we must confess there comes in much more of these Commodities, than goes out of the Realm in Truck for them: And then let us consider the benefit of this Trade, and how long it is like to continue good, for the benefit and profit of this Kingdom.

The mischief that is befall'n us, by exhausting our Silver was foreseen long since by Charles the Fifth Emperor, who beholding the greedy Gain of the Portugueses in their Trade to the East-Indies, was wont to say, 'They were Enemies to Christendom, by carrying their Treasure from Europe to enrich the Heathens.'

But now to proceed to what I conceive of Hudson's last Voyage; I find we are hopeless of any good by the South Streights where he Winter'd, because of the shallowness of the Water in 52 Degrees; or if it had run as far as to have brought him into an open Sea, yet it was a great error in Hudson to bid his company welcome into the South Sea, upon that Streight, tending to the Southward; for if you please to measure it by a Meridian Line, you will find it would have brought him scarcely as far as the Islands of Lucias, which is short of the West-Indies, and the Land Columbus first discover'd.

I verily believe the Savage Hudson met withal, had been acquainted with Trade; First, by adventuring so near the Ships and Men, the sight whereof would have daunted him, if he had not seen the like before. Secondly, that whereas at his first coming, he brought with him three Deer Skins, which he would not truck for a Hatchet, esteeming them of better value; this shews he knew the price of the Hatchet, and knew as well how to rate his Hides: And Thirdly, by the Iron of his Dart, which shew'd manifestly, he us'd to Trade with Christians.

But if it be true, which is told me, that some did imagine the Iron came from Japan, and that those of Japan traded with them People; the conceit is strange to me, that any Man should believe that Japan lying so far thence as it is, should have Trade with a People and Country that affords nothing, no not so much as Victuals.

If the Japaneses came to Discover, they saw themselves out of hope to pass that way, by example of our Men; so that it is like, that if they had been there once, they would not have come twice; and therefore little sign of a Trade: Or if they came to Discover, it is likely they hop'd to find a Sea, as well as Land; and then I see not, but they might as well come to us, as we desire to go to them.

But whosoever will understand Reason, need not go so far as Japan for it; for it is most apparent, considering the height, the distance from the Ocean Sea, from hence, and from Canada, where the French yearly trade, it is like this Fellow had Trade with the French; and I am of Opinion that Canada is but 150 Miles from from this place; and I further believe, That the relation the French give of a Sea, they have seen West in those Countries, is no other than this Streight, or what else you will call it, that Hudson discover'd.

Having shew'd the small probability of a Passage, and confuted such Men's Reasons as have pretended to have pass'd it; having alledged some Arguments, that we should have gain'd little time tho' it were discover'd, either North or South; and Thirdly, what Profit we shall reap by it, tho' it were found, especially considering we shall have no more Privilege than any other Nation, except it prove narrow, for us to strengthen and fortifie.

Now lastly will I set down a Project, how to undertake a Discovery with small Charge, and either find it, or be out of hope of it, in little more than two years.

Besides the Charge and Endeavour that is to be used in this Voyage of Discovery, I will persuade, tho' it be with some Cost to the Adventurers, That either a Pilot be procur'd from Spain, that hath sail'd from the Phillippines to New Spain, who I think is better able to give a light of this Voyage, than by experience we shall attain to in many years;

Or if there be a difficulty to get such a Pilot, yet that he may be conferr'd with, by some of good Understanding in Cosmography; for no doubt, Sailing alongst the Shore, as they do in that Navigation, he can be able to say, whether it be likely, that any great River or Streight can give hope of a Passage that falls into the South Sea; or at least he is able to tell the distance from China to the main Land of America; and whether the Current Sets from the North or no, as Francis Gall describes; and he is able to tell the breadth of the main Land of America, from Cape Mendocino to New Spain, if you doubt of Francis Gall's Report; and this will I wish to be done, before undertaking another Voyage; for certainly it will give great Hope or Despair to our Discovery.

I know it is conceiv'd by the Spaniards in those parts of the World, that there is a Sea to the Northward, that divides Asia from Africa; but if it be true (as I think no less) the entrance of it must be farther Northward than yet we have discover'd; and I am of Opinion, we must bring the most Northern part of all America South-erly, before we run West; or as the Land shall bear; and then finding no Ice on the Starbord side, we may be bold to say, we have entred into an open Sea; for it stands against Sense or Reason, that any Streights should run deep or narrow, as it must do if we have profit by it, whether it run West, North or South, so many Leagues as the breadth of America, if America be truly describ'd, as that we shall know be the Conference with the Pilot of the Phillippines;

But now to proceed upon the Northwest Discovery; the Men that go that Voyage, must be such as Trade into Iceland, for they are best able to endure the Cold, and most acquainted with the Northern Climates.

Three Vessels are enough to undertake it, the one of 200 Tuns, the other of 50 Tuns apiece. The Ship is to carry such Provisions for Wintering, as shall be thought necessary with a surplus of Victuals to be put into the Barques at the departure of the Ship from them.

This Ship may, if they see a convenient place, make her Voyage upon the Coast with fishing; if not, the may put round for Newfoundland, and buy her Lading of Fish, which being carry'd into the Streights, will make a profitable Return, towards the Charge of the Discovery.

The Two Barques must be strong and short, because of their aptness to stay and Tack, if they come into a narrow Streight, shoale Water, or amongst Ice.

The Captains must be skillful Mariners, and good Cosmographers, Men of good Reputation, and of great Resolution, for their Credits to perform such a Voyage; and for their Carriage, not to be daunted at any Disaster.

Their Commission must give them liberty to punish with death, if Mutinies or Disorders arise; but above all, nothing must be wanting that can be thought of, for a Two Years Voyage in a Northern Climate.

The Masters must take an Oath to use their best Endeavours to advance the Voyage, and to keep secret the Journal: The Plats and Cards, and all other Writings that concern their Navigation, must be taken from them at their coming home, and Seal'd up to present to his Majesty.

There are many other Cares to be committed to the Captains and Masters; as their mutual Agreement, their Haulbanding of Victuals, their drawing the proportion of every Cape, the Depth and Distance from Place to Place, the Observation of Winds, Times, and Seasons; the variation of the Compass, and Care in keeping Company; and to appoint a place of Meeting if they lose one another, hailing each one both Morning and Evening; what to do in Fogs; to take Possession

sion of such Countries as they come to, for the King, and leaving some signs of their being there for whoever shall come after. Many other things are to be thought on before their going from home, too tedious to set down.

If the two Barks shall arrive in a place where a River or Streight does open two ways, they are to part company, and each of them to proceed upon their Discovery, as they shall agree upon, (with this Direction) That upon either of their Returns, they appoint a certain place on shore, where to leave their Letters wrapped up in a Box of Lead, and in those Letters to make relation of their Success, from their departure from one another.

There must be great Providence to preserve their Men in Health, and from Danger of their Enemy; not to believe the allurements of Savages, but when they stand upon their own Guard; and if they be forc'd to use Violence, to have a special care that the first Piece they shoot, be sure to kill or hurt; for so shall the Savages be more terrify'd, when they find the Pieces kill as well as make a noise.

But leaving the Discovery of the Northwest Passage to the Care, Wisdom and Discretion of the Undertakers, I will deliver my conceit of a Voyage, which hitherto no Man hath written of, much less attempted; and that is, Due North under the Pole. One Reason that induces me to it, is, The nearness to China, Japan and the East-Indies, if there be a Passage; for by computation, it cannot be above 1500 Leagues from England to Quinsay.

My other Reason is grounded upon an Error of the Philosophers, who conceived it was uninhabitable under the Line, which Experience has taught us to the contrary: The like Opinion they held of the Pole; and we know they have no more reason for the one than for the other. And seeing the Adventure cannot be great or dangerous for the Undertakers, I would wish

Men to be as forward and willing to venture therein, as they are now in this to the North-West, for the proof is alike for any thing that is done as yet.

My Third Motive is grounded upon that which makes the impediment of the North-West Passage, which is Ice; and that I least fear or doubt of, for the Reasons following.

The abundance of Ice which floats in the Sea, and hinders the North-West Passage, is not the Ice of the Sea, for the great Salt Sea cannot Freeze; but it is the Ice frozen in fresh Rivers and Sound, which at the breaking up of the Year, is driven out of the same Harbours into the Sea; which shews there is more Land upon the Coast of Labrado, than towards the North Pole; for Ships have sailed 100 Leagues to the Northward of the North Cape of Norway, and in 67 Degrees, and have found no Ice; whereas, if there had been Land in that course, or to the Northward of it, they would have found the Ice, by the Reasons aforesaid.

And whereas Cold may be alledged for an impediment upon this Discovery, we find by Proof, and not without Reason, that it is hotter to the Northward in Summer, than nearer the Sun, because of the Reflexion of it, that gives a Light and a Heat for one half of the Year: It is to be compar'd to a continual easie and gentle Fire, which will cast a greater Heat, and of a longer continuance, than a violent Flame that is soon quench'd.

And because all Discoveries before spoken of, and that hereafter are to be attempted, have been, and must be, by the Pains, Labour and Industry of Mariners; I think it not amiss to set down, what I was desir'd by Mr. Wright, the great Mathematician, to write, to encourage and further a certain stipend, for the Maintenance of Navigation, for Seamen's better Instruction.

The Conveniency of a Lecture of Navigation.

I Held it not amiss to insert so much as I was desir'd to write, concerning the Necessity of having a Publick Lecture read, for the instructing of Mariners and Seafaring Men of this Kingdom, which is as followeth.

If I should go about to prove, how much more fit it is for England to maintain Navigation than any other Country that lies upon the Continent, I should do no more than many worthier Persons have heretofore undertaken, or that Men in common Reason should conceive; for England is an Island, and therefore bound to maintain Shipping for Defence of it self, Offence to other Nations, and enriching the Commonwealth with Trade: For neither can any Man enter in Peaceable or Warlike fort, or we our selves pass forth of the Kingdom, without the help of Shipping.

And yet are Ships alone no more available, without Men to conduct them, than Weapons without Hands to fight. Seeing therefore that Ships and Seafaring-Men are unseparable, the one of no use without the other, we must have as great care to bring up Men, and make them skilful in that Art of Navigation, as to maintain Shipping for the Good of the Commonwealth.

But with Pity I speak it, we have not respected the instructing our Mariners; and no marvel that we have sustain'd so great a Loss by Shipwreck, for no more than our Seamen get by bare Experience, they never endeavour themselves to Knowledge: And I judge the Reason is, because they have no Means to attain it; otherwise I think they would be as willing to know their Errors, as it were fit they should be taught.

The Help they have receiv'd in these later Times, was by Men's Writings, which I hold not so profitable as what they shall hear deliver'd by Mouth, for the ordinary Mariners are oftentimes ignorant of what they shall read, as not understanding either Word or Sense; and when they shall have it demonstrated to them, and the hard Words and Meaning made plain, they will both conceive what they hear, and be able to put in practice when they understand it.

Another Discommodity they shall find by Writing, is, That the Secrets of the Art will be publish'd to the World, and other Nations are likely to make as great use and benefit of it, as we our selves: And therefore as we ought to strive to exceed other Men in Navigation, in respect I have shew'd it imports our Country so much; so ought we to keep it secret, according to the Example of Spain, which seeks to conceal divers Rivers, and other Places in the Indies, from us, which they know by Discovery might breed them Inconveniences, and benefit us.

It is a Question, whether a Man shall attain to better Knowledge by Experience or Learning: And many times you have Controversies arise, betwixt a Scholar and Mariner, upon that Point.

The Scholar accounts the other no better than a Bruit Beast, that has no Learning but bare Experience, to maintain the Art he professes. The Mariner accounts the Scholar only Verbal, and that he is more able to Speak, than Act.

I confess, this is great Arrogancy in both, to stand so obstinately upon themselves, when they ought in reason one to assist the other; but especially the Mariner is to receive Comfort from the Scholar, for he that has but bare Experience, receives what he has by Tradition, for Learning is the Original Ground of all Arts; but he that has Experience join'd with Learning, it makes that Man excellent in the Art he professeth. What made Abraham Kendall and Mr. John Davies, so famous for Navigation, but their Learning, which was confirm'd by Experience?

If we had but a Lecture of Navigation read, which Seamen might resort to, they would soon reform their spiteful Humours, and confess how needful it is, that Learning should be added to Experience. And this Lecture, no doubt, in a little time will make Men as famous as either Kendall or Davies, to the Honour and Benefit of the Commonwealth.

Men of Learning were able to give great Light for the finding out the Longitude, and for the discovery of new Lands or Passages, which Experience must beat out, when they have their Grounds from learned Men.

Every Man in travel or journeying, desires to find the nearest and easiest way for his Rest, and gain of Time, to come to his Journey's end: And so ought the Mariner much the more; for the Sea is tedious, and more difficult than the Land. The Land is firm and steadfast, the Sea wavering and moveable: The Land is known and determin'd by Marks, Signs, and Limits; the Sea is vast, and no Marks to know it: The Land has Hills, Mountains, and Rocks; the Sea has Storms, Tempests, great Difficulties and Dangers, and therefore the more need of help to avoid the fearful Perils, and unlook'd-for Accidents, Man is sure to meet withal in the wide and spacious Sea.

I am of opinion, there is no Error the Mariner finds at Sea, either in Card, Star, Instrument, or Compass, but upon his Information may be reduc'd by the skilful Mathematician and made perfect, if not suddenly, Time may work it, by following such Instructions as shall be prescrib'd by them.

It is strange to see our Errors, that we prefer idle and frivolous Studies that bring no Profit; as namely, there are Lectures of Logick, Rhetorick, and Musick allow'd, and the Readers of them have a competent Maintenance for the same; none of which Studies can be in election to bring the Twentieth Part of Benefit to the Commonwealth, that this is like to do if it be well us'd.

But I speak not, that I would have this Lecture only erected, and the rest suppress'd, pref'd; for Learning is to be nourish'd in all Commonwealths, being the Ground from whence Government is deriv'd; and for my own part, I will rather with a larger Contribution for the Maintenance of the rest, than a diminishing of what they have.

I am partly of opinion of our Mathematicians, that hold there is no certainty in the Art of Navigation in our ordinary Masters that take charge; for if there were, they would not so much vary one from another, as usually they do: For Proof whereof, let there be four or five Masters or Pilots in one Ship that goes or comes from England to the Tercera's, if they be any time in Traves at Sea, you shall have some of them 30 Leagues before the Ship, and others as many Leagues behind the Ship.

Imagine by this what Danger every Ship is in, that goes from England and comes home again, which to Men of Understanding is a Wonder that more Ships do not miscarry, considering the Danger of our Coast: It is not Art, but Fear and Care, that preserves them; for if they should presume upon their Art to bear in with any Land, the Rocks would devour ten times more Ships than they do. But the Masters having so provident a Care, and so great a Mistrust in their own Art, that tho' they observe the Sun and Stars never so exactly, they will not presume to bear in with the Land which they have not made, except the Coast be clear, and the Wind large to claw it off again.

But if this Art can be made perfect, and the Errors corrected and reduced to a certainty by the painful Study of the Learned, it will prove a happy thing to all Seamen, and by consequence to the whole Commonwealth.

The only means of Help that is to be expected or hop'd, for Reformation of these ancient Absurdities, which the Mariner by all his Wit and Skill cannot correct, must be by a publick Lecture allow'd to be read, and competent Means collected and gather'd for the same: For if the Hearers of a Lecture of the Liberal Sciences receive Profit by hearing it read, you must confess they will receive much greater Profit from this being well taught.

For besides the common Good we shall receive by this Lecture, it will concern Gentlemen to study it, who seeing the Pleasure, and the Necessity of it, will make them forward in Actions by Sea, which will be a great strength and stay to the Kingdom; for it is requisite that Gentlemen should have an Insight into Sea-Affairs, seeing they are commonly employ'd in His Majesty's Ships in time of Service.

It is well known to other Nations as to us, that England of late years has undertaken greater Enterprizes, and achiev'd greater Victories by Sea, than ever any of our Fore-fathers have done. And these famous Memoirs of ours may remain to Posterity, it is fit that Gentlemen who live in this Age, but especially such as have been Actors in Expeditions themselves, should contribute towards the Maintenance of a Lecturer of Navigation; which Act of theirs will remain for a Monument to those that are the Founders of it: So shall they deserve well of succeeding Ages, and their noble Deeds will ever live fresh in Memory of those that shall come after them.

A Comparison betwixt our antient and known Trades, and those now in being, since the late Discovery of New Worlds; with something relating to the Hollanders, and Fishing, Particulars being referr'd to the Sixth Book.

I Would have our hopeful Fishing now intended compar'd and parallel'd with such Actions of ours, as of late years have been achiev'd with everlasting Honour and Renown to our Nation, as shall appear by that which follows, as well in the Discovery of unknown Countries, as in new Plantations, and other sought Trades, not heretofore known nor dream't of by our Fore-fathers; and yet the Ambition of that mungil and unmannerly Nation of Holland seeks to lessen our Praises: They cannot really challenge any thing of themselves, but that we gave them Light of, as shall appear in the Sixth Book following.

I confess that such English, as have been the Actors, Authors, and Abettors of our brave Enterprizes, have oblig'd the whole Commonwealth to them; First, by the Adventure of their Lives, to seek out the Secrets of Commerce; Secondly, by the Expence of their Estates, till they brought it to perfection; And Lastly, by their Labour, Pains, and Endeavour, to advance our Navigation to that it was in former Times; and yet if all these be examin'd and compar'd to our Fishing, it will come short to the Happiness our Kingdom will reap by it.

If we enter into the Original of our English Traffiques, and the continuance of them, till the Discovery of new Countries, that gave us a greater scope to search out the Bowels of the Earth; you would think it strange our Nation could flourish in so high a measure as it did, in comparison of the present times: For I find, that in sailing to the Southward, we exceed not the bounds of the grand Canaries, which Voyage in former times was held a greater wonder and stranger than now about the World: Neither was the Art of Navigation so common, or so perfectly know, till of late Years, that by our Travels we have attain'd to it; for I remember my self the Ignorance of a prime Master, who going to the Canaries, return'd home without seeing any of the Seven Islands, for want of Skill to direct him.

And to prove what I have said, That our Traffique to the Canaries stretches no further to the South: This following shall clear the Doubt (viz.) That upon all Treaties with Spain, since the Discovery of the Indies, we were not prohibited by name the Trade of the Indies; only we are tied to our Antient and accusom'd Traffiques with Spain, which we cannot drive further to the Southward than the grand Canaries; nor of right by that Article of Peace can require it.

Our ancient and usual Trades, before the new Discovery, was to all the Dominions and Islands of the Kings of Spain, of France, of Portugal, the 17 Provinces, the several parts of Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, the Baltick Sea and Island: These were the Limits and Bounds of our English Commerce, before the latter end of Henry the 7th. when we came acquainted with America, Africk and Asia.

It is marvellous if we consider what England is now, to that it was in former Ages; What Wealth is return'd into this Kingdom, in respect of times past; What increase is made of his Majesties Rents and Revenues, in comparison of his Progenitors; What an increase there is of Ships in Number and Goodness; What Dread and Fear all other Nations apprehend of our Greatness by Sea; and what Rumours are spread abroad in all the Quarters of the World to make us Famous. It is admirable if we call these things to mind.

And to come to the particulars of Augmentation of our Trades, of our Plantations, and of our Discoveries, because every Man shall have his due therein; I will begin with Newfoundland, lying upon the main Continent of America, which the King of Spain challenges, as first Discoverer; But as we acknowledge the King of Spain the first Light of the West and South-West parts of America, so we and all the World must confess, that we were the first that took possession, for the Crown of England, of the North part thereof, and not above two Years difference betwixt the one and the other.

And as the Spaniards have from that Day and Year held their Possession in the West, so have we done the like in the North; and tho' there is no respect, in comparison of the Wealth, betwixt the Countries; yet England may boast, that the Discovery from the Year aforesaid, to this very Day, hath afforded the Subjects Annually 120000 l. and increas'd the number of many a good Ship and Mariners, as our Western parts can Witness by their Fishing in Newfoundland.

Neither can Spain challenge a more natural Right than we to its Discovery; for in that case we are both alike: If we deal truly with others, and not deprive them of their Right, it is Italy that must assume the Discovery to it self, as well in the one part of America as in the other.

Genova, and Christopher Columbus by Name, must carry away the Praise of it from Spain; for Spain had not that Voyage in Agitation, or Thought of it, till Columbus, not only propos'd, but accomplish'd it: The like may be said by Sebastian Cabott a Venetian, who by his earnest Intercession to Henry the 7th. drew him to the Discovery of Newfoundland, and call'd it by the name of Bacallao, an Indian name for Fish, for the abundance of Fish he found upon that Coast.

And speaking of Plantations, I will begin with Newfoundland it self, which lay uninhabited, and the Country unthought on to produce Profit, till my Lord Baltamore, and some Merchants of Bristol undertook it; it may be they were the rather drawn to it by the plenty of Fish, not once doubting of the Soil, because they had no proof of the Winters Habitation, and they might think that a fresh and green Shew of a hopeful Summer to the Eye, such as England yields, would send forth the like Winter, and the like effect in Winter; but by trial it fail'd, and provid a chargeable Adventure, and the decay of my Lord's Estate: He return'd for England, where once more he resolv'd to try his Fortunes in a new Plantation, in Florida; but in the mean time, and in the Year 1632. he Dy'd.

venturers with him : The chiefest Exceptions against it, is the coldness of the Climate ; and the like might have been said of England, upon the first Plantation of it ; for they lie both in one parallel. Newfoundland affords in view plenty of Wood, Grass, Water, and other hopes of Commodities, till Time and Experience gave light to the contrary ; and at the first therefore, not to be disproved till a Winter had made known the Condition of the Soil.

They had another help to their Plantation, in that they were in no danger of Savage Enemies, which all English Colonies are subject to, and have tasted the mischief of : But above the rest, if the Land had prov'd suitable to their Hopes, and worthy of Inhabiting, they might have Planted and supplied it, at less than half the Charge and Expence of other Colonies where the English are seated ; for that there resort yearly 150 Ships to this Fishing in Newfoundland, which Ships go not half freighted, and not above 15 or 16 days Sailing with a reasonable Wind, that would be glad at a small rate to carry any Provisions for the Advancement of the Plantation.

And seeing I have begun with America, I will take it in my way, not having relation to the Years of the first Plantation, but the Neighborhood to one another, and to the Places where they are seated : And the next according to the Latitude, is New-England, whose Sea affords excellent and choice Fish ; whither divers Ships of England yearly resort, to take and dispose it into several Countries in Europe : The Land, by Mens Endeavours, will be made to produce sundry Commodities, as a Book that is published can witness ; but for want of time, for yet it is but a Child, and lately Born and Inhabited, little can be said of it, more than a mistrust of the good Success thereof, through the humorous and irreligious People that possess it, being refractory to the Church-Government of England. From thence ruining South, we arrive at Virginia, a place evil chosen for Seat, Soil, Air, or any thing else to give encouragement for a Plantation ; yet seeing it was begun, and that the Undertakers would not seem uncon- siderant, to change their first Resolutions, they have since 1602. continu'd a Footing in it, with costly Adventure, tho' hitherto it produced little more than Tobacco : But this nothing lessens the Worthiness of the Undertakers, whose end is the general good of the Common-wealth.

Not far from thence, to the Southward of it, in the Year 1585, a Colony was sent to settle in Norambega, by the procurement of Sir Walter Raleigh, a Man much Favour'd and Graced by the Queen in those days ; and the Man chosen for the conduction of his Ships thither, was Sir Richard Greenville, who upon his arrival was to leave the Government to Mr. Ralph Lane ; and tho' the Situation, the Climate, and the natural Soil, and the proof of the Commodities the Country yields, was able to give Encouragement for the prosecution of it ; yet for want of means, and willing Minds, which is the bane of all Undertakings, it failed, and produced nothing but Tobacco, which has brought a greater mischief to this Kingdom than the Profit would have counter- vail'd, tho' it had prov'd successful.

Later than all these, and indeed which is now in the Infancy, is a Plantation in Florida, and near to an ancient Colony of the French, who through ill Government were in the end forc'd to quit it. He that can judge of things must confess, That of all other Plantations, this gives the greatest Hope and Comfort, by proof that hath been made of it, and the temper, and the height it lieth in, if it be carefully followed, and sufficiently supplied. One danger must be eschew'd, which other Nations have found the smart of, which is the Untamedness of the Wild Indians, who are Cruel to themselves and worse to strangers, as both the French and Spaniards have tasted. God lend them Fortune that live there, to their desires, so they make not England still unfortunate with Tobacco.

East North-East from Florida lies the Island of Bermudas, Inhabited and Peopled by our Nation, whose Extent can yield no greater profit, than the circuit of the ground can promise, being but 30 Miles in compass ; by means whereof the Planters are forced to Till and Manure their Grounds in that excessive manner, that in a little time it will not be able to sustain their People, but force them to find another Habitation ; which will move the less pity, because they seek only to Plant for Tobacco, a thing so noisome and lothsome to this Kingdom.

This Island at the beginning was Discover'd by the Portuguese Nation, and inhabited by them, till they found little profit accru'd from it, and then they abandon'd it, and left behind them such Food, especially Hogs, as they could not carry with them ; and thus it lay waste for many Years, with a general Opinion to be inhabited with Spirits, which made all Men shun the sight of it at their return out of the Indies ; tho' this Error was easily salved ; for I knew, above 50 years since, since, one Captain Ruffel, a Frenchman, Ship-wrack'd upon that Island; and with great Industry of his People, for few of his Men were lost, they patch'd up a Boat out of the Materials of the perish'd Ship, that carry'd them to Newfoundland, where they found Relief and Passage into their own Country.

I knew likewise in the Year 1592. another French Ship wrack'd upon the same Island, in which an Englishman one, Henry May was Passenger, he having belong'd to one of the Ships Captain Ryman had, when he was Drowned returning from the Indies. This May, and some few Men of this French Ship, were preserved, and made shift, as the others did, to get to Newfoundland.

This Plantation of Bermudas was not purposely undertaken by us, but accidentally fall'n upon by the like Shipwrack in Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers's Passage to Virginia, whither they were bound; and being delighted with the Pleasures of that Island, which was so well stored with Hogs, they seated there Colony remaining in it; since then they found a reasonable quantity of Amber-Greece floating out of the Sea, and not without reason, for the Coast of Florida opposite to it, abounds in Amber-Greece.

The next, and more to the Westward from thence, are the Islands of Barbadoes and St. Christophers; and whereas the Canary Islands were formerly called the Fortunate Islands, so would we have these Islands call'd the contrary (viz.) the Unfortunate Islands, in that they produce nothing but stinking Tobacco, which if we judge wisely, discovers the Mischief it does; but it has such a bewitching Power over the Takers, that all the Ill which comes of it, they interpret as good to their Bodies, and have no more power to leave it, than Drunkards when they are muddled in it.

The next, and upon the next Continent is Guiana, and the River of Amazon, where there have been many Colonies, settled by our Nation in that spacious Country; yet I could never hear of any Commodities that rose by it, no not so much in value, as two Miles of Ground in England would afford; and yet I must rightly say of that evil Tobacco, this Plantation sends the best, if the strength of Tobacco be so accounted. The benefit of this Plantation is, That the Savages are more Civil and Tractable than in other parts of America; and that the Climate and Soil gives hope of good to come of it: But where the Dutch have had footing, and quitted it, takes away my Belief of it.

Further to the Southward of this Coast

the English never fate down with a resolution to Plant, and yet there are many Ships that have made sundry Voyages, some to Trade, others with Letters of Repisal, as well upon the Coast of Brazil, as through the Straights of Magellan, who have after Coasted to Chyle, Peru, Panama, New Spain and Cape California, and took their leave of America, and the Westernmost Cape Mendosina, the farthest Land Discover'd.

Our Trade to Africk and Asia.

The next addition of our new Trade, is upon the Continent of Africk, as far South as the Cape of Good Hope, and then Eastward to the Cape of Guadafusa, which is the Sea Circuit of Africk; from thence we will pass over to Asia, till we arrive at the Molucco Islands, and the Continent of China, to all which places we are now no strangers, by our late and large Navigation.

The first Country and the nighest to us, where we settled a new Trade, not frequented by our Forefathers, was Barbary, under the King thereof, call'd Mulley Abaleck. in 1577. who gave the English large and fair Conditions, as appears by the Privileges extant; and from that Year to this very Day we have enjoy'd the same; and so prevail'd with: succeeding Kings, that we have beaten the Portugueses out of that Trade, who at first labour'd to do the like to us.

In our time of Wars with Spain, our Ships of Repisal have receiv'd great Comfort and Relief of the two Ports or Roads in Barbary, which upon necessity of Victuals, Water, and other wants, they have supply'd us withal, and taken from us such Goods, by way of Traffique, as we have made Sale of; but with that Craft, Subtily and Danger of betraying us, that he who knows them well, would no further trust them, then necessity would compel him. The Barbarians had so much Honour, and Civil Honesty, that if a Spaniard and Englishman were in their Ports together, they would forbid the meddling with one another, being Enemies; so great a regard they had to the King's Royalty: As otherwise, if they were never so little way off at Sea, and one of them taken by the other, if he that took, would bring her taken, into the Port again, they would hold her Prize to him, and give Money for her.

I remember the like Case in my self, Anno 1587. that coming into the Road of Sally, I found a Ship of Catalonia, a Subject to the King of Spain there Trading; and the English Merchants on Shore fearing I would make an attempt upon her, besought besought me not to offer Violence in Harbour upon her, assuring me, if I did, the King would take Occasion to Confiscate all the English Goods in his Country, and to Imprison, and perhaps put to Death, the Merchants; whereupon I forbore to attempt her.

The Western Parts of Barbary have two open Roads, Safin and Santa Cruz, out of which the Ships that ride there put to Sea, when they find, by the bellow of it, the Wind likely to endanger them with a Westerly Gale.

Our English Ships riding there have often been forc'd to put to Sea, for their Safety; and many times before their Return they have met and taken several Spanish Prizes, which have been more beneficial to them, than their Merchantable Voyage has provid.

And to conclude with the Trade of Barbary, I must say, That tho' the English in time of War have often brought the Subjects of the King of Spain Prisoners into the Ports; and tho' the Moors did more value buying the Men than Merchandize; yet how lewd soever the Englishmen were, or what Necessity soever they were driven to, it was never known they made Sale of one Christian.

The next bordering Country to Barbary is Guiney, unhealthy, through extremity of Heat, and Infection of the Air, for which there are many Reasons alledged, and Antidotes invented to avoid the Contagion thereof; but all in vain: For the Putrifaction of the Air is occasioned by the huge and monstrous Beasts that Country abounds in, which, when they die, by reason of the excessive Heat, cast such an intolerable Stench, that insects and putrefactions both Air and Earth, to the Destruction of Mankind.

The Discovery of Guiney, and the Sovereignty thereof, was given to Don Alonso the Fifth, King of Portugal, in 1471, which he enjoy'd peaceably, and without Interruption or Challenge by any Nation, till the year 1481. The Voyage was intended by certain English, and the Negroes themselves as willing to accept of their Neighbourhood, with offer to give them a Proportion of Land, there to live and inhabit; but this Design was frustrated, and proceeded not, at the Instance and Request of the King of Portugal, Don John the Second, to Edward the Fourth, King of England; and since that time, to this very day, a Footing in Guiney was never attempted or desir'd; which must be conceiv'd to be out of the unwholesomeness of the Climate and the Air.

But tho' we were not Resident in Guiney, by any Place in the Country we possess'd, yet have we continued a Yearly Traffick to sundry Parts of that Coast on this side the Aequinoctial, ever since the year 1553, till this present 1632. and many Corporations and Patents granted by Queen Elizabeth to her Subjects of Essex, and other the Western Parts.

Another Benefit we have made of that Country, is, the Relief it has given us in our longer Voyages, as to Brazil and the South Sea; for all Ships of ours, that have pass'd the Streights of Magellan, found Succour and Refreshing at the Port of Sierra-Leona, where, at this day, we have a certain Trade.

From the Port of Senega in Guiney, we have made several Attempts to discover Tombakatoe and Gago, Two Places within the inward Parts of Africa, which afford the greatest quantity and the purest and the best Gold in the World; and from whence the King of Morocco or Barbary is furnished with all his Gold, by his Caravans he sends thither in great Peril; for many times they are swallowed up in an Ocean of Sands.

From this part of Guiney, or rather from the Cape of Lopez Gonzalez, till you come to the Cape of Good Hope, no Christians have Traded with the Negroes but the Portugueses themselves; in which Course is seated Angola, and Congo, which is inhabited by banished Men sent out of Portugal for Offences there committed; a Place of that Infection, as that it is fit only for Men of that Condition; and from those Places they furnished the West-Indies and Brazil with Numbers of Negro Slaves, who work in their Mines and Sugar-works.

As Sierra-Leona has been a Relief to our Nation in our long Navigation, as I have declared, so is the Bay of Soldania, within Three Leagues of the Cape of Good Hope, a Succour to our Ships of the East-Indies; for thither they resort in their going and coming from thence, tho' it yields no Benefit but Victuals and Water, for which they truck with the most wild, ravenous and irreligious Negroes in the World.

From the Cape of Good Hope there are Two Passages or Navigations to the East-Indies, the one by the way the Portugueses sail, keeping the Africk Shore, on the Left-hand or Larboard-side; which Course we likewise take with our Ships that Trade to Cambaya, a Country subject to the Great Mogul; and in going there they sometimes touch at the Island of Socotora, upon upon the Mouth of the Red Sea, and where St. Thomas was Shipwreck'd. This Island yields our Merchants the best Alloes Secarinas in the World; and not far from thence it affords them as good Commodities as the Fleet of Meca could send out, which I forbear to speak of.

And of late, by that Track, we have found the Trade of Ormus; which Island we gave the Persians Assistance to take from the Portugueses; tho' I do not commend that Act, in joining with Turks against Christians.

Surat in Cambaya, and that Coast affords us good and commodious Traffick, tho' the Portugueses seek to impeach us: But besides the going and coming home of our Ships, as also of other Parts of the Indies where they remain, they are freighted, or else freight themselves, from Port to Port, to their exceeding great Profit and Gain.

The other Navigation from the Cape of Good Hope is to the Southward of the Island of Madagascar or St. Lawrence, but not frequented by the Portugueses, but upon great necessity, when they are forc'd to it in great Penury, not being able to recover Goa, or other part of the Indies, as in my former Book I have related: But to us that resort to Bantam and the Moluccas, or other Parts of the Indies thereabouts, it is far the nearer, and much the safer; for we sail in a more open Sea than the Portugueses do to Goa, where they meet with many Rocks and Shelves.

When our Ships arrive at the settled Ports, there Trade is certain, and their Return so usual, that there needs no Repetition thereof: But our People not being contented till they had discover'd such Countries and Places, as Fame made Report of, from hence they made an Attempt upon the Discovery of China, Japan, and the farthest remote Places of the World, being led to it by the Rumour of the Magnificency and Wealth of them.

But it prov'd like many other Reports, rather Shadows than Substance; for tho' the People of China deserve more Praise than others, for Excellency of Arts and Ingenious Inventions, yet it is far short of the Wealth that is said to be in it, to our Western Parts of Europe.

This Discovery hath resolv'd us of the State of those Parts, which we so long desir'd to know, since we heard the Fame of them, which made Queen Elizabeth often send her Letters to such Princes as dwelt thereabouts, and devis'd how to convey them, and have Answer of them. So desirous she was to understand the Conditions of those Parts, and employ'd some of her own Subjects by the way of the Gulph of Persia, thinking to find the Conveniency from out the East-Indies, but still fail'd by the sinister Practices of the Italians, who incens'd the Portugueses that they came for Spies, and caus'd them to be apprehended and imprison'd, where they endur'd great Affliction before they return'd into their Native Country.

What I have said is sufficient to prove that our new and latter discover'd Trades have far exceeded our ancient and long accusom'd Commerces, before the year 1586. not only in value of Wealth, but in distance, whither they resorted for them. And it is made apparent, that no part of Africa, America, or Asia, that any Nation has Traded to, but we have done the like: And that whereas in some Places they have sought to impeach and restrain our Trades, yet we have forc'd them to it, and brought them to our own Conditions. And this shall suffice for the Southern and Western Parts of the World.

Our Trade to other Parts nearer to us.

Now I will once more come nearer home, and put my self into the Trade of the Streights, being more pleasant, gainful, and less dangerous or laborious, than the rest I have treated of. My first Voyage shall be into the Mediterranean Sea, unworthy of the Name of a Sea, by reason of its Streightness, in comparison of the great and spacious Ocean.

This Sea has been anciently known to us, but not frequented, for these Reasons: Former times did not afford Shipping sufficient to follow it. Secondly, such Goods and Merchandize as these Countries yielded, were received from hand to hand, and we serv'd by Vessels of their own. Thirdly, we could not pass without great Peril and Danger of the Turks, who surpris'd and imprison'd us; whereupon the Venetians engross'd the whole Trade upon those Seas, and furnish'd us with the rich Merchandize of Turkey, Persia, and India, at what Rate they pleas'd themselves: And yet this was not all, for they labour'd to make us Strangers to the Great Turk, the Egyptians, and bordering Countries, and brought them to that Ignorance of our Nation, that they thought England to be a Town in the Kingdom of London.

The Venetians sent yearly their Argosers to Southampton, which Town enjoy'd a Charter from the Kings of this Land, which was wrested out of their Hands by the Earl of Leicester, to the utter Decay of that Town: And the Argosers since then then have become Strangers in England, the last whereof took her leave with an unfortunate end, which my Eyes were Witnessto, in the Month of October, 1587.

This goodly Ship of 1100 Tuns, being richly laden with the accustom'd Commodities they use to serve the Kingdom with, and being come as high in the Channel as the Ile of Wight, which Land the English Pilot visibly made; this Pilot, call'd Fisher, for his excellent Skill was not long before redeem'd out of the Turkish Captivity by the Venetians, to serve in this Voyage.

Upon this good Land-fall, the Pilot put the Passengers in hope, many of them being of great Account and Esteem, the next morning to Harbour them; for Night growing on, he would not hazard to put in with the Shore that evening; but the Gentlemen being impatient of Delays, and the Land appearing to them, they thought themselves free from all Danger, which is the common Ignorance of many that know not the Seas. But to be short, they compell'd the Pilot by force to put in at the Needles, the Westermost part of the Ile of Wight. When the poor Man, neither with Perswasions nor Tears, could prevail, he did his best to enter the Channel of the Needles; but such was the greatness of the Waves, and the unweildiness of the Ship, not answering her Helm, that she struck upon the Shingles, where she, her Goods and Company, except Seven poor Creatures, peris'd.

The Sea betwixt the Island and the main Land was enrich'd by her Loss, with several sorts of Merchandize. What was sav'd was not worth speaking of. I had the Fortune to light on Two Buts of Muskedine floating on the Sea; for then was I riding at Cowes, in the first Ship I ever went Captain of. I found these Two Buts of Muskedine a great help to us in our Voyage, when we were reduc'd to Extremity for want of Victuals.

About this time our Merchants of London began to take into Consideration these great and inestimable Riches brought into the Land by the Venetians and French, who absolutely enjoy'd the Trade of Turkey; and the great part of that Wealth, which came out of Persia and India, was retail'd from them to us. They devised how such Commodities might come to our hands by a more direct way than to be serv'd as we were, at second hand; and therefore resolv'd to make an Overture by favour of the Queen, and her Letters to the Great Turk, for an immediate Traffick from England to Turkey, and his Dominions, and so home again, with Ships of her Subjects, without being beholding to others.

These Letters were sent by her Majesty, and receiv'd with great Humanity and Courtesie by the Grand Signior, as appears by his Letters yet extant. He could not give more Respect and Honour to Her Majesty, than by shewing a willingness to embrace her Gracious Propositions of Trade: And in Conclusion, Articles were agreed on, and a Grant of great Privileges and Immunities by her Majesty's Subjects, which have since continued, and been peaceably enjoy'd.

We may reckon from this time the Decay of the Venetian State in Matters of Trade; for Argosiers, which were wont to visit us, are now unknown to us, and we possess the Wealth they were wont to reap. The Commodities of Persia and the East-Indies are brought by our selves in our own Vessels directly out of Turkey, where we have obtained as great a Freedom as we can desire: Such Places as the Venetians were wont to take Freight in their Ships, to transport from Port to Port, now we absolutely enjoy that Privilege; for all Strangers are more desirous to put their Goods into English Bottoms than theirs.

Whereas we were wont to be serv'd with great part of our Spices from them, and they, by the way of the Red Sea, out of the Indies; now the Passage is better known to us than to the Turks themselves, by the Cape of Good Hope; and instead of receiving India Commodities from them, we supply as well them as the Turks with the same out of England. And lastly, the Terror of the Turks Gallies, to impeach our Trades in the Streights, is now taken away, by the Privileges obtain'd from the Grand Signior; and we may hold our Ships in as great Security as themselves: And moreover we may boldly say, we have sustain'd less Loss by the Pyrates of Argiers than they have done; which Pyrates of late years have been the Scourge of the Christian Trade.

In our time Venice flourish'd in Ships and Gallies, above all other Ports or Parts of the Streights, tho' there were a Competition betwixt them and the State of Genova: And it is not unworthy of Note, That the first use that was made of Ordnance and small Shot, after the Invention of it in Europe, was in a Naval Battle between the Venetians and the Genoeses.

This shall suffice for our Southern, Western, and Eastern Trades, or within the Streights, as high as Constantinople, Egypt, or or other places, under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Signior, I will now return to the North, and run through his frozen Climes, as I have already done through the South, and its parching heat.

Sebastian Cabott, a Man before spoken of, having a sharp, accute, and solid Brain, apply'd himself to the imitation of Columbus, who by his late and happy Discoveries had enrich'd the World with Wealth, and himself with Reputation.

Cabott being carry'd that way of Honour, out of a Christian respect, to reduce the World to a perfect Knowledge of God; or out of a hope of Riches, it being the natural Disease of Mankind; or out of Ambition, to make himself equal in Fame with Columbus; or out of a desire to perform what he had long thought of, which was to sail round the Globe of the World; which of these was his design I cannot say, but charitably will conceive the best.

Whatever it was, I find an extraordinary and hearty desire in him to enrich the English Nation, by adventuring his Life in sundry Attempts, to discover what he had long before conceiv'd, upon reasonable grounds, and effect what he had so wisely projected, as appear'd by setting afoot the Northern Discoveries. There wanted no Thankfulness in those days, either in King or Country to do him Honour; and for requital of his Travels, both in Body and Mind, he was chosen Governor of the Merchant-Adventurers, for the discovery of new Regions, Dominions, Islands, and other places unknown, in the Reign of King Edward the 6th. and a Pension assign'd him.

He gave the only Information and Instruction to the new begun Voyage, and Discovery of Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553. which, tho' it prov'd unhappy to Sir Hugh himself, his Ship and Company perishing with Cold in the Port of Arsena in Lapland; yet his Third Ship recover'd the Harbour of Sr. Nicholas in Russia, where he settled a rich and commodious Trade, prosecuted to this day by the Merchants, incorporated and call'd The Russia Company.

The English not thus ceasing, but as Men Travelling, who arrive at a Port or City, where they have never been, would be inquisitive to know and learn the State of the Country and its Neighborhood, without resting, till they had satisfy'd their Curiosity; so our English Merchants finding the Caspian Sea Famous by report, yet unknown to us, and its bounds one way upon Muscovia, they devis'd, tho' the Journey was long, troublesome and dangerous, to arrive at that Sea, by the approbation and consent of the King of Russia; and from thence, to make trial, whether the said Sea would conduct them.

This was no sooner conjectur'd than effected, and our Merchants furnish'd themselves out of England with Carpenters, Mariners, and other necessaries to build a Ship for such a Voyage. This Ship was 27 Tuns burthen, and the first that ever wore the English Colours upon those Seas; from Russia they arriv'd in Persia, not once but often, as appears by Mr. Jenkinson's Relation. Thus was Persia, and all the Countries adjacent discover'd by us; First, to the Northward as far as Russia, after to the Caspian Sea; neither of them both being known to our Forefathers.

The English did not thus rest; but as they were led to those unknown Seas by a kind of Fate, so they suppos'd the same Sea did not end thereabouts, but had a Passage farther to the Eastward; which perhaps being Discover'd, might lead to Japan and China; and thereupon for the shortning of the Discovery, they sent a small Ship at the Spring, that Winter'd at Comora, 80 Leagues from Sr. Nicholas, which set Sail from thence to find out the conjectur'd Passage: This Barque us'd its endeavour, so that no blame could be laid upon the Master or the Company; the past to the Eastward of the Waggatt, where she was interrupted by extremity of Ice and Snow, and forc'd to return from whence she departed.

This did nothing dismay the hopeful Enterprize of the Merchants, but once more they made an Attempt with two Pinaces directly from England; the Masters whereof (Pett and Jackman) with the same instructions of the other Barque, wherein Stephen Burrows was, to find out the end of the Eastern Sea; but being likewise encountred with the extremity of weather, the one return'd, the other perish'd, tho' both of them did their parts very sufficiently.

Being now hopeless by their often Repulses they found in the North-East passages, yet they would not let die what they had in agitation; for finding the South Sea, as the Summum bonum of all other Voyages; for from the South-West part of America, which bounds upon that Sea, is sent forth the greatest Quantity and Mass of Gold and Silver the Earth affords; whereupon they left this Attempt to the Eastward, and made trial of that to the Westward; for they imagin'd that all great and large Seas, have a Correspondence with one another, if it could be found.

The first Man that made the Enterprize, as well upon the Country of Bacalos, which he found and named so, as also in his offer to look out a Passage that way, was Sebastian Cabott, afore mentioned; but failing of the Passage, he hit upon the Land; but by reason of the vehement Cold at that time of the Year upon that Coast, he stood to the Southward, and from thence into England, taking possession of the Country for the Crown of England along the Coast he went.

This Voyage and many more to those parts, was set out by the City of Bristol, which to this day continues its Fishing at Newfoundland: But for the Discovery of the North-West Passage, the Man that most labour'd and waded in it, was Sir Martin Frobisher in three Attempts; the First in 1576. The Second, in '77. The Third, in '78. After this, and in the year 1585, and 86. Mr. John Davis undertook the Discovery, but fail'd, as many others have since done, which is no wonder; for he that will read a Discourse of the North-West Passage, in his Book, shall be satisfy'd, it is a vain and hopeless thing; and so has Captain Fox, that was employ'd upon it in 1631. at his return confess'd to me, for such Reasons as I shew'd him before his going.

Now to come to my own Observations: I am of Opinion, that next to the Discovery of America, and the Wealth thereof, which it sends into Spain, the Spaniards have greatest cause to give God Thanks, that the Attempts of the North-West have fail'd; for thereby they enjoy the absolute benefit of the South Sea, and the incomparable Wealth therein, without Molestation, Fear, or Disturbance of any other Nation; whereas if the Passage had been known, no Christian Prince but would have strove to have had a part with them; and now it is in vain by any great Attempt to prejudice the Spaniards, but by the Streights of Magellan, which is the only known way thither. It is as vain for any Enemy to possess and inhabit some of the Towns there planted, in respect of the distance and danger to be seconded and supplied out of Europe; And Lastly, any Succor out of the East-Indies will frustrate any expectation of Good, the Winds blowing continually contrary to arrive from thence. I refer the Reader to what I have said before of other Discoveries that fail'd, and particularly to that, than which nothing can be said more to the Honour of the Discoverer Sir Francis Drake, in whose Voyage about the World, may be seen what he did and attempted; and therefore I shall not repeat it here. But to proceed;

Comparing what I have said of our former Discoveries, our laborious Plantations, and our new-found Trades, with our present intended Fishing, which of them will yield greatest Wealth, Strength and Ease, I have made appear in my Sixth Book; and therefore I present you that now live, and are in being, with it, to judge which is good and best; for tho' it is true what is done, deserves the name of good and immortal Praise; so that which is now in hope to be done, does far surpass the former, and is to be achiev'd with less difficulty, less peril, and less loss, than the others that have made our Nation so worthily Famous.

When the Contents of the Sixth Book shall be maturely consider'd, the laborious Industry of the Hollanders will plainly appear, how they have raised themselves, and their new erected Common-wealth, to an Equality with Princes: Now shall it rest a little to distinguish of their good Deeds and bad; for Fortune and Fame gotten by Craft, are commonly of no continuance, but lost with shame.

What is due to them in praise of their Virtues, I will not rob them of; for I hold it a Sin to belye the wicked. They are frugal in Expence, the benefit whereof themselves and Country find; they are Industrious, as their Actions abroad and at home demonstrate; they are Just in Contracts, making a Conscience in the little Religion they have to defraud a Man: They labour to find out the Secrets of Lands uninhabited and Countries undiscover'd; they are Inventors of Arts, which to their Praise they enrich the World with; they are willing without excuse to contribute to any good for their State; not standing so much upon Privileges or Perceptions of Right, as to neglect any occasion of Advantage to benefit the Common-wealth: They are laborious and painful of Body, not admitting a Beggar in their Provinces; and willing to relieve and comfort one another in strange Countries; They are Enemies to the Expence of Law, and the griping of Lawyers, and end most of their Controversies by Arbitration of Friends; Their expence in Drinking is sav'd and mitigated by their misery in Eating; for out of their excessive Covetousness, they almost starve their Bellies, and by their unmeasurable Frugality they scarce cloath their Bodies; for it is suppos'd their People, in one of their best Cities, spend not in Apparel the value of a Princes Coat in a year.

M m m 2 their

But all these Virtues are drown'd with a covetous Ingratitude, which has Friendship with no Body, but for Interest; and no marvel, for popular States are no longer thankful than they receive Benefits: There is nothing of shorter Life among them, than the memory of Pleasures and Favours past; they are so careless to give Satisfaction for the Evils they do, that if we demand it at their hands, it is as much as to speak of Valour to a faint Heart, or Charity to a merciless Man, or a Courtesy to a churlish Disposition; it will prove but telling a Tale to him that is asleep: The definition of Philosophers in matters of Friendship is as follows; A Friend is long sought for, scarce to be found, and hard to keep; a Friend is always ready to Comfort in Adversity, to Help in Necessity, to Bear with ones Infirmary, and to Reprove ones Error gently.

But the Hollanders are otherwise in their Friendship; They are like an ill Bird that lays an ill Egg; an ill Tree that bringeth forth ill Fruit; or a young Cubb that grows crafty like his Dam; they do Partrize and follow the steps of their Predecessors, that make Riches their Heaven: And whereas it is held no hurt to know Evil, but to do it, these People are very perfect Artifts in their Trades, as well in doing as in knowing Evil.

But to speak the Truth, they'r natural evil has been nourish'd and made worse by us; for if we had not conniv'd at them and their Actions, to our prejudice, they had wanted Power to have executed their Ingratitude; therefore in reason it had behov'd us to consider what we gave before we gave; to whom we gave, or how we gave: for States ought to be Govern'd by Wisdom, and not by popular Affection or Passion: Wise Men should not measure things by outward appearance, but by Discretion and Reason; or else they behold their Actions in a false Glass.

But let us now at last seek to avoid that evil we have done, in making the Hollanders too great for us to tolerate, lest we feel the effect of Repentance: It is not the meanest point of Wisdom to doubt and mistrust the worst; for Doubts beget Understanding, and thereby Prevention.

As in natural Bodies, the longer one lives in Health, Sickness is the more dangerous when it comes; so it is with us and the Hollanders, the longer we have liv'd in a mutual and unseparable Peace; now that they have over-wrought us with cunning, and made us feeble by the strength they have suck'd from us, it will behove us to recover our ancient Vigor, and Valour, and be no longer deluded with false Pretences, as Safety to us and the Common wealth: Let us seek to follow the old Rule, in seeking to quench the Fire in our Neighbour's House, tho' it be our Enemy, lest it should flame into our own; for it is an easier thing to meet a Danger abroad, than to repulse it at home.

In this Book I have said little to prove what I have promis'd in our intended Fishing, but refer the Reader to my Sixth and last Book, Dedicated to His Majesty. And seeing I have made a Relation of all Discoveries and Plantations of Christian People; I will end that Subject with a Plantation of the French, for Discoverers they cannot be termed, which is the next that follows.

Certain Plantations of the French Nation.

Tho' we cannot call the French Discoverers of Countries, because they never sought to find out any new Worlds or Passages that were not found to their hands; yet since the first Discovery of other Worlds, they have been always ready to infect them with Piracy, and such Voyages: For their going to Peru has been no other than to spoil and rob other Nations.

And yet I must give them their due in what they have deserv'd, for tho' they cannot be call'd Discoverers, as I have said, yet they may worthily be counted in the number of Planters, as well in the North part of America, as in the South beyond the

To the Northward they have inhabited the River of Canada, where they have found a rich commodious Trade of Furs, till the English supplanted them in the late Wars betwixt us and France. The next place they had footing in, they themselves called it New France. The Third Habitation they made was in Florida. And the Fourth, as I have said, was to the Southward of the Line, and upon the Continent of Brazil, all which I will particularly handle.

But before I Treat of them, I will lay a Blemish and Tax upon their Nation; for some of their Authors sicken not to assume fume to themselves the names of Discoverers of such places wherein they were but Planters; herein they do manifest Injury to the English, Spaniards and Portugueses; for all Nations do justly attribute to them the finding of those Countries, as I have formerly Declar'd and Proved; the one by Sebastian Cabott, the other by Pedro Alvarez Cabrell in his Voyage to the East-Indies in 1500, being the Second that was gone after the First Discovery. And now I will proceed to their Plantations, and Success in them.

The first undertaken Voyage to Canada, (for I will begin with the North part of America) was enterpris'd by John Verasana a Florentine, in 1524. employ'd by Francis the First, King of France; which Verasana is said to Discover from the 50 to the 28th. Degree of the North Latitude; but it is to be disprovd in Fact. For all the extent of Land betwixt those Degrees, was long before Discover'd by Sebastian Cabott, in the right of England, as I have often repeated.

The next that undertook this Colony, was James Carter of St. Mallois, in 1534. with Three Ships, wherein that Winter 25 of his Men perished with Cold: But however, the King prosecuted the Voyage both in the Year 1540, and 42. and the French have ever since had a yearly Traffick upon that Coast for Furs, as also in Fishing; inasmuch as it is written, that one Sevales made 42 Voyages in Person into those parts.

The next Habitation the French undertook was in the Year 1603, into the Country named (tho' improperly) New France, which truly and properly belongs to England, as I have said before; for if the first Discoverers be not allowed Owners of the Land they discover, by a Law amongst Christians, we, and all others have as much Right to the Indies as the Spaniards, and Portugueses themselves.

In the Year 1603. Henry the Fourth, King of France, the Eighth of November, granted a Patent to Monsieur Le Mante, for a Plantation of those Northern parts, of America: This Voyage was begun the Fifth of March the same Year, by Samuel Champlain of Borages, who inhabited it unjustly, and gave it the Name of New France.

This Champlain was a painful, industrious, and a laborious Undertaker; he pass'd many Dangers, wonderful Travels, Adventures and Treacheries often practis'd against him, as well by his own People, as the uncivil Savages: And to second this Enterprize Monsieur Mante, the Patentee, went thither himself in Person in 1604. with the like Success as all Planters in them Northern parts have found (viz.) variable Hopes and Fortunes to little purpose, as appears by divers Voyages made to the Succour and Relief of that Plantation.

The English in Virginia, hearing that the French were become incroaching neighbors to them; and in a Country that did properly, and of right, antiently belong to the Crown of England, as several Patents made it appear, which the Queen granted to Sir Humphry Gilbert and Sir Walter Raleigh, Knights: And those English fearing that in time, this Intrusion of the French might beget a Custom, and that Prescription and Possession might make a Cavil in the French to insilt upon a Right; therefore the Governor and Council in Virginia, in the Year 1624. advis'd and undertook to find out what the Country produc'd; as also to be better inform'd concerning the French Plantation, which they were only told of by certain Indians.

After sometime spent in Coasting along that shore, at last they arrived at the Port and Fort, where the French had made their Habitation; and finding in the same Harbour a Ship of France belonging to the Planters, the English suddenly, and at unawares surpris'd her, without the loss of a Man on either side, except one French Jesuit, who was slain even as he was ready to give fire to a Piece of Ordnance against the English.

The French in the Port being dismayed by the loss and disaster of their barque, the English landed with great Celerity; whereupon the French desired a Parley, and time to consider of their Surrender; but this Request would not be granted, and therefore they secretly convey'd themselves presently out of the Fort, and in a hidden manner escap'd, and left it to the Possession of the English, to whom it properly belong'd.

The French Governor of that Colony being expell'd, and wandering up and down without a House to put his Head in, sent to Treat with the English Commander; offering to become a Subject to the King of England, and to hold his Possession of him and his Crown, pretending to discover many Secrets of Mines, and other Riches, not known to any but himself.

But the English Commander's end, being only to hold their Right in that Country; and having no Authority to connive or permit any Nations living there, but His Majesty's born Subjects; he refus'd

all Propositions of Accomodation, and return'd to Virginia, from whence he went, and carry'd with him another Jesuit, Companion to him slain, and sent him into England, where he receiv'd good Entertainment: The rest of the French Travell'd to Newfoundland, where they found passage for their Country.

Now let me speak like a Christian, and with a Heart of Pity, to see so great and good a Work, as the Conversion of Souls from Infidelity and Paganisme, should be diverted and destroy'd by a vain word of Ambition; for hitherto the Country is not brought to that Perfection, as to produce any thing that may make it worthy of Fame, or a ground for an Ambitious Man to work upon: For if the quarrel betwixt them two Countries be consider'd, it is like two Dogs that should snarl and Fight for the Picture of a Dear, or any other Beast; for there is little more Substance as yet to be expected, in this wide, vast, and desolate Country, that can afford Land sufficient to both the Nations, if Content would please them.

I will therefore wish and pray with my Heart, that all Princes would put to their helping hands in the Planting and establishing the Christian Religion, in all remote and barbarous Countries; and that with one consent they would settle a National Law within themselves, and to have it generally receiv'd by Agreement, to prohibit Violence to any Plantations where Colonies are seated for the Propagation of the Christian Faith: As also, that they would add and consent to the like Privileges to all poor labouring Fishermen, Fishing upon the Seas, that no Disturbance may be offered them; their Pains and Danger well deserves it for themselves, and no less in respect of the general Good, every Man reaps good by.

The French had a Colony in Florida more antient, and countenanc'd by Charles, the Admiral of France, Anno 1562. a great Upholder of the Hugonot Sect. He sent for Governor Monsieur Lannear, and John Rigall, who arriv'd in Florida in 30 Degrees, and there erected a Pillar with the French Arms. At first they were friendly entertained by the Savages; but soon after, according to the nature of the French, who cannot long agree in Love together, there hapned Quarrels amongst them; for the Commanders shew'd such Cruelty and Infolency, that one of the Captains was slain; and rather than a great part of them would endure what they did, they put themselves in great adventure into a small Pinnace to go to their Country, but endur'd that necessity of Victuals, that they were driven to eat one of their Company, and had Famish'd if they had not been reliev'd by an English Barque at Sea.

This Colony was not reliev'd according to promise, because of the Civil War in France; but that ceasing, Lannear was sent once more, in 1554. but there ensued such Murders, such Mutinies, such Killing, Running away and betraying one another, as it is wonderful to read; and amongst the rest there was one Francis Jean, who by great accident got into the Havana, and made known to the Spaniards the French Plantations, and weakness; whereupon the Spaniards sent some to supplant and weaken them, who us'd Execution upon most of them, and posses'd their Fort: Such as surviv'd were put to most lamentable Famine, and indeed had perish'd if Sir John Hawkins, at his return out of the Indies, had not been brought thither by a Frenchman, who left them a Barque and some Relief.

In the Fourth Voyage of the French to Florida, they required the Spaniards as they had done to them before, and hang'd and destroy'd to the number of 400. At this Slaughter they return'd to Rebel, expecting great Reward from the King for that Service; but the Spanish Ambassador prevailed so far, that the Commander durst not appear, but hid himself.

Peter Malandes the Spanish General, when he exercis'd his Cruelty upon the French, writ over their Heads, I do not thus as to Frenchmen, but to Lutherans and Hereticks: The French Commanders served the Spaniards the like Sauce, and writ over their Heads: Not as to Spaniards, but to Traitors, Robbers and Murderers. The French after this quitted the Country and Fort of Florida, and never since have had any footing in it.

Lastly, for the French Planting in Brazil, it has been with the like Success as in the Northern Parts of America. The First that undertook it was Levinus; and the cause for which he undertooke it, was to Plant and settle the now Reform'd Religion, as they term'd it: He had an Approbation of it by John Calvin their Sect-Master, who much encouraged the Action; But it fell out that in time, one Sect encroaching out of another, as commonly Heresies do, instead of Amity they liv'd in a Contention, and never cess'd wrangling and jangling upon the Interpretation of the Gospel, till it was decided by the Pistol. For Murders, Mutinies, and all other Mischiefs ensued upon it; so that in the end, and Levin confess'd it to be a work of God, as the Author of Peace, and the Hater of Divisions; whereupon he abandon'd that Sect, and reconcil'd himself to the Church of Rome, in which Religion he liv'd and Dy'd, as himself express'd in Writing.

Thevetis, and after him Stadim, were two of the next that follow'd this Plantation; and to make an end of the Tragical Habitation, Diego Flores de Valdes in his Return from the Sireighs of Magellan, as you have heard in the Year 82. Coasted the Brazillian Shore, till at last he came to a Harbor, called Paraiba, where he found Five French Ships, Three whereof he burnt, and the rest he took, and inhabited the Fort with his Spaniards: The Frenchmen ran into the Mountains, where they liv'd in company with the Savages.

But for a Conclusion of these Plantations, as well by us as the French, and to avoid Prolixity, I will briefly describe the nature of the rude, wild, and Savage People of America; who are not to be entic'd with sweetness and good usage, nor to be Master'd by Force and Cruelty. Generally their Religion is alike, tho' they Adore several Creatures for God; and every Nation has a sundry Opinion and Practice in their Ceremonies; but their Supreme God of all is the Devil, the Enemy of Mankind.

The Soil and Temper of many Plantations exceeds in Temperature, and Planted, Manur'd and Husbanded at the Charge of a Prince's Purse, no doubt but they may be brought to Perfection; for the bane of all Colonies is private Men's Undertakings, that are impatient of Delays; for if it yield not an Expectation of private Gain, they are willing rather to lose their first Adventure, than to shoot a second Arrow to find the former shot: And moreover, Factions arise amongst People that are not governed by a Prince's direct Authority; Envy reigns amongst them, to see some advanced above themselves, and are ready to cast Aspersions upon their Rulers, and to tax them with Deceit and Fraud, whether they deserve it, or not.

I observe in all the English and French Plantations, the Hopes are alike; sometimes they feed themselves with the hope of a Passage into the South Sea; other time with the Riches of Mines, and the Commodities they produce, and make large Relations to persuade People to persevere in it.

But the Conclusion is Mutinies, Murders, Seditious desperate Adventures, want of Victuals, and other Calamities more strange than ancient Histories can acquaint us with.

If the Charge, bestow'd upon such vain Hopes, were vallu'd with the Gain they have reap'd, it were not worth a Purse to put it in; and for ours in England it would be consum'd in Smoke: For our Staple Commodity which it sends out, is stinking barbarous Tobacco; for from the barbarous Savages it is deriv'd, a brave Original for Civil Men to learn and imitate.

The French herein far exceed us; for by their Industry and laborious Endeavours, they have attain'd to a rich and profitable Traffique of costly Furs, which makes our Shame the greater when we consider how easily they have effected it, and how profitably they persevered in it, whilst we are sucking of Smoke, that brings with it many Inconveniencies, as Time has made it too plain to us.

Advice how to Plant the Island of St. Lawrence, the greatest Island in the World; and reckon'd a Port of Africk.

HAVING handled at large the Discoveries and Plantations the Christians have labour'd in, and by their Industrious pains have brought to good Perfection; I will now at last say something of the likelihood of a Country, that in all probability may produce Good; I will only collect some Reasons, and refer the rest to the Examination and Consideration of those that are well inclin'd to the Honourable Undertaking and Proceeding of new Plantations.

There are Two particular things to be requir'd in a Colony; the one I have already spoke of, which is, That it be the Act of a Prince and his Purse to bear the Charge; but if that be wanting, and the Action be put upon private Mens Expence, there are Three things to be consider'd upon such an Enterprize: The one is the length and distance from home; The Second, How to supply it with least Charge and most Conveniency; And the Third, For hiring of Vessels for Transportation of Men and Materials, the Condition of which Ships must be according to the place they inhabit, and the Enemies they are to fear.

This being done, the next Consideration is the Climate, the nature of the Soil, and what profit it will yield at present; as also what hope of future, the nature of the People, and whether they may be made capable of Reason, and be reduc'd from their barbarous Incivility.

Of all the Places I can think of, for Convenience and Profit within the Bounds of America, Africk or Asia, out of my Experience and Study, is the Island of St. Lawrence, antiently call'd Madagascar, 500 Leagues from the Cape of Good Hope, the greatest Island in the World, and the Place of all others I principally commend; for our Planting will be in 14 Degrees of South Latitude, where our English are now no Strangers, for commonly they refresh themselves, and find Succour in their Voyages to the East-Indies.

There is nothing that I observe to further a Plantation but this will yield. First, the Winds are certain, at the time of the year, to carry us directly thither, without striking Sail; And tho' it be farther distant from England, than Virginia, or that part of America; yet I hold it will be often sooner gone to than Virginia, where the Winds and Weather are both uncertain in going and coming. Secondly, whereas the Charge is great to hire Ships purposely to Transport Men and Provisions to America, where the numbers are many, they are subject to Sickness and other disasters of the Sea; I do make account that it may be so order'd and contriv'd, That every Ship Trading to the East-Indies may be hired conveniently to carry 20 Planters, without annoying or pestering the Ships, being spacious, and of great burthen; and this will prove less charge to the Undertakers, than to hire them purposely for Virginia.

And if we examine the nature and condition of the Country, and the People that inhabit it, with the Experience we have of our Englishmen that resort thither; we shall find the Climate singular for Health, and the ground fruitful to produce Wealth, as the great and extraordinary Oxen the place affords, can witness. This alone exceeds all the hope America can at present yield us; For our Encrease of Cattle upon that Continent must be rais'd by such Beasts as we carry'd out of England, which must be done with great Charge, Trouble, and long time before they be brought to perfection.

The Cattle we shall there find, will bring us a certain Commodity of Hides; and as we shall seek to encrease them, so will our Gain and Profit encrease the more.

What other Benefit we shall make by this Plantation, Time and our own Endeavours will make it appear: For the two Barques which I wish to be kept there for Intelligence from other places, I would wish that the one should discover the South part of the Island, and the other on the North side; and to make their Rendezvous at the same place from whence they departed; so shall we discover the very heart of the whole Island; and no doubt but we shall discover variety of gainful things, unthought of by us as yet. I have known of my own Experience, and by Examination of divers Portugueses, with whom I have spoken, that the Moor who live and inhabit the main Continent of Africk, over against it, have a singular Trade with the People of St. Lawrence, for Elephants Teeth, Amber greece, &c. all which we should enjoy with ease, when we are settled, and perfectly known to them.

Besides the plenty of Beef it will yield us for Food, there is other delicate Meat to be found; as Muttons, but with hairy Skins, Hens, and other sorts of Fowls; Oranges and Lemons, and other kind of rare Fruits there naturally growing, which America will not yield us, unless we Plant them, which will prove a work of many years, and in the end fail of the excellency of the others in respect of the Climate. The Sea and the Rivers will afford plenty of Fish of all kinds; and for the present we shall not want a sufficient quantity of Maiz and Cassado for Bread; till we sow our English Corn of all sorts.

And for the People in that part of the Island, it is known to all that have been there, that they have behaved themselves lovingly and respectfully to one another, and no less to Strangers. By their Civil behaviour and Labour they draw their Cattle to a tame-ness, as with us; which shews they are naturally Civil, which is not usual amongst such People: And to prove it the more, as well in that as in their other Courses, they are Mahometans in profession of Religion; and tho' it be as false as Falshood may be to Truth, yet by that Religion they are taught more civiler Conversation and Humane Behaviour, than the Indians or Infidels are instructed in, who acknowledge several Creatures for Gods; some the Sun, some the Moon, and some several Beasts and Creatures of the Earth: But I make account with our Familiarity, Love and good Usage, we shall entice their Children, with Consent of Parents, to bring them for England, where where they shall have good Education and Breeding, answerable to our own; and this will be the method to work our good in our Plantations of that Country; and the only means to propagate Christian Religion in remote parts.

Having a Plantation or settled Dwelling in the Island of St. Lawrence, we shall make our Navigation to the East-Indies much more pleasant, short and profitable, by using and settling a Magazine of Commodities betwixt us and the Indies. First, by their receiving our Commodities, and returning those we receive from thence, by the same Ships we employ; for part of one Fleet, may be sent from St. Lawrence to the Indies, and return the Commodities those Countries afford to St. Lawrence, which our Ships shall there receive, and bring them directly for England; so that all our Ships shall be continually going and coming, and every Twelve Months have a return from thence, which now is more than double the time.

I desire that this Project to St. Lawrence, may be compared with those our Nation has undertaken to America, and the Reasons duly consider'd, without partiality; and being so satisfy'd, that they would follow them with a general consent, and so settle their Plantations, that there may be a Neighborhood from one to another; for being, as they are, thus divided, they can give no help or succor, but must stand upon their own strength, what attempt soever shall be made upon them by an Enemy; besides many other Reasons one may produce, that would much avail them: For what Succor can Newfoundland, which is the furthest part North, give the Island of Providence, the furthest part South, or any other places betwixt them that we inhabit, as namely, New-England, Virginia, Cape Florida, the Barbadoes, St. Christophers, Tortuga, and the Island of Providence, if you examine the distance from one to another, and how the Currents and Winds set upon these Coasts.

As the Island of Providence is the last I name, so it is the greatest in Fame by the Persons that countenance it, and by the Purges that maintain it; and because you shall know the difference betwixt that Island and St. Lawrence, I will here make a Description of the Island, and refer it to your own Judgment.

The Nature of the Island Catalena, or of Providence, as call'd by us.

Amongst many ridiculous and vain Plantations we have had footing in, in several places of America, as appears in this Book, there is one small Island, whose name we have chang'd from Catalena to the Island of Providence; because some pretend to foresee it may damnify the Spanish Nation, if they shall hereafter give us occasion of War.

This Island of Providence is sett'd upon the Coast of Terra firma, 100 Leagues North from Carthagena, 80 Leagues North and by West from Nombre de Dios, and from the Headland of Gratias a Dios 25 Leagues. This Island for the greatness of it, may be term'd rather a Rock than an Island, not exceeding 10 or 11 Miles in length, and 5 in breadth; a small proportion of Land to promise either Victuals for Sustainance, or Commodities worthy of Labour to countervail the tenth part of Charge, that has been bestow'd on it.

For it is like a barren and uncultivated ground, that of it self can send forth nothing, it Pains and Labour do not make it capable to afford nourishment; even to this least and worst of Islands can promise no more than the ill ground I compare it unto; but our Undertakers think by the Situation of it, that it will advantage us much against Spain, the impregnableness of it by nature consider'd, which we have help'd by Art.

The Island has these particular Benefits in it. A Port containing 10 Four in depth, with good ground to ride in; it is environ'd with huge and high Rocks and Cliffs, and made impregnable to Landing; the Harbor on the West side of the Island, which makes it a safe riding, by reason of the perpetual North Wind that blows off the Coast, there is only one place to land and for that excepted, it is encompass'd about with high Rocks, that a Boat cannot come near the Shore. If a Ship put but one Mile to seaward of the Harbor, she cannot recover it again by reason of the Current; unless the port for Hispaniola, and distant betwixt it and Cuba, at least 2 or 300 Leagues, backwards and forwards; neither can they directly go from thence to Cuba, by reason of the Sholes and Plats in our new Course. Therefore a Ship must stand over for the main Land 35 Leagues from Providence, and pass through a Chanel, not halfe a Mile in breadth, and yet four Leagues in length.

The Wind and Current sets to the Westward from Providence, till within 12 or 14 Leagues of the Shore, and then the Current sets to the Southward, though the Wind keeps its continual Course from the East; and were it not for the change of the Current, it were impossible for to fetch Nombre de Dios, Porto bello, or Carthage-na. Our English Shipshave a great advantage of the Spaniards, by reason of their Fastness by a Wind, which the others cannot beat it up, because of their Leewardness.

Every 14 Weeks, the Climate wherein the Island is seated, produces an Harvest of Corn, Pease, Potatoes, and other Roots and Herbs: The Potatoes make a delicate kind of Drink, both pleasant and wholesome. The Sea affords such great abundance of Fish, that Two Boats and Ten Fishermen will be able to feed 1000 Persons every day.

There are Two other Islands not above 16 Leagues from Providence, the one call'd St. Andrew, the other the Miquito, not inhabited. These two Islands afford great quantity of Tortoises, which will be a great relief to the Island of Providence: They are not to be dwelt upon, because they cannot be made Defensible; and St. Andrews is full of Rocks and Shoals, and dangerous to come near, by any that do not perfectly know it; neither has it an Harbor, tho' in the Westermost part of it one may Anchor in safety. And thus much for the Description of the Island, as namely the Height, the Seat, the Distance, the Temperature, and distance from other places: Tho' there is cause for me to write more particularly of this Island, yet will I not here insert it, but speak more amply of it in my Fifth Book, to which I refer you.

Containing divers Projects and Stratagems, tendred for the Good of the Kingdom, &c.

Dedicated to the Projectors of this Age.

IF I could think of a more proper Word than Project, to entitle this ensuing Book, I would do it; for the name of Projects, and the Inventors of them, are grown so hateful, and contemptible, that all honest Men abhor and detest them.

There are no burthens which the sharpness of lewd Brains can invent, to vex the Common-wealth with, but they stile by the name of Projects, when indeed the name Promoter were more proper, as People sifter to be loathed than cherished in a well Govern'd Kingdom. Such Men are a Curse to the Country that breeds them; to their Friends and Parents that nourish'd them, and to God himself that created them; For there is no Man, directly or indirectly, but finds himself hindred or injured by them; their Courses incite God to punish, and Men to abhor them: A Father of the Church saith, It is a greater sin to project and lay unlawful things on the Poor, than a Merit to relieve them. A Favourite to Alexander the Great, whom we may rather term a Projector, advis'd him, after his great expence in War, and Wealth decay'd, to lay Taxes upon his Subjects: But Alexander Answer'd, That Gardiner did ill who plough'd up the Herbs and Roots of his Garden; for the King is like a Gardiner, Roots Trees and Herbs like the Kingdom. A Flatterer told Antiochus, That all things a King did, were lawful; Yea, he said, to barbarous Kings, but not to him that respects Justice.

St. Lewis, King of France, was angry with one that advis'd him to lay new Taxes upon his Subjects; saying, That God punish'd such examples in Kings. This King well deserv'd the Name he bore, who had more respect to his Subjects than to his Profit.

A King of Persia being desir'd by his Favorite, to Grant him an unjust Suit; he told him, No; But that he would give him the value of the thing he requested, because it would not make him poor; but said, I will not do what you desire, because it is unjust. Projectors should have as little Employment under this King, as they have Reputation amongst honest Men.

Tho' Augustus Cæsar did not by name dislike the Condition of these People that vex the Common-wealth; yet in his Precepts given to the Governors of his Provinces, he intimated a Detestation of them, when he told them, I do not send you to Rule, that you should Envy the Innocent, or be a Hangman to Offenders; but that with one hand you should be an Helper to the Good, and encourage the Evil to Amend; that you be a Tutor to the Fatherless, a Pleader for Widows, a Staff to the Blind, and a Father to all.

I have heard of a Judge in our time, who by his Audacity, and forc'd Authority and Impudence, was able to pervert and wrest Law to his Appetite and Liking: This wicked Judge had got a popular Applause, and Esteem amongst the ignorant Multitude, and by his Friends was commended to King James of Great Britain, for a good Minister to his State: The King answer'd, Yea, If I would become a Tyrant; intimating, that the Judge who misconstrues Law, were a fit Servant for such, and not for Upright Kings. Solon was such an Enemy to the Projectors, that he establish'd a Law, That whosoever propos'd any thing to the prejudice of the Common-wealth, should die. He also Decreed, That it should be lawful to revenge an Injury that should be offered to one another, that every Man might have a feeling of the Party injur'd.

The difference betwixt the Projectors of our Age, And the Projects I tender in the ensuing Discourse, is this; They pretend Evil under the colour of Good; they set a fair Countenance on a Evil Face; they Smile on those whose Throats they would cut; they do like Scipio, and all other Rebels, pretend Reformation, and taking away the Abuse of the Common-wealth, when themselves are Abusers of it.

In my Projects I have no other end but the common Good of the Kingdom; I neither expect or desire Gain; I set up no new devised Taxes or Tolls; I invent no Impositions, nor raise Contributions; I force no Man to undertake or compel People to adventure; but I persuade like a Philosopher, who advised Four things to be consider'd, before the taking of any important thing in hand; to examine the beginning, to consider the middle, to approve the end, and to consult with the wise.

If any of my Propositions prove profitable to the State, and acceptable to the Subject, I have obtain'd my Wish: If not, I desire they may die without any more appearing in the World.

The First Project shall be for the Safety of His Majesty's Navy; and the Conveniency and Inconveniency in keeping it at Chatham or Portsmouth.

AS there is no Man that builds a House but at the first ground work of his Building, will be sure to make his Foundation firm and staple, (for on the strength thereof all the rest of the Building must depend) even so it is with Kings and Princes; for that King who means to live in Safety, and to avoid Dangers at home, or from abroad, must first seek to make his State firm and sure, as well in Defence upon an Invasion, as before he Enterprize any Action of Offence upon his Enemy; or else his Building is upon Glass and Ice, and will suddenly fall for want of a settled Foundation.

Therefore, like a careful Builder that will provide to encounter a Danger, in my ensuing Projects I will first lay down a Means and Remedy how to secure this Kingdom against the Attempts of our Neighbours, if in time they become our Enemies, before there shall be cause of Hostility, or before we make any Enterprize upon them in a Warlike manner: And the first thing I will handle, as the greatest importance to the Kingdom, is the Safety of His Majesty's Navy, and the Conveniency or Inconveniency in keeping them at Chatham or Portsmouth, as I have said before.

The Conveniency of Chatham.

1. Chatham is so safe and secure a Port for the Ships to ride in, that His Majesty's Navy may better ride with a Hawser at Chatham, than with a Cable at Portsmouth.

2. The reason of the long continuance of the Navy at Chatham, is the conveniency of Docks, and all other places, for the conveniency of Ships; and considering that the Officers of the Navy are there seated with their whole Families, it would breed a great Innovation and Change to bring them to Portsmouth.

3. The nearness from Chatham to London; from whence they may be supplied with all things they shall stand in need of, for that London is the Storehouse of all England: It is necessary therefore that the Navy should be kept at Chatham, rather than at Portsmouth.

4. Wulwich, Blackwall, Deptford, Limehouse and Ratcliffe, yield more Docks for the Building and Repairing of Ships than all other places of England.

5. All England cannot furnish Sailors like to London and the Newcastle Trade, which once in Three weeks repairs to the Port of London.

6. No part of England can Victual a Navy so conveniently, speedily, and at so small a Charge as London; all the Corn for Bread, Beer, Butter and Cheese, &c. is brought by Water from the adjacent Countries therabouts: And for Beef, Pork, and Bacon, London is plac'd in the Center, far more conveniently than Portsmouth, which has never a River to bring Commodities from other Shires; nor the Country of Hampshire so fruitful as to furnish it.

7. Our Trade to the Eastland returns their Commodities to London, which furnishes us with all Materials belonging to Shipping; as namely, Cables, Cordage, Pitch, Tar, Rosin, Masts, Yards, &c. which cannot be done at Portsmouth, the place yielding nothing that creates a Trade.

8. The Water at Chatham flows sufficiently every Spring-Tide to Grave the greatest Ships; and it is a doubt whether it it can be made to heighten so much in Portsmouth, as to do the like.

9. No Wind or Weather can endanger the coming home of an Anchor in Chatham; and the River affords sufficient space for every Ship to ride, without annoying one another: As to the contrary, a Storm, with a Wind from the North-East to the South-South-East, will stretch the Cables of the Ships in Portsmouth; and if any of their Anchors come home, they cannot avoid boarding one another, to their exceeding great Damage and Danger, the Channel being so narrow.

10. A Navy lying in the Harbor of Portsmouth, the Safety of them depends upon the Town of Portsmouth; and if Portsmouth should be surprized or taken at any time, the whole Navy falls into the Enemies hands.

11. Not a Cable, Anchor, Mast, Yard, Barrel of Powder, or any other thing that belongs to the furnishing a Fleet, but must be brought from London or Chatham to Portsmouth, with an exceeding great Charge, and no less delay and danger, considering the uncertainty of Winds, the peril to be intercepted by Enemies, and the hazard of Shipwrack.

12. The excessive Charge in sending down Carpenters, Cawkers, and other several Workmen belonging to Ships, with Imposts of Mariners; will amount to an extraordinary great Expence. All which will be eas'd by being at Chatham.

The Exceptions to the Navy lying at Chatham.

1. The several Winds to carry them to Portsmouth.

2. The hazard of the Shoals and Sands in going thither.

3. The distance from Chatham thither, if the French should attempt any thing upon us.

4. And some there are that advise part of the Ships to be kept at Portsmouth, and the other part at Chatham.

Whoever shall alledge these Reasons, must distinguish of the Service in hand, whether it be Offensive or Defensive, or against Spain, France, Holland, or any part of the East Country.

If Holland, or the Eastland become our Enemies, then doth Chatham lye most with advantage to annoy them, if they attempt any part of our North Coast, or Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex and Kent, which are places of most peril, considering their nearness to the City of London.

If we have Wars with France, there is little advantage gotten betwixt Chatham and Portsmouth; for being at the Downs at

Dover, we shall be over against France, and nearer to the Isle of Wight than Brest is, or any part of Brittany, where I suppose the Fleet of France will be made ready; and for the two Navies, English and French meeting at Sea, no place or time can be assign'd them; Ships being in continual action, and sailing one day on one Coast, and another day on another.

And whereas the several Winds are objected as an Impediment to our Navy at Chatham, you must know that an Easterly Wind keeps in a Fleet at Chatham, and so it doth the French, if they be in any part of Brittany; and our Ships also if they should be at Portsmouth, tho' they should be in the Channel, yet with that Easterly Wind, they cannot go to the Eastward, so that you see, an Easterly Wind brings an equal inconveniency, as well to the one as to the other.

And whereas from Chatham we must have two Winds to bring us into the Channel, or to Portsmouth, the one Southerly or Westerly to carry us to the Downs, the other Northerly or Easterly to bring us to Portsmouth, in Three Tides, with fair weather, from the Downs we shall be able to fetch Portsmouth howsoever the Wind is; in which traverse we shall be as likely to meet a Fleet of France, as in any other part of the Channel.

To answer the Objection of Sands and Shoals to endanger us in our coming about from Chatham; we see that by the Care and Skill of Pilots, no Memory or Record can tell of a Ship of his Majesty's, so lost: As out of Portsmouth, it is fresh in old Men's Mouths; and the Ribs of the Ship I have often seen, call'd the Great Henry, a Ship-Royal of King Henry the 8th. there perish'd.

I likewise remember in the days of Q. Elizabeth, and in the year 1586. that the Revenge, (after taken by the Spaniards) was as near Destruction, coming out of the Harbour of Portsmouth.

And to satisfy the Advisers that wish part of the Navy to be kept at Chatham, and the other at Portsmouth; this I say, That an Army on Land, or a Navy at Sea, which shall be divided, is easier to be cut off before they meet, than if they were met together in a main Battel; especially in so narrow a Sea as ours, where Fleets cannot pass without encountering one another.

Moreover, if the French should Anchor with a number of Ships, sufficient to encounter with either of our Two Fleets, divided, either at St. Hellens Point in the Isle of Wight, or the Downs, or Gorend, it were impossible for our Fleet to pass unseen or unmet withal; by which means they may cut them off before they meet.

But as I have said, the Country must be consider'd, with whom we have War; for if we have War with Spain, neither Portsmouth nor Chatham is so convenient as Plymouth; for in the Winter, which is the time that Ships must keep Harbour, they shall have space sufficient to make Provision against the Spring, and ease a great Charge in carrying the Ships from Plymouth to Chatham, and after from Chatham to Plymouth; which we cannot allow less than Two Months, if not more: And moreover, from Plymouth we shall put to Sea with our Ships nimble and clean, sooner, and better Mann'd and Victual'd, than either from Portsmouth or Chatham.

Therefore I conclude, in comparison betwixt Chatham and Portsmouth, Chatham is the best and safest place, and with that our whole Navy may be kept at Chatham, and not make any continual Residence but there only, considering the former Reasons. Never Hurt befall any of them that made their Being there, either by Weather or attempt of Enemy; and yet I must confess, they are not altogether so safe and secure from the Assault of a Fleet, that shall be brought from the Eastward with an Easterly Wind; and therefore it behoves us to be cautious and wary of it, as follows;

In the Stratagems contain'd in my Third Book, I advis'd a General to provide to withstand an Enterprize to be made upon Ships in Harbor, where they are usually Mor'd with Two Cables, to which Directions I refer you; but with leave, somewhat I will say of the state of our Navy at Chatham, and the danger that may befall us from Holland, if they become Enemies to us, as also shew the way of Prevention.

Holland, by reason of their abundance of Shipping, the number of Soldiers Quarter'd in all the parts of their Country, and their daily and speedy use in gathering their Forces together for present Service, as they often do, will give us the less suspicion if they should intend any sudden Stratagem upon us; and the first thing that they will attend, is the opportunity of a settled Easterly Wind, to bring their Ships, without striking Sail, as high as Gravesend, and there suddenly put 8 or 10000 Men on the Kentish Shore, to march to Upnor Castle, 4 or 5 Miles from thence; where they shall find no resistance, the Castle being both weak and weakly provided; and having it, they have an Entrance to the River, where the Ships ride.

The Ships having done so much as belongs to them, in landing their Men, they will, no doubt, repair presently to Upnor, which is the place they will principally shoot at; and the Castle being taken before their coming, their Passage is made for them to surprize our Navy, which they will find unprovided of Men, more than the ordinary Ship-keepers; their Ordnance commonly ashore, and without Powder or Shot; for unless there be Employment of Ships to Sea, the Ammunition is always kept in the Tower of London, and too late at that time to be supplied from thence, if this Devilish Design should prevail; I protest the very thought of it makes me tremble, and with it may be prevented.

And for prevention it will behove us to seek, how by Art and Skill to raise Works and Fortifications, both by Land and Water for the Guard and Strength of Upnor Castle; and to order and appoint that a certain number of Trained Soldiers, thereabouts dwelling, upon every Alarm repair thither with their Arms, which will prevent any sudden surprize; and in the mean time we shall have leisure to draw a greater Army together, than they will be able to withstand.

And so much as concerns the defence of the River, by Booming, and making Sconces upon it, I have said sufficiently in my former Stratagems; but seeing this is a Matter of so great Import as the Safety of our Navy, and by consequence the Security of our Kingdom, I advise and wish that the Ordnance or greatest part of them, be continually kept aboard the Ships, both moun'd and fitted with all kind of Ammunition belonging to them: That as in the Case of Upnor Castle, the Trained Soldiers of the Country, have Order to repair on board the Navy with their Arms: That the Ships themselves be Warp'd and Tow'd as low as the innermost Boom, and there to Moor themselves a Head and a Stern to welcome an Enemy with their whole Broad Sides. And if all these fail (as God forbid) then the Ships to sink themselves at an Anchor, to avoid falling into the hands of an Enemy; which Ships are easily after to be weigh'd without hurt or detriment.

Having left a Remedy, as you have heard, for the securing our Navy; my next Project shall be to hinder French Attempts upon us, they being a Nation of most danger, by reason of their nearness and greatness, and especially if they be assisted with the help of Holland with Shipping; as no doubt, but in matter of State France will labour to gain Holland from us, and to settle it, with a firm League and Friendship, with them, to redeem their loss of Scotland, who for many hundred years made their Dependency upon that Kingdom; and if Scotland prove honest to England, they may fear by our Conjunction of Foes we are become Friends; and that Scotchmen may as well turn their Swords upon their Breasts, as they have done heretofore upon ours.

A Project to prevent the French Landing in England, if they become our Enemies.

WE in England look upon France to be a strong and potent Country, the People in it to be both Warlike and Valorous; but it lying upon a main Continent, and ours an Island, divided with a Sea, we think we may easily offend them, and not be offended by them.

This Opinion is generally receiv'd, and indeed not to be confuted, but by such as understand the Sea better than the ordinary sort of Men: But for the explaining it, if ever there happen a War betwixt France and us, I will truly set down the danger that may redound to us by France, and the means how to prevent it, as I have already done, or will do, if a War happen betwixt Spain, or Holland, and us.

The general Position is, That France is no way to compare with us for number and strength of Shipping; and by consequence, we are to fear no danger from thence, upon any Attempt they shall make.

In Answer hereof, it is true, if the meeting and encountering a Fleet at Sea were certain, the strongest are likely to prevail against the other; but I have formerly shew'd, That there are Three principal things to be requir'd in a Sea-action: The First is Providence, to learn the Design of an Enemy to prevent him: The Second is Secresie, to keep the Enemy from Intelligence: And the Third, is how to work for advantage of Wind and Weather.

If the French intend to invade us, we may easily conjecture, by their preparation by Land and Sea, and the drawing down their Army to their Port-Towns; but where they mean to Attempt us, if they keep their Design secret, it will be hard to Discover, and the chief reason we are conceive, is according to the place where they keep their Rendezvous, the observation of Winds to bring them from thence to seize our Coast, and the weakness of our Harbors, where we may conceive they think to Land.

If there were no more difficulty, than the vulgar and common Concept, it were probable not to be in the Power of France to hurt us; but speaking like a Seaman, for that Sea actions must be govern'd by the Winds, thus much I must let you know, That a Southerly Wind, which brings them for our Coast, keeps our Ships in Harbor that we cannot budge; so that they shall neither fear our Force by Sea, nor our Ships be able to impeach them, unless by chance and accident they arrive in the same Harbor our Ships retire to; so you see it is neither the number or strength of Fleets, that can withstand them, if they observe the advantage of a Southerly Wind.

This is a peril that every Man conceives not; for if France can of themselves afford a quantity of Vessels, to Transport an Army; or by hiring Ships abroad, or compelling Strangers to serve that come into their Ports to Trade: It is not much material whether they be of strength, or no; for with a Southerly Wind they shall not fear any Force to meet them at Sea.

There was never Sore but God provides a Salve; and this fearful Hazard must be Cur'd, by prevention (as thus:) Our Fleet must divide into three Squadrons; and being at Sea, and forc'd to seek the Shore, every Squadron be appointed a particular Harbor to repair to; by which means every Port on the South Coast shall be defended and guarded by our Ships, which will be a Force sufficient to withstand the strength of France by Sea, if they be not assisted by Holland.

The Ports being thus guarded, they are prevented of Landing; for an Invador is not so mad, as not to provide a Harbor for his Security; and no Road or Bay with an outwardly Wind, is able, without great danger, to give him conveniency of Riding or Landing, the Sea and Siege will be so great.

But it may be objected, That tho' this serve for the Southern Coast, yet the North part of England, Scotland and Wales lie open to their Landing. The Answer to this is, That if our Three Squadrons be divided, the one to make good the Downs, an other the West Country; no Fleet can pass betwixt Dover and Calais, but they of the Downs shall have a view of them; and the same Wind the others have, will leave them to follow, and to prevent their Landing, The Western Squadron will do the like upon any Attempt that shall be made upon Milford-Haven, Wales, or any that part of England.

But our surest Course will be with some Ships to beleaguer their Harbors of Rendezvous in France, a good distance from the Shore, for fear of Embaying: We must consider that such Winds as serve to bring them for England, make a secure Road upon that Coast to Ride in; And such Winds as are dangerous to keep that Shore, make it impossible for the French to put out of Harbor, as I will shew more particularly, when I Treat of the way to prevent the French and Hollanders meeting.

Thus you may perceive, That an Invasion out of France into England or Scotland, is to be prevented. But his Majesty has another Kingdom of more danger, the Conditions of the People, and the openness of the Harbors consider'd; and that is Ireland, which I will a little handle.

Ireland, as it is an Island, is in the case of England, tho' more dangerous, in respect the People are more Rebellious, and divided from England, that cannot be with Celerity reliev'd, if an Enemy do Land; Besides the Irish Nation and their Natures do not so well Symbolize with the French as with the Spaniards; or if they did, the French have less advantage to invade that Kingdom than the others; for so much as the same Wind that carries a Fleet out of France into Ireland, the same Wind serves us to follow them out of England.

But seeing I am upon this Subject, I will let you know the difference betwixt the danger of a French Invasion and a Spanish into Ireland. You must consider that a Southwest Wind that brings a Fleet from Spain into Ireland, is not only against us, to go into Ireland, but keeps our Ships in Harbour, that we cannot put to Sea; by which occasion the Spaniards may Land in despite of us.

Moreover, if with that Wind they Land to the Northward of Ireland, tho' it be no farther than to the River of Shannon, We must have not only a North East Wind to carry us to Mizen-Head, or Cape Clear, but when we are at either of the Two places, we must have a contrary Wind to carry us in pursuit of them that Land to the Northwards, which is a Southerly Wind; and how this is like to happen, and what danger may befall us in the mean space, is a main point of Consideration: And therefore it fell out very luckily to us, that in the Spaniards last Expedition to Ireland, they landed at Kinsale, to which place one Wind carry'd us directly out of England, to give a Relief to our Army, and to prevent a second supply from Spain.

If they had Landed further to the Northward of Mizen-Head, we should have had as I have said, Two contrary Winds; besides, they would have come to them, where they should have found Succor and Relief, far from our Army by Land, where our March had almost been impossible, considering the season of the Year, and the weak help that the Country would have yielded us.

My Advice therefore is, When an Enemy is feared in Ireland, that there be a care to keep our Fleet at Sea, off of Mizen-Head, as a place to take advantage of all Winds; and that the Beacons be well watch'd on Shoar, with directions to the Watcher, that they give notice to our Fleet at Sea, to distinguish the Enemies Landing to the Northward or to the Eastward of that place; for our Ships lying open of the Cape of Mizen-Head, they will be able instantly to follow them, whether they shall go to the Northward or the Eastward.

But this Caution I give, that no occasion but necessity compel the Fleet to seek a Harbor: For I have shew'd before the inconvenience of it; and the difficulty to get them in again; that in the mean time an Enemy may work his mischief.

How to prevent the French and the Hollanders meeting to rescue one another, if they become Enemies to England.

Considering how things stand, or may hereafter stand betwixt France and Holland, to the prejudice of England, for that every State changes with Time and Advantage to themselves and Commonwealth; it will not be amiss, for prevention of Evil that may happen to this Kingdom, to follow the Practice of a skillful Physician

Physician in the Cure of his Patient, to give him Cordials to avoid the Disease, rather than afterwards, when it has seiz'd upon him, to go about with Physick to recover him; and according to this example, it will be better for us before-hand to withstand the perils, than seek to shun it when it is too late.

The Dangers are of Two kind; the one by the encrease of Ships in France, that may in time prove prejudicial to the State; for it is perillous to have Neighborhood with Danger: The other is, the assistance they may find in Foreign parts by Sea; and above all other Nations, the Hollanders, who are nearest able to equal us in Shipping.

The fear of an Invasion out of France, our Ancestors never much dreaded; for our Ships were still the Walls and Bulwarks of our Defence, and ever made that Nation recoil with Dishonour and Loss, as our Histories do at large declare; and rather than the French ambitious Thoughts, should now aspire to Greatness of Shipping, it were far better, happier, and safer for us, to proclaim an everlasting War against them, than by a suffering Peace, they should attain to a strength by Sea; for Princes in Matters of most Importance, ought to govern by Rules of State, and to be directed by Precedents of Times.

We will not oppose the French Greatness amongst themselves at home, when it shall have no relation to us abroad. But if France will not be contented with what they have been, but labour to be greater than we think fit they should be; Wisdom bids us provide for the best, which we cannot better do, than to abate their Pride and Power in the beginning; for it is an old saying, That Peace and Power are incompatible, and live not long together; and the strongest Pillar of Peace is to take away the Occasion that may breed a War.

But in case, according to my Proposition, that France, out of matter of State, shall seek to give assistance to Holland, and we to impeach it at Sea, this that follows shall direct those that have the Command of so great and weighty a Charge, as the Government of our Seas.

Our Fleet, consisting of a number of Ships, must be divided into Three Squadrons, and appoint Three several places for their Rendezvous, (viz.) the Downs, the Isle of Wight, and Guernsey, all of them opposite to the Harbours in France, betwixt Calais in Picardy, and Ushant in Brittany.

Our Squadrons are to work according to Winds; for that Wind which is dangerous for us to keep the French Coast, is impossible for their Ships to put out of Harbor, as I have formerly shew'd; and therefore we need not put our selves to hazard, but upon a just occasion, when the Wind shall serve them.

Altho' some of their Ports are better than others, yet there is none of them in the distance aforesaid, but are bad Harbours, and dry from half Tide to half Tide, that a Ship cannot get either in or out, but by favour of a whole Tide.

And it is moreover to be consider'd, that there is no Wind that will carry a Ship out of those Harbours of France into Holland or Zealand, but a Southerly or Westerly Wind; for tho' they may put out to Sea with an Easterly Wind, yet being at Sea, they cannot recover the places aforesaid, and therefore had better keep the Harbours, and avoid the danger of meeting us at Sea: And besides that such Winds as aforesaid will carry them out of Harbor into Holland, we shall be as ready to take the advantage of them from our own Coast, as themselves can be from theirs; considering what time they must have to Embark their Men and Provisions, and observe their Tides for going forth of their Ports. The Downs lie conveniently to guard Calais, Bullen, St. Valere and Harvedgrace; the Isle of Wight will have an eye over Diep, Sherbourn, and all the Creeks to the Hogg; the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey will do the like to St. Malo, which is a Port of greatest importance on that Coast.

But the places of greatest weight, are Brest, Blavet, and some other Harbours for the Entertainment of their best and greatest Ships, which lie East and South East from Ushant, and not within the Channel opposite to England.

But those French Ships that shall there remain, must have two contrary Winds to bring them into our Channel; the one to get about Ushant, and that being done, the other is to sail into Holland, in which course they must pass our Three Squadrons aforesaid, and will find it impossible to escape us.

Harvedgrace, which is the second good Harbour next to St. Malo, lying betwixt Calais and Ushant, is in the same state of Brest and Blavet, which must have two contrary Winds to carry them to Holland, tho' they be nearer to Holland by many Leagues, yet they shall run the same hazard and peril of Brest, as I have declared.

Thus you see how easie a thing it is to prevent the French and Hollanders meeting,

if a discreet and understanding Commander have the Rule of Things, and knows what belongs to it.

For the better Information of those that shall be employ'd, I will set down the State and Condition of every Harbour in France.

The State of the Harbours in France.

THere is a Bank in the middle betwixt Dover and Calais, South from Dover, and West and by South from Calais, that has but 4 Fathom at low Water, and 4 Leagues long.

The Old-Man is a good Road for North-East, East or South-East Wind, 6 or 7 Fathom deep.

St. John's Road, nigh to it, is a good Road for the same Wind, and is 15 or 16 Fathom deep.

Bullen is a bar'd Harbour, and dry at low Water.

The River of Somme, where St. Vallery stands, if it were not for a Bank that lies at the Entrance thereof, were a good Harbour.

From the Old-Man to Diepe, South-South-West, betwixt them, lies the River of Hen; the Town of Treport is upon it at low Water dry.

Diepe at full Sea 3 Fathom; there are 3 Boys to direct you at half Flood; small Ships may go in at low Water dry.

Feckban, 4 Leagues, West-South-West, a good Harbour, two Fathom at low Water.

Havred'grace, at high Water 3 Fathom, and at low Water one; there is no failing from hence up the River of Seine to Roan without a Pilot.

Caen is 6 Leagues, South-West, from Sand Head, a bar'd Harbour, and full of Sands going in.

Four Leagues Eastward lies the Island of St. Mark, and to be sail'd about, but foul Ground.

The Bay of Hets is a good Road for North-North-East Winds, and indeed for all Winds.

Cherbourg is a small dry Creek.

From thence is Faux-Meuril, a dry Haven.

A League from hence is Cape de Hague: West 3 Leagues from this Cape lieth Alderney, West and by North, almost 3 Leagues long, East and West; the East is good to sail near the Shoar, but the West is bad, and the South side worse.

From Alderney to Guernsey, West-South-West, 8 Leagues; the East end of Guernsey is flat, the West sloopy. Beware of the Island of Aron; it is full of Rocks; betwixt the Castle and the Land it is a good Road at 6 or 7 Fathom, and which out the Castle at 12 or 13 Fathom; it ebbs or flows here at 6 or 7 Fathom up and down; there is good Anchoring round about the Island.

From Guernsey to St. Maloes 7 Leagues. South-South-East, and to Sacke, East and by North, one League; you may anchor about it at 26 or 27 Fathom.

From Guernsey to Jersey, South-East, 8 Leagues: There is good Anchoring at Guernsey round about it, and yet there lie Rocks to the West side; on the North side there is a good Road for a North-West Wind. Cateline Bay, on the East side, is a very good Road. You may go between Jersey and the Rocks, called Pater-Noster, 11 Fathom, and Anchor at Trinity Bay.

From the West end of Jersey to St. Maloes, South and by East, 8 or 9 Leagues: In the way there are Rocks called the Monks.

The Course from the Hug to St. Maloes by Grand Ville, Mount St. Michael, and Cancall, is full of Rocks and Sands.

The Island near St. Maloes, called Zezembre, a Ship may go round about it safely.

The Tides hereabouts rise and fall 7 Fathom: There is no Entrance but for small Ships into St. Maloes.

About 5 Leagues West from thence lieth a great Sandy Bay, where one may ride 6 or 7 Fathom at all Winds.

You may ride about the Islands of Brisack: And a League and a half from hence are the Islands of Pyckle, Islands which you may sail about; as also the 7 Islands, at 4 Fathom; as likewise Greeveland.

The Haven of St. John's de Dieu, three Leagues from Morlaix, is a barr'd Harbour, from whence you may go to Morlaix through the Rocks, and Anchor in 5 Fathom Water.

All Havens thereabouts are barr'd, but Rosco, which is deep Water, and has many good Ships belonging to it: It is the Bas that makes Rosco to good a Harbour.

Brest is the best Harbour in all France, and Blavet the next; Odogerne is a good Harbour; the Bank before it is 5 or 6 Fathom deep on both sides; there is 3 Fathom within at low Water.

West-Penmark is a good Harbour, 3 Fathom at low Water. Bindest is a dangerous Harbour for Rocks.

There is good Anchoring about the Island of Mutton and Groye.

Blaves is an excellent Harbour, 4 Fathom at low Water.

Morbeau is a good Harbour, but forceable Tides, 8 or 9 Fathom; within the East side is a bold Shore.

Behind the West Point of Croisick there is a good Road, at 5, 6 or 7 Fathom, and safe as in a Harbour.

The River of Nancy is a good Harbour, 7 or 8 Fathom Water; but you must have a Pilot.

The Island Heyes has no good Road; but the best is a South-West or West-South-West Wind.

St. Martin, 12 Leagues, East-South-East, from Heyes.

From St. Martin's to St. John de Luz, is 54 Leagues, and never a Harbour in the way, but Bordeaux, worthy to be accounted, being all of them barr'd Harbours.

A Project how to War upon Holland, if they give Occasion.

If the Hollanders shall neglect our Favours and Friendships, or become obstinate, perverse and insolent, and so proud withal as to disdain us, I have not that mistrust of the Force of England, but that it will prove the Revenge, and punish their Unthankfulness, as well by what I have said in the precedent Project, as by this that follows: For as in natural Bodies, the longer they live in Health, Sickness is the more dangerous when it assails them; so it will prove in an unsuccessful War of the Hollanders, who have so long sail'd with a prosperous and fortunate Gale, when at last they taste of the Perverseness of Fortune.

What can they value themselves upon, (to speak truly) but England deserves the Honour of it? We were the first that gave them Life, and it is such a Life, if they would consider it, that if we feed them not, they faint and famish. Let them remember an old Observation of State, That he who entertains an Army of Strangers, takes a Wolf by the Ear; for as it is dangerous to detain them, so it is more perillous to let them go: And if his Majesty at any time call home his Subjects from their Service, that have been the Wolves to their Enemies, they will soon become silly Sheep for others to prey upon; for things easily and unlawfully gotten, are soonest lost and consumed, if they be not supported.

If England at any time excepts against their ill Usage, and calls them to account for Injuries, they will find that we are the stronger, and able to give them Laws, and they the weaker to accept of the less Evil; for where can they Trade but they shall find Interruption by us, laying aside their Passage through our Seas; that without our Leave and Harbours, they cannot subsist in their Navigations. But now to my purpose to what I have in hand.

I will imitate the Marquis of Sancta Cruz, a Man eminent in Spain for his Experience, Employment, and good Success in Sea Actions, who, upon the breach of Peace with England in 85. presented to the King his Master a Relation how his Territories should be defended, and the English annoy'd.

And as an Imitator of the Marquis, I advise, seeing we know not how soon Matters of Unkindness may burst out betwixt Holland and us, that in the mean time we inform our selves of the true State of their Provinces by Sea, and that there be a Choice made of two sufficient Seamen to be sent in a secret manner into the Low Countries, to take a view of their Shipping; as namely, the number of Vessels, their Ordnance and Quality of them; to enquire of their Ships abroad, and the Conditions of them at large; of their Number of Mariners, and to distinguish betwixt the Fishermen and Sailors; to enquire of the Decay of their Trades, if their Men and Ships be employ'd in Warfare; to observe how a War with England will relish with the Multitude, and where and how they think most to annoy us; for these things are necessary to be known from an Enemy.

The next must be to supply and guard our Forts and Castles on the Sea Coast; for it is a main and important thing to keep the Hollanders from the Succour of our Harbours; and if they be forc'd to keep the Sea in foul Weather, with contrary Winds and long Nights, the length and narrowness of our Chanel, the Clits of England and France will be enrich'd with their Wracks.

Such Towns seated opposite to Holland and Zealand ought to be extraordinary guarded and fortified, but especially Sandwich, Harwich, and Tarmouth, in respect of their Harbours and Roads to entertain Fleets, their natural Situation for Strength, and the Number of People there resident that are descended from Holland.

But how all these Places should be guarded and defended by Shipping, that are so far distant and remote from one another, there rests the Difficulty.

In this case we must work according to the Winds; for all Sea Actions are guided by it: And suppose the Hollanders with an Easterly Wind direct their Course for Harwich, Tarmouth, or other Northern Parts of England or Scotland, and that our Ships with that Wind lie in the Downes, which is our ordinary Rendezvous, this Northerly, or North East Wind, is full in our Teeth to pursue them.

Or by keeping the Sea with our Ships, our meeting is as uncertain, the Sea being wide and spacious; and if we be taken with a hard Gale of Wind, and put to Leeward, whilst we seek to fetch it up again, they shall have time and leisure to land where they list, as I can instance in this case many Precedents.

And therefore, instead of the Downes, I conclude Tarmouth to be the only Road for the Rendezvous and Seat of our Shipping; for there we shall be ready upon all Occasions to set sail, what Wind soever shall bring an Enemy from Holland, tho' it were into the River of Thames, or the Northern Parts, having the least warning, which we cannot fail of with Fire-Beacons, or Pinnaces to be kept at Sea. And as the Advantage of an Invader is to work with the Advantage of the Wind, to must the Defendant seek as well to prevent them by the same Advantage of Wind.

The next thing I would wish to be put in execution, which rather should be the first, as of most Importance, as I have already declar'd, is, the Guard of his Majesty's Ships in Harbour at Chatham; for the Prosperity and Welfare of England consists in their Safety: And if Holland should prove an Enemy, now that Flushing is in their Possession, and within 14 or 15 hours sail from Chatham, gives them a brave Opportunity.

I think good to give this Caution, That an Attempt upon the Navy is more perilous for an Enemy to the Eastward of us, as Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Germany, than from the Southward, as France, Spain or the Streights; for Ships from the Eastward are able to come directly with one Wind from the Countries aforelaid; as those from the Southward must have two contrary Winds, the one at South-West, to bring them to the Downes, and after, an Easterly Wind, to carry them to Chatham, which perhaps will not happen in an Age.

And it is not unworthy Consideration, how fatal those Easterly Countries have been to this Kingdom, first by the Saxons, and after by the Danish Conquest.

My next Advice is, That we strive by all means possible to possess our selves of the Town of Flushing, being of more Importance to our State than any Town of Europe, as I will declare in my next Project: First, we shall be strengthen'd with as many Ships as belong to Middlburgh and Flushing: Secondly, it will draw all the rest of Zeeland into our Subjection, the principal Harbour being Flushing: Thirdly, it will be a Bridle to Holland: For they can no more maintain their Navigations to the Southward, than a Subject to live under a King, and disobey his Laws; for we having Flushing, and guarding the Downes in Kent, all Succours and Safety for their Ships upon that Coast is taken from them.

Now to proceed to the Hollanders encountering us at Sea; for that it must come to, not once but often, if Wars ever happen betwixt us.

They will in reason labour to put their Fortune upon the first Barrel at Sea, because their State cannot maintain a long and lingering War with us: Secondly, their Ships and Mariners, by which they live to support their State, their Revenues being Contributions raised out of Trade, necessarily must sail, when their Ships and Men are converted to any other use than Merchandize; but especially when the same Ships and Men must be maintained out of this kind of Revenue, that was wont to bring in Gain.

Thirdly, the Victory first gotten redoubles the Courage of the Victor: it astonishes and disheartens the Vanquish'd: it shakes the Fidelity of Subjects, many whereof are too much inclin'd to the Holland Faction; it gets Reputation, and gains Friends and Alliances abroad, who commonly sway with good Success: And therefore I wish we never present them, at the first Encounter, with less Force than to determine the Quarrel.

The Benefit the Hollanders shall make upon our Coast, is, the use of our Roads, tho' we debar them our Harbours; which Roads are open, spacious, undefensible, and will succour them in all Winds and Weathers; as namely, the Ile of Wight, Portland, Torrey, &c.

And to prevent them herein, must be to divide our Fleet into Three Squadrons, as

I have often said before; and being so divided, no Ship can escape us; for tho' they shall pass one Squadron in the night unseen, or in a Fog, they cannot avoid falling into the lap of one of the other two: And we shall make our East-India Voyage no farther than our own Channel; for their Ships must pass it going and coming.

I will not omit to put in execution a Stratagem when our Fleet shall be thus divided, viz. to place along the Sea Shoars Fires like Beacons, from the Cape of Cornwal to the Northforeland in Kent, with a Care they be well watched and guarded; that when a Fleet shall be descry'd at Sea, or Ships arrive in the Road aforesaid, the Beacons next adjoining to be fired, and like a running Post one Fire to take it of another, that in a little space an Easterly Squadron shall have Notice what happeneth to the Westward, and the West to the East; so that howsoever the Wind is, one of the Squadrons shall come round upon the other, and upon the Ships in the Roads aforesaid.

But perhaps some will say, That if so few Ships as those of Dunkirk did so great a Spoil to us in time of War, what can we expect but Destruction from the Hollanders, that have 100 Vessels to one of the others in those days.

To which I answer, That tho' the Dunkirkers took many Ships in the Queen's time, yet they never lessen'd ours nor the Hollanders Numbers; for by reason their Harbours were not to be entred at all Hours and Tides, but only at a half Flood, they us'd to take out the Masters and Merchants as Pledges, to perform such Conditions as they agreed upon for releasing the Ship and Goods: And at that time they stood in that danger of our Ships, and the Hollanders who guarded the Coasts, that they durst not keep their Prizes longer than they had made this Contract aforesaid.

But with us it will be otherwise; for all such Ships as we take we shall be able to enjoy without Danger or Fear, our Coasts and Harbours being nigh us, our Ports capable at all Times and Tides to receive us. And I dare boldly affirm, that if His Majesty will give free Liberty to his Subjects to take and spoil, as many Hollanders as they can, in their Trades at Sea, in a little space they will be able of themselves, without His Majesty's help or assistance, to take or destroy the better part of their Vessels within their Provinces.

For let us compare them with the Pirates of Argiers and Tunis, who till of late years that they were instructed by Christi- ans, were ignorant in what belong'd to Ships or Mariners: And if we consider'd in what little space they encreas'd to the number they are now of, being all of them Ships of Christians, and not one of their own, it is to be marvel'd, and our Fate to be compar'd with it.

For if we Fit, Furnish, and Man such Ships as we shall take from the Hollanders, and employ them against the Hollanders themselves, the natural Inclination of our Men at Sea consider'd, the small Expence in Rigging, Victualling, and Furnishing them; the little distance they shall sail both outward and homeward; and the continual Supplies from Land they shall receive; for one Ship the Pirates of Argiers have taken, as aforesaid, we shall become owners of Forty, and make one of them the destruction of another, without farther help, either at home or abroad.

For securing our Newcastle Trade, it must be to fortify our Ships with Ordnance, to go in Fleets, and to Sail near the Shore, that if they be chased, or in danger of taking, to run on Land. The Countries upon the Sea Coast must be Commanded to keep a good Watch in the Day time, and to be ready to rescue any Ships that shall be so distressed.

And because I have nam'd the Ships of Newcastle, I will say something of them, and compare them with the Ships of Holland, which some of my Country men to much Magnify, and hold so terrible, that they are frighted with the name of them, and desire to fright others.

What I shall say, may perhaps be wondered at, and my Judgment by some taxed; but if well consider'd, it will not seem so great an Error, as upon the first apprehension.

I will compute 200 Sail of Ships, betwixt 2 and 300 Tuns in burthen, belonging to the Trade of Newcastle; Vessels for their strength in Building, for their spaciousness within Board, for the Decks to place their Ordnance, and all other conveniency to make Men of War, I dare say Holland has not the like.

If these Ships be fortify'd with English Ordnance, which Holland affords not, but with Grief I may say, is supplied from us; and if 100 of our Trained Soldiers be put on board every one of them, which we may do of our own Nation; and which Holland cannot do, unless they dissolve their Land Army, and put themselves in to the mercy of the Enemy; I will be bold to say, that these Ships alone, will be able to encounter the whole Force of the Netherlands; and as I have computed, but 200 Ships, by a Project contain'd in this Book, we shall double the number of 200. and by consequence be as strong again.

Tho' this Trade seem to be but of small account, in respect of the grossness of the Commodity; That it is amongst our selves, and in the Kingdom; and that the Ships return from London unladen; yet we may account it of most Importance and Consequence to the State of England; considering the multitude of Mariners it breeds, and the readines of them for his Majesty's Service, when he has sudden Occasion to use them; for every Three Weeks these Ships never fail to make their repair into the River of Thames, if they be not hindred by Wind; as all other Trades but this is out of the Kingdom, and upon their Voyages in Summer, that if his Majesty have need to furnish but Two of his Ships to Sea, there will not be found Mariners sufficient to Man them, if it be not for the Newcastle Trade. Leaving this, I will once more return to our Annoying the Hollanders.

And if we go further from home to seek out the Hollanders, yea, as far as the East-Indies, a place that has puff'd them up with Pride, and has bred a Heart of Dildain against us, more for the number of their Ships that resort thither, and the length of their Navigation, than for any profit they find there: The next Voyage we undertake, shall be to seek them in their Return from thence, in a desolate and uninhabited Island, called Mau- vicin, after the name of the last Prince of Orange, lying in the Courle betwixt those places of the Indies they Trade to, and the Cape of Good Hope. This Island affords them great Comfort and Refreshing, which makes their Navigation much the easier and commodious: And as the meeting of Ships is more certain in a Harbour than at Sea; so is ours the more sure to find, and take them there.

If it happen that the Hollanders sail falling in with that Island, which must proceed more out of Negligence than Will; for they are to expect a great Succour in their way home by that Island, then they to repair to Saldana Bay, near the Cape of Good Hope; or missing that, then to the Island of Sia, Hellena, well known to us, and long frequented by the Portugueses; for no other places can succour their unufferable wants.

And tho' we should fail to meet them in any of these places aforesaid; nevertheless they cannot account themselves safe at home, when they remember the long distance they have to Sail, and the dangers they are to pass through our Chanel, if we become their Enemies; unless they avoid us, by going into the North part of Scotland, which in my Filing Project I have handled.

There are many other ways to offend the Hollanders, which I forbear to speak of, referring them to my Breast, till there be occasion; and I will prosecute my Design upon the Island of Wakerland.

A Project how to get Possession of the Island of Wakerland, if the King of England will Compound with the Natives.

IN my former Project I wish, as a matter of greatest Importance to our State, to seek and get the Possession of the Island of Wakerland, wherein Flushing is seated: the Reasons whereof I have in some kind declar'd; and now shall follow the manner how to compass it with Consent, and liking of the Inhabitants, if they will accept and hearken to Reason, before we attempt them with Violence or Force; For it is a Maxim, He that is Master of the Sea, shall be able both to Take and Defend Flushing, or most Islands.

The First thing we must put in execution, we must have a Book Printed and Divulged in the name of some Person, pretending to be born there; and advising the Inhabitants of the Island to hearken to his Reasons, being moved to write out of a natural Affection he bears his Country.

His First Reason is for them to consider the end for which they have so long fought (viz.) their Religion, their Liberty, their Security, and their Commodity, and have not as yet attain'd them; nor like to do, so long as the King of Spain is made able to subsist in that War.

The Second Consideration is, how to compass these Four Ends by a more gentle, and easie course than by War, which may be effected if they will judiciously weigh the ensuing Reasons.

The Book must make it appear, what Discourtesies and Oppressions Holland imposes continually on them; which indeed is unufferable; but that both their Security depends upon their mutual Agreement, because of the Third that is Enemy to them both.

To wish them to consider, That tho' their Payments in the Island of Wakerland do equal Holland in their proportion, and that their Men of War of Zealand are esteem'd and known to be more Warlike, and to have done braver Exploits than the Hollanders by Sea; yet notwithstanding what Service is done, either by Land or Sea, is all attributed to Holland, for Zealand and Wakerland is not once mention'd; and therefore to advise them to divide themselves from Holland, that their Worths and Virtues may appear to the World.

The way to attain to Happiness must be, by the Countenance and Assistance of some Powerful neighbour Prince to rely upon; and England, above the rest, would be able to obtain that for them, in a peaceable manner, which with the loss of their Blood, they could not enjoy in 70 or 80 Years of War: And if the ensuing Conditions may be yielded to, by the King of England, they may boldly sheath up their Swords, and never have Cause hereafter to draw them again.

The Conditions on which the Inhabitants are to Contract with the King of England.

The beginning of all Men's Actions must tend to the Service of God, every one according to his private Conscience; and no other King in these parts of the World, but the King of England, does maintain the Religion by them profess'd; and for the better Proof thereof, his Majesty's Father of Famous Memory, shew'd himself a principal Pillar, and the absolute Cause to settle the true Religion in their Provinces; as it appear'd by the Council of Dort, against the Innovation of the Armenians; which Sect Wakerland was never known to Favour or Embrace: Nor will his Majesty assume the nomination of their Elders, or Preachers, or meddle with their Church Discipline, but refer it to themselves.

Whereas they are over-charged with Contributions and Excizes, in the Government they now live under; they may Condition with His Majesty, to ease them the moiety of what they now pay, and the other Moiety be reserv'd for Defence against an Enemy; or in Fortifications or Maintenance of Garrisons; all which Soldiers to be English, as People that are no strangers to them in Acquaintance or Conditions, as they have made proof when they lived together, without any kind of Discourtesies.

Forasmuch as many times they appeal to the general States, residing in the Hague, or upon occasion they are often call'd thither, to their great Expence and Discontent; they shall be eas'd of that Trouble and Charge, and determine all Questions, and settle their Affairs, amongst themselves, by Authority from His Majesty, without having relation to any other Provinces: This will prove a greater freedom and liberty, than they could all this while compass by the Sword; or can otherwise do by any way they can think of.

His Majesty by this Grant, and other Immunities he may give, without Innovation or infringing their Ancient Laws and Customs, will make them freer than ever they have been; and his Protection will be so strong a Defence to them, that no Prince or Nation dare offer to injure them, either at home or abroad.

It is apparent what Benefit they shall reap by these Privileges; First in easing them of the moiety of their Excizes; but most especially, if his Majesty will be drawn to grant them the Privilege of his Subjects in their Customs within his own Dominions; and to have a Freedom of their Ships to take Freights within His Majesty's Ports, which the Laws of the Land prohibit to any but his own Subjects. This will be much greater to their advantage and profit, than ever they shall attain to by living under the Government they now do.

Perhaps his Majesty may be drawn to consent to the remove of the English Staple from Delft to Midleborough, where it had long continued heretofore, to the Commodity of the whole Island, as themselves best know.

In yielding their Obedience to his Majesty, is no new Precedent amongst themselves; for in the Year 1424. after Holland, Friesland and Zealand, with the Island of Wakerland, had continued in the Line of Thieri of Aquitain, the space of 600 Years; Jacoline, Widow and Heiress of these Provinces, resign'd them to Philip the First, Duke of Burgundy; by which Resignation these three States became join'd to Flanders and the rest of the Provinces, and still continues in the Line of Philip.

If these People may enjoy their Religion quietly, their Liberties freely, their Security peaceably, their Commerce, Trade and Wealth plentifully, and have the Honour to be subject to so mighty a King; no Man can justly pity them, if by refusing it they fall into the hands of Enemies.

And if their Pride and Obstinacy refuse this solid Advice of a Friend, as the State of England now stands, that by our permission million the Hollanders are grown to so great a Strength by Sea, it behoves us to seek a Remedy for our Safeties; which cannot be better done, than by possessing the Island of Wakerland, which does more concern us than any plot of Ground elsewhere.

And if we be put by force to enjoy it, there is no more to be said than I have often repeated; that so long as we are stronger by Sea, that we keep our Ports Guarded and Armed, and prohibit their entrance into them; not only all Wakerland, but Holland and Zealand, will be at our Devotion as aforesaid, as may appear by the Project that went before.

Of the Harbours of Holland, Zealand, and Flanders; in order, if we have Wars, to take Advantage of them.

THE Texel has Three Channels, whereof the Spaniards or the King's is the best; when you are within there is a good Road under the Island of Tixel; and from thence you go up to Amsterdam, and all places within the Zurick Sea.

To the Northward of the Texel lies the Vlie, a good Channel, but narrow; for Ships that come out of the Zurick Sea, there are Two Channels going out at the Vlie.

From the Texel to the Muse, S. S. W. 24 Leagues. The Muse goes into the Brill, and has Three Channels, whereof one is better than the rest, and has 16 Foot at a full Sea: Within the Brill the Channel carries them to Skeam, Rotterdam, Delph Haven, and other places thereabouts. The old Muse carries them up to Dort.

From the Muse or the Brill up to Goree, Two Leagues S. W. The Goree hath 18 Foot at low Water; and so you may go up at Helvoet-Sijde, where you may Ride with the greatest Ship of Holland.

From Goree to the Island of Wakerland, 6 Leagues S. W. The Island of Scowden is betwixt them; and Bruers-Haven is in that Island.

Flushing is the best Harbor in all Zealand, and lies in the Island of Wakerland; the Channel has 4 Fathom, at the Water going in.

From Flushing to Graveling 24 Leagues W. S. W. These Harbors following lie betwixt them; and all upon the Coast of Flanders (viz.) Ostend 12 Leagues; from thence to Newport 3 Leagues; from thence to Dunkirk 5 Leagues; from thence to Graveling 4 Leagues; Mardike lies betwixt the Two last, and is the best Harbour upon all that Coast, as it is now made.

From the Texel to the Foreland in England S. W. 47 Leagues.

From the Texel to Townmouth W. 42 Leagues; from the Muse to Harwich, W. a little Southerly, 29 Leagues; from the Muse or Goree S. W. and by W. 36 Leagues; from Flushing to the Foreland W. 24 Leagues.

A Project how to make War upon Spain, written in the Queen's time, and presented to Sir Robert Cecil, by Her Majesty's Appointment.

THE continual Annoyance our small Ships of War have for many years offered the Spaniards upon their own Coasts, makes them of late more provident than before they were, by drawing home their Ships in Fleets, that were wont to come straggling; as may appear by the West-Indies Trade, whose Ships strove to be first at home, to take the better Market; but now they use to repair to the Havana, where they attend the coming of the Plate Fleet; into which Ships they put their Silver, Gold, and things of value; and are wasted themselves by the same Fleet; by which means few of the India Ships, have been of late Years taken into England.

The Portuguese Trade is more general than the Spaniards; as namely into the East-Indies, Brazil, St. Thome, Cassie de la Mina, and other parts of Guinea; from the two latter they use to send their Gold Brigantines to St. Thome, and Transport it into Portugal with the Fleet, which returns in September, both into Brazil and thither; they freight the Boats of Holland, and the East Country that are of good force, which defend themselves, and their lesser Ships in their company from the English.

These Fleets of later Years have avoided touching at the Tercera Islands, which were wont to afford them Relief and Succour, because they were continually haunted by the English; and such Armada's as were wont to be sent to those Islands, now keep off the Headlands on their own Coast, as the surest means to defend them; for whosoever seeks a Coast, will first fall with a Headland or Cape.

How to employ our Fleet against Spain.

The last Summer's good Fortune that Holland and we both had, in taking each of us a Carrack, may encourage us both to employ our Sea Forces against Spain; being a means to work us both Security, and for Holland to prosecute their Wars with more advantage: And it by one Consent we agree together, we must resolve upon the Employment of Two several Fleets; the number, the time and manner how to employ them, with the hopes of what we are to make by them, are as follows.

The Carracks outward: The Plate Fleet homeward.

The Firm Land and New Spain Fleets outward.

The Carracks and New Spain Fleet homeward.

The Carracks departure from Lisbon is certain; for if they exceed their 15th of April, they are commonly forc'd back, not being able to double Abrillos Shoals on the Coast of Brazil in the 18th. Degree.

And as I have said before, That the meeting of a Ship or Fleet is more certain upon a Headland nigh a Port which they are bound, than in an open Sea, where they may escape by night, by Fog, by being to Leeward, or many other casualties; therefore, besides the great Fleet that should make good the Coast of Spain, it were fit the Enemy were busied in both his Indies; and how to offend him in his East-Indies I have set down in this Book, to which I refer you. Our Second and most material Hope is upon the Plate Fleet, whose coming home is uncertain; tho' for the space of Four or Five Years past, they have observed the Months of March and April: The Ports whither they resort, are St. Lucar, or Cadix; the likeliest place of meeting them is Cape St. Maries, the Headland they commonly make before they put into St. Lucar.

The greatest doubt of meeting this Fleet, is the Intelligence they may receive out of Spain; considering the small distance betwixt them and the Indies, and the certainty of the Winds, whereby they may give warning to their Fleet to Winter there, if they see cause; and therefore the subtlest and securest course to prevent them, is to send Two or Three Pinna-ces, excellent choice Sailors to live before the Havana, to attend the coming out of their Fleet, and alter to pursue them a Stern, till they bring them into the height they mean to hail in; which done, one of the Three Pinnaces may repair with all speed to our Fleet, where they shall have Directions to find them, and give relation in what state, and in what height they left them: The other Two Pinnaces are not to leave company of the Fleet, unless the Fleet alter its height; which if they do, one of the Two Pinnaces is to follow the same Directions the other did, with this caution; That if they find themselves in danger of being taken, they throw their Instructions over-board.

The Third and last hope of our Fleet, is the Ships of Terra firma, or the Firm Land, which go for the next Years Plate, and are commonly to depart from Spain, at the coming home of the other Fleet: The place to meet them is 13 or 20 Leagues from Cape Cinteen in Barbary. We may know by the Wind, within a Point or two, how they will steer, as also the time of their departure from St. Lucar, by the Moon, for they must observe the Spring Tides to come over the Barr: We may likewise provide to have Intelligence by the way of Mamora, or Sally, Two Towns in Barbary, opposite to that part of Spain.

If we should prove so unhappy as to miss this Fleet, if Her Majesty will purpose this Squadron to the Indies, they will not fail meeting with them at the Northernmost part of Dominica, where they lie to Water; or being departed from thence, their course is certain to Cape de Vela; and after to Nombre de Dios, where commonly they take in their Treasure, and where they may be easily surpriz'd.

I will suppose our Second Fleet to be at Sea, upon return of our first, who have these several hopes likewise: The Carracks and New Spain Fleet homeward; and the New Spain Fleet outward. If her Majesty will resolve to keep a continual Fleet, as is propos'd, few of these Ships can possibly escape us, either going or coming, seeing we know the course they sail, the Season of the Year they must needs pass, and the Harbors whither they are bound.

The New Spain Fleet outward, is to depart from the same Part, through the same Seas, and in the same Course, the Terra Firma, or Firm Land Fleet doth; only they differ in the time of the Year; for they exceed not their Midsummer-day to set sail from Spain, because of their late getting to the Port of St. John de Ulva, bein a small boat of the Northern, Vintler, which was pulled upon the Coast.

There being place for Guano, which is a small French vessel, able to hold 1000000 of Guano, then Richard ship being out of Guano, and Guano by their coming out, and doing so, would be a great thing when they come to water, and to be a great thing out of the Coast of Guano, the great Admirals the

that he was not able to prosecute his Affairs against Ireland; for no sooner was Sir Richard Lawfon return'd, but I was sent again upon that Coast, as you have heard, who kept the King's Forces to employ'd, that he betook himself only to the guard of his Shores.

The sequel of all these Actions being duly consider'd, we may be confident, that whilst we busie the Spaniards at home, they dare not think of invading England or Ireland; for by their absence, the Fleet of their Indies may be endanger'd; and in their Attempts they have as little hope of prevailing.

Thus have I ventur'd to deliver to your Honour, so much as you desir'd at my hand; and so much as I think is convenient for our present Actions.

A Project how to encrease 200 Sail of Ships.

Leaving the Voyages usually gone in to Foreign Countries by our Nation, the next I will undertake, shall be to Sail to Newcastle, which we may properly call our North-Indies, because of the Commodity and Strength that ariseth to the Kingdom by it; as shall appear by what follows.

The chief Trade we have now a days to encrease Mariners and Shipping, is our Trade to Newcastle: There are yearly set to work in that Trade 200 Sail of Ships; which Ships and Mariners are once in Three weeks in the Port of London, ready for his Majesty's Service, if there happen any sudden occasion.

All other Trades are out of the Kingdom, and upon their Voyages in the Summer time; so that if His Majesty has occasion but to furnish two of his Ships with Men, the Kingdom cannot afford them at that time of the Year, if it were not for the Trade of Newcastle.

The Course how to effect this Project must be by encreasing this Trade, whereby more Ships may be set to work, (as thus) To prohibit all Strangers To fetch Coals at Newcastle; and for us to make our staple at London or Woolwich, for all Strangers to fetch their Coals from thence, after we have with our own Ships brought them thither: For whereas there are 200 Sail of Stranger's Ships set to work to the Trade of Newcastle, the same number of Ships would be encreased, if his Majesty's Subjects had the bringing of them for London or Woolwich.

I will now prove it to be rather beneficial than hurtful to Strangers.

1. The Stranger will be able to perform this Voyage in 10 or 12 days to London, when many times he is 5 or 6 weeks to Newcastle; so that he shall make 3 returns for one.

2. Whereas the Stranger carries only Ballast in his Ship to Newcastle, because that Country cannot vent such Merchandise as they would otherwise carry, they need not come empty to London, for that London will take off all such Commodities as they bring, to the encrease of his Majesty's Customs.

3. Where-

3. Whereas most of the Strangers that come to London, go away in their Ballast, by which means they carry out of the Kingdom such Moneys as they receive for Freight; if the Staple of Coals be settled in London, they will be glad to employ their Moneys in Coals, which will be profitable to them; and we keep our Moneys in England, which is now carry'd away.

4. The Bar, going into Newcastle, and there lying on ground with their Ships, consumes and weakens them, having their weight of Coals on board; I mean the Strangers Ships, that are not built with the strength that ours are: As in London, their Ships will Ride and Float, and take in their Coals out of one Ship into another, which will lengthen their Ships Four Years in the ordinary age of Ships; so that they will gain the Third part of a Ship in changing in their Ports.

5. They shall not be subject to the spoil of Pirates, as hath been of late years to Newcastle; for Pirates never resort into the Narrow Seas, because his Majesty's Ships are continually there.

The Stranger cannot except against this, because the like is us'd in other Countries.

1. The Venetians have a Law, That no strangers shall take in Goods into their Ships, in any of their Ports, before their own Ships be laden; or else they will take the Lading out of other Ships to Lade themselves.

2. In France there is a Penalty, That our Englishmen may not bring Salt for ther own spending; if they do, it is Forfeiture of Ship and Goods.

3. In Calais, they will not suffer any Passenger to go for England in other Vessels than their own.

4. In Dunkirk they have lately taken up the Venetian Law.

5. In Holland they will not suffer any Ship of another Town to take in Goods from one Town to another, but they must Transport it in a Ship of their own Town. As for example, a Ship of Flushing to go to Rotterdam, to carry to Flushing; but it must be sent in a Ship of their own Town: And this they do, because they will make an equality in setting their Ships and Men to work.

6. The Biscayners have the same Privilege over all other Spaniards, the Venetians have over Strangers; and the reason is, because Biscay affords all the best Mariners in the Kingdom of Spain; and to encourage them to Sea, this Privilege is granted them.

Now I have strengthened this Kingdom with Defensive Forces, to withstand the power of an Invasion, and shew'd the means how to invade our Neighbouring Enemies, if they become so; I will not contain my self in the temperate Zone, but seek what Projects may be produced in the Torrid Zone, where the Sun has such a scorching Power, that the Philosophers thought it was uninhabitable; and I will take Guinea in my way to the East-Indies, it being the place from whence they were first discover'd.

A Project in the Days of Queen Elizabeth, for the Settling her Subjects in Guinca, shewing of what Conveniency it would be. Writ in the Year 1597.

THE neglecting the opportunity in times past, by refusing the Offer made by Columbus, to Herry the 7th. for the Discovery of the West-Indies, which Spain then accepted of, has made Spain, which was one of the most Inferior Kingdoms in all Europe, now become the mightiest in Wealth, Greatness, and Esteem; and to think to lessen them in those parts where they are grown so mighty, is now too late, their Footing is so strongly settled in America, and especially between the Two Tropicks, which naturally affords Gold and precious Merchandize; for in colder Climates we can expect little Gold, by what we have found in Norrenbega.

But many are erroneously carry'd away with an Opinion of Guiana, and the plenty of Gold in it, which makes them forward to settle an Habitation in that Country. The only Reason I conceive Men can have to induce them to it, is the Climate, that may afford Gold, but no proof of any hitherto found there; and I have given my Reasons of the unlikeliness of finding any there, in my Fourth Book.

My Reasons for disapproving our Planting in Guiana are these: First, it is in the Continent of America, fronting upon the Spaniards, whom we shall find very ill Neighbours to us. The Second, is, the Men we send must be by Sea, and that far far off; and the number cannot be so great to cope with the Spaniards that are there already: And it will so much concern them, not to accept of our Neighborhood in those parts, that they will rather employ their whole Forces to remove us; it concerning them so deeply, not to have any Partakers with them in their Indies.

Thirdly, we shall enter upon a poor barbarous Country, the People wild and rude, that can give us no assurance of their Fidelity, being void of Understanding: The Provisions we must live on, must be carried by us; the Country having no strength but by nature, no Towns or Houses to lye in, and requires a long time, and great Charge to be furnished with Victuals, Fortifications and Buildings.

But leaving Guiana for the Reasons here given, I will a little handle the Planting and Inhabiting of Guinea, and will prove it the most convenient place for us, now in time of War, to possess and keep.

The Country is nearer to us than Guiana; the Trade certain to the Portugueses for Gold, and other Commodities, which Guiana affords not; our settling in it in times past, was so much feared by the Portuguese Kings, that they sought by all means possible to divert us; and King John the Second understanding of a preparation of a Fleet in England for a Voyage to Guinea; doubting it would prove prejudicial to him, sent Rui de Sousa, a Principal Man of his Country, Ambassador into England, to confirm the old League with Edward the 4th, and to acquaint him with the Title he had to the Signiory of Guinea; desiring him to lay aside his Fleet that was preparing for that Coast, under the Command and Conduct of John Tynen; as also not to suffer or permit any of his Subjects to Trade for Guinea.

The King was willing to yield to his Request, and desirous to accept of his League; for in respect of his Domestick Troubles at home, he could not have leisure to seek the enlargement of his Kingdom abroad: Thus for necessity sake our Country lost the opportunity of Trading and Inhabiting part of Guinea in the days of Edward the 4th.

And since the year 1553. there was a Voyage undertaken by the persuasion of Antony Ames Pintado, who being a Man of good regard with the King of Portugal, by false Suggestions was cast out of his Favour, and forc'd to fly his Country; and coming into England, he discover'd to certain Merchants the Benefit and Commodity of Guinea; he having liv'd there some years himself.

The King of Portugal hearing of this Fleet, sought by all means to take off Pintado: First, by promise of great Rewards to procure his Return; which failing, his Death was practis'd by some Portugueses in England, which he having knowledge of, prevented.

Lastly, the King thought to frustrate his Designs, and Arm'd a Galeon to intercept him at Sea: This Galeon met the English, but durst not offer any Violence.

The Voyage was proceeded on with great hope of Good to follow; but through the wilfulness of Windham, who had the Command of it, a Man both Rash and Headstrong, preferring his own Stubbornness before Pintado's Experience, the Voyage was overthrown; for after they grew Rich by Trade, Pintado persuaded their return for that year; alledging the danger of Sickness by their longer stay upon that Coast: But Windham neglecting his Council, in few days after there grew a most contagious Sickness amongst them, that they both dy'd, and many of their Company, before they could recover home.

Doubtless if this Voyage had been discreetly carry'd, as it was projected, it had return'd great Profit for the present, and had settled a continual Trade into Guinea in a small space: For the Negro Kings offered them many Immunities, and a place to Dwell and Fortifie; and this hapned at the beginning of the Portuguese Plantation, which in little time it would have been occasion for us to have eaten them out of their Trade, and given us opportunity to discover new Lands and Trades within the Country, as the Portugueses did from thence into the Indies.

Many more Voyages have been attempted by the English, upon that Coast, with profitable Returns: But at the chief place, which is the Castile de la Mina, we could never attain to have a Trade; But if her Majesty please, yet there is no time overpast, but that the Country may be subdu'd, her Subjects settled in it, and the Trade maintain'd, with a yearly and certain Benefit to her Majesty, as now it is to the King of Spain.

The place of importance for Strength and Wealth, is the Castile de la Mina, the taking whereof makes all the rest of the Country Tributary of course; it being the only place defended by the Portugueses, and where they have settled the chief Trade of the whole Country.

John

When these things shall be known to the Negroes, it will be a means, not only to desire Peace and Friendship with us, but to animate and provoke them to rise against their Masters.

In this Journey there must be special care and choice in Victualing, both for the Goodness Quantity and Diversity; for our ordinary Victualing with Salt Meats breeds a putrefaction of Blood in hot Countries, and is one great cause of their Sicknels in those parts: The Men that go, ought to have flit and change of Apparel; for the nature of the Serene, is to rot any kind of Garment.

Tho' this Voyage was not undertaken in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, which was the active Age for such Enterprizes, and the time gave great advantage, by the weak Provision the King of Spain had thereabouts; yet since the War ceas'd, by our laborious Endeavours we have attain'd to a profitable Trade on that Coast of Guinea.

I must confess I much labour'd to put this Voyage in execution at the time we were Authoriz'd by a War with Spain, to justify our doings; and to shew my willingness the more, at my release out of my Impisonment in Spain, in 1591. I procur'd a Rutter of the Coast of Guinea, that shew'd the Distance, the Height, and Course from Port to Port; the Dangers, and how to shun them; the Conditions of the People; the Commodities the Country affords, and what they desire from us; which I think not fit to insert in this Book, for making the Volume too spacious and great, but will proceed to a Design of the West-Indies, which was presented by me, and promis'd by the Queen to have it undertaken, as I projected it.

A Project of a Voyage to the East-Indies, with a design to have had Footing in the hithermost part thereof.

I Will prosecute my Voyage from Guinea to the East-Indies with my ensuing Projects, as Bartholomew Dias proceeded in his Discovery; and the first Port I will arrive at, shall be Mosambique, a place of great importance and relief to the Portugueses, both going, and coming from the Indies.

If her Majesty will please really of her self, or by joining with her Merchants, to undertake a Voyage to the East Indies, it will prove a great Annoyance to the King of Spain and his Subjects, if the Projects following be well undertaken and prosecuted.

The only good we are to expect of this East-India Attempt, must be the provident proceeding in our first Voyage; as well to settle a certain and secure Trade, as to have Habitation in the Country.

And therefore to go abruptly, and to offer them a Trade, considering we are, or shall be disgrac'd by the Portugueses and Hollanders, were a thing uncertain, and full of hazard; for tho' those two Nations love not one another, yet to bar us of our resort thither, they would not stick to cast many foul Aspersions on us.

For prevention whereof it were necessary her Majesty made choice of an able and well experienc'd Gentleman, who, besides the Charge of the Voyage, should have the Employment of an Ambassador.

His Message and Letters should import the Greatness of her Majesty's State, her Power by Land and Sea, her Protection of the Netherlands, and the several Disgraces and Overthrows she has given the King of Spain, whereby it is to be supposed, that some of the Portugueses his Subjects, in their secret Hate to our Nation, not being able otherwise to revenge themselves, have most unjustly scandaliz'd our Proceedings: Therefore wishing them that they would receive, what the writes for a Truth, coming from so Mighty a Prince; and to give no further Credit to the Portugueses, than as the behaviour of her Subjects shall deserve.

What Presents or Obligations of Friendship, her Majesty should send in sign of her Love, I will omit; only there must be care to win such Persons as have most Credit with the Princes with whom you shall Traffique: And the Conditions and Articles settled, we desire that an Ambassador may be sent to her Majesty, with offer of Pledges for his safe Return.

The Exceptions against this Voyage, are, the great Distance from England; the Danger of the People, having no Religion to engage themselves by; the Force of the Portuguese by their long continuance there; and the Commodities we must send, which are fine Silver and Oil, the one we may ill spare, the other our Country doth not naturally yield.

The method to provide against these Inconveniences, is, whilst there is no Suspicion

cion of us, to possess and keep some Town of the Portugueses nearest us, it will prove a great refreshing to us, and make the journey both short and pleasant. Secondly, we shall be the more respected by the People, when they see we have footing so near them. Thirdly, we shall weaken the Portugueses, and prevent their Carracks wintering at Mosambique, if they fail doubling the Cape of Good Hope. The reason I prefer Mosambique before the rest of the Indies, is the nearness to us, and where their Carracks certainly Water, in their way to the Indies; and the time is so certainly known to us, that we shall undoubtedly intercept them.

The Riches of the Town are both Gold and Merchandize; for the Governors and Dwellers of Mosambique are allow'd only the Trade of Sofala, lying under that Jurisdiction. The keeping of the Town will be easie, the dwelling in it safe; for it is seated in a strong and defensible Island; it has plenty of Victuals, Corn excepted; the Town is fairly built, with many Commodities to it, and in every point like the Castle de la Mina I have formerly describ'd.

When we are Masters of the Town, and have fortify'd it, and possess'd our selves of the Carracks, the Enemy will be weaken'd and unprovided of Entertainment in their way to the Indies; for that it is the only place where they have Refreshment.

The Portugueses use this place for their Refuge and Succour, not for Trade, but only what the Governor drives with Sofala, as I have shew'd; but we will make it our chiefest Town of Mart, and thereby our Voyage shall be made short and easie; for our Ships that go thither, shall fetch away the Goods that our Ships bring from Goa and other parts of the Indies; by means whereof, every 12 or 13 Months, we shall have a certain return of our Adventures.

The way of proceeding upon this Expedition, must be to send an extraordinary number of Sailors, besides the Soldiers, the Sailors to Man the Carracks, the Soldiers to defend the Town; they must depart from hence in February, and be at Mosambique by the last of June, which will be 20 days before the Carracks arrival.

The Money and Goods taken in the Four Carracks, may amount well nigh to 6000 Tun in Bulk, which may be there unladen and kept in Store houses, and vented into the Indies by our Ships yearly; for they are such Commodities as will keep, and the Return of them in Truck will be more commodious than five times the bringing of them for England.

Our hope is no less in meeting their Carracks in their Return for Portugal, at the Islands of St. Helena, where they never fail to water; and if we have the happiness to enjoy them both going and coming, we shall be Masters of an inestimable Wealth, and bring the Portuguese Dwellers in the East-Indies to such an Extremity by it, that they must be forced either to Revolt, or accept of our Trade.

A Project and Reasons against our East-India Voyage, fully Answer'd before the Trade began.

THE Hollanders, who are a People both Apprehensive and Laborious in what they conceive or undertake, having light given them by the Two Voyages of Sir Francis Drake and Mr. Candlish, what the East-Indies and South-Sea afforded in Wealth; and being likewise Seconded and Encourag'd by the Solicitation of some of their own Nation, who put themselves into the Service of the Portugueses trading into the East-Indies, and whilst they were there, understood the Depth and Secrecy of it, revealing it at their Return; were so far prevailed upon, as to spare no Cost to make Tryal where there was likelihood of Profit; and accordingly began a Trade into the furthestmost part of the Indies, and have yearly since continu'd it with various Success.

Vol. III.

Not long after, we, who are rather Imitators than first Enterprizers of things, where there is not a present return of Profit, finding by the Success of the Hollanders, that the Voyage was worth our Embracing, by the Rumour of Gain spread abroad; tho' in this, as many other Reports, Fame proves as often false as true; thought fit to venture something upon it. And accordingly our English Merchants gathered their Joint Stocks together, and from thence forward to this very day they have settled a Trade in the East-Indies; and what it has produc'd you shall understand at the end of this Argument.

But so far as every Innovation commonly finds opposition, from some out of partiality, and from others as enemies to Novelty.

Novelty; for this Voyage, tho' at the first it carry'd a great name, and hope of Profit by the word India, and example of Holland, yet was it writ against, and answer'd, as in the ensuing Discourse shall appear.

1. Object. This Voyage will be an occasion of exhausting our Silver, which is already too much diminish'd by the Irish Wars, and by the Hollanders drawing of it and our Gold over into the Low Countries.

Ans<sup>r</sup>. I confess this is the strongest Reason of the Seven, that are alledg'd; yet I think not but there may be means to draw out of other Countries, such a quantity of Silver, as would furnish this Voyage yearly; if there could be means to keep our own Silver from Transportation into the Low Countries: For it is to be fear'd, that the best part of Silver the Hollanders send into the East-Indies, is drawn out of England. But this Objection is fully answer'd by the Project of Mosambique.

2. Object. It will be the decay of many a good Mariner, in the Climate there, and by the way being so untemperate, that either the one half, or the Third part of our People cannot but perish.

Ans<sup>r</sup>. This Trade, in my Opinion, will be so far from diminishing our Seamen, that no Voyage will or can breed better Mariners; for long Voyages make the skillfullest and best Navigators. But whereas the unnatural Heat is alledged for the cause of Death of Men, we find by Experience, that the greatest Infection and Death of People is not whilst they abide in the Hot Countries but in the entering into the Cold out of the Hot, which comes principally for want of Cloaths in poor Mariners, as I have said sufficiently in my Discourse of Guinea.

3. Object. It will be the decay of Shipping; because, unless they be sheath'd with Lead, they prove so Worm-eaten, that they are never after serviceable, except it be for one voyage only.

Ans<sup>r</sup>. I cannot see how this can any way prove the decay of Shipping, but rather the maintainance of greater Ships than have been us'd among our Merchants; for if they mean to maintain an yearly Trade, they cannot have less than 8 or 9 Ships of 1000, or 1200 Tun each; which upon occasion of Service, are of greater strength than the whole Shipping of London; and where there are so many good Ships set to work, it will be a maintenance both of Ships and Men; for as People dye, double the number will be bred and harden'd by these Voyages.

All this while we speak by Conjecture, not by Experience; for what greater Trial can there be, than of the Portuguese Ships, who make their Voyage a Year and a half long; and yet most of them make 12 or 13 Voyages: After this proportion they continue much longer than ours; yea I have known one Carrack make 24 Voyages.

But if you allow that sheathing them will continue them the longer, we may better do it in England than Portugal, because our Countrey affords it.

4. Object. It will hinder the vent of Cloth, for whereas now our Merchants may put over their 6 Months Bills of Debts, as well for Spices as other Merchandize, thereby to make the more speedy Return; our East-India Merchants will be able to afford them so cheap as our own doors, that our Merchants and Adventurers shall be forc'd to abstain from bringing in of Spices, and so want oftentimes present Commodities to make return of.

Ans<sup>r</sup>. Here we speak generally, that it will hinder the vent of Cloth, because the Merchants may put over their 6 Months Bills for Spices; but the Spices being afforded better cheap at home, the Merchant must be forc'd to leave off his Trade, as tho' our chief vent of Cloth were in exchange of Spices: But I conceive that in most Countries where they utter our Cloth, Merchants do not return Spices; as into Barbary, Italy, France, &c. From some parts of the East-Country we have some Spices, but very little, which was wont to come from Turky to Venice, and so dispers'd into the East Countries; but since our Trade to Turky it has not been much.

What inconveniences can then grow of this Trade, but to our Turky Company? which if they cannot have other Commodities, than Spices, to exchange for our Cloth, it were better for the Common-wealth to dissolve that Trade, than that to the East-Indies, which is the Spring-head from whence Spices flow.

As we are now serv'd with Spices, it is at the Third hand, and at an unreasonable Rate, which enriches some private Men only; but surely if this Trade to the East-Indies were encourag'd, and carry'd with equality, the Common-wealth would be the better for it; inasmuch that all manner of Spices would be far cheaper than now they are. If any find prejudice by this Trade, it will be the Turks themselves; when they shall see all Europe serv'd with Indian Commodities, directly by Sea, their Trade will be overthrown.

5. Object. They will bring in such quantities of Spices as will lie too long upon their hands, and not be vented in due time; as was seen by the Pepper of the Carrack, which notwithstanding a general Restraint against the bringing in of all other Pepper, to the hindrance of many a Merchant; yet it was a Year before it could be made away.

Answer. Allow that our Trade will decay in Turkey, especially for Spices; and that we be serv'd with no other Spices than shall be brought out of the East Indies, all Casualties excepted, for you must understand they will sometime stay long for their Lading; some of their Ships, it is likely, may miscarry, others not return justly at the time appointed; so that I make no doubt but England, Scotland and Ireland will be able to take off a great part: if not the East-Country and Russia will utter more than we can spare.

Whereas you refer your self to the example of the Carrack, it is thus to be answer'd: They that bought the Spices of the Queen in the Carrack, condition'd, that till they were vented, none should be brought into England; by which restraint, and they having engros'd the whole quantity of the Spices, before they made Sale of them they provided that the whole Store should be spent within the Realm, and then they forc'd every Man to pay what they list'd, knowing we could not otherwise be supply'd; and this proceeded out of Abuse, for when the greatest quantity of the Carrack's Spices was unfold, then were they at the greatest rate: And to the contrary, if there had been no Spices in England when the Carrack came in, and that they had not been Engros'd by some few, no doubt but in a Year they had been wholly vented.

6. Object. The Original of this Voyage was secret Malice of some against the Turkish Company, and a greedy desire of private Gain; the effect whereof will be such a molestation to our Neighbours the Hollanders, and such Hatred we shall reap at their hands, as all our Gain shall not be able to countervail this one Inconvenience.

Answer. We are not to enter into the Hatred or private Grudges of Men, but into the Commodity or Discommodity that will arise to our Nation by this Trade: If it be more profit to maintain Traffique into the East-Indies than into Turkey, I see no reason that for the benefit of some private Men of the Turkey Company, we should nourish the one and neglect the other; But methinks if there were no more reason of Gain than out of Spleen to some Merchants of the Turkey-Company, they should not adventure so great a Stock, without a hope of Profit.

We see by Experience what Commodity the Portugueses have made this Hundred and odd Years, by that Trade, and we conceive the Hollanders find a great Commodity by it, which may give us satisfaction in it: Neither do I see that the Hollanders have more advantage to persevere in that Voyage than we.

For Offence to be given the Hollanders, I see not how in Right and Justice they can except against us; for they can challenge nothing of Discovery, since of the Two we gave them light thereof by the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake and Mr. Candish, who had been there before there was ever mention of Holland or Hollanders.

Secondly, they are not Subjects to them, with whom we shall Traffique, but free Princes of themselves, that may make Election and Choice with whom they will entertain Leagues.

Thirdly, we may with better Reason, and we have better means to barr the Hollanders of Traffique with Turkey, Barbary and Russia, than they to restrain us of this; for we were the first Light-givers of those Trades.

And therefore if all her Majesty's Gracious Respects to them, should in the end be recompenc'd with Ingratitude, the World would confels their Unworthiness and evil requital of so many Favours; but suppose they should do their worst against us, we know how to be even with them by many advantages we have over them, as before has been declar'd.

7. Object. Lastly, the Money thus Transported pays no Custom at all to her Majesty; nor are the Merchants bound to return home so much Treasure in value or quantity, but only upon their bare words.

Answer. Tho' the Money, upon the Transportation of it, pay no Custom, yet the Merchandize which is bought with that Money, pays a great and extraordinary Custom; and Her Majesty's Custom will be increas'd by it: But to take away all Exceptions to this Point, the Merchants offer to become bound to bring into the Land so much Silver as shall be Transported in this Voyage.

And seeing therefore the particular Objections are answer'd, of exhausting our Treasure, consuming our Mariners, decaying our Ships, hindering the vent of our Cloth, bringing in Commodities not utterable in due time, that Malice was not the cause of it, that in Justice it cannot be prejudicial to the Hollanders, that it will be no decreasing of Customs, and the Silver we send not to be our own; all these things being rightly weighed and consider'd, I refer my self to to the Censure of any indifferent Man, whether the Objections be fully answer'd, or not.

What was written in the former Discourse, as well by the Objector as the Answerer, was but conjectural, till Time and Experience, which are the Discoverers of Truth, resolve the Question doubred of.

But now having 20 and odd years Trial, what this Voyage to the East-Indies has produc'd, a time sufficient to judge of the Conveniency or Inconveniency to the State, or the Commodity or Discommodity to the Common-wealth, and the Profit or Disprofit to the Adventurer; I will thereupon collect out of the Reasons aforesaid, betwixt the Objector and Answerer, and how near their Opinion sort to the Truth; as also what Errors, and by whose means they prov'd prejudicial to the Subject.

The first Objection of exhausting our Coin was answer'd, and confess'd to be the strongest Argument of all the rest: But a Third Person, whom I term the Moderator, says, That if the Company had provided, as they promis'd, and as they might easily have done, to have brought the quantity of Silver out of Foreign parts, and have put it ashore at Dover, for all People to behold, till their Ships of the Indies had pass'd by, and then had imbarqu'd it, this would have taken away all occasion of repining by the Subject, that their Coin was Transported out of the Kingdom to uphold the East-India Trade; if this had been really done, without evasion or cunning, the Objection had been salv'd, and our Moneys found no Impediments to the Voyage.

The Second, was the Death of our Men; and tho' this was answer'd fully, yet to confirm the Opinion of the Answerer, there cannot be a better Proof than Experience, that Peoples Bodies do as well agree with, and return from the Indies in health, as from shorter Voyages; and that whosoever has been there once, desires to go thither again: Some there are that have made 6 or 7 Voyages, and found no distemper or difference in their Bodies; and if there were no greater Objection than this of Health, it were tolerable, and worthy to be encourag'd.

To the Third, that it will decay Shipping, the Answerer disproves it very sufficiently; but indeed the greatest abuse of the Voyage shall now appear in the covetousness and desire of Gain in our Merchants, according to the nature of Englishmen, who strive to be presently rich, and have not patience to stay a time for it.

The bane of our East-India Voyage was, that they exceeded the Proportion of 8 or 9 Ships, treble, to the number of those that were projected: This was the decay of Timber, which this Kingdom will hereafter smart for; for the loss of Men and Money, it will be regain'd in an age, when Timber must be growing many Ages.

This Proportion of 8 or 9 Ships would not have overcloy'd the Trade, either there or here; nor have brought the Commodities of the East Indies to so great a price as now they are there; Neither would it have drawn so mighty Stocks of Money by the Company to maintain it, whereby all the Kingdom find themselves agriev'd, imputing the want of Money to this cause: Thus it is apparent, that the Voyage is not the cause of the Inconveniency, but the ill ordering and managing of it by the Merchants.

The Fifth Objection is imputed to Malice against the Turky Company, and the Molestation we shall offer the Hollanders. The Moderator alledges, that there are very few of the Turky Merchants that are not admitted with their Stocks into the East-India Company, and all Questions accommodated; whereby their Malice ceas'd: And to the point of the Hollanders, we see that it is not that Trade alone, but all others in general they seek to deprave and deprive us of; and it is true, that it is Trade that sets their Hearts against us, not only in our own Traffique, but that of late we have debarr'd them of their Trades, which before, out of cunning, they only Engros'd and possess; as namely, that of Spain, and the King of Spain's Dominions, whilst they had subtly engag'd us in a War; but now that our Peace debars them of it, and that we enjoy it our selves, these are the motives of their Hates to us; and as for their Love it is to be valu'd according to the Profit or Use they can make of us, as in the next and last Book I have at large declar'd.

This shall suffice for our East-India Trade; but I will still have relation to the East-Indies.

A Project how to intercept the Ships of Cambaya, that Trade yearly into the Red Sea.

Tho' the Trade of the East-Indies was first found out and prosecuted by the Portugueses, and in these later times frequented by us and the Hollanders; yet can we not say, but that the Natives of these remote parts had use of Navigation, Commerce and Traffique with one another, long before the resort of the Europeans amongst them; as is apparent by the continual Intercourse and Trade to this day, betwixt those of Suratt, Subjects to the Great Mogul, and Ziden, a part within the Red Sea, which is commonly called the Fleet of Mecca.

The Vessels which pass these Seas we cannot properly call Ships, because their Build is much differing from Ships; they are neither able to brook the Waves of a grown Sea, or of Force to withstand the Power of an Enemy: These Vessels are carry'd with a certain settled and constant Wind, both outward and homeward, as I have declar'd, when I had occasion to speak of the nature of the Winds called the Monsons; yet as ugly, and as unshapely as these Vessels are to our Eyes, they Transport inestimable Riches and Wealth, betwixt the places aforesaid.

And whensoever his Majesty shall please to prohibit the Trade of his Subjects to the East-Indies, and that the Merchant shall be weary of it, which will be according to their Loss or Gain: For the nature of a covetous Merchant is like an Usurer that values and esteems his own Profit, more than the conveniency or benefit of the State; they are not satisfy'd with abundance, for the more they have the more they desire.

But leaving the Passion and Humour of such Men who are only for themselves, let us enter into the true Condition of this Kingdom, and the way to benefit his Majesty, as well as his Subjects have been benefited by the East-India Trade; and here I present a Design to his Majesty, if he shall prohibit the Trade of the East-Indies, as have said before.

It is not like other Sea-Actions, that Enemies are Authoriz'd to take from one another in a broad and Ocean Sea, where Ships are hard to be met, or shall contest with Force and Strength; or in such weather as shall forbid Ships boarding; or such Winds as shall make it difficult in fetching up a Chace; or such Vessels as shall make a doubt of the Riches of their Lading.

My Project is to encounter the Cambaya Fleet, in their return out of the Red Sea, in their Course, from thence to Suratt: These Vessels are not freighted with Merchandize of mean and base condition, but with the richest that Egypt and Turkey can afford: Their strength not able to resist; their sailing in a Sea that never endur'd Storm; their Winds and Seasons so certain, as some of our East-India Ships can put us out of doubt of, who have heretofore friendly visited them.

The Wealth in them, and the ease in taking them, being thus known, we are to think of the hurt and mischief that may ensue upon it, and to ballance indifferently, whether it is to be embrac'd or rejected for conveniency sake.

There are Two sorts of People, and both Infidels, that will find themselves agriev'd if this Design be set on foot: The one is the Grand Signior, into whose Country they resort, to barter their East-India Commodities, and make a return of Merchandize there exchanged, to the great increase of Customs, that accrue to the Great Turk by it.

The other is the Great Mogul, King of Cambaya, but of late years known to us by the Traffique of our Merchants; they are the Subjects of this King that trade into the Red Sea, who besides his Customs and other Adventures in the Voyage, will receive detriment by the loss of his Ships, which no doubt will exasperate him.

These are the Considerations on which depends the conveniency or inconveniency to ground this Voyage upon; whether the forbearance of that Trade by us, or the Profit that will redound by it, will carry away the stronger Force.

Two Ships of his Majesty's, for Countenance and Strength, will be sufficient, with choice of Victuals, and other Provisions for Health; the rest of the Ships to be Rated in Tonnage, according to the proportion that may be judged to contain the Goods taken in the Ships aforesaid.

A 5 Commerce and Trade draws a Concourse of People where Commodity appears, and by consequence Acquaintance, and Civility, Knowledge of one anothers Customs and Countries, and the ways and means to direct them thither; so did this Trade of the East-Indies, most especially being so lately discover'd, and yielding such great Wealth and Riches, a thing not dream'd of, till time gave light thereof, by the Portugueses new Discovery.

The way, and the nearest way that could be thought of, to attain to the East-Indies, was after attempted by several Nations, sometimes by the Cape of Good Hope, other some by the Straights of Magellan, and then again from New-Spain; and lastly, by the North-West Passage, which shews a great willingness and desire People had to search out the Secrets of those Countries, which they found so plentifully stored with all manner of Riches.

And because the Genoeses were a People not much accusom'd to Voyages in the Ocean, wanting both Ships, Sailors, and Harbors for such Navigations; yet because they would not be accounted slothful or idle, and seeing it was an Age of Wit, in which every Nation sought to exceed one another; They in the Year 1520. propos'd a Journey by Land from the East-Indies to Muscovy and Russia, and one Paul Centeraneo, a Merchant of Genoa, was employ'd in it, and went with Authority from that State to Basilina, then King of Russia, with offer to bring that Trade thither: He shew'd the Rivers and Countries they should Travel through, and acquainted him that the Portugueses, who serv'd all Europe with Spices and Drugs, brought them by Sea, whereby they became mouldy, and lost their true Operation and Virtue; tho' indeed it was otherwise; for after the Portugueses loaded their Goods in their Carracks, they never mov'd or unshipp'd them, till they arriv'd at their Port of Lisbon; as on the contrary, if they should come to Muscovia, they were to pass many Rivers, where they should unlade and lade again, to the spoil and loss of their Merchandize, besides many dangers they should suffer by the Arabian Thieves; which the King of Russia did wisely foresee, and consider, and therefore refus'd and rejected that offer made by Paul Centeraneo; and it was never after attempted or propos'd.

A Project how to attain to Tombagatu and Gago, the richest parts of the World for Gold, seated in Africk, and never yet Discover'd by Christians.

MAny and several Attempts have been made by the English Trading into Guinea, to arrive at the Two places aforesaid; being incited to it by the Fame of the Abundance of Gold they yield, and the fineness of it, by the daily proof that is made of it in Barbary, whither it is brought in Truck of mean Commodities.

The King of Morocco or Barbary yearly sends certain Camels, which pass with much Hunger, Pains and Peril, in going and coming thither; and many times they are taken with violent Storms and Southerly Winds, which swallow and devour them, like the Sea; but yet this danger does not hinder the Trade, because the Profit is so great, that a Camel laden with Salt will return his Load in Gold. And this is the Encouragement our Englishmen have had to attempt it by Rivers, but have still failed, either by death of the Undertakers, by want of Victuals, by the Encounter of the wild Negroes, or shallowness of the Water to hinder their Passage.

I will set down the Errors I conceive of the former Undertakings, and deliver my Opinion, how it is fitting to Enterprize it with little Charge or Hazard to the Actors or Adventurers, by example of the Portugueses happy and honourable Attempt made upon the Discovery of the East-Indies, which gave the first light to all succeeding Discoveries, as I have touch'd in my Fourth Book.

King John the Second of Portugal wisely imagining with himself, that the Riches of the East-Indies brought to us of Europe, by the way of the Red Sea, might have a Passage from thence by an open Sea, if it could be discover'd, and the Trade convey'd from thence directly to Portugal, without without being beholding to Infidels, as then we were; he caus'd Timber to be Fell'd to build Two small Ships for that Discovery of the East-Indies.

In the mean time whilst he was employ'd in furnishing the Pinnaces for this Voyage, he employ'd these Persons following to discover by Land the State of the Indians, and to get what Light he could to encourage his Sea-intention.

The first Man he employ'd was a Franciscan Friar, who for want of Language return'd from Jerusalem, without effecting any thing. The next he sent were Two Servants of his own, both of them skilful in the Arabick Language; the one call'd Pedro de Govillam, the other Alphonso de Paiva. They left Portugal the 7th. of May, 1487, and coming to the Red Sea, parted company: Alphonso went to Prester John's Country, where he died: Govillam travell'd to Calicut and other places of the East-Indies, where he fully inform'd himself of those Countries.

In his Return from thence he met with Two Jews, the King of Portugal had sent to meet and advise him to inform himself thoroughly of the State of the East-Indies.

One of these Two Jews he sent back to the King, with a Relation of the State of those Countries; the other he carried with him to Ormus, from whence he sent him likewise to the King with a further Relation, and himself travell'd to Prester John's Country, where the King whose Name was Alexander, treated him courteously; who dying, the succeeding King detain'd him Prisoner, where he died, and never sent more to the King of Portugal.

The King being truly inform'd by the Relation of the Two Jews, he hasten'd the Preparation of his Two Ships; which Voyage prov'd successful by the Discovery of the East-Indies. By the example of this Land Undertaking, we are to prosecute our Intention for Tombagatu and Gago, and to labour how to arrive at them Two Places by Land, that we may with more ease, after we are there arriv'd, find out a Passage by a River when the Country is made known to us.

The Men by whom we are to work our Design, must be the Black People of that Country, whose Complexions are suitable to those of Africk; for White Men would seem Monsters to them, and soon be destroy'd by them: The Climate of the Country, the Diet, the Travels, the avoiding other Dangers and Inconveniencies, the Negroes can better suffer than White Men can undergo.

Therefore I advise, seeing what we do, must be by the Travel and Endeavours of the Negroes of the Country that every English Ship that goes yearly to Guinea, may be enjoyn'd to bring from thence Three Negroes, with Care to treat them civilly and kindly, that at their return they may have just cause to commend our usage of them.

These Negroes being arriv'd in England, may be sent into several Cities and Corporations, Two or Three of them in company together, where they may be set into Free Schools, to be taught the English Tongue, to Write and Read, and the true Worship of God, with necessary Provision for their Apparel and Diet; and when they are thus made capable to perform so much as they shall be employ'd about in their own Country, then to send them back again, there to follow such Instructions as shall be give them, for finding out the way and passage to the Two places aforesaid; and after they return from thence, to assign them a place where they shall find a Ship and Men to entertain them: For the only thing that is to be requir'd in this Voyage, is to discover a way to Tombagatu and Gago, and to know the true State of that Country, and a means how to settle a Trade with the People thereof.

The Rivers by which we must make this Attempt, are Senegal and Gambia; and tho' there be two Entrances into the met they make but one River, and betwixt them compass an Island.

I confess there have been many Undertakings by the English, to find a Passage by the River, to Tombagatu and Gago, but to little purpose, as it has been carry'd. Therefore my Design and Desire is, that what follows may be put in execution.

Besides the ordinary Ships that trade to Guinea, and make their Return for England, I wish that two Pinnaces, each of 20 Tuns, and two substantial Shallops, be appointed to follow the Discovery in the Rivers, to be well Mann'd, sufficiently Victual'd and Arm'd, to stay out a whole Year, with several Commodities the Negroes desire to have, to allure and entice them to us.

These Two Barques are to Sail so high into the Rivers, till they be stopp'd by Shoals, and then to cause the Two Shallops to proceed further with their Oars; for the greater way they go by Water, the less Journey the Negroes shall have to travel by Land.

These

These Ships and Shallops are to make their abode thereabouts the space of 9 or 10 Months, and to employ themselves in Traffique, to know the State of the Country, to learn the Condition of the People, to win them by Civility; and by content of them to obtain a place ashore to inhabit and fortifie, and make it a Rendezvous for a yearly Course and Trade ever after, as the Cañle de la Mina is to the Portugueses.

A Project for a Private Voyage to Guinea.

There is much more use to be made of the Country of Africk, than either we, or any other Nation have labour'd to find out, which I do impute to the unhealthfulness of the Climate, and the neglect of People in not labouring to bring the Blacks to Civility, by courteous handling and treating them; as I have touch'd in my precedent Project.

And because I would have nothing attempted that may not bring a possibility of Profit, I here present a Private Voyage with one Ship of 200 Tuns, and 4 or 5 Shallops, to be quarter'd and carry'd in her.

It is not unknown to as many as Trade to the East-Indies, what Succour they find in the Bay of Saldaña, near the Cape of Good Hope, especially of Oxen, where there are the greatest Abundance, and the biggest of Body in the World; and the Seas thereabouts afford great quantity of Whales, out of which may be made Train Oil.

My Directions in this Voyage are to buy and freight a Holland Ship of 200 Tuns burthen, with the number of Shallops afore said, to carry in her to the value of 2000 or 3000 l. Cargo, 200 Tun in Cask, with all things necessary to kill and boil the Whales; and 3 or 4 Butchers to fley their Beefs.

The place whither they must first resort, is the Bay of Saldaña afore said; but in their way, to touch at the Ile of Moy, at Cape Verde, there to take Salt to save their Hides they shall truck for: At their coming to this Bay, some of their Men must be employ'd in Traffique with the Blacks, some in killing their Cattle for their Hides; and others in Filthing the Whales, and making Oil of them: And as they shall find a decay of either Oxen or Whales, then to remove to the Northward, where I doubt not but they shall find a sufficient store of both; as also Gold and other rich Commodities, to settle Trade ever after.

A Project how to Trade to the West-Indies for Tobacco, with the Consent of the King of Spain, or some one Merchant his Subject.

THE Colour of our English Ships resorting to the West-Indies in time of Peace, is to seek a Trade for Tobacco; and under that pretence they have committed divers Piracies, tho' the King of Spain has us'd all the strict means and courses possible to avoid that mischief: He has made it Death by Law, if any of his Subjects either directly or indirectly Traffique, or have Commerce with any Forreign Nation; and has often us'd the Rigour of that Law, as well upon his own Subject that have offended in that kind, as upon Strangers with whom they have traded: and yet Gain is such a Temptation, that in some places the Spaniards will not for Traffique, tho' they run into imminent danger.

But to take away the occasion of this abuse, and that England may be serv'd with better Tobacco than any other growing elsewhere; and that the King of Spain for his part, receive no prejudice in his Customs for Tobacco, this is the way that I devise.

That a Merchant of Spain and another of England do make a Contract, that the English shall take off such a quantity of Tobacco, and at a certain Rate agreed on, and to receive it at one of the Tercera Islands, which will be an ease to the Navigation, having the less way to sail, and by consequence, the less danger of the Sea and Pyrates; and this to be done with a Ship of the Spaniards, and mann'd with Spaniards; and for such Commodities as shall be brought out of England, to deliver either at the Islands afore said, or in any Port of Spain, at the election of the Spaniards, whereby the King of Spain shall

When the Spaniards have a certain vent for their Tobacco, which is the thing they desire, they will not hazard to Trade with any strange Nation by stealth; and when the English perceive they are out of hope to truck for Tobacco in the Indies, they will be disappointed of Trade, and in a little time make them become Strangers in those parts; and this is the reason that must be us'd for the King of Spain to grant his consent to it.

And when we shall be served with Tobacco, and shall have proof of the goodness of it, in comparison of the beastly stinking Tobacco that comes from other places, People will desire it for wholesomeness, and detest the other; which when our Planters at Virginia, and other Colonies, shall find their Tobacco undervalued, it will be a cause that the People will apply themselves to more beneficial Labours than they now do in Planting Tobacco only.

And because Tobacco shall be better us'd and made up, to make it the more vendible in England, (for the Goodness and Badness of Tobacco consists in the ordering of it) we desire that two or three Englishmen, practis'd in that Art, of making up Tobacco, may be hir'd by the Spaniards, and carry'd to the Indies, to make it Merchantable there where it grows; so shall we be sure to serve England with none but choice Tobacco, where it will give a better Prize to the Seller, and more Content to the Buyer.

Both the Kingdoms and Subjects of England and Spain, will receive Benefit by this Project, if they be govern'd by the Directions aforesaid; and if there be a question of the King of Spain's consenting to it, it is no more than Merchants within themselves may contrive, without making Request or Suit to either of the Two Kings.

An Answer to a Project of the Hollanders for surprizing the Island of Canaria, and that of St. Thome, under the Equinoctial, An. 1599. in reproof of some of my Country-men, who seek to prefer their Actions before ours.

IT is wonderful to behold and see the Mutability and Uncertainty of this envious spiteful Age of ours; and amongst many intolerable Vices that Reign, Emulation is most ripe: For let a Man be advanced by Virtue, in his Vocation, as namely a Scholar to Promotion and Dignity by his Learning, it breeds a secret Hate in all Scholars against him: The Soldier for his Service, makes all Soldiers Envy him inwardly: The Courtier, preferred by Favour of the Prince, makes all Courtiers repine at his Fortune, and enter into examination of his Merit above others; as tho' they should be Judges of their own worth. This shews the Corruption of Mens Minds in our time; for Virtue was never envy'd but by Men of Vice; nor Honour despis'd, but by them that could not judge of it.

Envy stops not at private Grudges; for very often it enflames the Hearts of Princes against the greatness of other Potentates; it Reigns in one Kingdom against the Prosperity and Welfare of another; but this kind of Emulation I confess to be tolerable; for the example of one good Prince may make another Virtuous; and the example of one Kingdom, make another strive and endeavour to equal it.

But the fault I find, is with this malicious Humour you shall find in my ensuing Discourse; where, in this Expedition of the Hollanders, my Countrymen are apter to give them Honour, and to attribute good Success to them, it being an Action of their own, than if they had join'd with us.

I know not what to impute it to; whether Envy to others, because they could not be Actors themselves; or a natural Love to the Holland Nation, not perfectly knowing them; or to their popular Government, because they have cast off all subjection to Monarchy: But sure I am, that their Partiality has discover'd a great deal of Envy, as they shall know by what follows; for I will so unmask them, that they shall not deny it.

After their engaging us in a War with Spain, it is known to as many as know any thing, That notwithstanding our Prohibition of Trade with Spain, which continu'd 18 Years, they never committed any hostile Act by Sea against Spain. nor had Encounter with Fleet or Ships of Spain but to the contrary, supply'd them with all manner of Provisions and Ammunition against us.

Then seeing there appear'd no Act of theirs, to commend either their Sufficiency or Valour, it is strange to me that my Countrymen should extol them above our Selves, only out of an Imagination of what they would do, but not by Proof of what they have done.

This Trade of theirs into Spain continu'd all the Reign of King Philip the Second; but he dying, and his Son succeeding, hecaus'd a general Embargo and Arrest of all Ships within his Dominions, which belong'd to any parts of the Netherlands, that were not obedient to his Father's Government; and publish'd an Edict, That it should be lawful from that time forward to use the same Law upon any such Ships as should be found in his Country.

This was effected accordingly, and the Hollanders being certity'd thereof, knew it was not their advantage to suffer their Ships to lye and rot without Employment: Neither had they means to maintain so many Mariners as were in the Country, without they had the use of Navigation. For these Two Reasons, and a desire they had to annoy the King of Spain, they sent this present Year, 1599. 73 Ships to Sea; the General whereof was Peter Van Doist.

Whilst this preparation of theirs held, there was an Overture of Peace made to her Majesty by the King of Spain, and Arch-Duke Albertus, which the Queen was inclin'd to hearken to; but upon the earnest Intercession and Request of the Hollanders, with promise to secure her at home, with their Fleet abroad, from any hurt Spain should intend against her that present Year: She, out of a Gracious Respect to them, was willing to surcease Speech of that Treaty for a time.

And now in answer to a Book they Publish'd at their return from the Canaries, which they entituled thus. The Conquest of the Grand Canaries made this last Summer by 73 Sail of Ships, sent out by the Command and Direction of the States-General of the United Provinces, to the Coast of Spain, and the Canary-Iland; with the taking of a Town in the Island of Gomera, and the Success of part of this Fleet in their return homeward, which set Sail from Holland, the 25th of March, and return'd home the 10th of September 1599. When you read the Two first words The Conquest, you will not think there followeth less than a Kingdom; for commonly it is not a Phrase us'd to any State but to a Kingdom.

The Grand Canaria, which the think to blind the ignorant People with, to be a place of so great Fame and Renown, because of the length of the word in pronunciation, is an Island of 12 Leagues in length and breadth; many Villages in it, and one Town bigger than the rest, call'd a City, where the Bishop's Seat is, for all the other Islands.

There are in Nombre 7 Islands, Grand Canaria, Teneriff, which is the biggest, wealthiest and strongest; Palmo, Gomera, Fuerteventura, Larezarose, and Ferro.

Upon the first Discovery of these Islands, they were call'd the Fortunate, and now the Canary Islands, and by setting down the Canaries, he would have the World think, that they had Conquer'd all the Islands, whereas, if he would have spoken Truth, and according to Sense, he should have entituled his Book, The Surprize, and Taking of the City of Palmo in the Island of Grand Canaria; The Title of this Book is as Ridiculous, as if we should write the Story of the Sack of Cadiz, and Intitle it The Conquest of Spain, because Cadiz is a City in Spain: Thus you see they are People that will set a great Gloß upon a small Show.

Their Promise made to her Majesty at their setting from home was, to view and search all the Harbours upon the Coast of Spain, and to destroy the King's Ships, whereby she should be secur'd at home.

The first Port they fell withal was the Groin, being guided with a favourable and large Wind; for from Holland thither, they were Sailing but 11 Days; but when they came before the Harbour, they behav'd themselves so unadvisedly, that the Town took the Alarm, and was provided to withstand them.

Here lay divers of the King's Ships, which they would not attempt, but Dishonourably departed; tho' I must confess they perform'd half their Promise made to the Queen, in viewing the Harbours; but not the other half in destroying their Ships.

If her Majesty had rested upon their assurance of Safety, and not otherwise provided to stand upon her own Guard, I am of opinion the Spaniards had sooner visited us, than they them; and yet they stick not to boast, That they cast Anchor in 12 or 13 Fathom Water, and that the Town shot 200 Cannon Shot, but killed never a Man; They also say they tow'd out their Ships with Boats, in despite of their Shot; whereas it appears, they lay so far off, that they were in no danger of their Shot, or that they were in Fee with the Gunners not to hurt them, as any Man may conjecture.

But

But it ſeems they were ſo much diſcourag'd with looking into this Harbour, that they never offered the like to any other upon that Coaſt : But forgetting their Promiſe to the Queen, the General made known his purpoſe to his Captains, that he meant to attempt the Iſlands of Canaria.

If this Project was deſign'd him from home, or that it was left to the Diſcretion of the General, to undertake what he thought fit; in the one the States ſhew'd themſelves Ignorant in Maſthal Sea Affairs, or the General had no diſpoſition to Enterprize the Service that might bring danger; for the Canaries are known to be of ſuch ſmall importance, that we never held it worth our labour to poſſeſs them, tho' it were many times in our power.

Says the Author, 'The place of Landing was diſcommodious and difficult, but that 'moſt of the Enemies were ſlain, to the number of 30, or 36. The Lord General leaping firſt on Land was thruſt into the Leg with a Pike, and had in his Body Four Wounds more, being in great danger to loſe his Life, but that one of the Soldiers ſlew the Spaniard that did it; but his Wounds were of ſmall moment.

Gentle Reader, Firſt you are to obſerve, That by their own Confeſſion, they had very great difficulty to I and; and that before they Landed, they ſlew moſt of the Enemies, which were to the number of 30, or 36, then let us think whether it was greater Valour in the 36. to withſtand the 24 Companies as they report of themſelves after; or for the 24 Companies to overcome the 36 Men: After this proportion it was Three Spaniards to Two Companies of Hollanders.

Then follows a Report of their Lord General's Valour; a Lord we will allow him, becauſe the Author gives him the Title, tho', if it were examin'd, he was no more Lord, than they have Authority to make a Lord; he was the firſt Man, the Author ſays, that leap'd aſhore, and received a wound in his Leg with a Pike, and Four in his Body, which put him in great danger of his Life. but that a Soldier ſlew the Spaniard that did it; and that his Wounds were of ſmall moment.

Mark the Improbability of the one, and the variety of the Report of the other: For how is it likely that one Soldier ſhould come to the pulſh of Pike, upon the General's leaping aſhore, and give him ſo many Wounds; having his Troops ſo prepar'd, that they would not ſuffer the Head of a Man to appear; this Man's Valour far exceeded the 36. for he undertook their whole Force, being 24 Companies.

The Author ſays the General was in great danger to loſe his Life; and in the Line following, his Wounds were of ſmall moment: Theſe Two are contraries, and for my part I know not which to believe; but conſidering the probability of the manner of his Hurts, and the contrariety of the ſtate of his Wounds, I do verily think the 36 Men could not make the Reſiſtance they ſpeak of. Secondly, the General came not to the pulſh of Pike at his firſt Landing; and Thirdly, he received not ſo many Wounds, as for his Glory they Report of him.

After they had thus Landed, they follow'd the Victory with great loſs to themſelves, and little to the Enemy, by their own Report; for they ſay, they neither found Wealth nor Priſoners in the Town, their Goods being all carry'd into the Mountains, and the People having quitted it, and eſcap'd.

The memorableſt thing they did in the Town, was the delivery of 36 Priſoners, who reported that Two others, one an Engliſhman, the other an Hollander, were carry'd into the Mountains, being cenſur'd by the Inquiſition, whom they had not the means to Redeem for want of Two Spaniards.

The Author reports, That after the taking of the Town, their People committed ſuch Diſorders in the Country, the Paſſages being known to the Spaniards and not to them, that at one time Twenty of them were kill'd; another time they return'd with the loſs of 70 Men, and in the poor Iſland of Gomera, 80 and made the reſt retire; beſides, at divers other places they received Loſs.

This proceeded rather out of Diſorder amongſt themſelves, than any unlawful Act of the Spaniards; for thoſe thus ſlain, were no leſs than Free booters that went a Robbing, without leave of their Officers; tho' the Hollanders rail and exclaim againſt their Cruelty, alluding to their Names, that the Canaries were ſo call'd, becauſe of Gomes, the abundance of Dogs then found in the Iſland; they ſay that the People would run as ſwift as Dogs, and were as Tyrannical and Blood-thirſty as ravening Wolves, which they ſufficiently manifeſted; for as ſoon as they could lay hold on any of their People, like to mad Cu's agreeing with their Names, they would preſently worry them; and they, I confeſs, had no other remedy but Patience; for they took never a Spaniard to exerciſe accuſtom'd Cruelty.

But tho' they did not ſufficiently revenge themſelves upon the People, as you heard, yet they neglected not to rife their Cloisters, Monasteries, and Churches; and not being content with the Spoil of them, they destroy'd and burnt them down to the ground. This example they never learnt of us, in the Actions they have been with us; for we ever had a Respect to the Churches, tho' we diff'red in Religion, and held it was a House of our God as well as theirs, tho' we serv'd him, not both in one kind.

The Hollanders are People that will omit nothing for their Glory; and amongst many Famous Acts they have achiev'd in this Expedition, they set down the taking of Seven Fishermen by one of their Pinaces, Fishing under Fuerteventura, and the General's committing them to Prison.

These Seven Spaniards stood them in great stead for their Reputation; for had it not been for the taking of these Seven Men, they had return'd without manifesting their Landing in any part of the King of Spain's Dominions; not having taken a Man before to have testify'd to the World they had met with an Enemy.

After the Sack and Spoil of the City of Palmas, the General imbarqu'd his Army, and was willing to perform some other Service, that was not of Danger; and call'd a Council of his Captains and Pilots, enquiring of them which was the weakest Island, for there he meant to land; you see he was not desirous to know the Wealthiest but the weakest Island; making account where there was Wealth there was Strength that would resist them: But he wisely considering that the taking an Island, tho' it was of no Importance, yet it would carry a great Shew and Gloſs to the World, (for Men would not enter into the Value and Worth, but into the name of an Island) did hereupon courageously resolve upon the Attempt of Gomera, a place of so small account, that they might have been asham'd to undertake it, but especially to publish it in Print.

If all our Deeds, according to that computation were publish'd to the World, we have had many Ships, not above Three in company, that have perform'd greater Service; and yet the Hollanders stick not to boast that they left the Island of Gomera burning, which was never done before by any Nation.

Some Man that knows not the state of this poor silly Island, would think it were to be compar'd with Vienna, which the Turks have often assaulted with huge Armies, and never had Power to prevail against it. And in the same case Men may imagine, seeing they did that which was never done by any Nation, That it was a place of that invincible Strength, as tho' many Armies had attempted it, yet they had never Power to prevail against it; where is in very truth, this Island is poor in Wealth, and weak in Power, readier to yield to a weak Enemy, than to withstand a mean Army.

This Island was subdu'd upon the first Discovery, without Fight: All the rest withstood the Conquerors; which it is like the General well knew by his Demands, which was the weakest Island, which embolden'd him upon the Enterprize.

Here he found no Resistance; for all the People abandoned the Town and fled to the Mountains, and committed many Murders upon the Hollanders by their undiscrēt Stragling.

Once again the General Embarqu'd, and dispatch'd 34 of his Ships back for Holland; and himself with the rest meant to proceed to the West-Indies: Those Ships that return'd took Two Prizes of small value, that had but 30 Men in both, which takes up a long Discourse in this Book I have answer'd. If all our Prizes were estimated, and the number set down, since the beginning of our Wars with Spain, there have been at least 600 greater and richer Vessels brought to England, which we think not worthy to boast of: But indeed they are to be excused; for the taking of these Two Barques, and the 30 Men, are the only Deeds they did in their Project to the Camaris.

You have heard, upon the division of the Fleet, the General resolv'd for the West-Indies; which Resolution was suddenly altered, and he directed his Course to St. Tome, an Island under the Equinoctial Line: What becomes of them I am not very Inquisitive to know, till I see it Published in Print, as this was; neither in my Opinion can they expect any thing but Death, the Country and Climate exceeding all parts of the World for Sicknes: And I verily believe this latter Project to St. Tome, was design'd by some Traitors amongst themselves; for the Portugueses that live in that Island confess, That no Man born in Europe, ever liv'd there so long, as to have a white Beard, or attain to 50 Years of age.

And to conclude, seeing how indiscreetly the Hollanders have carry'd themselves in this last Action, wherein they have deceiv'd the Expectation of all their Well-willers, that are not too much transported with Partiality; I would not have my Countrymen hereafter to magnify them above their worth; but that in Reason without without Affection, they will compare the managing their Actions with ours which in Discretion they are bound to do; and they shall undoubtedly find great difference betwixt us.

What I have here Writ, I protest is neither in Malice to the Hollanders, nor in Partiality to our selves, but out of a sincere love of Truth; for I am so far from any detracting Humour, that if I can see Amendment in them and their Actions, I will be as ready to do them Honour therein, as I am now willing to defend my Countrymen from the Scandal of spiteful Tongues.

A Project how to Ruine Spain, with the Assistance of Holland, if his Majesty enter into a new War with that Crown.

IF the King of Great Britain Declare himself Enemy to Spain, no Man need doubt but that he shall have Assistance of Holland to join with him in any Action against that Crown; and then it may be suppos'd what hurt in time may redound to Spain in the Indies, if both the Nations do really join together, and their Designs be well grounded; by example of what hurt the Hollanders alone have done the Spaniards in Brazil and the Indies, without the help of any other Nation.

And to descend to Particulars, there is lately an occasion, and an unavoidable opportunity offered, never thought on by England or Holland, when they both had Wars, and studied how to vex the Kingdom of Spain by their hostile Actions: Now I say there is anew Discovery wherein the Indies may be hazarded, the Spanish Nation subverted, and all the Rule, Government and Riches settled upon us and Holland, if we join mutually together, as we have done in sundry other Actions heretofore.

The ground of this Design stands upon the Peopling and Planting of an uninhabited Island, Eighty odd Leagues from Carthagena, in Terra Firma, and not above Ten or Twelve Miles in length, and as I formerly said, Six in breadth; Five hundred Leagues West from the other Islands the English now possess; and where there are already seated Six thousand able and sufficient Soldiers, with their Arms, and other Abilliments for War; and are like daily to encrease by the forwardness of People that willingly put themselves into such Actions.

Such Islands as the English are seated in, are in the hithermost part of America, and by which all Ships that go to the other Islands aforesaid, or to Terra firma are to pass by, with a certain and settled Wind which never fails; and the Men that there Inhabit, their Bodies are made able and fit to live in such unnatural Climates to their former breeding; their hard and evil Diet, with Drinking Water, is made familiar to them, and they are become excellent Soldiers.

These People thus Planted will much forward any Enterprize that shall be made upon the Indies, by the Conveniency and little Charge to Transport them consider'd; as likewise the Ability of them, which we may account Treble to as many as we shall carry out of England.

But now I will proceed to the Design, and to the way how to put it in execution, which may prove the most dangerous Plot that was ever intended against Spain, since the first Discovery of the Indies; tho' at the first apprehension, it may seem ridiculous, and rather to be contemn'd than fear'd by the Spaniards: But if they will call to mind the Precedent of other times, they shall find that their King Don Rodrigo, and his Country, was Conquer'd in Two Years, by a few barbarous Moors, not worth naming, and could not be recover'd in 700 and odd Years of Wars after. The like may be said of England, when it was subdu'd, and subverted by less than 400 Saxons at the beginning; things not to believ'd, but that Times and Stories make it manifest; and in reason this Island may prove as dangerous to the Indies, as the others have been to Spain and England, for it is like a spark of Fire, out of which greater Fires may be kindled and made unquenchable.

This Island which I have spoken of in my Fourth Book, is near Carthagena, and not far from Porto Bello, and Nombre de Dios, whither the Treasure of the Indies is brought first from Peru, by Sea to Panama, and after to the Places aforesaid by Land, before it be embark'd for Spain.

This Island has of late chang'd her Name, from Carthagena to Providencia, out of a foreseeing Providence and Care, that some well-minded Englishmen do owe to their Country, that have so named it; thinking to work the Effect, for which they possess and so call it, as may be gather'd out of a Discourse ; it being of that Importance, by reason of that impregnableness, and the Commodity of an Harbour, to receive some Shipping of a reasonable bigness, and being naturally encompass'd about with Rocks and Shoals, that it is impossible for any Barque or Boat to make an Enterprize upon it, but only in the Harbour, which is so Fortify'd, that no Force is able to assail it; inso much that it may be said of this Island, That God has plac'd it with his Finger, to impede and forbid the Trade of the Indies upon that Coast, as aforesaid.

And tho' this Island affords nothing but Water for the Sustainance of the People that shall Inhabit it; yet in a short space it may be supply'd from the Tortugas, which we enjoy, near Hispaniola, with Hogs and Beeves, sufficient to relieve as many Men, as the Circuit of the ground can contain.

But now to the use that can be made of the Island: It is to be considered, as aforesaid, how dangerous a thing it will be to the Spaniards Navigations thereabouts. Secondly, that whereas in all our Voyages and Expeditions in the Queens time to the Indies; we have still quailed, because our Fleets never made their aboad out of England above 6 or 7 Months, going, coming, and staying there, for want of Provisions to abide there any longer, but were still forc'd to Return when their greatest Service was to be executed.

The use we must put this Island to, is to make it a Magazine to relieve our greatest Enterprizes upon the main Land, without either sending or turning back into England; for every thing that England can supply us with, this Island may receive from thence without Charge; and the Ships thus Freight'd may return laden with Salt that shall cost them nothing, to countervail the Expence of their Transportation.

Here shall we be fully furnish'd, and all difficulties taken away, to further our Enterprize upon the main Land; which upon our first Landing we must divide our Armies into Two parts, the one to go to Panama, and possess the Port of the South Sea, whilst the other enjoys Cartagena and the North Coast; that betwixt them they shall give the greatest blow to all the Indies, as ever was projected by Man, as well Peru as New Spain.

These Places being taken, as it will prove no great Difficulty, by example of fewer Forces that have done far greater Exploits in the same Place, Seas and Towns; this is the way for England and Holland to become Masters of that Land and Sea:

For the Strength of the Indies consists in the People and Inhabitants of Peru and New Spain; the one North the other South, Thousands of Miles from thence; which distance will debar them of Succours, and all that Coast will be left to their own Defence; whose weakness the English have found in sundry Actions heretofore: Or if it be alledg'd, That their Ports and Towns are better Fortify'd than they have been, it may be answer'd, That if it were so, yet our Army and Strength will be Twenty times double to that in former times: And that moreover, a Country invaded, (that relies upon the Force of Towns and Fortifications) by an Enemy that Commands both Land and Sea, tho' it be never so impregnable, in the end must yield.

Leaving some Attempts, formerly made by our English, before they were warrant'd by the War with Spain, who then join'd with the Shemecrones, which are Negroes Revolted from their Masters, betwixt Nombre de Dios and Panama, a place where they seiz'd upon the King's Treasure ashore in those times; I will recite some particular Exploits done upon Towns of the Indies, during the War of Queen Elizabeth.

Drake, with fewer than a Thousand Men, took St. Jago in Cabo Verde, St. Domingo in Hispaniola, Cartagena in Terra Firma, and St. Antonio, and St. Helena in Florida. 1585.

Drake and Hawkins, with 750 Men, took El Rio de Hacha, Rancheria, Tapia, Santa Marta, Nombre de Dios, and Porto Bello; and were forc'd for want of Supplies to return for England; as if the Island of Providence had been theirs, the Advantage of it foreseen, and they supply'd from it, as is now intended, they had taken Panama, and by consequence had an Entrance into the South Sea; which would have prov'd the most dangerous Design against Spain that ever was projected. 1595.

If we call to Mind Private Men's Undertakings, Captain Preston with 150 Men took Puerto Santo, Chicbo, the Town and Fort of Chapa, the City of St. Jago de Leon, and the Town of Camena. 1594.

Captain Parker, with Two small Ships and 180 Men, took St. Vincent in Cape Verde, Porto Bello, and a Fort call'd St. Jago, with the King's Treasure, in Terra Firma. The same Captain Parker in a Voyage before, and with fewer Men, took one Town of Importance, call'd Campeche. I could repeat many more, but these shall suffice. 1595.

The Earl of Cumberland, with fewer than 1000 Men, took Puerto Rico, a Place of great great Strength and Defence, with the loss of 28 Men. These precedents shew what these Places are, or may be made in strength.

And if so few Ships and Men could surprize and take so many Cities and Towns without the Countenance or Help of the Queen, or the Assistance of other Princes or Countries, and in time of War, that gave continual Alarms to them to provide for Enemies: What may England and Holland now do, joining their Forces together, that have the Command of more Bodies of Men, more number of Ships; and to be furnish'd with greater Celerity to second their Actions, than all the World besides; but especially, having this Island that will serve for a Key to open the Lock of the Indies?

But to end with the Design of the North Sea, which is so distinguish'd by the Spaniards; I will now sail into the South Sea, and Peru, the Fountain, out of which the Treasures of the Indies flow, and will set down the last Resolution taken by the Projectors, Counsellors, and Adventurers of this Action, which in my Opinion seems to be a thing of great Reason. They conclude, as upon a matter of greatest Consequence, to take away all occasion of Help or Succour from Spain, is to forbid the ordinary Trades of their Neighbour Countries into Spain; which being done, the Indies is hopeless of Help: And the way to put it practice, as they conceive, is, to put out a general Proclamation throughout Europe, for all Nations, Towns and Cities, to take notice of, That if such Countries, Towns and Princes, will from thence forward desist from their Traffique with Spain, with Ammunition, Victuals, or other Abilliments for the War; that then from that day they shall enjoy the Immunities and Privileges of Trade into the Indies, as freely as now they do, or have at any time done, in their Commerce, of England or Holland: As to the contrary, if they relieve Spain with the Commodities aforesaid, they are to stand upon their perils, and not to expect Favour. This will debar Spain of Foreign Helps, and be a means to unfurnish them of all Materials to fit out Fleets; so that the Indies will be left to themselves, and the Dwellers there to defend them.

The Conference and Resolution of the Treaty aforesaid provided for all things to be presently put in execution, and to forecalt all Doubts that might be Impediments to them; and they consider'd, how easie a thing it was to go through the Work they had projected: So on the other side they weigh'd, That the Substantice of the Wealth of the Indies, was Thousands of Miles from Panama, whither it was brought by Sea, not having Means or Passage to Transport it by Land And therefore conclude, that the Ruine of Spain in the Indies, was to have an Entrance and Command of the South Sea.

They know the Condition of that Sea, and all the Harbours and Towns inhabited and possess'd by the Spaniards, from Chile and Peru, till they arrive at the Ports of Navidad and Acapulco in New Spain; which are the Harbours whither Mexico, and all that Coast send their Commodities, as well into the Ports of America, as into the Philippine Island, and that by the taking those Ports, the whole Country of New Spain must necessarily submit and yield.

They are not ignorant, That tho' that Sea affords Ships for Trade from Port to Port, yet they and their Ships are shut up from any other Traffique out of that Sea, by reason of the Streights of Magellan, and that the Ships there built, are made only for Merchandize, not for Defence and Strength, not one of them carrying one Piece of Ordnance.

They likewise know, That the Spaniards thereabouts are Rich and unaccustom'd to War; that if they may have good Conditions for Life and Goods, they may be easily drawn to live under our Subjection and Government.

They moreover know the evil disposition the People of those Countries bear to the Spaniards, and how willingly they will be drawn to join with us against them; and to join the one and the other more heartily to the Invader's Party, they resolve to make a Publick Act and Decree, That all Indians, as well the one as the other, shall be freed from their Labours, their Slaveryes, and forc'd Tyrannies. And because the Spaniards shall have no Dependency or Necessity of the help of Spain, it shall be lawful for all Men to Plant Wine, Oil, and other Commodities they desire: It shall be also as lawful for them to enjoy their Religion as in former times: These will be Motives and Reasons sufficient, as well to draw the one as the other to the Government of England and Holland, when all the possibility of Relief shall be taken from them.

For the effecting of this they determine to send 40 or 50 Warlike Ships into the South Sea, by the Streights of Magellan, which shall carry a sufficient number of Men to perform their Design, with all manner of Ordnance, with Ammunition to strengthen the Shores and Ships; no part but shall be possess'd, strengthen'd and inhabited by us, till we come to Panama, where they shall find it Planted and Enjoy'd by their Countrymen, in as good a manner, as tho' they should arrive in England or Holland; and from thence they may easily pass to the Ports aforesaid of Navidad and Acapulco in New Spain, and conclude an absolute Conquest of the Indies; they may say as Julius Cæsar said, I came, I saw, and I overcame.

And because this Council and Resolution shall not seem vain, by example of the North Seas aforesaid, where I have made a repetition of such Towns and Ports as have been taken by the English; so I will do the like in the South Sea, by one Ship alone that departed England in 1586. and upon all Occasions and Services could land but 80 Men.

The first Exploit he did, was by taking away certain Ordnance from a Port, built by Peter Sermiento in the Streights of Magellan, where he found all the People dead, except Three only; Sailing from thence to Chile, he took Santa Adria; he took and spoil'd Marmaroma, Arica, Pisica, Paraca, Cheripa, Paito, the Islands of Puna, a place of great Importance for the Building and Trimming of Ships: And arriving New Spain, he took and spoil'd Acapulco, the Port of Navidad, the Port of St. Jago, the Bay of Compojella, the Island of St. Ambrose, and the Bay of Musclalam. And therefore let no Man doubt that any part of that Coast, or Seas, can resist 40 or 50 Sail of Ships sent from hence.

Projects for the Spaniards to annoy the Hollanders in several Trades.

The First Project.

THE Hollanders have compassed a great and beneficial Trade into several places of Guinea, which anciently belonged to the Portugueses, as the first Discoverers of them: The Hollanders now resort thither daily, and are well accepted of by the Negroes of that Country, who bring them Gold, and divers other rich Commodities, in truck for their slight Merchandice.

The Project to hinder the Trade of the Hollanders, and quite to banish them from that Coast, is, to furnish, as Men of War, 6 or 7 of those Ships they ordinarily send to Brazil, well Mann'd; and these in their way to range along the Coast of Guinea, where they shall undoubtedly meet and take the Holland Ships that trade there in several Parts and Ports, as is apparent, having neither Port nor other Strength to resist them. Or if it shall happen that they have made any Defence on shore by the Assistance of the Negroes, they may easily supplant them with the Soldiers they carry with them; whereas by giving them a longer time to inhabit that Coast, it would become a more difficult Enterprize to subdue them: By the Example of the of the Hollanders possessing divers places in the East-Indies, which at the first might have been prevented.

If the Hollanders be but once thus serv'd, it will be a means to make them quit that Coast, and clearly thrust them out of Guinea: For Guinea is not like the East Indies, where the Hollanders maintain 100 Ships by their several Trades in sundry parts, as well those places they enjoy, as the others that accept of their Commerce; whereas in Guinea the Traffick is but in particular places, whither the Merchandice is brought them by Negroes from afar off within the Land, which cannot be of any great Bulk, for want of Carriage of Ships or Boats; neither are they designed any particular Harbour, as the Portugueses are at Casle de la Mina.

The Hollanders have as little Hope of robbing and spoiling the Portugueses, because their Trade is but small, and their Ships few; whereby they are not able to maintain Footing in that Country without greater Expence than the Profit will countervail: Six or Seven Ships of Portugal will be a sufficient Strength to drive them out of Guinea, those Ships to range along the Coast, and cut them off where they shall find them trading in their several places.

My Project is, after they are thus destroyed, That the 6 or 7 Ships of Portugal stand over to Brazil, and there take their Freights of Sugar and other rich Commodities, which considering the Safety and Wastage by those Ships of War, will be a means to ease the Expence in Furnishing the Ships of War.

The Second Project, to Russia.

The North Part of Russia was but a thing imagined, till Sebastian Cabot, by his Persuasions in the Reign of Queen Mary, drew England to the Discovery of it, Anno 1553. which enjoyed the absolute Trade thereof for many years, till the Hollanders encroacht upon us, as they have done in all other Trades, Trades, as I have said in my Sixth Book. In continuance of time the Hollanders have increas'd from 2 Ships to 100. as is apparent by so many as they yearly send; and have made a greater use of the Country, than to Merchandize alone; for they have set up a Trade of making Cables, Ropes, and other Cordage, in such abundance, that they out do all other Places in the Baltick Sea; and from hence they directly serve Spain with those Commodities: And because, the Passage being through our Channel, in time of War they feared to be intercepted by us, they directed their Course to the North Part of Scotland and Ireland, purposely to avoid us.

The Advantage Spain is to take of them in this Project, is to carry their Designs discreetly and secretly; to be provided of Pilots without Suspicion or Noise, which must be done out of England, for no other Christian Country trades into Russia; but we and the Hollanders: and tho' their Harbours are dangerous at their going in, by reason of their Bar, yet it is familiar with the Pilots that use it. The Force the Hollanders have to guard their 100 Sail of Ships, is commonly 3 or 4 Men of War, who suspect no Annoyance from Spain at any time; and by these 3 or 4 Ships you may judge of the Strength you are to employ against them: Tho' I advise you to carry no less than 30 Sail of Ships, well Mann'd, to Man the Hollanders after you have taken them.

Besides the Command you shall have over the Ships aforesaid, you shall possess their Storehouses, Cellars, Yards, and what else belongs to them, and spoil them, that they be never able to erect more, without an infinite Charge.

The Third Consideration is the Season of the Year; for they must call to be at St. Nicholas by the 10th or 12th of July; for no longer than the 17th. of August they can well abide there, by reason of the Winter so suddenly coming upon them: Or if they shall arrive earlier then the 12th or 14th. of that Month, perhaps they may come with the soonest, and find their Goods not Shipp'd; but tho' they should, it will not be very material, for they may Row up with their Boats to Pol-magro, 80 Miles distance, where the greatest part of their Commodities are made, and shall either meet them in their Transportation to the Ships, or possess them on Shore, where they shall undoubtedly find them.

Or if upon any other accident the Spanish Ships shall not arrive at the Port of St. Nicholas, before the others put out to Sea, then they may stand to the North Cape of Norway, and there lye off and on the Headland, which the Hollanders must of necessity see and double, before they can direct their Course for Holland.

If Russia were a Country in League with Spain, or otherwise had Correspondence or Friendship with them in Commerce and Traffique, then I confess it were against the Laws of Nations and Honour, to offer violence to an Enemy within the Port of another Prince, when they are under his Protection. But I could never understand, that ever Leagues were Treated of, or Trade maintain'd betwixt Russia and Spain, or Ambassadors employ'd, or other Obligations of Friendship, since King Philip was King of England; and therefore the King of Spain can be no more tax'd or blem'd, if he us'd this opportunity upon his Enemy, that is offered him by this Proposition; especially when none of his Subjects can receive Prejudice or Fear of Hurt, or Imbargo to be made upon their Persons or Goods.

Let the Spanish Commander at his arrival in the Road of St. Nicholas, have a care to summon such English Ships as he shall there find in Harbour, and to admonish them to forbear offering Violence, or making other Resistance in defence of the Hollanders Ships, and to let them understand in a friendly way, how they are to carry themselves by the Articles of Peace, which they may carry and shew them; and withal to tell them roundly, if they exceed their Commission therein, that Justice will be requir'd at their hands by their Ambassador residing in England, who will be sure to prosecute it with all Rigour and Severity: And in the Spanish Fleet's behalf, let the General give assurance, no way to impeach the English, or by any direct or indirect means to trouble or molest their peaceable Traffique.

This Project prevailing, the Spaniards will be enrich'd with 100 Sail of Holland Ships, and their Lading; great part whereof is Cordage, and other things of considerable value, which Spain has most need to be furnish'd with, and need not hereafter be beholding to Friends for them.

A Rutter of Russia.

He that will direct his Course from Spain to the North Cape of Norway, must steer a Northerly Course. till he arrive to Iceland, where upon occasion he may refresh himself with Butter, Fleish and Fish, and from thence steer away E. N. E. for the North Cape.

From the North Cape to the North
Kave, E. and by S. 13 Leagues.

Thence to Marcroft, E. S. E. 12 Leagues.

Thence to Wardhouse S. E. 15 Leagues.
Here you may have your self from Wardhouse, to the point of Kegro, E. S. E. 11 Leagues; no good Road for great Ships.

From Kegro to Zoufe S. E. 9 Leagues.

From the 7 Islands to Swetnos, 21 Leagues; there are Islands where you may Anchor.

From Swetnos to Lombasco, S. S. E. 13 Leagues.

From thence to Orgoulse, S. S. E. 7 Leagues.

From Orgoulse to Cape Caudenos, N. E. 47 Leagues; but you must Sail from the Three Islands to Crofs Island, S. S. W. 13 Leagues.

From thence to Calmouse Arkangel S. and by W. 17 Leagues on this side of Arkangel is St. Nicolai.

The Third Project,

That the Spaniards may practice against the Hollanders, and to be as easily effected as the rest, and of greater consequence than all the others, is a Design against their Fishing, which all Men know is a means to uphold their State, to encrease their Ships, and to multiply their Wealth; in which, if at any time they be prevented or intercepted, they become more miserable than all other People, in that they shall be made a prey to their Enemies.

This Fishing I formerly Treated of, with the Condition of the Hollanders that only enjoy it by our permission: Now will I proceed to the design upon them, for the Spaniards to execute, so it be with the Approbation and Sufferance of the King of England.

I have already declar'd the place of Rendezvous, where the Hollanders meet; as also the time of the year, the Month and Day when they begun to Fish, with the Profit they make of it: The place of Rendezvous is Blazownde in Shutland, an Island in his Majesty's Jurisdiction of Scotland; thither commonly resort 1000 or more Fishing Vessels, call'd Busses, which by a Law made amongst themselves in Holland, cannot put forth Line or Net to Fish, till the 24th of June.

And therefore the Spaniard must so cast, as to be at Blazownde, before that time, or at least Two Days to take their opportunity before the others going out of Harbour, which if they have a care effectually to accomplish, they shall bring both the Persons of the Hollanders, and their Ships, to their Mercy. And after this is effected, I need not teach the Spaniards how to carry their business, or what Conditions to make with the Hollanders; for they shall have time sufficient to compals their ends, after they have them in their Power.

The Fourth Project,

Is for the King of Spain to keep a constant Squadron of 20 or 12 Ships, choice Sailors, upon his own Coast: They will be able to keep the French, the Hollanders, and the Turks Pyrates, from the Incurfions they usually make upon that Coast, and put them to look their Prey in a vast and open Sea, which is as uncertain of meeting Ships, as the finding a Needle in a bottle of Hay: For I have often shew'd, if Capes and Headlands be well defended, the others will not be worth the Cost and Charges they shall be put to.

Besides the Service done against Ships of War in this manner aforesaid, they will secure their own Trades, and impeach all such Hollanders, that shall go in or come out of the Streights, if they keep a Squadron 12 or 14 Leagues South from Cape St. Vincent, and spread themselves N. and S. a League and more in distance from one another; one Ship of Holland that shall be taken in their Course out of the Streights, will countervail the Charge of a whole Squadron for many Months; and the example of it, seeing their good Success will encourage the Spaniards to keep Ships continually thus employ'd.

Here I end my Projects, till I have occasion to speak of them again; and now shall follow my Stratagems.

Stratagems to be us'd at Sea.

1. A Fleet that is bound to a Port, and fears to meet an Enemy, may avoid him by this Stratagem following: Besides such Pinnaces as must be sent to look out the Ships expected, to give them warning of an Enemy, they ought to have other Pinnaces, choice Sailors, that should attend the Enemies Fleet; and finding they lie in a height, the others have Order to Sail in, to draw near them, and to entice them to chase them; and in pursuit of them, they will be drawn to Leeward, and give passage for their Fleets Entrance.

2. But if this prevail not, they may cause one of their Pinnaces to be purposely taken, to deceive them with false Instructions, as for example; If their Fleet have Order

Order to come home in 37 Degrees; the Enemy finding those Directions, will not suspect a Deceit, but will stand into 37 Degrees, when the others will come home in 36. the height formerly assigned them, and so avoid them.

3. Or if a Fleet be sent out for guard of those Ships expected, and not so good of Sail as their Enemy, to force them quit their Coast; it were better such a Fleet should lye in a contrary height to that their Ships have Directions to sail in, than otherwise; for the Enemy finding in what height they lie in will verily believe they have Orders to come home in the same height, and will strive to meet them in that height, before they shall join together, when the others have Directions not to come within 40 or 50 Leagues of them.

4. If Fleets shall meet in the Night, or after an Encounter they forbear Fighting when it is dark, and one of them have a desire to quit the other, they may cause so many Lights as usually their Admiral, or other Ships carry in the Night, to be carried by Pinnaces in such a height as may equal the Poop of their Ships; and the Enemy accompanying those Lights, will not suspect the flight of the Fleet, who in the mean time may convey themselves away, and leave only the Pinnaces behind them.

5. If a Fleet will deceive an Enemy of a less Force, that is so far to Windward, that they cannot fetch them, they may do it with counterfeit Flags, and working like Merchants Ships; and for a Bait, may appoint part of a Fleet to chase another after, and the Chaser to wear the Enemies Colours. The Ships must shor, but miss one another, which they to Windward spying, will come home in hope to have part of the booty, and to be brought into the wake of the Fleet, and entrapp'd.

6. This Stratagem will serve as well for a Road, to cause in the like manner one Ship to chase another, as tho' the that is chased, labour'd to recover the Road: and a Flag seeming to be a Friend, may embolden them to go forth to the rescue of her, and so fall into the Laps of the Enemy.

7. People are not so easily deceiv'd with counterfeit Flags as they have been; for the often practice of such Stratagems, makes Men more cautious: We were wont to make it a common Custom, after we had taken a Spanish Carvell, to Cloth our Men with the others Garments, and to send them into the Harbours of Spain to be inform'd of the State of their Shipping.

8. In 87. and the first time I went to Sea as Captain, I had Two Pinnaces, and one Spanish Frigate with me: The Frigate took a Portuguese, and after was robb'd her self by a French Ship of War; out of necessity this Frigate was forc'd into the Harbour of Setuval in Portugal, and the People seeing her Portuguese built, and the Men attir'd in the Habits of the Portuguese they had formerly taken, and having a Portuguese aboard with them, that came out of England, and whom they trusted, they were supply'd with what they wanted from the Shore, and departed without suspicion.

9. One night I came into the Road of Cefimbra, pretending to be a Flemming bound to Setuval to lade Salt, and desired a Pilot; under which colour I deceiv'd the Pilot, and divers other Boats and Barques that came aboard me, by whom I understood the state of the Fleet at Lisbon, ready to set to Sea in pursuit of me. I could recite many Stratagems of this kind.

10. If a Fleet intend an Attempt upon an Harbour, where a strong Fort may impeach their Entrance, by example of Lisbon, and the Castle of St. Julian, the Stratagem is to set 2 or 3 old Vessels on fire, fitted with all manner of necessities to make a Smoak, and to run them ashore under the Castle, that the Gunners may not see a Ship, much less have any aim at them, and so they may pass without danger.

11. What Stratagems may be us'd against such Ships, as are entred a Harbour, and how to prevent it, I have expressed in the Second Book, where I treated of the last Expedition at Cadiz, in 1625.

And because I have named Lisbon, I will set down a Stratagem I had in mind after my Imprisonment there.

12. Both many years before and after I was Prisoner in Lisbon, the Hollanders had a free Trade into all parts of Spain, which I took advantage of in this Stratagem following: I devised that 20 Holland Ships freighted with Merchandize, under the colour of Merchants, should repair to Lisbon, and that every Ship should have a number of Men secretly hid in them; and when they came to Anchor at Belem, which they generally do, and are viewed by the King's Officers, these Men should not appear; and after their Discharge from Belem, I had order'd that every Ship should ride as near the King's Palace at Lisbon, as conveniently they could; and that in the night when there was no suspicion of them, and the Galleons had no more Men on board than the Ship keepers, the Hollanders should steer aboard possess and burn them, for they were sure to find no resistance: After this was done, there was no danger of their coming out, for it is an ordinary thing for Ships to pass Belem in despite of the Cattle.

13. If a Ship fall into company of a Fleet at night, it is necessary to have a sudden and a ready Answer; as also 2 or 3 of the Nation to speak as they shall be directed, as for example, and as you shall read in my last Voyage in the Queen's time, how in the Night I lighted amongst 24 Galeons of Spain, and being so nigh the Admiral, I could not avoid her, had I been known to be an Enemy. I commanded a Spaniard that serv'd me to call the Admiral, and tell him there was a strange Ship entered amongst our Fleet, which of all others he could not suspect mine, because of the warning I gave him; and in the mean time I tack'd from him, and so escap'd in a secret manner, making no noise.

14. In the Island Expedition I met the Indies Fleet, and it blowing little Wind, I went off in my Boat to descry them; when I perceiv'd what they were, I made my self and Ship known to them, urging them to pursue me, which if they had done, I had brought them into the Wake of my Lord of Essex and his Fleet, from whom I departed but Three Hours before, where they had been taken, and the state of Spain utterly destroy'd.

15. It is a common use when Ships are scatter'd, and chance to meet in the Night, not knowing one another, to hail one another in a strange Language (which I disapprove) as a thing dangerous, for the other being satisfy'd by his Tongue, not to be his Comfort, or of his Country, prepares to Fight; and thus had it like to fall out with me: The Mary-Rose and I meeting one Night, after we had lost company, one of my Company hailed her in Spanish without my Privy, whereat I was angry, and caus'd her to be call'd to in English, even as she was giving fire to her Broad side. It is Folly in this case to counterfeit, for no good can come of it, seeing the one cannot part from the other, without knowing what they are.

15. The Signs that direct a Fleet in the Day time, are Striking or Hoisting the Top-sails, shewing their Flag, or Shooting their Ordnance; by shewing Lights in the Night. Many times I have known when a Ship hath lighted in company of an Enemy, that by chance she has made the very same Sign given by the General, by which means she has escap'd; and in the like manner Ships have been taken by the same fortune: Therefore there cannot be a better Stratagem than when a Ship shall make a Sign, to be answer'd by the same; and the contrary Ship begin a new Sign, before the other make any; for it is not to be doubted, but the other Ship will answer every Sign that shall be made by her that makes the first.

17. I once knew an unlikely Stratagem take good effect, in this manner; After Three Days Chace of a rich Ship, my Lord of Cumberland was out of hopes of fetching her up, she was so far to Windward, only a Pinnace kept her company, and in the Night carry'd a Light for us to follow; I advis'd my Lord to fire a Culvering at her, tho' we could not fetch her at twice, saying, that perhaps she would yield to the Countenance of the Ship, that would not for shame do it to a Pinnace; this seem'd ridiculous, and I had much ado to persuade my Lord; yet upon my importunity he yielded to it, and the Ship, as I foretold, submitted her self.

18. A Ship that is chas'd and distressed shew Fear, thinking to draw her that chases into her clutches, must counterfeit and work as tho' she were distress'd, and lye like a Wreck in the Sea; she must cast Dreggs, Hogheads, and other things overboard to hinder her way; she must shew no more Men than an ordinary Gang, and hail in her Ordnance, and shut her Ports, that her Forces be not discern'd, till the other Ship come within Command of her.

19. As Ships ought to observe their Admirals working in the Night, by his Light, so ought they to be more careful when they are nigh a Shore, lest they mistake a Light on Land, instead of their Admiral; by example of 97. when the Admiral drew down his Fleet from Lisbon to the Groine, and coming nigh the North Cape, the greatest part of the Fleet steer'd with a Light on the Shore, mistaking their Admiral, and cast away 36 Ships and 5000 Men.

20. As Lights direct one another at Sea, so are they Directors of Ships from the Shore, as I can instance in many cases, some of which I have already declar'd, to which I refer you.

21. Lights kept in the Night, off of a Headland, as the Lizard, or such Capes, are a safeguard to Ships in their passage, that are in view of them. Lights likewise give warning of an Enemy that is upon a Coast, Coast; and for that use Beacons were invented.

22. Ships that are appointed for more readines of a Service to ride in the Sound of Plimouth, in the Range of Dartmouth, or other Roads upon our Coast, and in the Night are suddenly taken with a Storm at South, which is a deadly Wind in those Roads, if Lights be plac'd on either of the sides of the Point of Cartwater or Dartmouth, will be guided into the Harbour be it never so dark.

23. In a barr'd Harbour, such as Dunkirk, that is continually Beleguerr'd by an Enemy, by keeping Lights from half Tide to half Tide, he that enters, is directed how the Tide encreases or decreases, and thereby how to avoid the Enemy.

24. Ships riding at the Downes, and fearing a Surprise from an Enemy in the Night, with a Southerly Wind, by placing two Boats with Lights on either side of the Brake, will direct one how to pass the Chanel and avoid the Sands, which being done, and the Lights taken away, the Ships that pursue them will run upon their Death if they follow.

25. The cutting down Mills, Trees, taking away Buoys, or other Marks that direct the Pilot, is a great Safety to any Port, or Place, such as the Tbames, where many Sands must be pass'd.

26. The placing of Ships for the advantage of Wind, is a Matter of great Consequence; as for Example, if an Invasion against England be intended from the Southward, that Wind that brings an Enemy for England, will keep in our Ships in Harbour, that they cannot stir out; only one Place is advantageous to us, which is Limehouse near Plimouth; for that Wind that brings an Enemy from the Westward or Southward, will serve our Ships that lie in Limehouse to follow them, if they pass into any part of our Chanel to the Eastward.

27. Prospective Glasses, if they were not so common, were an excellent Stratagem to be used in many cases at Sea, and yet it is no hard thing to deceive those that use them; for a Merchant Ship that carries not above 10 or 12 Men, may have the Shapes of Men made, and seem to be 100 afar off; they likewise may have counterfeit Guns made of Wood, which the Glass cannot discover from Iron, to the terror of the Assailant. It may as well serve for a Man of War, to slow his Men in Hold till a Ship come near him.

28. The best and the greatest Ship in the World may be sunk by a Bark of 20

Tun, by this Stratagem, viz. To place a Cannon in the Hold of a Bark with her Mouth to the side of the Ship, the Bark shall board; and then to give fire to the Cannon which is flow'd under Water, and they shall both instantly sink; the Man that shall execute this Stratagem, may escape in a small Boat hauled on the other side of the Bark.

29. Two Gallies may be Mann'd, and furnished in the manner following, and will be as great a Guard and Safety to a Fleet of Gallies, as the Wings of an Eagle to little Birds, or a Cattle to a Ship.

The two Gallies shall carry each of them 1000 Men, with all kind of Arms for Offence and Defence: There shall be placed aloft such kind of Fowlers as I will invent.

Their Hatches shall be made with Trap Doors, and Pikes placed under them, that as fast as Men enter they shall fall upon the Pikes so placed; all the Deck, shall be strew'd with round Pease tallow'd, that treading upon them, no Man shall be able to stand upon his Feet; the Ships on the Outside to be stuck with Tenter-Hooks, that they shall take no hold to enter with their Hands, and their Cloaths will stuck upon the Tenter-Hooks, that they shall not be able to enter: There shall be Barricadoes, and close Fights made with all advantage, and all Parts of the Ship be made Musket-proof for the Safeguard of Men.

Aloft by the Water and without Board they shall be fortify'd with Packs of Wooll, that no Shot shall pierce them, or Gallies be able to board them; Every Ship shall have upon his Yard-Arm, a Barrel or two of Gunpowder mixed with Bullets, that as the Gallies shall approach the distance of the Yard, the Barrel of Powder shall be let fall with a Pulley, and matches about the Barrel, that shall give fire upon the Fall, and breaking of the Barrel: In this manner will the Galleys be burnt, and the Men slain, all at one instant.

30. If Gallies attend a Fleet of Ships, thinking to cut off some stragglers, as they did to Sir Francis Drake, and after to us at Cadiz, where they took some few Vessels; in such a Case, the great Ships must be a Guard of the outside of the Fleet to the lesser Ships, and if the Fleet chance to Anchor, to place the least and weakest Vessels outermost of the Fleet in the Day time, which will imbolden the Gallies in the Night to assail them; but when the Darkness of the Night shall approach; approach, then to remove them, and in their place to cause the best and the greatest Ships of the Fleet to anchor where the others did, that if the Gallies attempt them they shall be entertain'd to their loss.

31. If a Ship will board an Enemy under a Castle, let him that boards bring the Ship boarded, betwixt him and the Castle, for then dares not the Castle fire for hazarding their own Ship boarded.

32. Sinking of Ships full of Stones is an old Invention, and used as well to defend ones self in a barr'd Harbour, as by an Enemy to keep in Ships from going out; but it is to little purpose to him that possesses a Harbour; for when the Water is decreased, such Ships sunk may be waded to, the Stones taken out, and the Ships burnt without hurt to themselves or Harbour.

33. Booming Harbours for the Safeguard of Ships is usual; but at each end of the Boom, Sconces must be built to defend it: For this I refer you to my first Book, which will give you more particular light.

34. One of the known Dangers in a Ship of great Burthen, and in a great Storm, that carries weighty Ordnance, is, the breaking loose of one of her Pieces in the Lower Tire; for before she can be muled, or overcome by force of Men, what with the rowling of the Ship from one side to the other, the Piece will carry the Ship side, and founder her in the Sea.

35. For avoiding these Perils, there is but one Remedy, if it take effect, which is suddenly to heave up the Hatches of the Deck, that in her recoil she may find the Deck open, and fall into the Hold, where she shall be easily over-master'd.

I am of Opinion, if any had escap'd aboard the King of Spain's Ships that were wreck'd, which was impossible, they would confess the breaking loose of their Ordnance was the occasion of their Destruction; and no marvel, for they us'd to carry their great Ordnance upon Field-Carriages, which makes them the more Dangerous and Unserviceable, when they come to traverse them.

36. If there could be made a Ball of Wild-fire, as I have heard some take upon them to do it, which Ball should burn without quenching, then were it an easie thing to convey one of them Balls secretly into a Ship, and privately to hide it till the Party be gone out of the Ship, which then being set on Fire, will not only burn the said Ship, but all others near her.

37. In passing a Fort in the Night, it is good to make both the Ship and Sails black, with a Care that no light be seen in her; but the way for an Enemy to prevent her entrance is this, to make a Fire opposite to the Fort, and to lay the Ordnance point blank with the Fire, that when they shall see the Shadow of the Fire taken from them by the Ship and Sails, then to discharge their Ordnance, and be sure to sink the Ship.

38. A Ship that will keep another from boarding her, she being to Windward and may board her, the Remedy is, to put forth two Masts at two Ports, that the Ship covering to board, she shall light upon the Masts, and keep her from coming near the Ship.

39. It is a good Stratagem to board a Ship though she presently fall off again; and during the time she is on board to appoint the Carpenters with their Axes to cut the Port-ropes of the Ships boarded, that at her coming off again, when she shall begin a new Fight, her Pieces may serve for no purpose, because her Ports will be cloged, and not able to put forth a piece of Ordnance, but lie to be annoyed by the Enemy.

40. A number of Ships lying in an Harbour dry, from half Tide to half Tide, may be thus destroy'd, as I will make a Comparison betwixt England, Flanders, and France, where two of them have Wars with one another, and the Third Peace with both, I will suppose that a Ship of France, and a Man in her that I will trust, freighted for Dunkirk, where English Barks are forbid to go, the Bark is to be laden with Deals, and other dry substance apt to burn, and under her Boards there must be stow'd Pitch, Tarr, Rosin, and other Ingredients not to be quench'd: The French Man that shall execute this Stratagem, must forecast at his Entrance into the Harbour to seek to lie a board the best Ships, and where he may do the most Hurt and Spoil to the rest, when his Ship is on fire.

All things being thus provided, and the Train sufficiently made, the French Man must watch his Opportunity that his Match come to the Train by that time it is low Water, which he may compute by Hours, and the length of his Match; and in that time he may have his Horse in readiness to carry him over the River of Gravelin, but 9 Miles from thence, where he will be in France, and free from Danger.

The Fire thus taking, and all things order'd by these Directions, as well this Ship as all others in the Harbour will be

destroy'd; for Ships, and they able to remove quench the Fire that in the mean time destroy'd.

41. If Ships or Sconces, that if it were taken To embark the Boats in the Night their Oars, and Fort as they came and in the mean Boat, not near are, to show a as though it were not willingly, drift, which they suddenly let fly which the others suddenly land their Scaling, nance can be destroy'd; for the Water going from the Ships, and they lying dry, they are not able to remove or stir, or have Water to quench the Fire till the Flood rise; so that in the mean time they will be utterly destroy'd.

41. If Ships desire to surprize a Fort or Sconce, that would give them landing if it were taken, it is thus to be done: To embark the Men secretly in their Boats in the Night, and without noise of their Oars, and then to row as near the Fort as they can, without being discover'd, and in the mean time to cause a small Boat, not near the Place where the others are, to shew a Light or two with a Match, as though it were accidentally done, and not willingly, and to leave the Boat a-drift, which the Fort perceiving, will presently let fly her Ordnance against her, which the other Boats seeing, they may suddenly land, and enter the Sconce by their Scaling Ladders, before their Ordnance can be laden again.

42. If an Enemy should land in Boats upon a Shore that the Siege of the Sea should be very inconvenient for the landing of themselves and Arms, there is a kind of Bridge to be made with boards, that may be laid over from the side of the Boat to the Land, and avoid the Siege, and instead of wading, their Men may go in ranks ashore, without wetting.

43. If an Army shall land where the Shore is all Beachy, and full of little Stones, like Dal and the Castles thereabouts, where they may bring Ordnance to impeach the Enemy's landing, I would advise, that the Artillery shoot not so much at their Boats, but suffer them to come on shore, and then to let fly at the Stones or Hills piled up on purpose in heaps, that will scatter and disperse, as not a Man will be left alive.

44. A Ship that desires to be boarded, and to be enter'd by his Enemy, may use this Stratagem; To haul in all his Ordnance; to shut his Ports; to hide his Men; to strike his Sails, and make all the Signs of yielding; which the Enemy perceiving will be emboldned to board him, and whilst they are suffer'd to enter and pillage, the Defendants may suddenly rise, subdue and master them.

45. If an Enemy sink Ships to keep in others from going out, such Ships sunk may be suddenly weigh'd, if the Assailant quit the Harbour, without any great detriment to the Ship sunk, therefore they are to make choice of the shallowest Place to sink their Ships, and nearest to deep Water, where their own Ships may ride and float, that with their Ordnance you may keep the Ship sunk, that no Boat, or other help, can weigh them; themselves shall be kept from any danger of Firing, for no Enemy can approach them, so long as the Ships sunk lie there.

46. There is a Stratagem as old as the Invention of Ships, tho' the Common People attribute it to the Wit of Sir Francis Drake, at Cadiz, in 1688, against the Spaniards; to fill old Ships and Vessels with Pitch, Tarr, Train-Oil, Brimstone, Reeds, Dry Wood, and to join three or four of these Ships together in the Night, and then turn them a-drift with the Tide, where the Enemy's Fleet rides, and either burn or disperse them, after they are thus put from their Anchorage.

47. At my being at Sea in my Youth, 1585. two small Ships of us accompany'd together, we met a strong and obstinate Ship of Holland, who refus'd to strike his Flag, or to shew his Cocker; this Ship had in her an English Pilot, by whom we expostulated with the Hollander, without any semblance of boarding her; but being very nigh her our Master cry'd to the Man at Helm, with great Anger, to Port the Helm, lest we should come foul of her; but privately he gave charge to the Helmsmen, to put his Helm a-star-board, when he should have put it Port, and cry'd with great vehemency to the English Pilot to bear up, for our Ship came against her Helm, and will'd them to get Fenders, and have Spikes to fend off, lest we should come foul of her: The Hollanders thought all we said was true, and every one of them put their helping hand to keep off our Ship with Fenders and Oars, not apprehending our Intention; and when we saw their People thus employ'd, and not to have time to take Arms, we suddenly boarded, enter'd, and took her by this Stratagem.

48. As the greatest Advantage of a Fleet of Ships of War, is to have Intelligence of their Enemy when they come upon their Coast, so the way to obtain it arriving upon the Coast of Spain, is to let a Ship's Boat lie under the Island of Burlings, where they shall not fail by break of Day in the Morning, to take Fishermen that will be able to inform them of the State of things ashore: It may as well serve for any other Place, if they see fair Weather in hand.

My Lord of Cumberland, arriving upon the Coast of Spain, was sore distress'd for Intelligence; and a sudden Calm arising, two or three Leagues from us, we spy'd two Caravels; whereupon I put my self into into the Ship's Boat, and rowed to them ; one of them I took ; the other might have escap'd, but by this Stratagem I prevented her, I took out two or three of her Men and Mann'd her with my own Company, and immediately without delay sent her to meet with her Comfort, who made signs that they might think her discharg'd, and row'd my Boat on board the Ship that there should be no suspicion ; so that the Caravel was thus taken by Deceit, which otherwife might have escap'd ; but when I had so much as I desir'd for Intelligence at their hands, I dismiss'd them, and after found, I being taken my self, that they reported well of my good Usage of them.

50. I had a Stratagem upon Prince Cardinal Albert, when he was Vice Roy of Portugal, but was prevented by his sudden going into the Low Countries ; and thus it was : When I was Prisoner in the Gallies, about the 10th of September, the Cardinal pass'd down to a Pleasant House call'd Cintra, with a small Train, where he spent his time in Devotion. Usually he repair'd thither at the same time of the Year, and to the same Purpose, which I well observ'd, and meant, if ever God gave me liberty, to have surpriz'd him in this manner : To have comforted with two or three Ships of War, which would no way have hinder'd the hope of their Voyage, to have anchored before Cintra, that is seated upon a Hill, and not above two Miles from the Sea. I meant in the middle of the Night, when there was no Noise or Suspicion, to have landed 100 Men with Firelocks, who might, without Difficulty, have surpriz'd him and his House, and have brought him to the Place where the Boats were commanded to attend.

51. When I was remov'd from the Gallies to the Castle of Lisbon, I had another Stratagem on foot, but was prevented by a Traitorous English Man, whom I was forced to use as an Interpreter, before I had the Language.

There was in Prison with me a Portuguese Gentlemen, call'd Emanuel Fernandez, who had been in England Servant to Don Antonio, their pretended King : This Man was much devoted to the Service of the Queen ; and I observ'd, that a Pilot of the King's, usually employ'd to meet the Indies Fleet with Letters of Advice, to direct them the Course they were to come home in, resorted to him. I so dealt with Seignior Emanuel, that upon Considerations agreed on betwixt us, if my designs should prove successful, he did really undertake to prevail with the said Pilot, instead of carrying the Letters of Advice to their own Fleet, to carry them to the Queen, that so the Treasure might by this Intelligence be intercepted : For I had so contriv'd it, had I not been prevented by the said Treacherous English Man, that the Queen should have notice of it, by Letters I wrote to the Lord Burleigh, Lord High Treasurer, and to the Lord Admiral, and conveyed the said Letters in the Soles of my Boy's Shoes ; but by the false Dealing of the English Man aforesaid, my Plot was discover'd, and my Boy carry'd into Belem Castle, three Leagues from thence ; so that when I thought my Servant had been embark'd for England, two Months after I had Intelligence by an English Man, Gunner of the said Castle, that he was still there Prisoner, and had famili'd if he had not taken Pity of him.

The first thing the Spaniards did, after the Imprisoning my Boy, was to rip and search his Shoes, according to the Intelligence given them ; but tho' it was unfortunate to me, yet in another kind it fell out luckily, for a great Rain falling that Morning he was carry'd away, it so moistned his Shoes and Letters, that they were moulder'd, and could not be read, as the Boy after confess'd at my arrival in England, so that they could have no Witnells, but the English Man who was my Accuser.

Since I am upon this Project, tho' it may seem tedious to the Reader, yet will I set down the Danger that beset the Gentleman and me, upon the Occasion aforesaid : This Signior Fernandez had been Prisoner in the Castle of Lisbon almost Seven Years ; and his Cifence, for coming out of England, with Letters and Messages to Don Antonio his Friends in Portugal ; yet such was the Power of Money, that by means thereof he was to receive Liberty, had it not been for this Treason discover'd by this vile English Man. A Day was appointed for his Sentence of Death, which with weeping Eyes he acquainted me with, like a Friend in a desperate Case : I advis'd him, if all other hopes fail'd, to seek some Stratagem to escape Prison, with promise of my endeavour to help him ; and to be short, for delay could do no good. He provided himself of a Rope and a Cudgel to put betwixt the Battlements of the Castle Wall, thinking when we went to our necessary businells, which was once a Day, with a Guard of two Soldiers, to have taken an Opportunity to have slipped down down the Wall, and to have run into a Church, thereby stated, to take Sanctuary.

But after Four Days Trial made at our coming to the Wall, as I have said, we found it impossible to put this Stratagem in execution in the day time; and I considered withal, the danger that might have befall'n me, if he had escap'd; therefore we thought upon another course, tho' it was more improbable, and which was as followeth: Over the little Room he lay in, was a Chamber where Soldiers had been Lodged, that a Week before were Embarked in a Fleet to Sea; the Chamber was not so high, but that by the help of a high Stool, which he had in his Room, the top of it could be reach'd to; here we put our helping hands, one of us still working, till we cut with our Knives a Trap-Door out of the Boards above head, that a Man might creep through it; and finding by the Amatack when the Nights would grow dark, we contriv'd all things against that time, to perform our devis'd Plot; and by means of his Son, who had access to him, he was provided of a Sword-Scabbard, and a Stick to serve instead of a Rapier, that he might seem to be a Soldier as he pass'd the Centinels; he carry'd his Rope and Cudgel afore-said, and a Bag with a little Bread and Wine for his Sustainance, under his Cloak: and thus he went Armed out of the Chamber above, as a Soldier with a wooden Sword by his side.

He pass'd the Corps de Guard and Five Centinels before he came to the Wall, pretending he went for his necessary Occasions, which they never mistrusted, seeing he carry'd the Sign of a Soldier, which was a Stick in his Scabbard. At his arrival at the Wall, without fear, or any sense of Age, he slip'd down by the Rope, and happily escap'd.

Not long after, the Round passing about the Castle, espied his Rope, Cloak, Cudgel, and wooden Sword, which assur'd them of the escape of some Prisoner; whereupon the Drum beat, the Alarm was taken, and the Soldiers furiously came running into my Chamber, as they did to others where Prisoners lay, with their Swords drawn, and threatening Death. I confess I look'd here to have ended my Life, but that pass'd, and Two Soldiers were left to guard me till Morning.

They finding it was my Neighbour Signior Emanuel Fernandez that was escap'd; the Hue-and-Cry went through the City and Country, and Command for his Apprehension; but such was his Fortune, that he escap'd the Fury of the Tumult, and I was left at stake to be baited for the Offence: In the Morning early, I appear'd before the Judge, as the only De'inquent, the rest of the Prisoners casting it upon me; all agreeing, I was the likeliest to know of his escape, because of our continual Conversation, but little knowing the true Cause of our often meeting.

But neither Threats, ill Usage, or Promise of Liberty, could make me confess any thing to the Prejudice of either of us. I was so urged and threaten'd, that I was forced to use for my Defence this Argument (viz.) That I was no Subject to the King of Spain, but to a Prince his Enemy; that I was taken in War, and therefore requir'd the benefit of that Law for my Redemption; I came not willingly to their Country to learn their Laws, or to bring in others to breed Innovation; I was subject at that time to the universal Law of Honour and Arms, by which I challeng'd the Privilege of a Gentleman for my Freedom; and for the Accident now in question, I deny'd that I had any knowledge thereof, or that I was any way privy to it, and that the unlikeliness of it should plead for me, and be a sufficient Testimony of my Innocency; I told them they knew I was so unskilful in their Language, that I could not devise a Practice or Plot with a Man I understood not; and that my Imprisonment had kept me from Acquaintance, either in City or Country, to contrive any evil against their State; and if it shou'd Guilt to be accus'd, no Man could prove innocent; and therefore I desired them that they would rather pity my Misery than accuse me unjustly; I intreated them to consider that I was a Prisoner among my Enemies, destitute of all Relief, and in a place where no Friend could resort to me; for I bemoan'd my Wants, there being a Restraint of Entercourse and Trade betwixt the Two Nations.

But what I could say did little prevail; for they aggravated my supposed Offence with cruelty of Threats, inasmuch that I was forc'd to plead in another Style, and let them know, that by the Law of Arms, they could prove nothing against me that deserv'd punishment: the privilege of which Law I challeng'd, as being taken in War, and continu'd Prisoner for my Redemption, during which time, it was lawful for me to seek my own Liberty, and to neglect no occasion, wherein I might do Service to my Prince and Country, and therefore what they accus'd me of, could not be deemed an Offence.

I told them moreover, tho' I us'd this but as an Argument, yet their barbarous

T : : Usage

Use of me deserv'd a greater Revenge than I had Ability to perform; whereas, if they had Treated me with Courtesie, I had been more bound to them, than if they had repos'd Trust in me. I ended with this defence, That they should be wary what Violence they offer'd me, for I had Friends in England, and was of a Nation that both could and would sufficiently Reveng what Cruelty soever they should use towards me.

These Reasons begot a more calm Respect from them; and another while they us'd persuasive Arguments, with promise of Liberty and Reward; making me believe the Gentleman was taken, and Confess'd so much as they accus'd me of; but I well knew their Words were but Wind, for that they would never have warn'd me, if they could have justify'd their Allegations by a Personal Testimony: Yet I confess the thoughts of one thing much terrify'd me; which was a Letter I gave Signior Fernandez at his departure, which might have been produc'd against me; the Letter was in his behalf, to all English Captains at Sea, for his Friendly Entertainment; his design being to put himself into a Fisherboat, to look out at Sea for a Man of War to Transport him for England.

After a tedious Examination of Four Hours, when they saw their Subtleties could work nothing out of me, Presumption being but an unequal Judge, they return'd me to Prison, with charge to be more strictly look'd to; and after neglected no cunning means to entrap me, as I have more largely express'd in another Discourse, at the Request of some of my Friends.

I will again return to the Gentleman Signior Fernandez, who no doubt was as much perplex'd out of Prison, as I who could not fly from the danger of my Enemies, in whose custody I remain'd. All Hue and Cries, Searches, promises of Reward, and other devised Policies, not prevailing for the Apprehending of the poor Gentleman: he liv'd in a disguis'd obscure manner, till time furnish'd him an opportunity to Embarque in a Fisherboat, to make use of my Letters aforesaid, where he spent 14 Days at Sea, and failing of meeting any Ship at Sea, and wearied with Sea-Sickness, he was forc'd to return to Shore, where he liv'd some time among poor Shepherds and Herd-men, till he thought his Disguise and Disfiguring himself, had so altered him that he could not be known.

Now thinking his new formed Shape would secure him from being Discover'd;

and hoping that the long time since his escape, might make his Fact to be worn out of memory; he was emboldned in a Beggars Habit to try the Charity of good People, and chancing to Repair to a Gentleman's House for Alms, it hapned that the said Gentleman and he, had been fellow Prisoners in the Castle of Lisbon, who by his Tongue, and other Semblances and Marks, discover'd who he was; and immediately call'd a Servant, which gave a suspicion to Signior Fernandez, that it was to give warning to the Officers to Apprehend him; but to prevent what his Heart misgave him, he suddenly ran into the Church there by, and took Sanctuary for his Defence.

This Accident being so strange, and falling upon a Man the whole Kingdom had an Eye upon, because of his former escape, the Prince Cardinal was immediately with speed advertized of it at Lisbon, being above 120 Miles from thence. It was my Fortune before this happen'd, to be releas'd out of my Imprisonment, which I account a Happiness, that thereby I was brought into no danger.

The Cardinal being advertis'd, as you have heard, of Signior Fernandez taking Sanctuary, with all speed caus'd him to be taken out of the Church, and brought to his old accustomed Lodging in the Castle of Lisbon, where not long after the Law proceeded against him, and he receiv'd the doom of Death due to such an Offence; but not without Grief and Sorrow to many of the Beholders, as well Spaniards as Portugueses; for indeed he was a Man of much Goodness and great Charity, and to his Ability oblig'd many a Soldier in the Garrison.

The day appointed for his Execution being come, and having received all the Rights and Ceremonies of a Christian, he was brought out of Prison, with a Wind-ing-Sheet lapp'd Bandalier fashion about him; and many Soldiers and others to behold him, to give him their last adieu; and for a farewell from himself, he took occasion to speak to the Soldiers there present, in this manner; he told them, How much he had lov'd them, and that to some of them he had give testimony of it, in his better Fortunes, which he knew they would thankfully acknowledge; and in lieu of all his former Courtesies and Kindnesses, he desir'd them to requite him with one now at parting, as the last Request he should ever make, which was, For one of them with speed to repair to the House of the Misericordia, an Office of great Reputation and Trust concerning Religion and Charity, Charity, and his Desire was, That they might be inform'd of the Injury done to God, Themselves, and the Holy Church, by taking perforce a penitent Sinner out of Sanctuary: A Thing so unjust and unsufferable, that it behov'd them to take notice of it.

This little Hope gave great Content to the Soldiers, and happy was he that could make greatest haste to the House of the Misericordia to make relation of the strange Accident that had happened. The Gentlemen of the Misericordia weighing the Dishonour and Injustice done their House, delayed no Time, but posted on Horseback to the Place of Execution, where they found poor Senior Fernandez ready to recommend his Spirit to God, and the Hangman as ready to perform his Office; but such was his Fortune by the Speed and Courage of the Gentlemen, that they redeem'd him from present Death, and return'd him to the Place from whence he came; for as they were loth to lose their Privileges, so they were as unwilling to offend their King.

The Strangeness of this Accident may put a Man in mind of an old English Proverb, that Marriage and Hanging goes by Destiny.

52. In the 48th Stratagem, I have shewed how necessary it is to get Intelligence of an Enemy, and how to obtain it, as you shall there find, for that part of Spain and Portugal I spoke of; so likewise you shall read in my First Book, how to compass Intelligence of the South Part of Spain, as namely St. Lucar and Cadiz, by Example of a Precedent of my own: As also in the same Book, I refer you to the way how to procure Intelligence at the Tercera Islands; to which Book I refer you for brevity sake.

53. When the Queen lived, she was inclined to hearken to a Project of mine, for the taking and inhabiting the Castle De la Myna in Guinea, many years possess'd by the Portugueses, and for Defence whereof, they rely'd most upon the number of Negro's, in whose Country Myna is seated; and to indear the Negro's the more to them, and to exasperate them against the Enemies, they make them believe, That what War soever they have with others, is in their Defence against those who seek to slay them, and to possess their Country. But to meet with this Project, I divid'd to carry a number of Negro's out of England, that could speak their Language, and were able to report the Difference betwixt the Portugueses Usage of them and ours; for in Portugal they sell their Negro's in open Market for Slaves, as we do Horses, which they know we do not, by which means we shall be able to disappoint their Designs.

54. The Marquis of Santa Cruz, when he took the Tercera Islands, made offer of landing at the City of Angra, and finding the Island had drawn all their Forces together to withstand him in that Place, he instantly winded his Gallies about, and row'd 5 Leagues to the Eastward of it, and landed where he found no Resistance. The same did my Lord of Essex at the Island of St. Michael's, who pointed to land at Porto de Gallo, but left that Resolution, and went with his Boats to Villa Franca, which he took easily, all their Forces being drawn to Porto de Gallo.

55. Naming Villa Franca, I will say something that happen'd to me 18 years before this I have spoken of, rather to make you Laugh, than for Seriousness sake, and yet I place it amongst the Stratagems; and thus it was: You must know that, notwithstanding the Wars with England and Spain, some of those Islands conniv'd at the Trade betwixt them and the English Ships, which went under the Name and Colour of Scots: It chanced that one Evening I came into the Road of Villa Franca, but without the Command of the Castle, attending the Darkness of the Night to go aboard an English Ship there riding, to avoid suspicion of being seen from the Shore: Upon my boarding of the same Ship, I was carried by the Master to Banquet in his Cabin; his Company that were on board espied a Boat rowing from the Shore, and brought us News of it, being in the Cabin, which put the Master to a deadly Fear, for my being discover'd would have prov'd his Undoing. I comforted him, and will'd him to follow my Directions, and he should escape any such Danger. I desir'd him to go out of the Cabin, and leave me there, and to say what I should bid him. The Boat came to the Ship side, and told the Master, That the strange Ship that rid not far from him was an English Rover, and will'd him to be careful, for that Night 'twas thought he would surprize her: I will'd the Master to tell them, That he suspected as much, and stood upon his Guard, but fear'd that the Ship had deserv'd their Boat coming off from the Shore, and it was likely they would intercept their Boat in their return to Land, and advis'd them, as they lov'd their Liberty, to hasten away. This put the Portugueses in such a Fear, that suddenly, without speaking one Word more, they put off their Boat without enteriing into the Ship; which made us Laugh heartily, and was a good Addition to our Supper.

56. In the year 1611. there was a Complaint made by the Inhabitants of the Cinque-Ports, that the French incroach'd upon their Fishing at Sea, a Rocky Ground 5 Leagues South from Rye, which Place serves all London with choice Fish: Whereupon I was sent down to redress this Disorder, and made use of the Stratagem following, because if I had discover'd my self with my Ship, the French would have fled: Therefore I Mann'd the English Fisherboats with my own Company, and gave them Order, as I should pass by with my own Ship, and shoot a Piece of Ordnance, to board the French and possess them; which they did, and by means thereof the Cinque-Ports enjoy'd their antient Privilege.

57. The Stratagem of taking the Pirates in the anno 1614, is amply set down in my second Book, to which I refer you, wishing you to peruse it, for it will give you Pleasure and Content in reading it, and a Light withal how to use the same Stratagem, if there be occasion.

58. A Ship, and by consequence he that is employ'd in her, may be deceiv'd by touching the Needle in the manner following: A Ship going her Course to the Port she is bound, may be deceiv'd in touching the North Point South with a Loadstone, which is contrary to the Place she is going to, and may, perhaps, carry her upon some Shoals and Rocks, that in a right Course there is no Cause to fear.

59. In the Voyage with my Lord of Lindsey, in 1635, we sent over a Fisherboat to Brest, Baltour Bay, and other Places upon that Coast, to spy and view the State of the French and Holland Fleet, which we knew was thither retir'd, but with such Insinuations as the French could not suspect it; and that they might see we had great Confidence in them, and to receive Advertisment from them, we pretended the Cause of our employing the Boat was to look out certain Turkish Pirates, who we suppos'd hover'd upon their Coast. The Boat return'd with a true Relation, as we after found, which gave us good Satisfaction.

60. Not long after my being taken by the Galleys in Spain, if I had not been by Accident prevented, I had escap'd the Imprisonment I endur'd for many Months in the said Galleys at Cascais and Lisbon, which was most grievous to me, by this Stratagem following. Whilst we rid in the Harbour of Lisbon, there came aboard the Galley where I was, a Master of a Ship of Holland, who spake good English; this Man came from Brazil, for at that time the Portugueses freighted Holland Ships in most of their long Voyages, tho' they pretended to be in War one with another. This *Holland*er pitying my Case, with'd me privately aboard his Ship, promising to conceal and hide me that I should not be found; besides his Word, I took his Protestation and Vow to perform his Promise, if I could devise to escape out of the Galley. I verily believe the Man meant truly and honestly, for he confirm'd it by many Protestations at other Times and Days: Whereupon I was not idle to devise an Escape, and writ a Letter with my own Hand, directed to the rest of my Company, then Prisoners with me, declaring that my Captivity was so hard, that I could no longer endure it, but chose rather to end my Life by drowning my self, and with'd them to signify so much to my Friends in England: And one Night, when all Things were whilst and silent in the Galley, I intended secretly to escape, by stealing secretly into the Ladder of the Galley at the Tide of Ebb, and to convey my self into the Water without Noise, or moving either Hand or Foot, till I was brought clear off the Galley's View, and then to swim on board the Holland Ship, who lay just in the wake of the Galley, and in view of me: This I might easily have done without Suspicion, or Notice taken of me; but unluckily it fell out, that the day before I meant to put this Stratagem in Execution, the Galleys were commanded upon some Service to Sea, so that before our return to Lisbon the Holland Ship was gone a new Voyage, and I frustrat'd of my Hopes.

As commonly one Discourse begets another, so this Accident puts me in mind of some others that befall me, or that I was witness to, in the time of my Imprisonment, which I have been desir'd by my Friends to put in Writing, that there may remain a Remembrance of them after my Death: And what I insert, is neither as Project, or Stratagem, but only a plain Narration of what I have heard, and seen.

Riding in the Port of Lisbon, for there is no other place for the Galleys to reside upon all that Coast, there was discover'd to the General a Practice by an Italian, to draw the Forgado's or Galley-Slaves to take Arms and rise against the Soldiers, and possess themselves of the Galley and Men where he was, in order to recover their

Lieries, and dispose of the Galley as they pleas'd. This Treason being examin'd, the Italian confess'd it, and for his Reward, his two Arms were made fast to the Stern of two Gallies, and his two Legs to two others, and he quarter'd by rowing of the Gallies. If this Italian had had the Wit of an Italian, he would not thus have play'd the Fool, for he might well know where so many Men were to be trusted, as are in a Galley, it could not chuse but be reveal'd. The Slaves consisting of so many Nations, and the Treasures being so different, some Condemn'd for Life, others for Years more or less, and any one revealing it, was able to purchase his own Liberty and Reward. Or suppose they had prevail'd in their Design, the rest of the Gallies had been able to have master'd them; or if not, they had been destitute of Victuals to sustain them, not having so much as Water, for every second Day they used to fetch their Water from the Shore: Or tho' all those I have spoken of had been no Impediment to them, yet there had been no Place to have fled to, but some Port of France, no nearer them than 7 or 800 Miles.

The next Accident I take notice of, was in the same Port of Lisbon, and in the same Gallies, that happen'd to the Captain of the Vice-Admiral, a churlish and ill-natur'd Man, as my self had some occasion to say; for after my being taken Prisoner, I found him discourteous and uncivil towards me, for without Leave, Knowledge, or Warning, to my Page that serv'd me, nor Permission to see me, he sent him to the farthest part of all Spain, intending he should never return more into his Country; tho' after he fail'd of his Purpose, by means of an Englishman that liv'd thereabouts, whither he was sent, and understanding of this Accident of his coming thither, and that he had been my Servant, whose Name and Friends he well knew, tho' he was unacquainted with me; yet at my Request by Letter, when I heard of the Condition of the Man, most courteously he procur'd Means, and obtain'd Liberty and License for my Servant to return to me, and of his own accord furnish'd him with Money sufficient for his Journey, who arriv'd safely, and continu'd to do me Service during the time of my Imprisonment; whom after I preferr'd to be a Captain in the Service against the Spaniards.

This ill-condition'd Spanish Captain after tasted a just Reward for his ill Disposition; for as it is the use of Captains of Galleys to make Choice of some Moor or Turk to attend them in their Cabins, as People more neat and officious than Christians, and more obsequious and desirous to please than their own natural Countrymen: Out of those suppos'd Reasons the Captain made Choice of one of them, a Turk in Religion, and most consonant to his Humour, as he conceiv'd. It happen'd, that as this Moor exceeded in Diligence, so it increas'd his Credit and Trust with his Captain; who sending him one day ashore to wash his Linnen, (for some of the Moors exceed Women in that Employ) he carry'd with him 100 Crowns of his Captain's, which he had in Charge among other Monies and Plate; this Moor was entic'd by Company to play, where he made a short End of his 100 Crowns.

After some time, his Theft was discover'd to his Captain, who was so intrag'd, having no Means to recover his Loss, that he return'd him to his Oar and painful Bank in the Galley, where he remain'd in his former Slavery. But this was not Revenge sufficient to please the Captain, but he order'd him a cruel Punishment usually inflict'd upon Offenders, laying them flat over the Crosses, where he was unmercifully beaten with a Bull's Pistle, till he was made unable either to stand or sit, or to do the King's Work, nor was the Captain willing he should do him Service, till time had overcome his Passion; but then finding a great Want of his Attendance, he once more deliver'd him out of his Chains, and accepted of his Service as he was wont, and so he pass'd some time, as he was formerly wont to do.

But the Moor carried a canker'd Revengeful Heart against his Captain, which he crasily dissembled, not giving any kind of Suspicion, till he had found a Way and Opportunity to compass it, which was in this manner:

At his usual Hour in the Morning he repair'd to get up his Captain, but provided all Things for his Purpose; as first, a Cross-bar to keep down the Scuttle; and being below he provided himself with Powder, Fire, Match, and other Necessaries, which he plac'd in the outward Room, and suddenly rush'd into his Captain's Cabin with a naked Dagger in his Hand, to whom he gave eight Stabs, making account he had slain him, but hearing a Noise without, he left the Captain, and betook himself to a Gentleman, who cry'd out for help; which being done, he put the Match to the Train he had prepar'd, and set the Galley on fire, which he leap'd into and burnt himself to Ashes;

but by the help of the other Gallies that rid near her they suddenly boarded her, saved all her Slaves, and the Captain, who was not quite dead; but what else was in her was all consum'd. A rare Example of Revenge in a Heathen to a Christian: And tho' the Captain and he differed in Religion, yet not much in Condition and perverse Natures.

This Captain was after question'd as the Author of the Destruction of the King's Galley, by the ill Usage of this Slave, and had it not been for the General's sake, Don Francisco de Coloma, Brother to Don Carlo Coloma, who was after Ambassador into England in King James and King Charles's time, he had deeply smarted for it.

Misfortunes thus left not the Captain, but still attended him, as a thing fatal to his ill Nature; for after the Recovery of his Hurts, and Restitution of his Command, he was once more rifled and robbed by another Moor he entertain'd in the place of his other Servant: This Moor was entic'd by two Spanish Soldiers to commit the Theft, and after it was done he and the Soldiers pass'd over the River without interruption, and kept Company together till they arriv'd upon a spacious great Hill, where the Soldiers, finding a good opportunity for their purpose, slew the Moor, possessed the Money, and escaped themselves; so that they were never heard more of whilst I was in Spain.

I will leave speaking of the Gallies whilst I was in them: And now I was removed to the Castle of Lubon, where I remain'd Prisoner a good space; but I will end with the hap of two of the said Gallies, which my Eyes beheld, and my self was made an Actor of Revenge upon them.

In my first Book, and in the year 1591, you will find how I became Prisoner to the Spaniards, and what pass'd in the Fight betwixt six Gallies and the Ship I was taken in: It happened that about 11 years after, and as you shall likewise find in the same Book, that Sir Richard Lewson and my self had the surprising a Carrack and two Gallies, which we burnt in the Road of Zeximbra; which two Gallies were of the Numrer aforesaid that took me, and one of them the very same wherein I was kept Prisoner. This Act of Revenge to some Men would have been very pleasing.

In September, which is commonly the Month for the Gallies to make their retreat into Harbour for Winter, 1 and 8 of my Company were strongly guarded to the Castle of Lubon, there to lie imprison'd till a Course was taken for our Redemption out of England, with an Allowance of 7 d. 2 q. per Diem, for each Man for his Maintenance, a Proportion that did not equal 2 d. per Diem, according to the Rate of things in England. All the time of our Imprisonment we were close confin'd, only in the morning we relorted to the Castle-Walls, with a guard of Soldiers, to perform our necessary Occasions.

It happened on St. Andrew's Day following, being upon the Walls, at our usual hour, we beheld a great Galleon of the King's turning up the River, in her Fighting Sails, being sumptuously deck'd with Antients, Streamers and Pendants, with all other Ornaments, to shew her Bravery. She let fly all her Ordnance in a Triumphant manner for the taking Sir Richard Greenville in the Revenge at the Island of Flores, she being one of that Fleet, and the first Voyage she ever made.

I confess it was one of the greatest and sorrowfullest Sights that ever my Eyes beheld, to see the Cause the Spaniards had to boast, and no Remedy in me to revenge it but in my Tongue, but hop'd for future Comfort, and took such Englishmen as were in my Company to witness what I should say to them: I offered to give them one for ten, if I did live, to be at the taking and possessing of that Triumphant Galleon, that carry'd the Name of that Day, viz. St. Andrew. This pass'd but as an idle Desire I had to see my word come to effect.

In the year 1596, which was five years after, ensu'd our Cadiz Expedition, under the Command of the Earl of Essex and the Lord Admiral, where, amongst 58 Ships there destroyed and burnt, the said St. Andrew was, and she and another only saved from the Fire: But this was nothing to my Prognosticating Wager, for I could assume no more to my self than any other Man of that Fleet; but it happen'd, as I was Captain of the Repulse under my Lord of Essex, I was appointed in the Repulse's Boat and some others to save the Galleons that were run ashore, whole Names were these, St. Matthew, St. Andrew, St. Philip, and St. Thomas: The St. Matthew and St. Andrew we preserved, tho' it was with some Peril to us: The St. Philip and St. Thomas let themselves on fire, even as I was ready to enter the St. Philip: And I may boldly say, what I spake in the Castle of Lubon was now punctually performed; and for the Truth hereof, it is not long since one of the Englishmen liv'd, and till his Death would my Words to be true.

These

These four strange Accidents I have inserted in this Fifth Book, at the entreaty of Friends that have heard me often relate them; but what shall follow was upon the Impotency of some of my Children, who consider'd how young I was when I put my self into the Wars at Sea, how long I have since lived, and been acquainted with the Affairs of the World, which amounts to 56 years, and the often Dangers and Perils I have gone through by the Sword, by Famine, by Danger of the Sea, and other Casualties, as all Men are subject to that run such desperate Adventures. These Reasons prevail'd with me, that I yielded to their Request: And tho' in my first Book I have had occasion to speak of most of them, when I treated of the Voyages that then happened, and wherein there was occasion to mention them, yet for brevity sake I have added them to the latter part of this fifth Book, that they may suddenly be turned to, and found, referring to the Year and Book where you shall find them; and I will make my beginning in the Year 1585, when the Wars with Spain began, and wherein I was an Actor at the taking of the first Spanish Prize.

In that Voyage of 85. and in the Month of September, I was a Youth of 16 years of Age, and so enclin'd to see the World abroad, that without the knowledge of Father or Mother I put my self into an Action by Sea, where there was in Company of us two small Ships, fitted for Men of War, that authorized us by Commission to seize upon the Subjects of the King of Spain. We departed from the Isle of Wight, to which Place we return'd with our dear bought Prize: She was a Biscayner of 300 Tuns, well Mann'd, sufficiently furnish'd, and bravely defended: She came from Grand Bay in Newfoundland, which, at our first Arrival upon the Coast of Spain, we met with, and refusing to yield to us, we suddenly boarded, and by Consent of all our Men entred her; but the Waves of the Sea growing high, we were forced to ungrapple, and to leave our Men fighting on board her from 8 of the Clock in the evening till 8 in the morning. The manner how, and all other Circumstances, you will find in my second Book.

My next Escape was in the year 1587, and the first Voyage I went Captain to Sea, where, abiding longer than I expected, I was put to great Extremity of Victuals, and coming from the Canary Islands towards England, I fell with Ireland, and put into Dingle Bay, where the same morning I was taken with a most dangerous and tempestuous Storm, being upon a Lee Shoar, and the Weather as dark and foggy as tho' it were night. The Master found himself so nigh the Land, that within an hour we could not escape Shipwrack upon the devouring Cliffs, if God did not send us the sight of a little Rock called the Crow, half a mile from the Entrance of the Port of Dingle. Every Man was as careful to look for this Rock as for Life, for our Safety consisted in the sight of it; and by great Fortune it was spy'd by a Brazilian Indian that serv'd me; which Rock was a perfect Director to our Master, and in half an hour he harbour'd us in the Port of Dingle. This put me in remembrance of what I had formerly read, That there was nothing more pleasant to a Man than to see himself at the point of Death by Shipwrack at Sea, and suddenly to escape the Danger by arriving in a safe Harbour.

Here I receiv'd two Lives from God, the one was the escape of Shipwrack, as you have heard, the other of Famine; for when we were safely arriv'd we took view of our Bread, for other Victuals we had none, and we had divided to every Man his Proportion of Bread a fortnight before, and found but six Biscuit Cakes amongst our whole 50 Men and more.

Reckoning according to Years, which Course I mean to follow, my next shall be in 1589, when I serv'd as Vice-Admiral to the Earl of Cumberland to the Islands Azores; and coming to Flores, the most Westernmost Island of the seven, my Lord had Notice of certain Spanish Ships riding in the Road of Fayal, ready to take the first Wind for Spain, to the Southward of which Island my Lord had paid 8 days before. Upon this News my Lord hasten'd thither, both to be resolv'd of the Truth thereof, as also to make an Attempt upon those Ships, if he should see a possibility to prevail; but arriving two days after towards the evening, a Calm took him, and he was not able to reach within two Leagues of the Road where the Ships lay; whereupon there was a Council called, as in all Cases of Difficulty there is, wherein my self and Captain Lyster very earnestly propos'd, and by entreaty prevail'd, that we might have leave in that Calm to row to the Road to take a view of the Ships, that against morning we might see where to take Advantage by surprizing them.

As we drew near the Spaniards the dashing of our Oars was heard, which gave the Alarm to the Admiral, who only wore the Flag, and instantly let fly her Ordnance, without any certain Aim, more than the dashing of the Oars directed. Captain Laffer and I seeing our selves misled by the Shot, were so much encouraged, that, rather like mad than discreet Men, we ran aboard the Admiral, with an intent suddenly to surprize her; but finding so great an inequality in our Forces, (for the Ship carry'd 16 Pieces of Ordnance, was well Mann'd and provided) we were glad to put off our Boat and retire, repenting of our Bargain.

As we were rowing towards our Fleet again, which all this while beheld the Fight, and heard the Report of the Ships Ordnance, we met another Boat of greater Burthen sent to succour us; and after joyful Salutation, we resolv'd and concluded with both our Boats to return again, and give a second Assault upon the Admiral, telling them the State and Condition of the Ship, which did so encourage both the one and the other, that by Consent it was agreed, they should board her in the Quarter, and we in the Hawse, and we to cut her Cable and let her drive off to Sea. All this was successfully acted, and the Ship miraculously enjoy'd, notwithstanding the continual Shot from the Castle, to which the Ship was moored, and which Castle a Month after we took, and afforded us 45 Pieces of Ordnance, mounted and dismounted. I must not forget that as we entred the Admiral on the one side, the Spaniards leapt over-board on the other, except the Captain, John de Palma, and one more.

Now having got an unexpected Victory, rather by Valour than Reason, we row'd out the Ship with our two Boats, the Castle not sparing to fire at us, till we brought her without reach of the Shot, and then we agreed to take out all our Men, except one at Helm to govern her, and struck down her Sails, and we our selves return'd in our Boats once more into the Road, where we possessed our selves of the other seven Ships left behind, three of which were of reasonable good Value. For the other Particulars of this Voyage I refer to my first Book, where you shall find this Relation following.

Coming into the Island of St. Mary's, we found an unwelcome Entertainment, tho' indeed we meant the People no further hurt than to be supplied with Water from the Island; but it seems they were better prepar'd to forbid us than we expected; for at our offering to land with 200 and odd Men, two parts of them were suddenly hurt and slain, in which Encounter my Sword, which I placed naked, and the point upward, was shot asunder, and the Bullet pass'd through the Belly of my Doubler, which, if it had not been for my Sword, had done the like through my Belly.

My Lord being thus frustrated of all hope of Water and other Refreshment, was to seek the help of another Island to give him Relief; for now Drink began to be scarce, and it was likely it would put us to desperate want; and standing from hence to the Island of St. George, by Labour and Pains, and by the help of my swimming, my Ship drawing little Water to come near the Shore, I procur'd so much Water as kept us after from perishing.

Passing by the other side of the Island of St. George, we might see a goodly Spout, issuing out of the great Cliff, which gave my Lord a great Comfort to be supply'd with Drink by that Spout. Now began our People to be in despair of any help of Drink, either by Sea or Land, and by one Consent, in a tumultuous manner, cry'd out to return to England, which much troubled my Lord, who hop'd for a better fortunate Voyage before his return; and finding no Man so heartily true to him as my self, he bewail'd himself and his Case to me, how much it importuned him to try what Water that Spout would yield him, conjuring me, by the Love I bore him, that I would put my self into a small Boat that row'd with three Oars, one Man to steer, and my self to sit, and to venture ashore, to see the possibility that Spout would yield him for Water, promising that he and his Ship should stand within a mile of the Land, to take me up at my return: I perform'd it as honestly as he repos'd Trust in me, tho' by an Accident it had almost cost me my Life.

In my way, rowing towards the Shore, a great Whale was spy'd from my Lord's Ship, lying with her Back upon the Water asleep, as is the nature of Whales before Storms. This Whale was suppos'd to be a Rock, and dangerous for the Ship to bear farther into Land, and thereupon tack'd about to Sea, leaving me to the mercy of the Waves. I had no sooner set my Foot ashore, but it began to be dark with Night and Fog, to blow, rain, thunder and lighten, in the cruellest manner that I have seen: There was no way for me to escape Death, but to put my self to the mercy of the Sea; neither could I have any great hope of Help or Life, for the Ship was out of sight, and only appear'd pear'd a Light upon the Shrowds, to direct me: This sudden Alteration of Weather, gave me lost in the Opinion of my Lord and all his Company.

All this while the Ship lay upon the Lee; and seeing it was in vain to expect my return, the Master called with the Whistle to fill the Sails; but the Master Gunner being a Countryman of mine, and one that lov'd me well, (an approv'd Man of Skil and Art, by the Place he held as Master Gunner in the Pope's Admiral Galley in the victorious Battel of Lepanto, in which Battel he was sore wounded,) he humbly besought my Lord to forbear filling the Sails one Hour longer, which my Lord willingly granted, and in that interim of time, one of the Company in the Ship spy'd a Flash of Fire, and heard the Report of a Musket, for all our Powder was spent to that very last shot, by means whereof we were preserved, rather by Miracle, than any Humane Art: And to make it the more strange, we were no sooner risen from our Seats, and Ropes in our Hands to enter the Ship, but the Boat immediately sunk. And tho' I have pass'd many Dangers, as will appear by this Treatise, yet I account this the Greatest of all, and none of the rest to be paralleld with it.

What Miseries we endur'd in the latter end of the Voyage, you shall find in the First Book, where I have occasion to speak of our Return, and the Extremity we endur'd, which was more terrible than belien; Ship in the Eighteen years War; for laying aside the continual Expectation of Death by Shipwreck, and the daily Mortality of our Men, I will speak of our Famine, that exceeded all Men and Ships, I have known in the course of my Life: For 16 Days together we never tasted drop of Drink, either Beer, Wine, or Water, and tho' we had plenty of Beef and Pork of a Year's Salting, yet did we forbear eating it for making us the drier. Many drunk Salt Water, and those that did died suddenly, and the last word they usually spake was Drink, Drink, Drink: And I dare boldly say, that of 500 Men that were in that Ship seven Years before, at this day there is not a Man alive but my self, and one more.

The first Port we arriv'd at was the Vintry in Ireland, five Miles by Land from Dingle Church, that gave me succour in my former Voyage, as I have said; here we made shift to furnish my Lord with a Horse, and my self and some other Gentlemen follow'd a-foot: At our coming to the Town, we found my Lord in the House of the Sovereign, which is the Title of Mayor, telling his strange Adventures, and his dangerous Escape of famishing with want of Drink: The Sovereign told his Lordship, That about two Years before, a Gentleman came into their Port, in as great a want of Meat, as his Lordship was of Drink; and even as he was repeating my Name I enter'd the Door, who my Lord took by the Hand in their Prefence, and said, Lupus est in fabula: They beheld me with Admiration, and told my Lord, That it was my Fortune that brought him thither, and held themselves happy that it was in their Power to give him Relief, as they had done the like to me before.

In the Year 1590, my former Sickness you have heard I took in Ireland, kept me from Employment, or thought of the Sea; but now finding my Body as willing as my Mind to follow my begun Courses, this Year of 91, I attended my Lord of Cumberland once more, and had the Command of the Garland under him, wherein he went Admiral. I can say little of any Consequence in this Voyage, that concern'd my self, but my Imprisonment by six Spanish Gallies, near the Island of Burlings, which I have had cause to remember, by some Accidents you shall read in my succeeding Voyage.

My constancy has been such, tho' to my Cost, where I have made profession of Love, that no small unkindness could suddenly divert me, when my Affection has been grounded upon true Friendship, as may appear by my Faithfulness to the Lord I now speak of, for whom I have often ventur'd my Life, with little Fruit of his Favour: And I must confess it was some blemish to my Judgment; for notwithstanding many Admonitions, I was incredulous, still relying upon him, and follow'd him in this Voyage of 1593, in the Place I had formerly held, Captain of the Golden Lyon, a Ship of the Queen's, wherein he serv'd as Admiral. What I shall say here relates to some principal Accidents that concern my self in this Voyage, and for the rest, I refer you to my First Book, where I have shew'd, that my Lord being sever'd from his Fleet about the Burlings, met with twelve Hulks of the East Country, that after some Fight yielded, and deliver'd him a large quantity of Powder, which they carried for the King of Spain's Service; my Lord took the one half of those Ships, and stood off to Sea; the other half he left with me to examine and rommage. Towards

Night

Night my Lord cast off those of his company, whom I spy'd making towards me and their Comforts; which seem'd strange to me, that was left guarded but by a small Ship, and his Long Boat with 50 Men. I fear'd, as after I found true, that those Ships had a Resolution to board and take me; but to prevent their Design I leap'd into my Lord's Boat, on one side of the Ship, as they boarded her on the other; in which leap I receiv'd a hurt in my Leg, which to this Day, in 1641, I have found a great Decay to my whole Body.

In the said Book you will find, that from hence my Lord stood to the Island of Cuervo, where he was taken with a most melancholly Sickness, and in despair of Health or Life, unless he might be reliev'd with the Milk of a Cow; and I feeling in what condition he was, and valuing his Life as much as my own, I ventur'd my Person to get him a Cow from the Hands of the Enemy, either by fair or foul Means, and put my self into the Hands of the Portugueses, of the Island of Cuervo; first shewing a Flag of Truce, I told them the Cause of my coming to them, was out of Love, and that we had a great Fleet at Sea thereabouts; and lest any of them should do them Injury, I brought them a Protection from our General the Earl of Cumberland, to defend them if any Violence should be offer'd them, and so insinuated to them, as they afforded me courteous Entertainment; and because Night drew on, they desired me to stay all Night: I willingly embrac'd their offer, and by my Liberal Carriage, obtain'd what I required, and the Day following carried a Cow and other Refreshments, aboard, which gave plenty of Milk till my Lord's arrival in England. This Cow in all likelihood was the saving of my Lord's Life for the Present, which he acknowledged.

In the ensuing Year, 1595, I was Married, but before my Marriage I engaged my self by Promise to attend my Lord of Cumberland, as his Vice-Admiral to Sea. Himself went in the Malice Scourge, a brave Ship built by himself; his Vice-Admiral, Allister, a goodly Ship of the Merchants.

Now I began to have a Proof of what before I had just cause to suspect, viz. the inconstant Friendship of my Lord of Cumberland; for though I was drawn by his sweet Words and Promises to this Voyage; and that we had proceeded upon it so far as Plimouth, and from thence 8 or 9 Leagues to Sea, towards the Coast of

Spain, without imparting or making shew of any thing to me, he suddenly quitted the Voyage, and appointed another Captain for his own Ship, which did so much discontent me for the present that I abandoned the Company of his Ship at Sea, and betook my self to my own Adventure: This bred an alter Quarrel betwixt my Lord and me; and it was a long time before we were reconcil'd.

My Voyage produced no Danger of Famine or Sword, as other Voyages had done; the worst Enemy I found were Storms, which were such as forc'd me to cut my Main-mast by the Board, and compelled me to bear for England. After I had weather'd the Coast of Spain, the Storm held on so outrageous, and of such long continuance, that I was driven to Spain before the Sea, betwixt the Graia in Gallicia, and Blavet in Britany, which Port the Spaniards at that time possess'd. The Sea was so grown, and the Waves so mighty, that they rak'd me fore and aft, for want of a Main-mast to keep up the Ship; so that I expected for many Days together nothing but foundering in the Sea; but at last it pleas'd God to send me to Plimouth, where I found the People much distracted, upon the News brought them of the arrival of four Spanish Gallies, from Blavet to Penzance in Con. wall, which Village they took and sack'd. These four Gallies could not chuse but pass me that Night in a Calm unken. Sir Francis Drake was now at Plimouth, ready bound with his Fleet to the West Indies, in which Voyage he died: Upon the News of these Gallies, he instantly put to Sea, and my self with him; and arriving at Penzance, we found the Spaniards were gone, and the poor Spoil not worth their labour they found in the Town.

The next offensive Voyage by us, was to Cadiz, in 96. under the Command of the Earl of Essex, and my Lord Admiral, whereof I had formerly occasion to say something, when I made mention of burning of 58 sail of Ships, and the taking the St. Andrew: The principal and dangeroudest Thing that happen'd to me in that Voyage, was the Accident following.

My Lord of Essex having made way through the Town, at length came to the spacious Market-Place, where he found the greatest and sharpest Resistance from the Houses thereabouts, that sorely flank'd him, which way soever he pass'd or look'd, and one House more than the rest seem'd most dangerous; whereupon I desir'd my Lord to spare me 50 old Soldiers of the Low.

Low Countries, to give an Assault upon that Houſe, which his Lordſhip granted, and I performed, and took it. In that conflict I was ſhot with a Muſket-bullet through my Scarf, and Breeches; and the Handle and Pummel of my Sword ſhot from my ſide, without any further hurt: As I ſtoop'd for my Handle and Pummel of my Sword, Sir John Winkfield was next to me a Horſe back, who had received a Hurt in his Thigh a little before; and as he was aſking me how I did, (for it ſeems he fear'd I was forely wounded by my ſtooping) he was ſhot with a Bullet in the Head, and ſuddenly fell down dead; and theſe were the laſt words that ever he ſpoke. What more concerns this Voyage in general, you will find in the firſt Book: But by the way, this I note, that as the Sword is the Death of many a Man; ſo it hath been twice the Preſerver of my Life, the one at the Iſland of St. Mary's in 89. the other now at Cadiz in 1596.

The Iſland Expedition ſucceeded this to Cadiz, in 1597. equal with it both in greatness, goodneſs, and the Perſon of the Man that Commanded it: In this Expedition I was Captain of the Rainbow of the Queen's, which Ship had a ſpecial Cauſe to be remember'd, by meeting the Indies Fleet in the manner following.

My Lord of Effex had Intelligence from the Iſland of Graciosa, where he had ſome Men alhoſe, of certain Ships deſcry'd off to Sea: The Night drawing on, his Lordſhip divided his Fleet into three Squadrons; and my ſelf being the next Ship to him, he commanded me to ſtand away South that Night, and if I ſpy'd any Ships, to make Signs, with ſhooting my Ordnance, and making falſe Fires, promiſing to ſend 12 Ships after me. I inſtantly departed as I was directed, not doubting but the 12 Ships would follow me. It blew little Wind, and within leſs than four Hours, about 12 a Clock in the Night, I fell in company of a Fleet conſiſting of 25 Sail, whereupon I put my ſelf into my Boat, the Calm continuing, reſolving, though it were with my apparent Peril, to diſcover what Ships they were, before I would preſume to make Signs, as I was directed; approaching near the Fleet, I hail'd them in Spaniſh, who answer'd me in the ſame Language; and by their Courſe, I knew them to be the Indies Fleet; and having as much as I deſired for the preſent, I returned on board the Rainbow, and after performed ſo much as I was commanded, in ſhooting of my Ordnance, and making falſe Fires: I accompanied the Fleet that Night and the next Day, till I brought them into the Road of Angra, in the Iſland of Tercera; and what alter beſide me and them, I refer to my firſt Book: All the hurt that happened me in this deſperate Attempt of mine, beſides the hazard of ſhot from the Caſtles and Fleet, my Ship being ſhot through 15 times, was foul Words and railing Language, with ſome Shot from the Spaniards when I firſt hail'd them in my Boat.

In our return this Voyage, I was in more Peril, Hazard and Danger, than any other Ship of our Fleet, for the Rainbow is known to be the moſt rowling and labourſome Ship in England, eſpecially in the Condition I was in, having ſpent my Fore-maſt in a mighty Storm and mountainous Seas, where we hourly expected Death.

My next Voyage, of all others, was moſt Fortunate to me, wherein the Carrack was taken, and the beſt Service perform'd by ſo few Ships, that happened in all the Queen's time; and yet it gives the leaſt Occaſion to ſpeak of, of many others wherein I was an Actor, ſave only that I muſt aſſume to my ſelf to be the chief Perſuader of the Attempt upon her. The Reſolution taken by conſent of Council, how to aſſail her, was in this manner, That Sir Richard Lowſon and I ſhould Anchor in the Road of Zeſimbra, near the Carrack and their other Forces, the reſt of our Ships to ply up and down, and not to Anchor; Sir Richard, according to his Directions, made his firſt Entrance into the Road, but by the Negligence of his Maſter, much to his diſlike, he failed in Anchoring, and the Current taking him on the Bow, carry'd him out of the Road; ſo that it was the next Day before he could recover in again: My ſelf having the Rear, follow'd my Admiral according to former Order, till I had brought one broad ſide againſt the Galleys, and my other againſt the Carrack and Caſtle, which done I let fall my Anchor; and for what follow'd upon it, I refer you to my firſt Book.

This Voyage ending, the next was the laſt undertaken by the Queen, for not long after ſhe died, and this was the laſt Voyage againſt Spain; for by her Death the War ceaſ'd, and as I was a Soldier and Youth at the beginning thereof, ſo I was General of this laſt Fleet; and for the Particulars of this Voyage, more than theſe few following, I will refer you to the firſt Book aforeſaid.

I departed England the last of August 1601. and arriv'd at the Rock the 26th of September, where a Light was elpy'd by my Ship in the Night, which after we found to be a Fleet of 24 Galeons, which I had intelligence of the day before by the Caraval I sent into the Shore to discover. I drew so nigh those Ships, that I could not escape them if they had taken me to be an Enemy; and finding my self thus intangled, I Commanded a Spaniard who then serv'd me, and held a Dagger at his Heart, upon his Life to speak as I directed him, which was as follows: To call to them with a loud voice, that there was a strange Ship fallen amongst their Fleet, and that he knew not what she was; I conceiv'd that having warning from me of it, of all others she could not suspect I was she; and in the mean time, in a secret manner I tack'd about, and quitted my self of them, without further suspicion; but the Adventure, (for only she and the Whelp was left with me) could not carry her self so dissemblingly, but she was in danger of being taken, and escap'd with the loss of some Men.

The next Morning they chav'd the Adventure and Whelp, for I was gotten a little way to Head of them; Three of the best Sailing Ships of the Spaniards drew near the Whelp, and perceiving that unless I acted some desperate thing she would be taken; I struck my Top-sail, tho' it was much against the Will of my Master and Company, crying out, that I would lose my self and Ship; I stood with the Whelp and Adventure, and caus'd them to stand their course to Sea, whilst I staid for the Three Spanish Ships, with whom I would make tryal of their Force, and hop'd to make them have little Lift to pursue them. The Spanish Admiral was a Stern with his whole Fleet, who perceiving my working, and the little Respect I had to his Three Ships aloft, tack'd in with the Shore, and shot off a Warning-piece for his Fleet and the Three Ships to follow him.

Being thus luckily acquitted from the Spanish Fleet, wherein Don Diego de Bobadilla was General, I return'd to the South Cape, with the Whelp only; for I had lost company of the Adventure Two Nights before; and arriving there the One and twentieth of October, I gave chase to a Galeon of the Fleet of Ciriago, who recover'd under the Castle of Cape Sagre, before I could fetch her up; But tho' I knew the force of the Castle, by sundry Shot I had formerly receiv'd from it, and was acquainted with the Excellency of the Gunner, who was an Englishman of my acquaintance, in the fight of their General Ciriago and his Squadron, I attempted, and had taken her, had it not been for the Cowardliness of the Helms-man, that heard off as I was ready to board her; the Fight was not long, but dangerous, with the loss of 12 Men on my side, and in no less danger of sinking; who was to beaten from the Castle, that it was a spectacle to behold my Ship, for she might be crept through from Side to Side. For all other circumstances I refer to my First Book, and so I take my leave of this English Reign.

This Voyage ended, and I return'd for England; at Christmas after, there was a Consultation by the Lords of her Majesty's Council, to prepare Two Fleets, the one for the Spring, the other to second the first in June following; Sir Richard Lewson to Command the former, and my self the latter, in some Action against Spain; but tho' this was a pretence to satisfy the World, yet the Lords had another intent in it; for at that time they knew the Queen being sick, there was much danger of her death, because of her Years, which made them the more willing to hasten this Fleet to Sea, to have it in a readiness to defend the Kingdom, if the Queen's Death should happen.

And tho' Sir Richard Lewson was nominated General of this Fleet, he was belov'd by the Lords, fearing his Ambition; yet they continu'd him in his Place and Command: And whereas I was appointed to second him in a latter Fleet, yet the Lords by importunity persuaded me, to accompany him as Vice-Admiral in this Voyage, they having a greater Trust and Confidence in me than in him; and therefore I was order'd to Command the Meredonour, a better Ship than that Sir Richard serv'd in.

All this was done out of Policy, and few of the Lords, but such as were intimate Friends to the King knew of it; for their intention was, if the Queen dy'd, and King James had found any Opposition, that my Lord Thomas Howard, afterwards Earl of Suffolk, should take charge of this Fleet, and come aboard me, and I to go into Sir Richard's Ship, and Sir Richard's Authority to cease. But God be thanked, there was no cause for this wise Forecast of the Lords, for his Majesty repaired peaceably to London, and we return'd safely to Chatham, after we had seen the King's Entertainment by his well affected Subjects.

Two Years after, and in the Year 1604. I was nominated Admiral of the Narrow Sea, without suit or seeking of mine: And the first Service I was appointed to, was the Transportation of the Constable of Castile, who was to repair hither, to conclude a Peace betwixt the Two Crowns, that had been 18 Years at variance. What hapen'd in that Employment, as also in the 12 Years after, that I serv'd as Admiral, I refer you to my Second Book throughout; only I must say, That as in former Employments, I went not without danger of Life by Enemies, by the peril of Sea, and Famine, as I have formerly repeated.

In this Employment I was to fear neither Foe nor Famine, the King having a general Peace with all Princes and Nations, and my Employment being not so far from home, but that in few days I might be supplied with Victuals; tho' I account another Danger greater than the rest, which consisted in Accidents of the Sea, and Extremity of Storms and foul Weather, in the South and straitest part of England, where commonly I was to lye at Anchor; and upon any occasion being put from my Anchors, the narrowness of the Seas betwixt Land and Land, would put me into imminent danger of Shipwreck and Life: The Shoals and Sands were no less dangerous, considering, that very often we were to be attended with Fogs and Mists; besides that we were sometimes put to double a Lee-Shore, which if we failed of, we presently perished.

But God so provided for me, that I escap'd all these hazards, and at last found Malice had a greater Power and Force against me, than by Sea I found, or otherwise I deserved: For when I thought to have left my painful Labours at Sea, and to have enjoy'd Tranquillity of Peace on Land, Envy, unluckily and unlook'd for, seized upon my Innocency; for being thought a bosom Friend to a Nobleman I much Honour'd, who at that time began to be aim'd at, and was afterwards born down by a Court-Faction, tho' I was one of the meanest in number, and unworthy to have knowledge taken of me, as a Man of no Eminency; yet considering how my Estate then flood by my Engagements, and otherwise I found Fortune more averfed to me than most of the others had felt by malicious Practices.

The Sixth Book.

Which Treats of a Fishery to be set up on the Coast of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with the Benefit that will Accrue by it to all His Majesty's Three Kingdoms : With many other Things concerning Fish, Fishing, and Matters of that Nature.

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

THE Dedication of Books is both Ancient, Usual, and Useful, tho' in these later Times they are turn'd into Apologies, expressing the Unworthiness of the Author, and the Insufficiency of the Matter, Modesty carrying with it so sham-faced a Countenance against the Law of History; for Cicero saith, That Eloquence is not so much to be respected in Writing, as not to publish Fallhoods, and dissimble Truths.

For me to follow the Rules of Apology, will betoken a great Weakness and Imbecility, and look as if I had obtain'd Victory over an Art I am ignorant in; for Eloquence belongs to Scholars, who by their witty Pleading, will drive every Circumstance to a Consequence.

Silence were better in my Case than Speech, were it not I am to speak of Things I know, of Things needful and necessary both for Your Sacred Majesty, and Your whole Commonwealth.

I need not reiterate what the ensuing Narration reports; I only and humbly crave Leave of Your Majesty, That my Defects may not blemish the Worthiness of the Work now in hand, no more than a homely Painter that takes upon him to draw a fair Face: The Benefit of my Labour will be to Your Majesty an Immortal Honour and Glory, to Your Kingdoms an Everlasting Praise and Profit, and to Your faithful Subjects an Essential Proof of Happiness.

All in One must Applaud Your Sacred Majesty for Achieving this Work, which never any of Your famous Progenitors had in Agitation; so that we may truly judge, That from the Beginning (by God's Providence) it was reserv'd for King CHARLES to make Your Name, Your Fame, Your Fortune, and all other Blessings, Equal with Your Progenitors Charles's, and especially Charlemain, from whom Your Majesty is Lincally descended: And as that Charles worthily deserv'd the Title of Great, so I doubt not but the same God will pour the same Greatness and Happiness upon Your Majesty, that our Hemisphere may Enjoy as great a Renown by You, as other Lands have done by those from whom You are descended.

If Your Majesty would have been sway'd by pretended Policy of State, by Solicitation, by Affection, or other Enticements, and left the Common Utility of Your Subjects, this Work had lain still like a Child in his Swaddling-Clouts, without Care of Nursing it; but Your Majesty's Virtue appears herein, and we, Your Loyal Subjects, cannot Honour You enough for it. And if we should speak all the Truth of Your Sacred Majesty, it were to say far more than we do, of Your most Excellent Virtue and Goodness: But for want of Parts otherwise to express me, my Office shall be, to Pray for Your Majesty's Long Life, for Your Victorious Achievements, the Confusion of Your Enemies, and that all Men's Hearts may be as sensible of Your Majesty's Good, as the Meanest of Your Subjects.

To

To all GENTLEMEN, and others, that have Read my former Discourse concerning the

I Have annex'd this Relation of Fishing to my former Treatises of the SEA, which you have done me the Honour to Peruse; I confess it had been more proper to have inserted it at the beginning of these Books, than at the latter end, for these Reasons: The Dedication would have requir'd it, as being humbly Presented to His Majesty's Protection; the Subject would have challeng'd it, as a Ground and Foundation of the Increase of Ships, Navigation, and Traffick; England would have stood upon it in Right, as a Work of greatest Consequence, Goodness, and Renown, due only to her.

But being thus in a Consultation and Dilemma with my self what to do, I consider'd and concluded, That the First View of a Book either gave Delight, or Disgust, to the Judicious Reader; and if I should have presented you with this Rude and Laborious Fishing as the First Dish of my Banquet, it would have dishearten'd your farther Proceedings; and therefore I chose rather to please your Pallate and Taste with strange Occurrences and Accidents at Sea, as most delicate Meats to keep you from Surfeiting.

There are Two Parts to be plaid in the Scope of my Discourse; the one by you, which is the Speculative Part, out of Curiosity to inform your selves of the Secrets and Practice of the Sea, not intending to make Profission or Profit by it, but like to a Student in Alchimy, who covets to know the Depth of the Art, but not to spend a Penny in the Practice, or Design to compass it.

The Second Part is only proper to those that mean to make themselves Apprentices to the Sea and the Art of Navigation, to enlighten their future Knowledge and Understanding: But this is not attain'd to by Ease, or Sloth, but by Practice and Pains; not by Imagining and Reading, but by Peril, Travel, and Toil; not by Youth and Carelesness, but by Years and Stayedness: For tho' Alexander the Great was but 20 Years of Age when he began his Conquest, yet none of his Captains were under 60; and tho' Demosthenes was the most famous of all Philosophers for Eloquence, yet at first he was but a Scholar, and taught by Plato.

There are many Things contain'd in the former several Books, which cannot be accounted within your Element; I commend therefore such Things to your idle Hours, as give Delight and Recreation to your Wastful and Consuming Time, when Leisure admits no moment of Matter to think on, like the Sport of young Whelps, that are to be us'd for Pleasure, when one has nothing else to do, or for want of other Company.

The reading of these Discourses is not worthy the Name of Study, for they handle no serious Thing, either of History or Learning, but are to be esteem'd for Curiosity-sake; as Romulus did Carvers of Stone, or Caius Cæsar Goldsmiths, or Vespasian Painters.

Your Wisdom knows better how to apply your selves to the Reading, and making Choice and Use of what is comprehended in the former Discourses, than I can either Advise, or Instruct: And (for a Farewell) I wish you as much Happiness as one Friend can do to another; thus is, Content to your Mind, Honour to your Deserts, Wealth to your Will, and Blessing from GOD. All Happiness is comprehended in these few Words, and they are made the Subjects for the Eloquence of Tongues to Amplify upon, for it is Matter that makes a good Orator, tho' I confess Form adds somewhat to it.

A Disco-

*A Discovery of the HOLLANDERS Trades, and their Circumventing us therein; and the Means how to reduce the Fishing into our Hands, (as of Right due to us :)
With the Honour and Security that will redound to His Majesty, and all his Subjects.*

NO Man is so void of Reason, as not to know, That he is born for the Service of God, his Prince, and Country; God requires it for our own Good; a Prince, out of Duty deriv'd from the Commandment of God; and our Country, by the Law of Nature, next to our Parents; God directs us by his written Word how to serve him; a Prince, by his Human Laws, how to serve and obey him; and our Country, by Instinct of Nature, how to serve and reverence her. The City of Paris had a Saying of old, One God, one King, one Faith, and one Law. These four Words are effectual, and as much as can be comprehended in our Service to God, Prince, and Country. Cicero saith, 'That take away the Piety towards God, and you take away all Conjunction of Humane Society.'

As most Men differ in Feature of Face, in Diet, Condition, and Education; yet all good Men agree in an Unity of the Service of God, Prince, and Country, in their several Degrees and Qualities: The Divine, with Prayer; the Soldier, with his Arms; wife Men, with Counsel; and rich Men, with Treasure.

These being done willingly, makes a sweet Harmony betwixt King and Commonwealth; for that Prince is happy that has young Men to take Pains, and old Men to Counsel; the one supports the other in convenient time, like Fruit, that all comes not together, nor ends together, some Teaching, and others Obeying.

The next Consideration is, how to make the People subsist in the Service of God, Prince, and Country; for there must be a Rational Means to work by, seeing Monarchy cannot be upheld and supported without People employ'd, and set to work in their several Labours: And therefore considering God has created Man for the Service of him, his Prince, and Country, every one is bound to apply himself to the Service of them, and to prefer them before all private Respects. Let me follow that Maxim, as the Meanest of many Thousands of other Subjects, and offer my Mite, as the First Fruit of my Harvest; not like the Divine, the Soldier, the wife or the rich Man I speak of, but with my poor Talent God has endu'd me with, which is, my Experience, that could not have been compens'd, if God had not given me a longer Life than many others; if with that Life he had not marvelously defended me from Dangers of Enemy, the Sword, Water, and many other Casualties incident to Mankind.

If with those Days and Years he had not given me a Desire and Means to Observe, Confer, and be Inquisitive, I had not been able to have presented this my Desire to serve my King and Country, but should have gone as naked out of the World as I came into it.

My meaning is, Not to leave our fruitful Soil untill'd, or Seas unfrequented, our Islands unpeopled, or seek remote or strange Countries disinhabited, and uncivil Indians untam'd, where nothing appears to us but Earth, Wood, and Water, at our first Arrival, for all other Hopes must depend on our Labours and costly Expences, on the Adventure of the Sea, on the Honesty of Undertakers; and all these at last produce nothing but Tobacco, a new invented needles Weed, as too much Use and Custom makes it apparent.

In what I propound, I will not direct you to the Elegance of Boots to Perfwade, to the inventing Wits to Entice, to the affecting Traveller to Encourage, nor to any Man that with fair Words may Abuse you; you shall know as much as I can say, in casting a Line and Hook into the Sea, His Majesty doth instantly challenge his own, and by Example of one Line and Net, you may conjecture by Multiplication the Profit that will arise by the Work. You shall be made to know, That tho' you be born in an Island seated in the Ocean, frequented with invisible Fish, swimming from one Shore to the other, yet your Experience has not taught you the Benefits and Blessings arising from that Fish.

I doubt not but to give you that Light therein, that you shall confess your selves blinded, and be willing to blow from you the foul Mist that has been an Impediment to your Sight; you shall be awaken'd from your drouse Sleep, and rouse your selves to further this best Business that was ever presented to England, or King thereof: Nay, I will be bold to say, to any State in the World.

I will not except the Discovery of the West-Indies by Columbus; an Act of greatest Renown, of greatest Profit, and that has been of greatest Consequence to the Spanish Nation.

You will wonder, being born a Subject of England, and casting your Eyes upon the gainful Soil of the Land, that you never conceiv'd what the Sea afforded; I confess it were impossible for you to live in that Ignorance, if it did not appear by the ensuing Discourse, how you, your Country, and especially the Princes of these Realms, have been abused, and the Profit thereof conceal'd.

To make my Comparison good betwixt the Trade of the West-Indies and our Fishing, which of them yields most Honour to their King, and most Profit to their Country, most Danger and most Labour to the Subjects, I refer to my collected Reasons.

If Men consider the divine Work of God, and the end of his working, it is marvellous to behold, that America, being a Continent, and equal to all the rest of the World in bigness, should be conceal'd, from the Creation till 1400 odd Years after the Birth of Christ, and not so much as thought of, tho' some Philosophers seem'd to rove at it.

And when it pleas'd his Divine Majesty to call that Blessing upon Europe, if we consider the time he did it, and the Occasion why he did it, it will put us into Admiration, and Acknowledgement of the Power of Christ, against the Opinion of Jews and Turks; For could he shew himself a more just and loving God, than in pouring upon Christendom such a Blessing of Wealth, at the time it was likely to be swallow'd up by barbarous Turks and Moors, who were only withstood by the Wealth of the Indies?

We may hope the same God has the same Happiness in store for this Kingdom, to add immortal Glory to His Majesty's Goodness; or else it was impossible, in humane Reason, that our loving Neighbours, the industrious Hollanders, should for so many years enjoy this Fishing, who, to their everlasting Honour and Praise, have encreased thereby more Vessels for the Sea, than all Europe besides can multer.

The first Discovery of the Indies gave no great Hope of Profit, till after a long, chargeable, and painful Navigation, it was brought to perfection.

The Fishing upon His Majesty's Coast of England, Scotland and Ireland, needs no Discovery; the Experience of our Neighbours having found it out, and practis'd it, since the Year 1307. to their unmeasurable Wealth, and our Shame: And for the Honour of him that first found out the Secret of pickling of Herrings, which was one William Beckolow by name, there was a famous Tomb in the Island of Beverlute erected, yet to be seen, where he was buried.

The Indies send forth more Gold, Silver, and other Merchandize, than all the European Trades besides.

The Fishing produces more Riches by its Trade, than the others do, as I will make appear when I come to compute the one with the other.

The Wealth of the Indies is not brought from thence without great Expence and Hazard, considering the Casualties of the Sea, and the Fear of Enemies to intercept it.

The Fishing is still in view of us and our Shores; our Vessels daily expected into our Harbours, and others ready to ease them of their Burthen, and to transport it into other Countries, not far remote, where they are in no Danger of Hurricanes, Enemies, or other Perils.

The Insurance in going and coming from the Indies may be valued at a great rate, which we shall have in our Fishing, there being no Fear or Hazard in it.

The Wealth of the Indies being surpris'd by an Enemy, is more prejudicial to the King of Spain than four times that Wealth would profit him, his Enemy being made strong and rich, and he weakened and impoverished by it.

No such Accident can prejudice us; for in the miscarrying of our Fishermen, we shall only lose so many Barks, Salt, and Nets, and no Enemy enrich'd or fortify'd by it.

Inhabiting in the Indies causes a Scarcity of natural Spaniards, whereby many times the King's Affairs fall and perish. The Fishing employs all our loose People, which abound in this Kingdom, and makes them capable to serve their Prince and Country.

The Indies set to work four times more Ships than all the rest of the Dominions of Spain, and add more Strength to them by Sea.

The

The Fishing will maintain 20 Vessels to one of theirs; and England furnish them with most of the Materials belonging to them; whereas in Spain they are brought, in time of War, with great Peril and Danger of the Enemy.

The Indies are far remote from Spain to be supply'd, if there happen Changes in any Part thereof; which other Nations may take Notice and Advantage of.

The Fishing is one Body, govern'd by a Company, that no Enemy can annoy: And if Questions arise betwixt Parties and Parties, they are speedily to be determin'd without Charge or Detriment to either; whereas the others have their Appeals to their Courts of Justice in Spain from the Indies.

The chief Commodity of the Indies is Bullion, Hides, Cochineal, &c. Our only Fish countervails the Value of them all; and tho' for the present it affords no Bullion in Specie, yet it draws the Money coin'd out of that Bullion.

The Ships that trade to the Indies are great in Burthen, and make but one Return or Voyage in a year; and when they are carcen'd, the Water in Spain not rising enough to ground them, it is done with far greater Labour and Charge than ours, that are brought on Ground one Tide, and haul'd off another, ready for a new Voyage, and never wanting Freight.

But what I have observ'd is not to be effected with Words, but Works, not with Talking, but Doing and Acting; for betwixt Words and Deeds there is great difference; Words without Effect are like Water that drowns People, and does it self no Good.

The Property of a Merchant is to have Money in his Purse, and Credit upon the Exchange to advance his Trade.

All Men in this Work must become Merchants, not only for themselves, but for their Prince and Country; all are to reap Profit by it, none Pain or Sorrow, but the slothful, idle and base People, who are like Drones amongst Bees; for the Purchase of Sloth is Dispraise.

There are three Things necessary in every Work, the Man that works, the Instrument to work with, and the Matter. There is nothing requir'd of the Men in our Work but Labour and Pains; the Instruments to work with are Ships of several kinds to be made and erected; and the Matter to set on the Work is Money: All these concurring in one, will make it a Work of Fame, Renown, Strength, Riches, and and all the Good that God can bestow on a Nation and People. But if Sluggishness and Carelessness, or other Mistrust of return of Gain, prevail, it being out of the Element and Breeding of Gentlemen, and others that apply themselves to the Profit of the Land and not the Sea, and that they neglect the Offer and Proposition following, we are worthy to be chastened with Penury and Want, and unworthy to enjoy the Blessing of God, which he has poured on this Land above all others he has been pleas'd to create.

What better light can we have for this Work, than from our nearest and intimatest Friends the Hollanders? who, by their long Travels, their excessive Pains, their ingenious Inventions, their incomparable Industry and provident Care, have exceeded all other Nations in their Adventures and Commerce, and made all the World familiar with them in Traffick; whereby we may justly attribute to them what the Chinese assum'd to themselves, That only they have two Eyes, the Europeans but one, and all the rest of the World none. How can this better appear than out of their Labours, and our Fish only?

They have encreas'd the Number of Vessels; they have supply'd the World with Food, which otherwise would have found a Scarcity; they have advanc'd Trade so abundantly, that the Wealth of Subjects and the Customs of Princes have found the Benefit of it; and lastly, they have thus provided for themselves, and all People of all sorts, tho' they be impotent and lame, that want Employment, or that are forc'd to seek work for their Maintenance.

And because their Quantity of Fish is not to be vented in their own Provinces, but to be dispers'd in all Parts of Europe, I will give you an Account of it, as it has been carefully observ'd and taken out of the Custom-Books beyond the Seas.

The Quantity of Fish vented in other Countries.

In Four Towns within the Sound, viz. Koningsberg, Melvin, Sretin, and Danzick, there is vented in a year betwixt 30 and 40000 Lasts of Herrings, which will amount to more than 620000 l. and we none.

The Hollanders send into Russia above 1500 Lasts of Herrings, sold at 27000 l. and we not above 30 or 40 Lasts.

above 6000 Lafts, fold at 100000 l. and we none.

Cleveland, Juliers, up the River Rhine, Frankfort, Cologne, and over all Germany, in Fish and Herrings, near 22000 Lafts, amounting to 440000 l. and we none.

Glderland, Artois, Haynault, Brabant, Flanders, and the Arch Duke's Countries, 8 or 9000 Lafts, fold at 18 l. the Lafts, amounts to 160000 l. and we none.

At Roan in Normandy, 500 Lafts of Herrings, fold at 10000 l. and we not 100 Laft, there commonly fold for 20, and sometimes 30 l. a Laft.

Besides what they spend in Holland, and sell there to other Nations, the value of many Hundred thousand Pounds.

Now having perfected the Valuation of the Hollanders Fish, caught on our Seas, and vented into Foreign Countries, our Shame will manifestly appear, that of so many thousand Lafts of Fish, and so many Hundred thousand Pounds in Money made by them, we cannot give account of 150 Lafts taken and vented by us.

The Hollanders are no less to be commended in the Benefit they make of the Return of their Fish; for what Commodity soever any Country yields, in lieu thereof, they Transport in their own Vessels into Holland, where they have a continual Staple of all Commodities brought out of the South, from thence sent into the North, and the East Countries; the like they do from out of the South into the North, their Ships continually going and bringing Inestimable Profit, like a Weavers Shuttle, he casts from one hand to another, ever in action, till his Gain appear in the Cloth he makes. And if we compare Holland's Forecast with ours, the Imputation of Sloth and Negligence will lie heaviest upon us, like him that beats the Bush for others to catch the Birds: For Russia, with our Adventure, Charge and Shipwreck, was first known to us, that for many years together, afforded great Profit, by the usual Trade of 8 or 10 Ships yearly.

About 20 Years past, the Hollanders encroach'd upon us with Two Ships, and in continuance of time they brought us from 10 to 2 or 3, and themselves to 60 Vessels or more, and lately to 100. the chiefest Gain arising out of our Fish, and other English Commodities they fetch from us.

Newfoundland, being an ancient Patri-mony of England, and we the first Discoverers thereof immediately after the finding out of the West-Indies by Columbus, has been since a great enriching to the Western parts, with the Fish there yearly taken; and now the Hollanders of late have found the way thither, and sent in the Year 1629. and ever since, 12 or 14 great Ships, to buy the Fish taken by his Majesty's Subjects; whereby his Majesty does not only lose his Custom in going out, if it be brought for England, but in the Return of that Commodity, which might amount to 14 or 15000 l. if his Highness's Subjects had the Carriage of it.

To say no more of the Hollanders greatest Trade with England; there are Three Fishes of little Note, and not regarded by us, which they make Gain of themselves: The First is Lobsters, the greatest part whereof that serves London, at the time of the Year, they bring from the furthest Northern Part of England; which is never practis'd by the English. The Second is, the great quantity of Oysters yearly transported by them into Holland, which causeth the decrease and dearth of Oysters among us. The Third is Lampreys, out of the River of Thames, which they use for Bait for Codd in the North Seas; and this is the cause of the scarcity and dearth of this Fish in London.

The Hollanders Navigation into the Streights.

But the greatest Navigation of theirs, and of most Importance to their State, for Maintenance of Ships of Burthen and Strength, is into the Streights, from the Port of Marseilles, along the Coast as far as Venice. In this Trade I will compute but 60 Ships of 200 Tuns Burthen each, having above as many more trading into Spain, Portugal, and the South part of France, and all with our English Fish, taken by his Majesty's Subjects; as namely Pilchards caught in England and Ireland, Baccaloos or Poor John in Newfoundland, and Red Herring taken and made at Yarmouth.

The Hollanders are almost absolutely Masters of these Trades; what by combination made with the Merchants that deal in that kind of Fish, and what through the cheapness of the Freight in their Vessels; which makes them sell the cheaper.

During these 18 Years last past, they have so increas'd their Navigation, whereas before they had not above 2 Ships to 5 of ours within the Streights, within the said 18 Years they are able to shew ten of theirs to one of ours, and merely by the Trade of Fish; for true it is, there is no Commodity in the World of so great Bulk and small Value, or that can set so many Ships of Burthen to work.

As for example, A mean Man may freight his Ship of 250 Tuns with Fish, that will not cost above 1600 l. that 40 Merchants cannot do. of better and richer Commodities; I speak not upon surmise, but what is approv'd by divers Merchants, but especially one of good Account, whose Name I must conceal, unless Authoriz'd by him to Publish it, who computed 60 Ships of this sort of Fish aforesaid; of the which there is not return'd one Penny Profit into England, where they gather the sweet Dew of their Food.

The principal work I aim at, is how to undertake the Hollanders with our own weapons, and how to equal them with Pinks, Busses, and other Vessels, till we be made Partners with them in their Fishing; not by Hostility or uncivil Usage, nor to deprive them by His Majesty's Prerogative, which the Law of Nations allows us; or out of Envy to their Labours; or to revenge Discourtesies; only we will seek to do what Nature dictates (viz.) to enjoy and make use of our own, by the Countenance of our Blessed King, that in Justice gives all People their Right and Due.

Holland is enrich'd by the 60 Ships aforesaid, which I have computed, by the Carriage of Red Herrings, as I will after demonstrate, 621750 l. in their Return out of the Streights.

The Hollanders Fishing in their Pinks and Busses, That the English may not only equal, but out-do them in it; and the great Benefit it will be to the Nation demonstrated.

There needs no Repetition of any former Relation; for Truth has spoke it, which is so Glorious of her self, that it needs no Shade to give it better gloss: In what follows I will demonstrate by the particular proceedings of the Hollanders, in their Pinks and Busses, what certain gain they yearly raise out of them; and when Experience the Mother of Knowledge shall make it apparent to you, I hope you will remember what you are, and how easily you may make your selves and Country by it,

I confess this Fishing is a Business I have taken into Consideration. My Lord of Northampton, if he were now living, was able to witness how much it was solicited and desir'd by me, and no less wish'd and desir'd by his Lordship. I caus'd one Tobias Gentleman, a Mariner by Profession, but indeed a Man of better Parts than ordinary Seamen, and much practis'd in their Northern Fishing, to Dedicate a Book to his Lordship, which gave particular notice of the Hollanders Proceedings in their Pinks and Busses; and what we shall do in the imitation of them.

But by the Death of my Lord, it rested unthought on by me, till the late Duke of Richmond reviv'd it, and importun'd me once more to it. His Death in the like manner made it die, till his Majesty of late, out of his Princely Care for the good of his Loving Subjects, for the Renown of his Kingdoms, and desire of the Unity and equal Benefit of his Two Realms of England and Scotland, took more than an ordinary Care how to effect it, well becoming so Blessed and Benigne a Prince: And now I will descend to the Particulars of the Hollanders Busses, as well in their taking Herrings, as Codd and Ling, and the Seasons of the Year for both.

From the Texel in Holland to Braford in Shetland, an Island belonging to his Majesty's Dominions of Scotland, is 230 and odd Leagues, whither there resort the 22 or 23 of June well nigh 2000 Fishing Vessels. The Twenty fourth they put to Sea, being prohibited till that day, and a penalty upon the breaker thereof, holding the Herrings till then unreasonable to Salt for their Families.

Every one of these Vessels that day directs its Course to find out the Shoal of Herrings, like a Hound that pursues the Head of a Deer in Hunting. When they have laden their Busses, which is sooner or later, as they find the Shoal of Herrings, they presently return home for Holland, and leave their Herrings alhoar to be there repack'd and from thence immediately to be sent into the Sound, where they receive them for a great dainty.

The Busses having thus disburthen'd themselves in Holland, once more furnish'd with Victuals, Cask and Salt, they repair to Sea to look out the Shoal they had formerly left; and then finding them, and filling them once again, they go as they did before, return to Holland.

Nor thus ceasing, the Third time they repair to the Shoal as aforesaid; and in their Three Fishings, computing with the least, they take to the number of 100 Lalls of Herrings, which being valued at 10 l. the Lall, which is no more than 18 l. a Barrel, will amount to 1000 l. Sterling each Ship.

Many times this Fishing Fleet is attended with certain Vessels call'd Yawgers, which carry Salt Cask and Victuals, to Truck

Truck with the Busses for their Herrings, and carry them directly into the Sound, without returning into Holland; for it is a Matter of great Consequence and Gain, to bring the first Herrings into the Sound, for there they are esteem'd as Partridges with us at their first coming: But now of late Years the Hollanders are Prohibited by the State, carrying or trucking away their Herrings, till they first land them in Holland, which will prove the more Commodious to us.

I will set down the Rate of a Busf new from the Stocks, with the Price of her Nets, Tackling, Salt, Victuals, Cask, Mens Wages, and all other Charges whatsoever belonging to her; and will rate the Profit gained by her four Months Fishing, which is likely to continue 20 Years, being the ordinary Life of a Busf.

|----------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|
| Imprimis , a Busf, with her Furniture and Tackling, will cost | 500 l. |
| Item , 100 Lafts of Cask, at 18 s. the Laft                   | 90 l.  |
| Item , For Salt, 30 Weigh, at 3 l. 10 s. the Weigh            | 105 l. |
| Item , For Beer for the Men 4 Months, a Gallon a Day          | 16 l.  |
| Item , For Bread, after the same Proportion                   | 12 l.  |
| Item , For Butter, Cheese, Billets                            | 20 l.  |
| Item , For Mens Wages for 4 Months                            | 88 l.  |

It is to be considered, that Mens Wages are not to be paid, till the Voyage be ended, so that the present Disbursement is but 723 l.

Rating the 100 Laft of Herrings but at 1000 l. there is gotten clear in 4 Months 500 l. in a Busf, and 165 l. in Money; so the total Sum as appears gotten is 665 l.

Here plainly appears, that there is gotten Six hundred sixty five Pounds in one Summer; whereof if you deduct 100 l. for the wear of the Busf, and the Reparation of her Nets against the next Summer, yet still there remains 545 l. for clear Gain by one Busf in four Months; a Profit exceeding all other Trades.

It is to be noted, that I have proportioned in this Computation a Busf of 35 Laft, that is to say, 70 Tun, but I consider with my self, that we will make a greater Gain with a Busf of 20 Laft, which is but 40 Tun, than the Hollanders do with their 70 Tun, in respect of the nearness of our Harbours to put in upon all Occasions; and after the Proportion of our Busses, we must lessen so much out of the 745 l. which is the first Disbursement, as aforesaid.

Now having shewn you the Charge of the Busses, I will shew you the Charge of a Pink of 20 Laft, that is 40 Tun.

A Pink being built new, and all things new to her, will not cost 260 l. with her Lines, Hooks, and other Fishing Appurtenances.

|-------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Imprimis , a Pink                              | 260 |
| Item , 20 Laft of Barrels                      | 18  |
| Item , Five Weigh of Salt                      | 18  |
| Item , Beer, Cask, Bread, and Petty-Talley | 12  |
| Item , For Mens Wages for twoMonths        | 20  |

Sum is— 328

Twenty Lafts of Barrel Codd, at 15 l. the Laft, amounts to 300 l. and deducting 68 l. 10 s. for the fitting her to Sea, there remains 232 l. 10 s. clear gain by one Pink in two Months, rating the Codd and Ling but as they are sold in England; but being Transported, commonly they will double their Price.

I present you not with Toys to please Children, or with Shadows of Untruths; for I know Truth to be so Noble of it self, that it makes him honourable that pronounces it; and that an Honest Man will rather bear witness against Friendship than Truth. I have made it appear with what facility the Hollanders go through with the Golden Mine of theirs, which they so term in their Proclamation extant: I make proof their Busses and Pinks are built to take Fish; that they fill themselves twice a Summer with Fish; that this Fish is vented, and esteem'd as a precious Food, in all the Parts of Europe; and that the Return thereof gives them means to Live and Breathe, without which they could not.

It is manifest that Fish has brought them to a great Strength both by Land and Sea, and Fame withal, in maintaining their intestine War against so great and potent an Enemy as the King of Spain.

And if all these Benefits appear in them, and nothing but Shame and Scorn in us, let us enter into the Cause thereof, and seek to amend it; let us labour to follow their Example, which is better than a Schoolmaster to teach us: Nothing is our bane but Idleness, which ingenders Ignorance, and Ignorance, Error; all which we may be tax'd with; for to a slothful Man nothing is so easie, but it will prove difficult if it be not done willingly.

There

There are but two Things requir'd in this Work, that is to say, a Will to undertake it, and Money to go through with it; which being found, we will place Charity to begin at Home with our selves, before we yield it to our Neighbours, and then this Business will appear to be effected with more Benefit, more Strength, more Renown, more Happiness, and less Expence, than Hollanders have or can go through withal. Time is the most precious Experience, and you shall find that time will cure our Carelessness past, that Reason could not hitherto do.

The Instruments by which the Hollanders work, are their Vessels of several kinds, as I have declar'd; not produced out of their own Country, for it yields nothing to further it but their own Pains and Labour.

Their Wood, Timber, and Planks to build Ships, they fetch out of divers other Places; and yet are these no more available to undertake their Fishing and Navigation, than Weapons are without Hands to fight. Their Iron, Hemp, Cordage, Barrel boards, Bread and Malt, they are beholding for to several Countries; and if at any time out of displeasure they be prohibited the Transportation, they are to seek a new Occupation, for the State fails.

Comparing their Casualties and Inconveniencies with ours, you shall discern the Advantage and Benefit God has given us, in respect of them; for all the Materials formerly repeated, that goe to their Shipping, England yields most of them, or in little time the Earth will be made to produce them in abundance; so that we shall not need to stand upon the Courtesy of our Neighbours, or to venture the Hazard of the Sea in fetching them.

Whereas all manner of People of what degree soever in Holland, have commonly a Share, according to their Abilities, in this Fishing, and that the only Exception amongst our selves, is the want of Money, to undertake it; you shall understand how God and Nature have provided for us; for I will apparently answer the Objection of Money, and cast it upon the Sluggishness and ill Disposition of our People, who if they will take away the Cause of this Imputation they shall take away the Offence due to it, and by which we are scandaliz'd.

In the Objection of lack of Money to set on foot this Work, it would seem ridiculous to Strangers that behold the Wealth and Glory of this Kingdom, with the sumptuous Buildings, the costly inside of Houses, the mass of Plate to deck them, the daily Hospitality and number of Servants to honour their Masters, and their Charitable Alms distributed out of their Superfluities. And to descend to People in particular, if they behold the bravery of Apparel vainly spent, the rich and curious Jewels to adorn their Bodies, and the needless Expences Yearly wasted, they would conclude, that it were not Want, but Will that must be our Impediment.

But leaving these Observations, let me tell you, there is never a Lord, Knight, Gentleman, or Yeoman, of any Account in England, but for want of Money is able to furnish either Timber, Iron, Wheat, Malt, Beef, Pork, Bacon, Pease, Butter, Cheese, or Home-spun Cloth out of the Wool.

All which shall be taken from them at an ordinary Rate, and the Value allow'd them in Adventure.

No Man that has or hires Land, but may as well plant for Hemp, to make Lines, Nets and Cordage, seeing the Laws of the Kingdom command it, as any other Grain; which Hemp may be spun by their Neighbours and Tenants, and so all People set on work.

Then what need have we of Money, but for the building of Vessels? For you see with what ease every thing else is compass'd.

Before these Buflles shall direct their Course to Shetland, to be there welcom'd by the Hollanders in their own Houses, (a thing not usual for Strangers to entertain their true Inhabitants,) I will first view all Harbours and Creeks, capable for Buflles, in his Majesty's Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and there lay such Provisions for the Benefit of our Fishing, that it shall appear, if the Hollanders have usually made 1000*l.* in four Months by their three Fishings, we shall be able to exceed them in the Course following.

I will suppose our Buflles to be at Braesound in Shetland, ready the 24th of June to put to Sea, in pursuit and chase of the Herring-Shoals. I will suppose likewise, that the one and the other have fill'd their Vessels full, the Hollanders ready in their way to Holland, there to unlade and return again, as I have said before. If you compute the distance and loss of time in the 400 Leagues, running backward and forward, then shall you find great difference of Gain; betwixt us and them for we shall not need to run many Leagues, nor perhaps not ten, till we make our repair into the next Harbour, where Provision vision shall be made of Victuals, Salt, and Casks; and our Busses putting the Herrings ashore to be repacked again, with all speed they hasten to Sea in pursuit of the Shoal; and the Herrings being repacked, are immediately sent to the Sound to take their first Market: All which will be effected before the Hollanders can be at Home with their Herrings; and after they are arrived in Holland, they are to sail very nigh as far to the Sound, as we shall be from England or Scotland. There needs no Argument to prove the Truth thereof, seeing a Sea-Card or Plot will demonstrate it.

But I may be answer'd, that the Yawgers formerly spoken of, which truck with the Busses for Herrings, will sooner be at the Sound than we, and make a great Benefit by the first Sale of their Fish.

But to give you Satisfaction herein, I pray you conceive our Busses are in Harbour within the space of three Hours after they have Fished, and not subject to foul weather to hurt them: They shall have a Convenience to mend and dry their Nets; they are to unlade their Herrings, and to lade their Salt, Cask, and Victuals, without interruption, and to Sea again speedily: Whereas the Yawgers must watch their time for fair Weather, and a smooth Sea, to exchange their Salt, Victuals and Cask, for Herrings.

They must watch a fit Time and Weather to mend any Defects in their Nets, Busses, or in drying them: Thus you may see, all Casualties considered, our arrival at the Sound before them is more certain, for the Reasons before expressed.

But there was never any Business so easie, but it either found Objection, or Opposition, till made plain and apparent, as well to the Doubters as the Beholders; for most Men are guided by Opinion, rather than by Judgment: And so fares it with this hopeful and unanswerable Work, where some frame supposed Reasons and Impediments; but time will determine their Doubts, and declare their Mistakes.

There are three Arguments, but rather Errors, that possess Peoples Tongues with the Difficulty of our Fishing, which I do not mean to convince with bare Words, but with infallible Truths; for I had rather offend in telling Truth, than please by feigning Falshoods.

The first Objection is, The taking our Fish with greater Charge than the Hollanders, by means whereof they will overwork us.

The Second, That they would do no less in the Vent and Sale thereof, by their long practice in that Trade.

The Third is, The fear of Fraud and Deceit amongst our selves, after the Example of the East-Indies, Virginia, and other Companies lately erected.

Truth has no need of a Ghostly Father to absolve her; Reason shall make her speak to the First Objection, in taking our Fish, with the Comparison of Holland.

You must know that the Charges belonging to a Fishing Vessel, is her Hull, Tackling, Nets, Salt, Cask, Victuals, the Number of Men, and their Wages.

Butter and Cheese excepted, there is none of the rest of the Materials growing in Holland, and most of them afforded in England, Scotland, or Ireland; by reason whereof England may yield them better cheap than Holland.

The several Victuals carried to Sea, are Flesh, Fish, Bread, Beer, Butter, Cheese, and Pease. For Fish, we may value at an equal rate, for it costs neither of us more than the taking; and as Flesh is more chargeable than the rest, it will cost us nothing; for it is to be consider'd that a fat Beef, in the Island of Hybrides, is sold for less than 20 s. the Hide and Tallow whereof in England will give 10 s. the other 10 will be raised in carrying Wine, Strong Waters, and other Commodities desired by the People of the Country; for every 10 s. so employed doubles the Adventure: As namely, Aqua Vita, 10 s. bestowed in England, will yield more gain than will purchase the Carcass of a Cow.

For Bread, Beer, Butter, Cheese and Pease, England affords them better cheap, than Holland: First, in respect they grow in England in greater Plenty than in Holland: Secondly, They all pay Excise in Holland, and not in England: And Thirdly, no Man but knows the difference of feeding betwixt the Hollanders and the English, and that a Hollander eats as much again as half one of our English at Sea.

Both the one and the other carries an equal proportion of Men, and their Wages are upon an even Rate; but herein we shall overwork them by the Reasons following.

In a Buss of 15 or 16 Men, the Meanest amongst the Hollanders has 20 s. a Month; and we will ease the Charge of Wages 8 in 16 in our Fishing about the Lewes, viz. we will carry but 8 Men to the Place of Fishing, where we will hire 8 more for less than half the Wages we give the rest, and herein shall we save 48 l. a Year in every Buss, by means whereof we shall go cheaper than the Hollanders 5600*l.* in our 200 Busses: And moreover, in the Wages and Victuals of the Men, we shall save so much as will come to 1600*l.*

Whereas it is conceiv'd that the Hollanders will transport their Fish at a less Charge than we, it will appear otherwise; for the Yawgers that attend some of their Busses, to carry their Herrings to their first Market, as I have said, those Herrings of theirs are not repacked, but allow'd more than two Barrels to each Last, to make up their Tale; by means whereof they pay two Barrels Freight in every Last of Herrings, more than we that have the Shore near us to repack them, which in 200 Busses will amount to 3000*l.* more Gain to us than to the Hollanders.

Whereas every Fishing Vessel in Holland contributes to 20 or 30 Ships of War to defend them from the Dunkirkers, our Peace eases us of that Expence. And this shall suffice in Answer to the Comparison betwixt the Hollanders and us, in taking their Fish.

And to the second Point, to prove that we shall vent our Fish at as easie a Rate as the Hollanders, (thus I say) That your Experience must teach you, that in the Sound, where the greatest quantity of Herrings is utter'd, as I have before shew'd, Necessity will compel them to take them off; for it is not their Affection to the Hollanders above us that will make them refuse ours to accept of theirs; and then consequently ours will be better sold, in that we shall serve the Market before them, by the Means and Reasons aforelaid.

And if we go further from home, as to Spain or the Streights, you must understand that the Hollanders Ships go with fewer Men than ours, occasion'd by the slight Building and Tackling of their Ships, in comparison of ours: And as there is 20 or 40 Men difference in the Sailing of them, the like difference there is in the Strength of them: Wherefore the Merchant had better, for the Safety of his Goods, give 50*s.* Freight to us, than 20*s.* to the Hollanders; his Goods shall be better defended against Pyrates by our 40 Men, than the others 20.

The English Ships will double a Lee Shore, when the others will be forc'd in foul Weather upon the Rocks; the Cables and Anchors in the English will hold, when the others will be forc'd to come home and break; the English will be able to put out Sail at Sea, when the others will take in Sail; the English, upon some Accidents, may come on Ground, and by their Strength come off again without hurt, when the others will perish; the English go deep in Water, which makes them whollome in the Sea, and carry the Merchants Goods with little Loss; the Hollanders are labourfome and dangerous in a Storm, which causes great Leakage in Oil, Wine, and such Commodities, to the great Annoyance of the Merchant; yea oftentimes more than the difference of the Freight.

As the English go in greater Security than the Hollanders, so shall the Merchants save by not insuring the value of difference in Freight, which I could compute and prove, but that it is too tedious.

And moreover, if the English have the absolute Carriage of the Fish taken by them, and the Laws of the Realm warrant it, our Ships shall never want Employment, nor have cause to look out for Freights, by reason whereof a Ship of 200 Tuns may go cheaper by 200*l.* than usually they have done. And thus much for our Foreign Trades.

Now let us turn to the venting our Fish in the Kingdoms of England and Wales.

If the late Proclamation for the oberving of Fish Days be duly kept, it will be a means to vent our Fish, and encourage others to venture in the Fishing; so as there be a Prohibition, as there is in Holland, That no Fish be brought into any of his Majesty's Kingdoms but by his own Subjects.

Neither will it seem a thing unreasonable to enjoyn every Yeoman and Farmer within the Kingdom to take a Barrel of Fish for their own spending, considering they save the Value thereof in other Victuals; and that it is no more than the Fishermen will do to them, to take off their Wheat, Malt, Butter and Cheese, for their Food at Sea. The Farmer by this means shall never be unprovided of Fish, to observe the Days commanded by his Majesty, without sending to the Market, as otherwise they would be compelled to do.

The Farmer will find by Experience that it is as cheap a Food as any other they can feed upon, and gives a better Delight to the Taste, considering the several ways of dressing it.

The Labouring Man who works with the Farmer takes of him his Butter and Cheese; for every poor Man's Cafe is not to keep a Cow; and such Labourers will be as willing to take Fish from the Farmer as any other Victuals, if he be willing to spare it.

There are few Farmers but will spend the Value of a Barrel of Fish yearly, and

he that does so shall save 20 in the Hundred by buying the quantity of a Barrel together, rather than by Retail.

And because the Country shall be better serv'd with Fish and other Commodities than they have been, we will make several Staples of Salt, Coles, and other Merchandize desir'd by the Country, where Boats may have Passage up the Rivers not us'd heretofore: As namely, Middlesex, part of Hertfordshire, Surrey, Buckinghamshire, and Oxfordshire, may be serv'd by the River of Thames.

Essex may serve it self, part of Hertfordshire, and part of Suffolk.

Norfolk will serve Cambridgeshire, part of Suffolk, Bedfordshire, Huntingtonshire, Northamptonshire, and a Staple there made will serve Warwickshire; for from thence go their empty Carts to fetch Coles, which may furnish the Shire with little Charge.

Lincolnshire will furnish it self, Nottinghamshire part of Rutlandshire, and Derbyshire by the Trent; Cumberland and Westmerland will furnish themselves by the Ealt and West Sea.

We will leap over the Land to the Westward, as Cheshire and Lancashire, which will furnish themselves, part of Shropshire, Worcestershire, Staffordshire, and the North Part of Wales.

That side of the Sea will furnish Wales till you come to Severn.

The North side thereof will furnish Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire, Glamorganshire, and Monmouthshire, and the South part thereof will serve the North side of Cornwal, Devon, and Somerset; and up the River of Severn will serve Gloucestershire, Hertfordshire, part of Shropshire, Worcestershire, and Wiltshire.

The South Sea of England will furnish Cornwal, Devonshire, Somersetshire, Dorsetshire, Hampshire, and part of Wiltshire, Sussex, Kent, and part of Surrey.

Thus is England and Wales compass'd, and a Consideration to be had for the meekest Place to erect our Staples, to utter the Commodities brought them, and to receive from them.

If at any time Corn fails the Countries, we will hereafter supply them at a reasonable Rate with our Trade to Dantzick with Herrings: If Plenty make it warrantable to transport by the Statute, we will take it off from them, so as they shall have no just Cause to complain either of Dearth or Abundance.

We will provide that no Rogues or Vagabonds shall be to them Annoyance, or the Poor of the Parish charge them; for all such People shall be set to work by us: Then will the Contributions to the House of Correction cease, which will be a more ease to the Parishioners, than the value of many a Barrel of Herrings which they shall take off from us.

When our Staples shall be erected in the Country as aforesaid, out of them we will furnish every Parish within the Kingdom with Hemp by weight, to set the People to work, and to receive it again by weight, allowing every one such a Rate for their Work, that they may live well thereby. No Girl nor Boy of 9 years of age, no Man nor Woman how lame of their Legs forever, but shall be able to get their Livings; no Person so blind, but may live without Alms.

For besides the making of Nets, and such Work as belongs to it, we will set up a Trade of making of Cables, and all manner of Ropes, as well to vent abroad, as furnish the Kingdom at home; as also Pole-Davies for Sails, and not be beholden to France for them.

All these Reasons consider'd, it is apparent that the Farmers and People of the Inward Country, who hitherto have not tasted of these Happineses, and whose Passages by Water have not been frequented or known, shall reap as great a Commodity and Profit by this Filhing, as our selves; and have no more Reason therefore to refuse the taking of our Herrings, in the manner aforesaid, than we have to take off the Commodities by which they live. And this shall suffice for the second Point of venting our Filh.

These Six several Trades following we will erect in all Parts of England, not hitherto practis'd but in some Places near the Sea side:

|------------|-----------------------------|
| Hempsters, | Ropemakers,                 |
| Spinsters, | Weavers of Pole-Davies, and | | Corders,   | Net-Makers.                 |

Besides the Encrease of Coopers, Smiths, Shipwrights, Caulkers, Sawyers, Sailors, Filhermen, Basket makers, Sail-makers, Labourers, and many other Trades in great abundance.

In Answer to the third Allegation of Couzenage and Deceits amongst our selves, by Example of the East-Indies, Virginia, and other Trades, I cannot say whether they deserve the Imputation of the Fraud that is cast upon them or no; for Report is like an Eccho, heard, but no Man knows where: But to give Satisfaction as well in the managing our Trade, as that Truth speaks it, no Deceit can creep in at it, as that which follows shall

declare: It is not intended (as I conceive) that a Select Company shall have the disposing of this Fishing, as the other has, or to receive, disburse, or employ the Moneys raised by the Adventurers, or to direct and order Things at their Pleasure; but contrarywise, for Example, Whosoever shall be a Member in it, shall have his Choice what to adventure, with whom to adventure, and the manner how to adventure, without Controulment of any other: As this, If he undertake for a Bus or a Ship, it shall be in his Choice to accept of a Partner, two, three, four, or more.

And after the Value of their Adventure, to erect so many Ships as it shall please themselves to nominate, and appoint such Persons for the ordering of it as they shall make Choice of: So that if Deceit appear, it will be among themselves, for no body else shall meddle in their Adventure.

But because in all Commonwealths there must be a Head to Govern, and execute Justice, to which the rest of the Body must submit, it is convenient that the supreme Commission and Authority be given to some of the Lords of his Majesty's Honourable Privy Council, and other Persons of Quality to be chosen, as well in the Kingdom of Scotland and Ireland, as in England, to settle a Form of Government, with a Judge to Rule, and to provide for all Mischief and Inconveniences that may happen betwixt Man and Man, and prevent the Abuses and Questions that may arise betwixt Merchants, Mariners, Owners of Ships, Salters, Coopers, and others whom it may concern: But these Commissioners are in no wise to handle or meddle with the Parties in their Adventures, or with their Stocks of Money, or with the Employment of it.

Furthermore, to stop the Mouths of such suspicious Conceits of Fraud, you shall find it is not in the wit of Man to over-reach them, for the Reasons following: The Quantity of Fish that a Bus takes cannot be conceal'd; for of necessity the must repair to the Ports of England or Scotland, where the Customers enter every Barrel of Fish in their Books, and none can be transported without a Cocker: Besides the number of Cask they pay for, they must look to have them fill'd, and likewise the quantity of Salt bought, to have it employ'd.

The Price, as well of those that are vented at home, as transported abroad, is easily known; the usual Freight of Ships and the Factorage is soon guess'd at; and therefore no Means left for Deceit to enter in at.

Now to return once more to the Fishing, where we left the Busses for that Summer, and provide them against the middle of November, to repair to the Island of Lewis, where, till the beginning of February, they shall take the principal Herrings of all others, in Loughs and Harbours, as I have formerly declared.

Which being done about the first of March, they depart from thence to the Island of Rona, betwixt 15 and 16 Leagues from Lewis, from whence there runs a Bank of 100 Miles in length, and as far as Till-Head in Ireland; which Bank affords the best quantity of Cod and Ling of any part of the Seas, and 100 and odd years not us'd.

From the first of March, as I have said, to the 20th of June, is the time I have assign'd to repair to Braefund in Siberia; in which space I make account they will fill their Vessels twice or thrice with Cod and Ling, and leave them in the Island of Lewis, there to be fetch'd by other Ships that shall bring Salt, and all other kind of Necessaries which shall be fitting.

The 20th of June approaching, the Busses are to repair to Braefund, as I have said before; from whence they must prosecute their Fishing of Herrings, as in the former year, till their Arrival at Tarmouth. If then they please to take an Account of their year spent, it will appear that one Bus employ'd by us, as I have projected it, will be of much more Value than to the Hollanders, and be the way to teach us how his Majesty's Dominions shall flourish, not for a while, but for ever.

At Tarmouth we may account the goodness of the Herrings spent; for betwixt Winterton and Orfordness they use to Spawn, and are called by the Hollanders the Rope-sick Herrings, which they forbear to take.

The Nature of the young Herring, after it is Spawn'd, is to seek the Comfort of the fresh Water, and put themselves into the Mouth of the Thames, or amongst the Sands, where the Water is not altogether so brackish: but like poor silly Creatures they are entrapp'd by the Stale Nets, that to take the Sprats; for one Sprat they take, they catch 100 of these young Herrings, and bring them to Billinggate, where they sell them not for above 2 d. or 3 d. a Peck; which if let alone, would by Midsummer following grow to be a perfect and big Herring, worth 25 or 30 s. a Barrel. This Mischief must be prevented, and the Fishermen enjoin'd not to go to the Westward of Orfordness to take Sprats.

From

From Orfordneſs, the Herrings direct their Courſe to the North-ſealand in Kent, where they furniſh both the Engliſh and French Shores with ſo many as are taken by both Nations, tho' they be both ſhot, ten, and of the worſt kind.

Their abiding hereabouts is according to the Winds; if it hang Southerly or Weſterly, they remain the longer; but if Eaſterly, they are taken, as it were, with the Wind in the Poop, which carries them the length of our Chanel, till they arrive at the Lands-end in Cornwall, from whence they divide themſelves like a Fleet of Ships that ſhould be directed by a General; ſome go through St. George's Chanel, betwixt England and Ireland; others to the Weſtward of Ireland, till they arrive at the Iſlands of Hebrides or Lewes, the Place of Rendezvous; and we may ſuppoſe, they are at home, by the Strength and Goodneſs they find in that Place; for tho' they run the length of our Chanel, lean and ſick, yet as ſoon as they repair to thoſe Iſlands, they become the largeſt the faireſt, and the beſt Herrings in the World; and here they are taken in Loughs and harbours, as I have ſaid, and valu'd at 40 s. the Laſt above others.

Here I will leave them taking their Reſt, and ſhew another Benefit we ſhall receive upon the Shoals of Shetland, Orkney, and the Hebrides, which the Hollanders have not, nor cannot make uſe of, in reſpect they are not Subjects of His Maſteſty.

And becauſe I have purſu'd the Herrings till I left them at the Iſlands of Lewes, I will begin with thoſe Iſlands, and truly ſay, They are placed for the Benefit of Fiſhing above all places in the World.

The Condition and Situation of thoſe Iſlands I refer to the Map, that will give you Light of their Seat, their Altitude, and their Neighbourhood with Scotland and Ireland; but the Nature and Diſpoſition of the People you ſhall receive from me, who have ſeen them, and can beſt ſpeak of them.

Of many Hundred Iſlands belonging to this Kingdom of Scotland and Ireland, I may ſay, thoſe of Lewes exceed the reſt in Fertility of Soil: It yields, with the Labour of People, (which they are not guilty of) all manner of Grain, Cattel, Fiſh, and Fowl; and altho' their Fire be not of Wood, or Coles, which we eſteem the beſt Fuel, yet it hath Plenty of Peate and Turf, that they have little Cauſe to fear Cold.

There is an old Saying, which may be well applied to thoſe Iſlands, and the Inhabitants of them, That they have a good Land, and are ill People; for to ſpeak the Truth, the Chriſtian World cannot ſhew a more barbarous, more bloody, and more untam'd Generation. But His Maſteſty being lately inform'd of their Breeding, and uncivil Living, is graciously pleas'd to reduce them to the Knowledge of God, and the Acknowledgment of him, which hitherto they are ignorant in.

This being done, and the Iſlands being furniſh'd as is intended. I will make it appear, that the Seas about them, and the Loughs and Harbours within them, will yield more Commodity to the Subjects of His Maſteſty's Three Kingdoms, than any other Trades whatſoever, either near home, or far abroad.

Now will I ſtand over for the Iſlands of Orkney and Shetland, which have no need of other Deſcription, but that it is pity ſo good and civil People ſhould inhabit no better a Country: We may ſay the contrary of them that we ſaid of the Iſland of Lewes, That it was a good Land, but evil People; theſe are good People, but poſſeſs an evil Soil.

The way to relieve them, is humbly to intreat His Maſteſty to pleaſe to accept of his Revenue in Orkney and Shetland in Fiſh. Encourage the People of thoſe Iſlands to Undertake and Practiſe the Uſe of Fiſhing, which through Poverty and the Want of Trade they are not now able to go through with.

Besides the Rent to His Maſteſty in Fiſh, whatſoever Fiſh they ſhall take by their own Labours, we will take off from them, and ſupply them with Salt, Nets, Hooks, Boats, and what elſe they ſhall ſtand in need of; by means whereof, every Man in thoſe Iſlands ſhall be able to ſubſiſt and maintain himſelf, that now knows not how to get his Living, but is brought up in Sloth and Idleneſs.

What is requiſite for the Planting of the Iſland of Lewes, and other Iſlands adjacent.

1. It is fit His Maſteſty call in the Grant lately made by the Earl of Seaford to the Hollanders, for inhabiting of the ſaid Iſlands, who take them purpoſely to erect a Fiſhing upon that Coaſt, whereby to defeat His Maſteſty's Subjects of that Benefit.

2. That His Maſteſty grant Liberty and Privileges to his Subjects of England and Scotland, there to erect and inhabit Towns, Villages, Storehouſes, and all manner of Manufactures and Trades; that hereafter we ſhall not need to ſupply thoſe Iſlands, but find all Things eſtabliſh'd to our hands, as in all other Places of Europe,

where Trades are upheld and maintain'd.

3. That His Majesty institute a Governor there, to be resident for the space of Three Years, and not exceed that Time, lest in longer continuance Abuses creep in through the Avarice of Governors.

4. That in every Island there be erected one principal Town above the rest, and a Cittadel in it, to keep the People in Obedience; for the Inhabitants of those Islands are naturally inclin'd to Incivility, Treachery, and Liberty, which are next Neighbours to Rebellion.

5. That every Child be taught the English or Scottish Language, and that their Education be according to their Abilities of Body, and Disposition of Mind, or as the Estates of their Parents are able to maintain them, some in Learning, some in Manuring and Husbanding of Grounds, but the most part in Fishing and Sea-Affairs, having so convenient a Seat for the same.

6. That the natural Inhabitants of those Islands have no Correspondence with the Hollanders upon the main Continent more than is needful, considering the Danger that may ensue by their too great Friendship, who are naturally the most dangerous and worst People of all His Majesty's Dominions; and that there be special Care that they Marry one with another in the Island, or with English or Scottish, and in any Cases to prohibit all Marriages between them and the Islanders aforesaid.

I have annex'd hereunto what I think fit to be put in present Execution, for Planting the Islands of Hebrides; which being done, all the Good formerly express'd will follow; besides, there are other Things, which I forbear to touch, as Matters not fit for me to handle.

I have brought my Intention to an End, and laid open the Mischief our State has long suffer'd by resigning, at least conniving at the Hollanders Fishing, who have made long use of it.

I have made it appear how easie it is for us to enjoy, or to be restor'd to what we have lost, and the Profit all kind of People shall reap by it, if Will and Money be not wanting. I have made it plain to as many as desire to know the Truth, That the encrease of Ships in Europe, is occasion'd by the Taking and Transporting our Fish: That 9000 Holland Vessels are kept by it, and all their People daily set to work, inasmuch that I dare boldly say, If the Food of Fish were prohibited by all sorts of Christians, and duly observ'd, it would lessen the Number of Shipping Three Parts in Five. And therefore feeing our Fish is able to make us happy, and this Narration lays down the Way how to attain to that Happiness, let neither Excuses, false Pretences, or Affection to the Hollanders, divert us from it, as it did in the Year 1609, when by Proclamation the Hollanders were to resort to London for Licence to fish on the Coast of England; and Edinburgh, for the like in Scotland; and yet neither of them both was perform'd, nor the Contempt question'd.

Two Hundred Usurers, with willing Minds and forward Purples, are able to master this Work; but I fear, the Devil, whose Friendship is not to Advise, but to Deceive them, will not allow a Gain so well gotten. The excessive Practice of Usury is the Decay of Commonwealths, repugnant to all Humanity, Charity, and Natural Benevolence, and a Slavery to those that desire to live Poor to die Rich.

But to speak the Truth, it is pity that a Work of so great Goodness and Gain should be tainted by Men of so penurious a Condition, who are neither Good nor Evil by the Disposition of another, but by their own perverse Will and Nature: God, I fear, will bless our Endeavours the worse for them, they are like Trees that carry no Blossoms in the Spring, and therefore no hope of any Fruit at the Fall.

This Work is unspotted; and pity it should be desir'd with the Sin of Avarice. His Majesty's Greatness and Glory will appear by it, for nothing can be to a Prince more Royal, than to make the State of his Kingdom better than he found it; or of evil and slothful Servants, to make them Profitable to a Commonwealth.

This shall suffice for so much as concerns our manner of Fishing, our Commodity arising by Fishing, and the Use other Nations make of our Fish, which I have divulg'd to many of my intimate Friends: And now shall follow other Matters, still concerning the Subject of Fishing; and the first shall be touching Salt and Cask.

Concerning Salt and Cask.

The next necessary Thing we can endeavour and labour to advance our Fishing by, without being beholding to other Nations, is Salt and Cask; for in my former Narration I have shew'd, that most of the Materials belonging to our Fishing may be found in England, except Salt, Pitch, and Tar: And to take Fish without Salt to save it, is like choice of Meats and no Cook,

or others to dress it; for both putrify without present help.

Such Salts as are for the use of Fishing are of divers Kinds and Strength, some too hot and strong, others too weak and faint: and therefore if a Mean betwixt both could be invented, and made within His Majesty's Dominions, we might esteem it a great Jewel, and next in value to the Philosopher's Stone; and the finder out of the Secret to deserve as great Honour of his Country as William Bacalute, who was the first Diviler of Packing of Herrings amongst the Flemings, as in my former Relation I have declar'd.

There are many, as I am inform'd, at this day, who make trial to attain to the Art and Secret of making Salt; I mean with the convenient strength for the Salting and Pickling of Fish, I do not speak of the making of our White Salt, long practis'd in England and Scotland; for that kind of Salt of it self, is not for this use, and yet not bad, if according to the quantity it be mixed with the stronger Salt, for it makes a Fish the whiter and better to the Eye for Sale.

Those that undertake this Work and Invention of adding strength to Salt, above our ordinary White Salt, must have a care of the place they chuse to make it in; First, for the conveniency of the taking it off by Fishermen when it is made; Secondly, such a place where the Salt water hath no mixture with Freshes or Sands; and Thirdly, where they shall find plenty of Fuel for their purpose.

The first Practice that was made of it, was in the Isle of Wight, a place in my Opinion, ill chosen by the Projectors; First, for uttering of their Salt, if they had brought it to Perfection; for the greatest quantity they could vent, is at Tarmouth in Norfolk, and the Coast Towns thereabouts, to the Northernmost part of all Scotland, which was almost as great a Voyage as to bring it from the Coast of Britany where it is made.

Neither had the West Country any advantage in the Transportation, for that all the Ports of Dartmouth, Plimouth, and all parts of Severn, which only use the Fishing of Ireland and Newfoundland, shall be easier and more conveniently serv'd out of Britany with Salt, than from the Isle of Wight; Southampton and Portsmouth alone would receive benefit, by reason of their nearness, and not considerable, in respect of the little Fishing they use.

The Isle of Wight was a place as ill chosen, in respect of the brackishness of the Sea, and scarcity of Fuel, in comparison of the Northern parts, that can be supply'd with Coals at an easier rate; and for proof of the freshness of the Sea, in comparison of other Seas, these are my Reasons; Where Two Lands make a Streight so small, as betwixt England and France, and both the Kingdoms send forth many fresh Rivers which fall into the Sea, the Sea cannot have such force of Strength or Saltness, as the Northern Coast has, where the Ocean comes pouring in upon them.

We see by experience in Holland, that the Salt they make, is not with the Water that comes near those Towns where they make it, tho' a Man that knew not the contrary would sensibly think it had sufficient Saltness for that purpose; but they find it otherwise, and have Ships purposefully made to fill themselves with the Salt Water off at Sea, and not near the Land.

And if the Hollanders make so great a profit as they do, by their Salt, imagine what we shall make of it, when we have obtain'd the use of making it, considering our Water by proof is Salter, nearer hand, and our Coals at a far cheaper rate, if our Works be set up at Tarmouth, Lynn, Boston, Hull, Tinmouth, the Holy Island, and all the parts of Scotland; in which Harbours our Fishermen either dwell, or will resort thither daily for Sale.

Therefore I conclude, if the Perfection of the Work may be brought to pass, either in making Salt of sufficient strength, out of Invention; or if not, in Imitation of the Hollanders to make Salt upon Salt; the Towns aforesaid are the meetest to set up that Trade of Salt; and the rather because they have now in practise the making of White Salt, and the other will be the sooner effected by it.

And for such Salt as shall be us'd in the Lewes, there is no place lies more convenient for the making of Salt of any kind, than in that Island, the Sea having an extraordinary Saltness, and the Country affording so great plenty of Fuel.

The English and Scottish Fishermen that shall use that Fishing, shall find as great, and as extraordinary Profit and Gain, by receiving their Salt at the Island when they shall there arrive, as the freight of their Ships will come to: For whereas they use now to bring in their Ship the best part of their Lading in Salt, finding there Salt made ready to their hands, instead of Salt, they shall lade themselves with Cask, and other things wanting for their use.

Salt upon Salt is made out of the strength of Salt that cometh out of other Countries.

France

France sends out the greatest part of Salt, and according to its Strength, the Salt it makes is of less Vertue and Operation, and the more of it is spent in the Salting of Fish.

The Portuguese and Spanish Salt is the stronger in Substance, by reason of the Sun's Power; for according to the Heat and Force of the Sun, Salt encreaseth in strength.

To the Southward of Spain, and as far as Cape Verde and the Island of May, as also Westward from thence to Cape de Rey, and other places in the West-Indies, the Salt is far stronger than in Spain, by reason of the force of the Sun; and it will make double Salt to the other.

But whereas it is alleg'd by some, that know not what belongs to the business, that the going so far, as to the places aforesaid for Salt, will not quit the Charge: To answer that Objection they must know, That if Profit arise by this Trade, it must be in the built and bigness of Ships they employ; for I would not advise a Ship of less than 300 Tuns, but as much bigger as they please to be sent upon that Voyage; and such Ships to be provided out of Holland, till we get use in Building them, for they will Sail with Two Thirds less Men than ours.

And moreover it is to be consider'd, that the Salt they there fetch costs nothing; for it is there naturally made of the Seawater and the Sun, and nothing is required but their Labour and Pains in bringing it aboard.

If we hit of our Salt making in England, it will prove a great benefit to us; for the King of France and the King of Spain, lately finding a necessity for all Nations to take off their Salt, have laid a Gabel and Custom upon it, and thereby encreas'd the Price so much, that we and all Europe betides find it.

For such Parts of the West Country as border upon the South Sea, or upon the River of Severn, either on the English or Welsh Shore, I will refer to their Consideration, whether they will be serv'd out of France, Spain, and the Isle of May, or other places; or whether they will follow the example of the Northern parts in making Salt upon Salt, as I have shew'd. If they intend this latter, their Country lies very conveniently by the help of Coals they shall have from Swansea in Wales.

After this Work is settled and brought to Perfection, I advise there may be an equal Carriage of it, betwixt the Buyer and the Seller, that they may both live with an indifferent Profit and Gain; and so to accommodate it, that the Buyer may be certain of the price; if not, this Inconveniency will follow, That the Salt Master will Transport the Salt beyond Sea, where it goes at the greatest rate: Like Corn-masters, if they were not prohibited by a Law, not respecting the Good that would redound to their Country; so much is their covetous desire of Profit: But being bound to serve the Kingdom at a certain Price, and that we shall find no want nor scarcity of it, let them after have liberty to dispose of it for the best Benefit; but according to the old Saying, Charity should begin at home.

There must be a Penalty also upon him that will buy or be furnish'd with Salt, under colour of Fishing, and shall notwithstanding transport the same into any Parts beyond the Seas, or otherwise, for his private Gain. As well this Abuse, as many others that can be imagined to creep in, must be foreseen and prevented.

According to the strength of our Salt, you may rate the Quantity that goes to the salting a Barrel of Herrings, and so estimate it from 1 Barrel to 100 Lasts, viz. a Weigh of Salt is 40 Bushels, and every Bushel will salt a Barrel of Herrings; so that 12 Bushels will salt a Last of Herrings, being 12 Barrels of 32 Gallons to a Barrel. A Last of Herrings is Two Tuns after the English Account.

And if you can bring the Salt to the Proportion of 3  $\frac{1}{4}$  10 s. the Weigh, it were a Price indifferent betwixt the Buyer and the Seller; yea, tho' you proportion the Spanish Salt at a greater Price, and our White Salt at a lesser, yet if betwixt both it may be Rated equal, as I have said, at 3  $\frac{1}{4}$  10 s. the Weigh, it were very well.

The same Proportion of Salt you must use to the Codd, viz. a Bushel of Salt to a Barrel of Codd. And as for Ling, it is not to be Barrell'd up, but to be Salted in Bulk, which will take up much the less Salt.

The next Consideration about our Fishing, is, How to make our provision of Cask, as well for Herring as for Cod; the greatest quantity which furnishes the Hollanders, is brought out of Norway, Sweden, and other parts of the Sound, which they return in their Ships, after they have made Sale of their Fish in those parts.

The same Course we may take, if we be so pleased, or that we cannot return a better Freight for our Ships: But we have an easier and a nearer way to be supplied with Cask; for no Country of Europe affords better Provision of Timber, or Ash to make them, or more conveniency ency to transport them to what Coast soever we shall Fish on, in his Majesty's Dominions: This Benefit we enjoy above the Hollanders, who have not in their Country one whole Timber Tree for this purpose, but are serv'd from abroad, as I have formerly said.

All kind of Wood that belongs to the Building of Ships, or other Works that have relation to Timber, we do, and shall find, in a little time, a great want of; for Wood is now utterly decay'd in England, and begins to be no less in Ireland, if there be not a speedy Course taken to redress it, and a prohibition against the transporting of out of Ireland into Holland, which the Hollanders make a continual Trade of, not only of Timber, but also of all other Commodities Ireland affords, greatly to the prejudice of the English; and for the better proof thereof they have erected a Company in Amsterdam, by the name of the Irish Company.

And therefore I would to God his Majesty would take these things into Consideration; as also to restrain the felling of Timber in England, which is too common by the Liberty that is given to Widows, to Fell and Sell without Impeachment or Waste; and to young Heirs, after they come to possess their Father's Lands; for the readiest Monies they can think on towards their wastful Expences, is a Sale of Timber; and whilst this is suffered, and no provision for Preserving or Planting of Trees, as the Law provides for in that case, what can be imagin'd will fall to England hereafter in succeeding times? For if Money or Wealth decay in a Kingdom, there may be means by Trade to recover it again; If Seamen die, so long as there are Ships and Navigation they will soon encrease, and make their Deaths forgotten; but if our Timber be consumed, and spent, it will require the Age of 3 or 4 Generations before it can grow again for use; which we ought the more to respect, because the English Timber far exceeds the Irish in Lightness and Goodness.

Tho' the Carriage of Ship-Timber be prohibited, and as daily executed; yet there are divers Abuses that must be look'd to and prevented, as well in this kind of Timber, as in vent of our own Red Herrings; the Deceits whereof, betwixt the English and the Hollanders, Combiners, you shall understand by this that follows.

The Hollanders have gotten a late Practice, by their Inwardness and Friendship with some Men of Yarmouth, (for naturally that Town is more inclined to Holland than England, as descended from thence;) these English Dwellers take upon them the Building of Ships, according to direction of the other, who underhand disburse the Money; and the Ship being Buile, the English in fiew make Sale of her to the Hollanders; when his Tide in the Ship, is perhaps 30 l. to colour the Deceit. There are many other things to be prov'd, that upon examination would discover many Abuses offered both to the King and Subjects.

These Combiners stop not here, but craftily avoid his Majesty's Proclamation; for whereas, as I have formerly deliver'd, the Red Herring is only made in Yarmouth, and the Hollanders have in a manne the absolute Carriage of them into the Streights; and although the State is many times willing to prevent the Carriage of them by Strangers; yet craftily they use this Policy, speedily to send away the Herrings in English Vessels to Holland, as soon as they are made, from whence they immediately ship them for the Streights, before our great Ships can take them in at Yarmouth: Other times they meet such Ships as come from Yarmouth laden with Herrings, off the Sands of Yarmouth, where they ride, take them in, and carry them directly to the Streights many days before ours can be ready at Yarmouth in our great Ships; by which advantage of time, they get their Port, and make Sale of their Herrings, long before our arrival there, and sell them at a double Price to us at our coming, to an inestimable Loss, both to his Majesty's Subjects and to his Customs, as I have said before; by the Precedent of a Ship sighted from Yarmouth to Marseilles.

And therefore to avoid this Cunning and Cotenage, it is fitting his Majesty prohibit the Transportation of Fish, except in his Subjects bottoms, and a Day to be limited for the Transportation, that we may be sure to be near our Port, before the Strangers can follow us out of England; so shall we be sure to make our Market before the Strangers can depart England, which will be a great Advantage to us.

As this Deceit appears in the Vent of our Red Herrings, so there is no less unconscionable Course held betwixt the Hollanders and English Fishermen, that takes the Pilchards and Poor John, the one in England, the other in Newfoundland; for such is the necessity of the poor Fishermen, that they receive Impress of part of their Money before hand, to perform strict Conditions they are bound to, much to their prejudice, and the Hollanders Advantage; whereas if the English had the absolute absolute Carriage of Fish, they would attain to the Secrets of that Trade, and deal more reasonably with Poor Men than the others do.

I have before in this Book computed the Value of 60 Ships, of 250 Tuns each, what the Hollanders gain by the Trade of our Fish into the Streights, and not one Penny thereof return'd into England; and for a more Authentick Proof, I desire that Merchants may be examined upon the Truth thereof, and then you shall find my Computation to fall out right; and for your better Satisfaction, I will set down the several Ports within the Streights, and the Number of Ships that repair to them; by which it will appear what Loss this Kingdom has for so many Years sustain'd, and what Gain and Profit may be made by it, if it be reduc'd into our Hands; besides the Strength of Ships, the Encrease of Mariners, and Fame this Nation will reap by it.

An Estimate of what went before.

Twelve for Venice; 8 with Pilchards, 4 with Red-Herrings.

Four to Ancona; whereof 3 with Pilchards, one with Red-Herrings.

Six to Civita Vecchia.

Six to Genova.

Eight to Naples.

Twenty to Legborne.

Three to Villa-Franca.

Forty six to Marseilles, whereof 30 with Dry Fish.

In all 105 Ships, besides many more smaller for Spain and France; as I have shew'd.

Here shall follow some indirect Dealings of the Hollanders, which I forbore to insert in the former Discourse of Fishing, and shall be inserted at the End of this Book, calling it an Addition to my Sixth Book; but I will still prosecute the Subject of Fish and Fishing, and will not cease till I have laid open every Coast of the known World, whither Fish resorts, and shew the Benefit that is or may be made of it, as well by the Inhabitants as Strangers.

Concerning Fish and Fishing.

There are two Natural Foods for Man to feed on; the one is Fleh, maintain'd and encreas'd by the Fruitfulness of the Land and Soil of the Earth; the other is Fish, swimming in the common, spacious, and open Sea, which no Man can challenge a Right to, as to the Land they may, and therefore it may be called Common.

This Fish requires no Head, as Beasts and Cattle do, to overlook them, or to keep them in their Limits or Bounds; no Man can set his Mark upon them, to challenge a Property in them: No Body that casts a Net into the Sea, can say what belongs to them, till it be drawn again: No Difficulty or Care can be requir'd to nourish it, seeing there is such abundance encreased over all the Seas and Coasts in the World, as Experience teaches us.

The Difficulty in making use of this Food is in the Taking it, which is done by Art, Engines and Pains; for unless the Prerogative of Princes in some Cases, and upon some Coasts, prohibit the Sufferance of taking Fish, it is as lawful for a Beggar as a King to challenge Right to it, alter it is taken.

The Use of Fishing, and the Benefit that arises by it, needs no other repetition, than in my former Declaration.

There now only remains my Labour and Observation to collect the Sorts of Fishes every Country affords, and which are used for present Food, and which are sent abroad by way of Trade; and then I will refer it to Consideration, what Penalty Europe, which is the most flourishing Part of the World, would be brought to, were it not for the Endeavours and Labours of the Poor Fishermen.

Besides the general Fishes of Herring and Codd, taken upon the Coast of England, Scotland and Ireland, and vented, as in the Narration aforesaid, there are many excellent Fishes upon every Maritime Shire in England, which are of great Sustainance to the Inhabitants, and which I forbear to name, but will set down only such Fish as is vented abroad, and returns Gain and Commodity to the Kingdom by way of Traffick.

As the Northern Parts of England yield both Codd and Herring, as aforesaid, so do the Western Coasts Pilchards in such abundance that many times they are not able able to have the third Part of them, for want of Salt, as appears in the last Wars with France.

Ireland affords these three kinds of Fishes in as great Numbers as England; and the Herrings and Pilchards exceed ours, which makes them valu'd above the English in other Countries. They have another Fish which frequents not our Shores, called the Hake, taken in the Deepes betwixt England and Ireland, much pris'd in Biscay; they have plenty of Kay, or Thornback, and Buckorm, which is Dry'd Whiting, much desir'd in Britany.

The several Parts of England have several Seasons of Fishing, some whereof I have shewed, but will add to it our Fishing at the Sow, a Rocky Ground a League and more in length, and six Leagues South off at Sea to Rie: This is the principal Place that yields that primest fresh Fish that serves London, and the Place France did lately inroach upon, under Colour of five Boats Licens'd by King James, at the Request of the French King. But his Subjects encreas'd almost to as many Scores as Boats, till by Order of the State, I reduc'd it to the allow'd Proportion, as is to be seen in my Second Book.

Upon the Coast of Lincolnshire, the Fishing for Codd begins at Easter, and continues till Midsummer; for Hake in the Deepes, as I have said, betwixt Whitside and St. James; about Padflow for Codd and Ling, from Christmas to the middle of June; on the North Part of Ireland, from Christmas to March.

Englishmen have not the use of Barrelling up of Codd, and if it be not Barrelld it is not vendible in France; neither can they make Haberdine, for if they could it would be well sold in Spain and Portugal.

Now to the Fishing upon the Coast of Holland, France, Flanders, Portugal, Spain, and other Countries where the Sea affords Fish, but no great use is made thereof, more than for present Food; for neither Herrings nor Codd are there to be found, which are the staple and vendible Fish for Profit.

The Coast of Holland yields the least Quantity and the worst Choice of Fish of all the rest; and yet Fish is there most eaten out of Necessity, having so many People that inhabit the Countrey, and so little quantity of Land for their sustenance. The greatest Store of Fish that maintains them is taken upon our Seas, and kept in Well-boats, and brought into Holland, where it is vented and sold.

Coming upon the Coast of France, the first Town you shall find to entertain you, will be Calais, which in truth exceeds all other Places of that Kingdom for the present Food of Fish; not that they are such Fishes as I have named before, either for Quality, for Quantity taken, or Provision to take them; for their Boats are only Shallops, not above a Tun burthen, unless it be in October, when their bigger Vessels resort thither to take the last Shole of Herrings that comes from the Northward: And it happen'd in the Year, 1610, that 50 Sail of those Vessels were sunk, and 800 People in them, as they were there Fishing.

If you keep along the Shore of France till you arrive at St. John de Luz, the furthestmost Part thereof, it affords no other Fish but for present spending, except at some time of the Year that they sale their spare Mackrels, which at the time of the Year they take.

Biscay is like France in the nature of Fish, and Fishing upon their own Coast: But what Profit either of them make by their Fishing upon the Shores of America, I will after shew; only I must say, that Biscay is often visited with monstrous Fishes, as Whales and Gramposses, which none of the rest I have spoken of are in abundance, which yields the Taker of them more Commodity by the Oil, than the value of other Fish.

The next in order is Galicia, and Portugal, as far as Cape St. Vincent, the Southernmost Promontory of all that Coast, or of Europe: I'll join them in one, because they are all one Continent, and subject to one King. They both afford Fish alike in a reasonable Quantity, but especially of Pilchards; and here they are so Excellent above others, and so necessary to the People of Portugal, that the Countrey had better want their East-India Trade, than their Fishing for Pilchards upon that Coast.

Doubling the Cape of St. Vincent, you tend East, as far as the Streights of Gibraltar; Besides the Fish these Seas afford to equal the rest of Portugal, it is haunted with a Fish called Tunny, a Victual of great use, in that it is Pickled up in Barrels, and serves for Sea-store, besides a great quantity that is transported into the Streights: The Custom of this Fish is worth in value to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, 40000*l.* Sterling a Year. The fattest Tunny is near Gibraltar.

After you enter the Streights, that Sea cannot be compar'd to the others, neither in quantity nor in goodness of Fish.

tho' one kind of Fish they have which the others have not, which is Anchovies, esteem'd for a great Dainty amongst us, because of the Rarenels of it, and coming so far; and yet I think our Sprats and young Herrings in England might be made to equal them in Taste.

In returning out of the Streights, we will keep the Coast of Barbary Westward, as high as Cape Canteene, in which Circuit there is very little Fish taken, tho' no doubt but the Sea affords as good Fish as upon the Christian Shore, opposite to it, but that the Moors are no Fishermen, nor have Provision or Harbours for it.

The Christians enjoy all these Sports, except Sally, so that if the Moors had conveniency of Fishing, yet the Christians would have kinder'd them, that they should have reap'd no Benefit by it.

From Canteene to the Southward there are two Roads upon the Coast of Barbary, Safin and Sancta Cruz; and in the middle betwixt them there is a small Island call'd Mogutbore, but no manner of Fish in any of those Places, nor Vessels for that purpose.

To the Southward of Sancta Cruz there is plenty of Hake taken by the Spaniards, who go purposely out of Spain thither to fish: Somewhat I can say hereof, by Proof of a Bark of mine that was freighted from Sevil, and fitted with Salt, Hooks, and Lines, and made a good Return of her Fish into Spain back again.

To the Southward of this Place, and as far as Cape Blanco, the hichermost part of Guinea, there is an excellent Fishing for Porgus, somewhat like to an over-grown Sea-Bream, but much bigger: There are Yearly employ'd out of Spain 50 or 60 Vessels call'd Canterers, upon that Fishing only; and if they escape taking at their return, they make commonly a good Voyage: The only Inconveniency is, That upon that Coast the Winds hang continually betwixt the North and the East, so that many times they are forc'd to run a Westerly Course as far as the Islands of Tercera, which makes the Voyage the longer and more dangerous for meeting with the Enemies.

From this part of Guinea to the Southernmost Place thereof, which is the Cape of Good Hope, the Coast is inhabited by Negroes, except it be in some few Places, where the Portugueses have their Abode; but the Negroes are so ignorant in fishing in Boats, that they know not what belongs to it, tho' there is plenty of Fish for Food, if Fishing were exercis'd.

It is an old Saying, that there is Water

enough in the Sea, but of no Use, because of the Saltness; and Fish sufficient in the Ocean, but not possible to take it. The greatest store of Fish for Food is upon Coasts, especially Islands, where they have space to swim about it; or in Shole Water, where a Line may reach the bottom: For in the main and large Ocean it's impossible to find Ground with all the Lines you can lengthen. Yet in the Hot and Southern Seas, there are these kinds of Fishes for Food, which swim high, and sometimes appear above the Water, (viz.) the Dolphin, the Bonito, the Dorado, and Shark, the last whereof does not Spawn, but Whelp like Birches; the is Ravenous, unwholsome to eat, and so eager upon a Bait, or a Thing she shall snatch at, as I have known them bite a Man's Leg and Thigh away at a Bit, as he has been swimming. These Fishes are taken with Harping Irons, Fishgigs, and Hooks made purposely.

Besides these Fishes, which are good Sustenance to long Voyages, there are also Flying Fishes, but never taken but accidentally, when they are chas'd by the Dolphin, and forc'd to put themselves to flight; but as soon as their Wings or Fins grow dry, they may by chance light into a Ship, for longer they cannot fly.

There are no Islands to the Southward, great or small, beginning with the Tercera's, the Canaries, Cape Verde, all the Islands of the West Indies, the Bermuda's, St. Hellena, &c. but have great store of Fish flocking about them; but the least Number in all the Seas is betwixt the two Tropicks, where there is no use made of them, for want of Harbours, fear of Enemies, and other Inconveniencies. Such Fish as are taken about the Island of St. Hellena, or the Coast of Brazil, the next Westerly Land to it, have a Virtue above all Fishes for delicious Taste and Wholesomeness, in both equal to the best Flesh with us.

Having follow'd and chas'd the Fish as far to the Southward as any known Land has given Light, let me once more return to know what the Northern Seas and the Islands yield in that cold Climate and Habitation, and we shall find it a great Proportion for the Food of Man. The Fish more naturally desire the Cold and Northern Seas, than the Hot and Southern Shores, where the Sun has so predominant a Power and Heat.

And to begin with the Northern Parts of Europe, I will arrive at Denmark, Norway, and Liefland, whose Coasts abound in Fish, as well for their own Food, as for

for Sale abroad: I will call it Food to them, for in many places of Norway and Finland it serves for Bread to the Inhabitants. after it is dry'd in the Frost, and made Stockfish.

Now let us leave these Shores, and stand over to the Islands plac'd in those Northern Seas, a great many whereof belong to the Crown of Denmark; as namely North-fare, containing 30 in Number, Friseland, Iceland, and others. And it is a marvelous thing to see with what abundance of Fish they are frequented, and what a number of Ships resort thither to take them, and after to vend them: For to speak of England alone, there go Yearly from the Northern and Eastern Coast 150 Ships, which employ 2500 Seafaring Men, that upon all occasions are ready to serve their Prince and Country.

All these Trades aforesaid are not to be told like new Stories, to breed Wonders; for Time has approv'd it ever since those Lands have been known to us: But as God gave a new Light of a new World by the Discovery of America, now daily known and frequented by us of Europe, and whose Soil yields Benefit to the Christian World; so did that God, that was the Maker of the Land, shew himself the same God, in pouring forth his Blessing upon the Sea, by the Riches and Encrease thereof, wherein England had some Honour thereby in the Discovery of Newfoundland, that since prov'd most Commodious to the Commonwealth, and most especially to the Western Parts thereof, by their Yearly Employment of 200 Sail of Ships thither.

The French, the Biscayners, and the Portugueses, were so much encourag'd at our Discovery of Newfoundland, as from that time, till this very day, they have upheld the Trade thereof, by the Fish they call Baccalao, and we Poor John; but by our continual haunting that Coast, we have found an Inconvenience alike, that the Fish grows less, the old Store being consumed by our continual Fishing.

The Biscayners not being contented with this Trade, where they found so many Neighbours to join with them, went farther to the Northward, and possess'd themselves of a Harbour which they named the Grand Bay, where they find, besides their Baccalao, abundance of Whales, where they make more Advantage by their Oyl than of the other.

The French being desirous to try Experiments, as well as the Biscayners, found a Fishing-Land 50 Leagues off to Sea from Newfoundland, and call'd it the Bank, where commonly they make two Voyages Yearly, without resorting ashore to dry their Fish, and therefore it is call'd Wet fish: And this I hold one of the best Means to maintain their Mariners in all France, which if in time of War we seek to beat them from this Fishing, we shall find them but indifferent Enemies at Sea.

The French alone, and no other Nation, have continu'd a Footing in these Countries, tho' we have often attempted to do the like, and fail'd. But in the late Years of our Wars with France, in 1628, we took their Fort, and possess'd it some time.

The English have had more absolute Trade to Newfoundland since the Year 1585 than ever before; for in that Year the War broke out betwixt Spain and us: Whereupon the Queen sent certain Ships to take such Biscayners and Portugueses as fished there; a Service of great Consequence, to take away the Ships and Victuals from our Enemies Subjects; and since that they have almost abandon'd their Fishing thereabouts. Out from these Men thus taken, and brought for England, came the great Sickness that the Judges and Justices died of at Exeter.

Going Southward from Newfoundland, the English have had a new Plantation, by the Favour of the Sea, that yields them great store of better and a larger sort of Fish than the other Coast does; only it is too thick to dry, and therefore not to be vend'd in the Streights, or the Southernmost part of Spain.

As you sail from thence farther to the Southward, tho' it be as far as the Streights of Magellan, you shall find all that Coast in the Nature of the Shores of Africa, as low as the Cape of Good Hope, both in the Condition of the Fish, and in Taking it: But something I will say of strange Fish found in the West Indies and the Coast of Brazil, not known to us in these Parts.

There is a Fish in the West Indies call'd the Malatia, that has a Stone in its Head the most Sovereign Remedy for the Cholic in the World.

The Tortoise, now familiar to us, by our usual Navigations into the Indies. They lay very large Eggs, and a great quantity together, which are hatch'd in the Sand by the Heat and Operation of the Sun: The young ones as soon as hatch'd creep into the Sea.

I will not speak of the Remora, that stays and stops a Ship in her Course under Sail, because I have spoken sufficiently of it, treating of the East Indies.

Upon the Coast of Brazil, these several Fishes are of Account, and Name; the Varania, good Meat to eat, and as big as any Ox.

Z z z the

The Ox-Fish, a Fish-Royal, esteem'd above all Fishes, and healthful to eat; of a good Taste, either fresh or Salt; it eats rather like Beef than Fish.

The Bonaporia, like a Sturgeon, of a good taste and wholsome; abundance of them are taken in the Sea with Hooks and Lines.

The Ox-Eye, is like the Tunney, an excellent Fish, and looks like the Eye of an Ox.

The Canwy, a Royal Fish, and much esteem'd; it is Fat, Wholsome, and of a good Taste; it yields good Store of Butter.

The Wild Fish, which the Indians call Peckanube, and know where it lies by its Snoring: It is of a good Bigness, Taste, and much esteem'd: All Fishes found upon the Coast of Portugal, are there also in abundance.

There are many Sword Fishes and Whales, betwixt whom there are frequent Battles, as I have shew'd before.

The Whales upon these Southern Coasts are more furious and dangerous than in the Northern, tho' the Northern be the bigger, but not so nimble with the Tail, which is the peril of the Whale; for if a Boat come a head of her, she cannot do much hurt, but in rising from the bottom, as I have shew'd before.

There are many venomous Fishes upon that Coast, as namely the Toad-fish, of a small bigness; taking it out of the Water it snorts, and Poison lies in its Skin, and whosoever eats it with the Skin, dies.

There are other Fishes of the same nature like Toad-fishes.

The Perachie is like a Scate, and whosoever toucheth it, has the Pallie, or is benumm'd; The Camaruma, the Amoriatie; the Anicurub, the Irepourungo, besides many others that are venomous.

There are many Mermaids and strange Shell fishes, as well those that are known to our Coast, as others unknown.

I have seen a Fish very monstrous in the Island of Flores, that appears with its Finns about the Gills, above the Water 4 or 5 Yards, and its Jaws gaping above a Yard broad, which puts the Beholders in fear. This kind of Fish I never knew nor heard of but in that place.

Something concerning Whales, and several sorts of Monstrous Fishes.

And now another while I will speak of Monstrous Fishes, that are useful and profitable, but not to be valu'd or eaten for Food, and these they are; The Whale, the Grampus, the Porpus, the Sea Horse, or Morda, the Seal, &c. All these afford the Commodity of Oil which is made of them, when dead; and the manner to kill them is so commonly known, that I need not repeat it: The Whale yields, besides Oil, Bones, which are for divers uses employ'd in several Trades; the yields Sperma Ceti, the Virtue whereof is known to us, and is sold by Apothecaries. Some are of Opinion that the Amber-greece comes from the Whale, and is cast ashore where it is found.

Some there are likewise that believe the Teeth of the Sea-Horse are Medicinal; but for my part I believe the contrary, and that the only use to be made of them, is for Harts of Knives, and other Works that Ivory is put to.

The Whale, and most of the other Fishes, are as frequent and common in the hot and Southern Climates, as in the cold and Northern Countries, tho' we only use the Cold, as Greenland, where we kill, and make great benefit of them.

The European Shores have the least number of Whales, which I impute to Shore-Water, because the greatest quantity, known, are about the great Bay of Biscay, from which place we were instructed in our Whale-fishing, when we began it in Greenland.

The Whales that are found dead amongst us, of which I have had some proof by one or two cast upon Land, come dead ashore by some hurt receiv'd at Sea; for the nature of the Whale, after she is hurt, is to seek the Land, where she leaves her Body to enrich him that has right to her, by her coming upon his Shore.

Besides the great Number of Whales that make their Habitation in the North Seas, and the farther Northward the greater store, there are abundance of them upon the Coast of Brazill, the West-Indies and Guinea, which may the better appear by the Indians conceit, who thought the first Ships they saw, when the Spaniards came thither upon the Discovery, had been Whales.

Upon the Coast of Brazill, there are such abundance, that if the Portugueses, who dwell there, would employ themselves in killing them, it would prove a commodious thing; but I conceive the reason they put it not in practice, is the mass of Gain they make by their Wood and Sugars, holding the other not worth their Labour, and having no vent for it but in Portugal.

By this you may perceive the Pains and Industry of Man, and the difference betwixt Men and Nations; for if the Hol-

landers were Planted in Brazill, and had that benefit of the Whale, the others have, they would, and might very well, with their cheapness of Freight, serve Europe with their Train Oil from thence; for I remember, that Two Ships of Holland went to Saldina's Bay, as far as the Cape of Good Hope, to kill Whale (for upon that Coast there are abundance) but it happened that one of the Two Ships was there wracked, which perhaps might discourage farther proceedings upon that Voyage.

But if we consider the Industry of the Hollanders, and compare it with the Sloth of the Portugueses, that the Hollanders went 2000 Leagues to lade themselves with Train Oil, when the Portugueses might have done the like at their own home, and rejected it; we must consequently attribute as great Praise to the one, as we may Blame and Sloth to the other.

There are many Dangers that may happen, and have happen'd to Ships, by their accidental meeting with Whales at Sea; some whereof I will mention upon my own Knowledge. The nature of a Whale is, when he receives a Hurt, to seek the bottom of the Sea, and with fury to rise up again, and shew her self above Water; if in Rising she chance to come under the Keel of a Ship, she utterly destroys the Ship, and the Men in her.

I remember, that being upon the Coast of Barbary, and not far from a Whale, in 1587. I saw her mount above the Water, as high as the top of a Ship, occasion'd, as we conceiv'd, by the Sword-fish, who is an Enemy to the Whale, and upon their Encounter, cunningly gets under the Belly of the Whale, and with his Sword vexeth, and forceth her to mount above the Water, as I have said: This Whale, upon her falling down again into the Water, made a greater noise than the report of a Cannon.

A Whale in a Calm betokens foul weather, for there cannot be a truer sign of a Storm, than Whales and Porpoises playing upon the Water. It happen'd in the Ship in which I was taken Prisoner, off the Burlings in 91. the day sevennight before my taking, in the night time the Ship gave stem to a Whale that lay a sleep with her Back above the Water; the accident was so strange and rare, that it amazed the Company, who gave a sudden shriek, thinking the Ship had been foundered upon a Rock; but looking overboard they beheld the Sea all bloody, which comforted them, conceiving it to be as they found it, it was a Stem upon a Whale.

In the Year 1589. being at the Islands Azores with my Lord of Cumberland, after our overthrow at St. Maries, as I have shew'd in my First Book, and have had more particular occasion to speak of it in my Fifth Book; to bring this for an example of the greatest hazard I ever endur'd in my life, occasion'd by a Whale there, as you shall understand; to which place I refer you, because I will not be too tedious in this Discourse.

In the Reign of King James, there was a Ship of Portsmouth, the Owner thereof, my good friend Captain Towersen by name, who in her way in company of other Ships, to a Fishing in Newfoundland, gave Stem to a Whale as she lay asleep; the Ship had all her Sails drawing, and a large Wind, but for want of the Companies looking out, she gave such a blow to the Whale, that she presently foundred; but by the help of other Ships of her company the Men were preserved, who otherwise had perish'd.

Many other Accidents of this kind have hap'n'd to Ships, which I need make no repetition of, they are so common; and this shall suffice for the subject of Fishing, as well for Food, as others that yield the commodity of Oil.

I will speak little of the Mermaid, because there are diversities of Opinions; some think there are none, others that there are, tho' there be little doubt thereof, for we shall find in the year 1332. in our English Chronicles, one taken in England, another in Holland, and a Third in Britany; for the Relation whereof I refer you to the Authors aforesaid.

There is a Tradition to this day in Galicia, one of the Kingdoms of Spain, that a Mermaid coming out of the Sea, ingendred with a Woman ashore, and begot on her a Child: And to speak of later times, I see divers have seen them, who are now alive and can justify it.

There are other strange Fishes to be seen on the Coast of Norway, and especially in 68 Degrees of Latitude, which are very wonderful, besides the great dangers, and other particularities belonging to that Sea more than any other yet discover'd.

In the Country and Height aforesaid, there is a Well call'd by the Name of Nael-Stream, which Well draws the Water to it with an In-drought, and with so great a Fore-Noise and Dread to the Hearers during the time of the Flood, which is 6 Hours, that it is to be wonder'd at above all Wonders a Man can report.

The Force and Violence of this Flood is such, that its Power reaches two Miles about it every way; so that if a Ship or Vessel happen to be within that Compass, it draws her into its bottomless Gulph, where she is swallow'd up, and perishes.

The Ebb has the contrary Effect, which endures the said Space of 6 Hours, and sets off with the same Violence the Flood draws to it, inasmuch that it will not suffer the heaviest thing that can be thrown over board to sink. At this Ebb, the Fishermen use to take away many sorts of strange deform'd Fishes, not seen elsewhere upon any Coast whatsoever; one whereof I will take special notice of, which has been avow'd to me by a very sufficient Man, who saw it: It is like an Eel, and 100 Fathom long, which has sometimes entred a Boat on the side and pass'd through her on the other side; and if it be cut asunder, which a Knife may well do, it casts forth the greatest Stink in the World, and enough to poison a Man that smells it.

Some are of Opinion, that the Stream passes under the Ground through the Parts of Norway, and bursts out again at the Northernmost Part of Finland, where is another Neal-Stream, tho' not so violent or dangerous as this, and where the same kind of Fish are taken as in the other aforesaid.

This Place is call'd by some, the Mael of the Sea; and some think, the Ebbs and Floods upon all the Coasts on this side the Equinoctial are caus'd out of this miraculous Neal-Stream. I set this down but as a Conjecture, not to be rely'd on, for the Secret of Ebbing and Flowing is only known to God, and not to be apprehended by Man; and so the Philosophers acknowledge.

There are other Dangers appearing upon our Coast, but not so terrible and fearful as those of Norway; and for which, there may be Reasons given, (as namely) the Race of Portland in Dorsetshire, the Race of Conques in Brittany, the Race of Lyons in Italy; and I have seen another, not much inferior to the least of these, at the Isle of Palma in the Canaries.

That of Portland has been the Destruction of many a Ship and Man, tho' it may be avoided, either by going within it towards the Land, or without it to Sea. The Ship of War wherein I went the first time to Sea, in her return from the Coast of Spain in her second Voyage after, where she had made a profitable Voyage, taking sundry Spaniards, as her Lading would have witness'd, out of a Covetousness to gain a League or two, tho' she might have easily avoided it, put her self into the Race, little valuing the Danger, and was presently swallow'd up in view of her Comforts, and neither Man nor Boy escap'd.

The cause of these Races that makes the bubbling and turning of the Water and Streams, is the meeting of Tides, and the foulness and rockiness of the Ground, which makes that space of the Sea where this happens, to boil up like a Pot upon the Fire.

There are other Places where the Tide sets with wonderful force and swiftness, as well upon the Ebb as Flood; and namely Pintley Frith, which divides the whole Continent of Britany from the Islands of Orkney; I have pass'd it, and found such admirable Tides, that I was amaz'd. I have heard People thereabouts say, That the force of that Tide is such, that if a Ship chance to Anchor in it, and the Cable and Anchors hold, the strength of the Stream is so violent, that she will be swallow'd up at an Anchor.

In the Island of Orkney joining to it, as also upon the Coast of Norway, the Tide sets with that force, that he who knows not the nature of it will be afraid to approach near the Shore; and yet Experience tells us, that the Tide sets from the Land, and keeps a Ship from running on Shore.

The Sea produces many other strange Things of Nature, which I forbear to repeat; but the Thing I covet to know, is what Wonders the Sea produces under the North Pole, not yet attempted by any Nation, tho' the English have approach'd nearest it since the Discovery of the Island of Greenland, whither they resort to kill their Whale.

Philosophers mention four Indraughts in the Ocean Sea, in the four Quarters of the World; from whence many conjecture, that as well the Flowing of the Sea, as the Blasts of the Wind, have their Original: But these being Mysteries above my Capacity or Reading, and nothing tending to the Subject of Fishing, which at last I have brought to an End, I will draw to a Conclusion of my whole Six Books, making account, after a long and tedious Navigation, I am at last arriv'd in a safe and secure Port, where I have leisure to recollect my self, and think of my Errors past, in taking so great Pains to so little purpose, as to write so many Lines and Leaves of the Sea only, few Gentlemen delighting in it, or making Profession of it; but before I end, as in my former Navigation I have spoke of the Profit of Fishing, I will set down the Enemy to Fishermen and Fishing in this that followeth.

There is no Action at Sea, be it great or small, that brings not with it both Charge and Danger, nor no Business so easie that can be done without Pains and Difficulty : And this Subject we are now upon, that is Fishing, the only thing that is requir'd in it is Labour and Pains ; for Danger is little to be regarded, considering it is not far from home we are to seek our Profit, nor our Harbours so few, but they may be enter'd for our Safeties both Day and Night, by erecting Lights.

But indeed the greatest Danger that may be fear'd to our Fishermen, is Interruption of Pirates, who are the very Scum of a Common-wealth, and People to be abhorred by all Honest and Laborious Men. It is usual, when these Miscreants fail of relief of Victuals, and are made desperate by want of it, to place all their hopes of Food upon the poor painful Fishermen who we may truly say get their Living with more Hazard, with more Pains, with more Cold and Watching, than any other Trade or People whatsoever : Their Labour produces nothing that is ill, but the best help for Man, which is Food to live on.

Husbandmen and Fishermen are the Upholders of Common-Wealths ; all other People live by their Labours. They are Stewards to provide sustenance to feed on, and yet comparing them together there is great difference betwixt their Lives and Pains : The Husbandman's Work is without Danger or Hazard, and if he be wet, he has present help of Fire to dry him ; he is allow'd a Bed instead of the other's Board to lie on ; his Diet is certain and in a quiet manner, when the others are tost too and fro without a steadfast standing : If the one be cold, he may recover himself with Exercise and Work ; if the other be cold, he is made colder, his Labour being in cold Water ; the one keeps his certain Hours for sleep, the other has no certain time to rest, but must attend his danger, which he is never free from : Every hour he must be ready to look out for his Shole of Fish, and watch his opportunity of Weather and Tide to take them. The one has pleasure on Holidays, and is free from Labour ; all Days are alike to the other, and the Sunday can give no more Content or Comfort than the rest of the Week.

What Heart can be so hard'n'd, or Pities so pitiless, as to disturb those harmless and innocent Creatures, that make Pains their Pleasure, and their Labour their Country's Plenty, procuring good for it by their own Toils. And because such wickedness will never scape unpunish'd or unrevenged, as these Pirates commit upon such harmless People, I will a while digress from the Subject I have in hand, and relate a Strange and Tragical Accident that deservedly belet two Pirates that were disturbers of the Innocent Fishing.

A Story of two Pirates.

After my Return from Ireland in 1614, where I had been employ'd to suppress the Arrogance and Insolence of Pirates, and where I punish'd the Conning that was betwixt those People and the Inhabitants of that Kingdom, I once again sent a Bark for that Coast, to be inform'd how things stood after I left them, and whether the severe Course I had taken against them, in doing Justice by Death upon one of them, wrought better effect than before.

The first Harbour my Bark arriv'd in, she met a Pirate named Tucker, a Seaman bred from his Youth, and continual Practice made him Excellent in his Art and Profession ; he was very glad upon this Occasion of meeting my Bark to insinuate into my Man's acquaintance, thinking thereby it would be a means for him to bewail himself to me, and to obtain the thing next to Life he desir'd, which was his Pardon, tho' he departed with the best part of his Spoils, which were things of good value.

His Persuasion prevailed so far with my Servant, that tho' his Directions were to view the Northern Parts of Ireland, where I had lately been, and there to enquire after the Behaviour of Pirates, and the Entertainment the Country gave them, yet, as I have said, by the Importunity of Tucker, my Man was diverted from his Employment, and persuaded to return with his Letter of Submission to me, on whom he wholly cast himself to dispose of, with promise there to stay a certain time to expect my Answer ; and to sweeten me the more, he presented me with a Token worth accepting, but that I was always cautious in such Cases how to connive at Pirates, as in my Letter I expressed. I mistrusted, before he could receive my Answer, the Winds then hanging contrary, he would depart from Ireland ; whereupon I directed divers Letters to one effect, and sent them by several ships if they should chance chance to meet Tucker upon their way in their Voyages. But as I have shew'd the last refuge Pirates have for Victuals, is to feed upon the Fishermen, and Tucker finding that Ireland could not supply him, by the strict course I had formerly taken, was forced to go to the Northward to seek succour of the Poor Fishermen, a contrary Course to the Ships that carry'd my Letters: And coming to the North Farro, there he met with another Pirate of the same sort, but far less honest, as it prov'd. These two concerted together as Thieves use to do in Mischief.

The Islands of Farro are dangerous, by reason of the great Tides, and their setting; and it happen'd that Tucker's Ship was wreck'd upon one of them, in company of his Companion the other Pirate, who seeing it, did not degenerate from his kind, for all Spoils were alike to him, Friend or Foe; instead of help in that case of Distress, play'd the Part of a Hawk over his Prey, and had no more pity of him than of a Spaniard, who were most obnoxious to Pirates in those Days.

To be short, this Pirate, who falsely call'd himself Monnocho, suddenly possess'd himself of Tucker's Ship, Himself, his Wealth and Company, and us'd them with that rigorous Cruelty, as tho' his action had been lawful, and allow'd by Authority to punish Delinquents and Offenders, and rather out of Fear than Pity, he shew'd Mercy to their Lives; and mistrusting if he should detain them in his own Ship, they might make a Party and Faction, for the Condition of such People, is never to be constant, or honest, no longer than their Devilish Humours hold; therefore, to avoid any such Tumult, Monnocho seiz'd upon an English Fisherman, amongst many others he had taken, and put Tucker and his Company into her, to seek a new Fortune, which you must think was like to thrive, if you consider their Course of Life. And here they parted company like two Wolves that should separate themselves to seek their Prey, they care not where, nor of whom, purposing never to see one another, unless the Gallows gave them a Meeting. Monnocho was a Fellow of as base a Condition as his present Profession made him, being not long before a Surgeon's Mate, in a Pinace serving under me. And now hovering about those Islands, it was his hap to meet a Ship of the King of Denmark's, to whom the Islands belong: This Ship, after a little Encounter, apprehended, and knew well what to do with him, so just that Nation is to the detestable Course of Sea-Rovers.

Here Monnocho found worse Usage than he gave Tucker; for the time was not long before his Ship made a Return into Denmark, and in as short a while after he tasted deserved Death upon the Gallows, where he hung a Spectacle for all Men to behold.

Now Monnocho is brought to the Destiny by right due to him, I will go scour the Seas, and look if I can spy Tucker, being out of hope to find his Ship put to that use for which she was first designed, I mean Fishing.

After Tucker had spent some time at Sea, Dominiering over the poor Fishermen; they now tir'd with the Usurping Tyranny of the Pirates, and being desirous to live by honest Labour, rather than by evil Pains, privately practis'd, and watching their Opportunity, effected that they had determined to put in execution; which was suddenly to surprize and seize upon the Pirates Persons, when they should least suspect it.

The Attempt prov'd Fortunate; for some they slew, and others they hurt; and Tucker they took Prisoner, and insulted over him, as he had done before over them.

This lucky Accident made the Fishermen repair to Shore, to supply their wants, their Provisions being consum'd by the Pirates; as also to deliver the Men, as Delinquents, into the hands of Justice, who were after convey'd to the Marshalsea in Soutbwarck, where they daily expected the Doom of Death.

The poor Man, Captain Tucker, being Hopeless and Friendless, sent me word of his Misfortunes after his departure from Ireland, bewailing his hard Hap and heavy Chance, not to meet with any of my Letters, written to him as aforesaid: He shew'd the Comfort of Life was taken from him, and confess'd his Offences were above Satisfaction; and that I was the only Sheet-Anchor he was to rely on, otherwise he was to perish.

I confess I was much mov'd and griev'd with his Calamity, when I remember'd how his Penitency appear'd in his former Letter to me, repenting his Misdoings, and detesting his kind of Life, with a desire of Pardon and Forgiveness of his Offences past.

This Complaint came at an unlucky Hour, both for him and me, it being in the midst of the time that Malice set her self against me; for in few days after I was unjustly committed to the Tower, and yet I thank God by his Providence, not an Hour before I was imprison'd, I had finish'd

and ended his Pardon, that I might say the Ending of his Trouble was the Beginning of my own, but not through his Cause or Occasion.

Tucker being set at Liberty, was to dispose of himself as he should be guided by Grace. And to give some sign of his Thankfulness for the Favour I did him, he resolv'd not to depart London, what shift soever he made to live, till he had acknowledg'd his Life from me; and tho' at that time there was a general restraint of all People's resorting to me in the Tower, yet that Prohibition was no sooner taken off, but Tucker was one of the First that repair'd to visit me, with that Protestation of Thankfulness, and Vows of Amendment of his Life, that he gave me Satisfaction it proceeded from a Penitent Heart. It joy'd me much to see his Reformation, and I held my self happy for the Deed I had done, in regaining a lost Sheep that had stray'd out of the Flock.

His Credit being lost, which made him unfit for Employment, mov'd Pity in me what Course to put him into; for no Beginner can set up a Trade without a Stock to enable him: And to Requie his remembrance of me, by the Token he sent me from Ireland, I return'd him the better Part of that Gift, wishing that good Fortune would attend his happy Beginning.

He was not long determining with himself, but immediately took a Voyage to Denmark, whither he had often before Traded. Arriving there, and having occasion to go about his Affairs, it happen'd that passing a River, the Ferryman of the Boat knew him by an infallible Token, for not long before, the Man was taken by Tucker at Sea. The Fellow had no sooner landed him and his Fare, but speedily he hasten'd to the Magistrate, requiring a Warrant for his Apprehension, alledging the Cause; which was no sooner demanded than granted, all People of that Country being naturally bent to revenge themselves upon Offenders in that kind.

Being thus arrested, he was carry'd to Prison, where he received the Rigour of Justice, and upon Trial, by the Witnes of the Ferryman, was Sentenc'd to die. The Gibbet was erected near joining to that where Monuco, his former Companion, was still hanging for him to behold, which was very odd: For it is not the Greatness of the Person, nor of the Accident, makes a wonder the Greater, for all Things, be they great or little, are at the Disposal of GOD alone, who many times advances the Mean, and casts down the Mighty. And it is worthy of Observation, how in many Cases he gives Light to Men, to discern his just Punishment to some, for example of Amendment of Life to others.

And amongst the rest, this Accident of these mean and ungodly Pirates is no less strange, if we call to mind God's justice towards them, if you will consider the first Progress of their Beginning till Death cut them off, as it does all People that commit unnatural Crimes, for such Men never escape without cruel Revenge; for a Father of the Church saith, He ceases to be a Man, and becomes a brute Beast, that leaves the Rules of Reason and Humanity, and gives his Mind to Mischief and Sensuality.

These two Mens cursed Courses are not unlike a Novel; First, in their unexpected meeting in remote Islands, where they were both Strangers; Secondly, That upon their meeting they profess'd and vow'd Friendship, tho' I must say, that the Agreement of ill Men in Mischief cannot be call'd Friendship; but call it what you will it did not long continue, for there was a Bone cast betwixt them, as it were betwixt two ravenous Mastiffs to strive for, and the Stronger to carry it away.

After these two Pirates had parted Company, the one stood to the Northward, the other to the Southward, a quite opposite Course to one another, and where there was never likelihood of meeting more, but rather to avoid and elchew each other, their Quarrel was so mortal, and yet both of them tasted one Fortune alike, first in their Apprehension, and after in their manner of Execution: But above all, the Place never doubted or fear'd by them, and where perhaps in many Ages the like will not happen again, it being out of the Road way for such People to resort to.

This shall suffice for God's Justice by Example of these two Mifcreant Pirates, and his Deseatation to their wicked Courses against the silly and innocent Fishermen, who, we may truly affirm and say, of all other People, get their Living with the painful Sweat of their Brows.

I must not omit to give divers Precedents of God's miraculous working in the Example of Fishing. Some I have heard avow'd in the Places where these Accidents have happen'd, others I have by Report, which is not so much to be credited; as name'y at Tenbigl in Wales, a Place not inferior to any that I know in his Majesty's three Kingdoms, for Situation, Air, Plenty and Pleasure, which in times past enjoyed a plentiful Fishing: The other is the Island of the Lewes, I have so often treated of.

These two Places abounding at several times with an extraordinary quantity of Fish, the Minister of the one, and the Bishop of the other, envying the Prosperity of the poor Fishermen, being led out of a covetous Desire, sought to impose a greater Tax by way of Tythe, than had ever been before paid to their Predecessors, which was no sooner questioned but the Fish vanished, and for a time became Strangers to those Shores where this happened; and as I will not conclude of the Cause thereof, yet I will say with a Father of the Church, Non est bonum ludere cum sanctis.

This shall suffice for so much as is contain'd in my Sixth Book, touching Fish and Fishing, and the Merchantable Commodity arising out of it; in which I will compare my lot to a Merchant, that freights his Ship with sundry and several Commodities, and sends them to several Ports, thinking by the variety of Wars to countervail the Charge of the rest; for what Commodity is desir'd in one Country, is commonly little esteem'd in another; as by Example of Gold, which above all other things is covet'd in these Parts of the World where we live, and nothing accounted of by the Indians where it is produc'd; Hatchets, Knives and Glasses, are held Gross, Base, and of little Value by us, and yet esteem'd in the highest degree of Treasure amongst them; and so fares it with these six Books, which are freighted and stuff'd with superfluity of needless Collections: Some perhaps may be delighted, and take advantage of them, how unworthy soever they may seem of themselves, for I remember the saying of that matchless and generous Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, That there was no Book so bad but had some good in it.

Whosoever is desirous to be inform'd in Sea Affairs and Actions in the late Wars betwixt Spain and England, will find it in one of my six Books. Whoever will seek to avoid Errors and Oversight by example of that War, may learn it. Whoever shall desire to know how a General ought to carry himself in the Government of his Fleet, will be instructed in it. Whosoever covets to understand how to Defend his Country, and Offend others by Sea, shall be taught it. Whosoever is desirous to sail into any of the four Quarters of the World, as America, Europe, Asia, and Africa, shall find the Sea open, and discover'd to his hands. Whosoever will delight himself with the Passages, Troubles and Conquests of the Spaniards and Portugueses, and their Enterprizes upon new Worlds, shall understand it. Whosoever will hear how the Indians were reduc'd to Civility and Christianity, he shall not be ignorant in it. Whosoever will put his hand to further such Projects as are contained in the Six Books, shall not only see Reasons to induce him, but shall deserve everlasting praise of his Country for his forwardness in them. Whosoever of an Englishman will live no longer in Ignorance of what our Seas produce to enrich them, shall have it discover'd to their hands. Things to be admir'd at, when they shall remember their former Errors.

I will say, with Sir Philip Sidney, if any of these prove Profitable, Commendable, or Delightful, the Author is not to be condemn'd or blam'd, for indeed he is like the Merchant spoken of before, that must seek to put off his Ware not by words, but worth; and as he reserves himself to the Buyer, so do I this Discourse to the Reader, to judge at his Pleasure; for Things give better Counsel to Men, than Men to Things; and in recompence for my Labour and Pains I only crave a favourable Construction, howsoever they shall appear in your Concept.

An Addition to the Sixth and Last Book of Fishing, and the Reasons why it was divided from the other former Discourse.

I Forbear to annex this Addition to the former Relation of Fishing, to avoid giving publick Offence to the Hollanders; for it is an old Saying, That Truth many times turns a Man to Rub; and I see that the present Policy of our State is rather to dissemble an Injury, than to revenge it, tho' the Hollanders secret Envy is more to be feared than when they declare themselves openly against us: But yet it shall appear that I have not been altogether ignorant of their Beginnings and Rise, but have carefully beheld their Proceedings and Actions, and can judge of their malicious Detractions to us, and others; which is the Nature of Faction, at first to shew it self humble, till it mount to the top of Ambition.

Our Eyes and Senses make it clearly appear, that they and their cunning Courses are the mediate Causes of the Poverty that daily afflicts our Glorious Kingdom, as I shall Instance some Particulars within the Land, before I ingulf my self into the open Sea, which are as follow:

What Trades and Artificers of all kinds do they set up, to the ruine of many a poor Englishman, that has liv'd an Apprentice and Bondman 7 years to attain his Art and Occupation?

What Trades are there in which they have not Stocks going, or Scriveners with Money to lend?

What Land is to be sold, or Mortgage to be had, that they have not the first Refusal of?

What Marriages of Man or Woman falls amongst them, that they will enrich the English with, so long as any of their Country or Tribe is found amongst them?

What Maritime Town, or other of Account, within 20 Miles of the Sea, opposite to Holland, that is not stuffed and fill'd with their People, to the impoverishing of the Inhabitants and Dwellers?

What Masses of Money and Gold have they, against the Laws of the Realm, transported out of it, as Truth has made it plain?

What Loss did they to the King and Kingdom when they and their Faction oppos'd the brave Work of Dying and Dressing of Cloths, after it was in a good way of going forward?

What hurt or hindrance do they to our Navigation, when they freight strange Vessels, and refuse the English Ships?

What an innumerable Wealth have these People attain'd to, whose Beginning was nothing when they made their first Entrance into this Kingdom? If it be consider'd, it will appear to be admirable.

And for all these Domestick Damages the Subjects receive, his Majesty has no more Benefit by them than if they were natural English.

These are the least to what shall appear when I launch into the Ocean, and there encounter them; but in the mean time I will unmask their Craft and Cunning, and discover the Subtlety of their English Friends to entrap us in the Snarcs of their Policy, under the false Colours and Pretence of Security to the State.

As well the one as the other desires it may be held a Maxim of State, That the Security of England must depend upon the Fortunes of Holland; a foul Imputation they cast upon us, when we remember the Noble and Victorious Actions of our Forefathers, who made other Nations fear them, and they to fear none: But this Position is devis'd to serve private Men's Purposes, contrary to Truth or Reason, as I will make it appear to the Judgment of wise Men. But under this conceiv'd Colour the Hollander plays the part of a Panther, which has a Sweet Scen<sup>e</sup> but a loathsome Face, which makes other Beasts follow till he has got them into his Clutches. And the Hollanders have so entrapp'd us, that we are caught in their Nets, and by Nets we must be freed: We are made silly Fishes to be enstar'd by the subtilty of those Fishermen; but I hope we shall be releas'd and reliev'd by Fish, with our Endeavour and Pains.

Now to hoist Sail and put to Sea, to encounter, at least to discover, the Hollanders Insolencies, their Practices, their Deceits and Designs, wherein I will make the indifferent Reader wonder, and after judge how dangerous a thing it was to put Arms into their Hands, and how necessary it is to bring them into the same State of Shipping they were before the Wars.

I will begin with the Days of Queen Elizabeth, speaking to the Watchmen of our Commonwealth of that time, and use an old Phrase without Application, That Profit and Bribery makes a Judge blind.

Was it Discretion and Safety in those Men, after the Hollanders had engaged us in the War with Spain, that our Ships were arrested, our Goods forfeited, and from thenceforward prohibited Traffick, yet to suffer the Hollanders to continue as absolute a Trade into Spain as in time of Peace, and supply them with Ammunition, Shipping, Mariners, and Intelligence against us? And rather than their manner of War should cease, by which they engrossed the entire Trade into their hands, if ever the King of Spain's Army in Flanders, or his Armado in Spain, should have wanted Powder, or other Abillments for the War, they would have supply'd him: For all their Drift was no more than to keep us fevered from Spain, and to prolong the War for their Benefit of Commerce and Traffick. This was the beginning of their Rising, to our Ruine; and from this very day we must reckon, as from the Birth of a Child, their first Life and Prosperity.

Was it Security for us when our Watchmen gave way to Monsieur, Brother and next Heir Apparent to the Crown of France, and who had succeeded his Brother if he had outliv'd him, to be invested Duke of Brabant, who had then enjoy'd the Low Countries with France, and who was no sooner plac'd in it, but he began treacherously to practise, by Example of Amwerp and other Places?

Was it the part of Friends, and with whom they had lately leagu'd, that when the King of Spain employ'd a Fleet against England, or upon Defence of his own Coast, he had Ships, Men, and his principal Pilots, Hollanders, who were either prest in Spain, or willingly serv'd against us?

Was it not Cunning in the Hollanders, and Fraud to us, when the greatest Trade of the Spaniards and Portugueses into the West-Indies, Guinea, and Brazil, was in Holland Ships, which defended the Spaniards Goods from the English, with more Slaughter to the English when they encounter'd, than ever we receiv'd from Spain? Here they supported an Enemy by Nature, to hurt and injure a Friend by Fact and Proof.

Was it Safety to us, or Honesty in the Hollanders, in the Year 99, that Her Majesty rigg'd and furnish'd a Royal Navy upon a sudden Service, and expected Assistance of Ships from them by Contract, that in Conclusion they sent but 7 Ships, and such, that the worst of ours was better than the best of theirs? Here they let us unprovided to encounter a Danger; for a Foe is as good that hurts not, as a Friend that helps not.

Was it Security, Honour or Profit to us, that with an Expence of more Men and Money than we have Conquer'd Kingdoms hitherto, we have maintain'd their Principality, making Mechanick Persons equal with Princes, rais'd a Rabble Commonwealth against the Monarchy, train'd up their People in Discipline of War; that of a mean and timorous Generation we have put Valour and Knowledge of Arms into their Hands? And for all these unspeakable good Turns done them, we have no more Assurance from them, than Discourtesies we receive in all Parts where we meet: And no marvel; for Popular States write Favours in Dull, Injuries in Marble.

Was it Security, in all the time of War, to suffer our prime Soldiers, and of all Degrees, to be under their Subjection, the most part of our Wealth exhausted thither; and by Consequence to be in their Power to dispose of this Kingdom as pleas'd most Voices of their Select Council, which in their Government is opposite to Monarchy? For whereas Monarchy propounds Honour as the first thing, the second the Publick Good, and the third Interest; a Popular State prefers private Profit, makes the common Good the second, and Honour the last.

Was it Security to let go the Cautionary Towns, Flushing and Brill, being Bridges to their Insolencies; for by them we could at any time either curb or give them their Reins, as since we find by enjoying that Liberty all their Injuries towards us began, which before they durst not offer outwardly?

Was it, or is it, Security to us to suffer yearly 3000 Vessels of theirs to Fish upon his Majesty's Seas, and infringe his Majesty's Laws of England and Scotland, in which Seas they are bound to acknowledge a Sovereignty to the Kings of both Kingdoms; and under that Pretence of Fishing, they may use this Stratagem cunningly and secretly, to put 10 or 12 Soldiers in every Buik, and under colour of Fishing, to land in some of his Majesty's Dominions, where it is to be feared they will not want a Party?

Is it Safety, when we enter into Consideration, (by the multitude of their Vessels encreas'd out of Fishing) how they insult upon us at our own home and abroad; as namely, in the East-Indies, a thing able to move Pity for the Fact, and Revenge for the doing it: And besides many other Scorns and Disgraces they put upon us, which need no Repetition, because they are fresh in our Memory? They resemble Hecuba, that has a Humane Voice, speaking like a Friend, but is a Wolf, ravening like a Feind.

Is it good and beneficial to us to see the Hollanders enjoy our absolute Trade of the World, and first discover'd by us; and not contented with the moderate Gain to themselves, labour by all indirect Means to impoverish us, in uttering their Commodities at an under Rate, whereby to weary us of all such Trades? For such is their Covetousness, and such their Unthankfulness, that they regard neither Favours done, nor to be done them; and when there is no fear of Revenge, there is little Conscience of Offence in a Covetous Man. Lycurgus says, That Riches and Trade produce a Scarcity of Vertue: And it is a Rule, That prove a Man unthankful, and disprove him in all his other Actions.

By this false Position, That England's Safety must depend upon Holland's Prosperity, we were driven to a War with Spain, and by that War to defend their Commerce; for they never undertook hostile Act by Sea against Spain till oblig'd by Necessity that they were prohibited that Trade: But the greatest Mischief of all others, was tolerating their Fishing, which we only might have enjoy'd; by means whereof we have resign'd our Weapons, which are the Ships encreas'd out of it, into their Hands out of our own, to dispose of to their Advantage and our Hurt, if at any time they comply with their King, and make him thereby mighty by Sea, or if they cast themselves upon the Protection of France, as they will do if France can besteed them more than we. This is a way out of our Cynders to kindle a Fire to burn and consume us.

It may be compar'd to a subtle Woman, who, to abuse the Simplicity of her weak Husband with her Hypocrisy and indirect Practices, draws him to rely on her for the managing of his Estate, being made believe he cannot otherwise subsist, according to the former Proposition; but he dying, her voluptuous Desires discover her foul Intentions, and she despises his Friends and Children. In this Simile Holland is the unnatural Mother, this Kingdom the silly Husband, and the Subject; the outcast and unrespected Children.

Our Warchmen in their Wildoms might have foreseen this and prevented it, by enjoying the Fishing; for then had England kept the same Strength by Sea which Holland has since attained to; then had England undertaken the same Courses in Fishing, as the Hollanders did; then would not England only have outtripp'd them, but all the World, in Strength of Ships and Wealth of Subjects; and by Consequence have caus'd, not only an Admiration, but a Terror, to all the World that should but hear of us, as now we are brought to Reproach and Scorn, by that mean Nation of Holland, in remote Countries, as far as the Indies, where they cast the Imputation of a petty Nation and poor People upon us, and make themselves Sovereigns and Kings over this part of the World; and as Vermine gnaw upon Meat, so do they detract from the worthiest Persons.

In this Trade, as in all others, they either deprave us or deceive; us by Example of a Merchant of Note, who above five years since freighted a Ship of Red-Herrings from Yarmouth to Marseilles, and departed in Company of some Hollanders: It happen'd that by Advantage of Wind and Weather the Hollanders arriv'd at their Port, and made Sale of their Herrings to an exceeding Gain before the other's coming. The English finding the Hollanders unburthen'd of their Lading, some 200 Barrels excepted, desired to buy them at the Rate the others had been sold, thinking thereby to keep up the Price; but the Hollanders sold them at a low Price to hinder and prejudice the others Sale. This Envy of the Hollanders was the greater, in that it was grounded upon Malice, and not founded upon Injury: For Macrobius says, That Anger is encreas'd upon Occasion, but Malice upon ill Condition.

But if we enter into Consideration of our other Trades, which they seek to deprive us of, let their Carriages in Greenland, in Newfoundland, and Russia, appear, three Places first known to us: In Greenland they contested with us in our Whale Fishing, and were like to bring it to a Naval Battel, tho' the Law of Nations casts it upon us as the first Discoverers. Here their Envy appear'd, and they shov'd there is no such dangerous Foe, as the seeming Friend.

Newfoundland being our antient Discovery, and that no Nation could challenge Interest therein but our selves; not many years since the Hollanders practis'd to convey Threescore or Fourscore Mariners, out of the West Country, to instruct them in that manner of Fishing, but it was discover'd and prevented; beware therefore of them, for they are like a Serpent, that never stings so deadly, as when it Bites without Hissing.

Notwithstanding, as I have shew'd before, that they have brought the Trade of Russia, from Two Ships of their to Sixty, and the decrease of ours from Fifteen to Two, yet this would not satisfy them, but they practis'd with the Muscovia Ambassador at the Emperor's Court at Prague, to forbid us the absolute Trade of Russia; like envious Persons that desire no good to any but themselves.

It is no less admirable how they take advantage of us, upon all occasions offer'd, as namely in the year 1628, when our Wars with France prohibited our Trading thither, whereby we were compell'd to be serv'd by the Ships of Holland with the greatest part of Wine that furnish'd this Kingdom.

This Prohibition much encreas'd the Holland Shipping; and they thereby rais'd their Freight to their own Price, and brought it from 24 s. to 4 l. a Tun; a Sum never heard of, but upon that occasion.

One Instance I will make apparent by a Merchant of great Account, himself being Witness, and to whom it hap'n'd; a Holland Ship being in the River of Thames to be sold, this Merchant offer'd 250 l. for her, but could not have her under 300 l. whereupon they parted for this difference of Price, and the Hollander repaired to Bordeaux with his Ship, and there procur'd a Freight for England, which clear'd three times the Value of what he would have sold her for; for to this Merchant's knowledge, he gain'd 900 l. by that Voyage.

One great Advantage the Hollanders have of us, is the Built of their Ships; there being little difference betwixt the Hamburgers, or Easterlings and them. This gives them a Freedom of Trade into all parts, as well Friends as Foes: As Friends they pass for Hollanders, as Enemies they take upon them the name of Easterlings, so that betwixt the one and the other, they circumvent us in our Freights of Ships, and have just occasion to laugh at us; as indeed I confess we deserve it, when I consider what they do is under pretence of Safety to this Kingdom: For good Words, and ill Deeds, deceive the Wilest.

They have many Enticements to draw People and Trade to them; they debar no Man, be he Turk, Jew, or Christian, the Freedom of Religion, which made one truly say, That the true Religion was profest in Amsterdam; for all Sects, be they never so Diabolical, are there allow'd and maintain'd by some or other.

As for their Customs and Excises, tho' they be high, and indeed intolerable within the Land, (for those Mechanick People being in love with the word Liberty, tho' they find it not in effect, live in excessive Slavery, and pay Impositions for every thing they eat or wear) yet any thing brought in by Sea, goes at a low rate; as for example of Wine from Bordeaux, that which pays 900 l. Custom in England, will not come to above 50 l. in Holland; and all other Merchandice after that proportion. And this is the only cause of their great Trade in their Provinces above all other parts.

As these are their Policies at home, so have they no less Deceits abroad, but far less justifiable by the Rules of Honesty; for to make a Man Honest, is to take away the occasion of being Dishonest; but contrary to the Law of Honesty, they injure, and will give no Redress; they will suffer no Wrong, nor yet give satisfaction in things of Right: The thing they call Good in themselves, how ill soever it is to others. But to come to them more particularly,

You shall not be ignorant of a Policy of theirs, wherein they shew'd Craft and Cruelty to the Dunkirkers they took at Sea, only to abuse us; for when they had the Chance to take one of them, which was not often, and that with the advantage of three Ships to one, most inhumanely they would slay them, purposely to make us believe, their Malice was implacable, and irreconcilable; and yet notwithstanding these barbarous Acts, they made their daily Resort and Trade into the Ports of Dunkirk and Flanders, where they supplied them with Victuals, Powder, Shot, or any other things they stood in need of.

And since then, as in the days of King James, in the view of all People, and tho' our Articles of Peace with the Arch-Duke, did warrant our Traffick thither, yet they would forbid it, and seize upon

Ships

Ships of ours, as they entred the Ports of Flanders, seeking to force us to Calais, from whence they knew our Merchandise would be carried to Flunkers; their drift being only to enrich France by our loss, with the Customs we there paid: to thankful People the remembrance of Benefits should never wax old; for no Man is more bound to be grateful than they, who have receiv'd such deep Obligations, as I have prov'd the Hollanders have done from us.

Many Grievances our Merchants have receiv'd from Spain, came by their foul Practices, as namely, by their carrying counterfeit Brass Money into that Kingdom, and laying it upon us; for which we have found a dispendure and punishment due for such an Offence.

In time of Peace, in the Reign of King James, the Hollanders spar'd not to disperse Rumours throughout this Kingdom, of Fleets, and preparations in Spain against us, to our no small scandal, as tho' we were Born to fear; or that our Intelligence seem'd so weak as to receive it from them; when indeed they did it to nourish Jealousies betwixt the Two States, to eat us out of that Trade, as they have done in all others.

He that shall read what is gone before, shall find, that their Ingratitude does as much appear, as a Crow that picks out the Eyes of him that first nourish'd him. And now I will apply my self to the Watchmen of our time, to consider of these Collections following.

1. Whether the ground and foundation of their Positions to make Holland equal in Power with England, was laid with mature Judgment, yea, or no; or out of some private ends to advance themselves, Fortunes and Credit?

2. In the Second I would have them consider, in what Estate Holland, and the People in it, was in, before they contested with their lawful Prince for Sovereignty, to that they are now brought to?

3. The Third, is to consider what a height they are now in, by our conniving with them; and we lessen'd and diminish'd by it.

4. The Fourth, is the damage and hazard we have run in labouring to continue their Greatness, and not seeking to abate it.

5. The Fifth is the Discourtesies done us, out of a covetous desire of Gain, and we still to bear and permit them.

6. The Sixth is the Condition of their English Friends that still uphold their Faction, and what the end of their Deligates are like to prove, if they belet alone?

7. The Seventh is their Strength by Sea, and to think of a means to equal them in number of Shipping, and how to bring their Fishing and other Trades into our hands, which may easily be effected, if my former Proposition of Fishing be prosecuted.

8. And Lastly, it is to be consider'd, what Tie or Security we can have of them, longer than we yield to their insufferable Injuries and Insolencies? For they may well presume, that we bearing so many blows at their hands, without Revenge, demand the more.

And this shall suffice for a Discovery of the Hollanders first beginning in Greatness; their Sixty and odd yeas of continuance, and their present state now in being; wherein their Ingratitude to England is laid open, which the Possians define to be a Spring of Vice, the Enemy of Nature, the Poison of Amity, the Ruine of Gentleness and Benignity. All Men must confels they have found the true affection of Friendship in us, describ'd by Plato, That he is a good Friend who does his Friend good; but a mighty Friend that defends him from harm.

Some other things I forbore to insert in this Sixth Book of Fishing, concerning the Islands Hebrides, and especially the Lewes, worthy of Consideration.

I forbore to handle the Conditions of those Islands, and the use the Hollanders may make of them, for the same Reasons express'd before, as too tart a Sauce for Hollanders Tasts, and unfit to be published to the view of the vulgar sort.

But before I look so far to the Northward as those Islands, I will take a Survey of my own Country of England, and gather such Collections, as to make me understand the other the better.

I will not speak, as I am an Englishman; for all Men naturally are partial to the Country and Soil that first gave them Life and Food; but I will speak according to Sense and Truth, to make my Argument and Reason the stronger in what I shall say of the State of the Islands Hebrides.

As God hath given a Blessing to England above all other Lands he hath plac'd and seated in this World; so as it were with his own Finger he hath settled it in a

Sea

Sea for its own Security ; an annoyance to all other Countries, in permitting and impeaching universal Trades and Navigations, as that we may truly say to that point, That we are only Happy above all others.

For whereas the Southern and richest part of Europe cannot subsist, nor the Traffick of the Indies be maintain'd and upheld without such Materials as are sent out of the Northern Regions : As also, that there is a necessity in the same case for the North to receive benefit of the South ; all these Navigations, as well the one as the other must necessarily have their Passage through our Seas and Chanel, and by consequence fall into our Mercies, as I have handled in my First Book.

And as it has been an antient Polition of State, for the Kingdom of England to have an Eye to its back Door, which was then Scotland, till both the Kingdoms were Bless'd and United in one, whereby the occasion of Jealousie, and the opportunity and practice of France ceas'd, that was wont to stir up Coals, and set one Nation against the other.

So I may say of these Islands Hebrides, that they may be made as dangerous a back door to Scotland and Ireland, as Scotland has been in former Ages to England, being plac'd and seated with most advantage to annoy the Two Kingdoms aforesaid, if the Hollanders hold their footing they now have in them : The Condition of the People of Holland being consider'd, with their popular Government, which other Nations begin naturally to affect, by the Example and Encouragement of their late Successes and Fortunes, by their Wealth increas'd out of their Trade, and by the excessive number of Shipping, which are the dangers of Islands ; for without Shipping they cannot be invaded.

By the Hollanders possessing those Islands, they may make their Rendezvous and Staple of all their Southern Navigations, as well in Peace as War ; they shall find sufficient Succour in those Islands of Victuals, both Flesh and Fish, to give them Relief ; they shall find that in those Islands they shall be secur'd with several Harbours of more Importance and Goodness, than their own Coast can afford them : those Islands will furnish them more natural helps against an Enemy to defend themselves, if any attempt should be made against them ; but above all, when they have thus Settled and Seated themselves, we shall lose our antient and accusom'd Advantage, of their Passage through our Narrow Seas, which is the only awing Power we have over them and all other Nations ; for they enjoying those Islands, will be enabled to resort to them Nine Months in the Year, and so to pass to Holland by the Northern parts of Ireland and Scotland ; and avoid our Chanel and us, and our means to intercept them.

Moreover, in those Islands, which are seated as a Back Door to Scotland and Ireland, as I have said, and in so remote a Place and Distance from England ; the danger is, that the People who are untam'd, uncivil, will easily Rebel by the insinuating Practices, and Intigation of the Hollanders, who are ready to allure, entice, and undertake any unlawful Action, which shall tend to the overthrow of Monarchy, and to settle their own Form of Usurp'd Government.

And therefore it behoves us to have a circumspect Eye over the Hollanders ; for of Errors and Dangers not remedy'd in the beginning, after follows great and unavoidable Mischiefs, like what is past ; which is sooner to be repented than recall'd.

This shall suffice to those Points I have treated of in this Sixth Book, wherein I have unmasqu'd and discover'd, out of my own Experience and Observations, the Hollanders long and subtle Deceits to abuse us ; for all true-minded Englishmen to behold with an Eye of Indifference, how with Cunning and Craft they have still labour'd to nourish divisions betwixt the Two mighty Kingdoms of England and Spain, merely for their own Profit and Gain, till the death of Queen Elizabeth ; when they could no longer support their politick Practice, King James succeeding, who brought the Blessed effect of his Motto, Beati Pacifici.

I could follow this Subject of the Hollanders, but for making the bulk of this Book too big ; and that I would not do Injury to another Book that is written by the same Author, Entitled, Certain Observations that are not worthy the name of History, that happen'd to England since the year of our Lord 1558. and a little before. Which Book contains these particulars.

The Favour England hath done Holland.

The State of Holland from the beginning of their Insurrections. The continuance, and what the end is like to prove.

Collections gathered out of a Book, written by Sir Roger Williams, and Printed 1618.

Whether

Whether Holland do injury to their Prince, yea or no :

The deſperate condition Holland has been often reduc'd to.

The difference of times betwixt the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and the later end.

Tho' I have made a Deſcription at large of the Hollanders Inconſtancy, Faichleſneſs, and manifeſt Injuries they have offer'd us, yet I muſt ſay there is no Man ſo wicked or vicious, but ſome kind of Virtue will appear in him, for which he deſerves Cheriſhment, as well as Chaiſtment for the other ; but naturally they are People that deſire rather to live without Virtue, than die without Money ; and this that followeth ſhall ſet forth their Praiſes in the Worldly Carriages.

They are frugal in Expence, the Benefit whereof themſelves and Country find ; they are Induſtrious, as their Actions at home and abroad do witneſs ; they are Juſt in Contracts, holding a Conſcience in the little Religion they have, not to defraud any Man ; they labour to ſeek out the Secrets of Lands not inhabited, and Countries undiscover'd ; they are Inventors of Arts, which to their Praiſe they have enrich'd the World with ; they are willing without excuſe to contribute for the good of the State, not ſtanding ſo much upon Privileges or Petition of Right, as to neglect any Occaſion of Advantage to benefit their Common-wealth ; they are laborious and painful of Body, not admitting a Beggar in their Provinces, and willing to relieve and comfort one another in ſtrange Countries ; they are Enemies to the Expence of Law, and the griping of Lawyers, and end moſt of their Controverſies by Arbitration of Friends : Their Expences in Drinking are ſav'd and mitigated by their Miſery in Eating ; for out of their exceſſive Covetouſneſs they almoſt ſtarve their Bellies ; and by their unmeaſurable Frugality they ſcarce cloath their Bodies ; for it is verily believ'd the People in one of their chief Cities ſpend not ſo much in Apparel, as is ſpent in a Prince's Court.

But all theſe Virtues are drown'd in a covetous Ingratitude, that holds Friendſhip with no body, but for Intereſt, which ends in the ſelf ſame Intereſt : And no marvel ; for popular States are no longer Thankful, than they receive Benefits ; nor nothing is of ſhorter Life amongſt them, than the memory of Pleaſures or Favours paſt : They are ſo careleſs to give Satisfaction for the Ill they do, that if it be demanded, it is as much as to ſpeak of Valour to a Faint Heart, or Charity to an Unmerciful Man ; or of Courteſie to a Churliſh Diſpoſition ; for it will prove but the telling a Tale to him that is a ſleep. The Definition by a Philoſopher in matters of Friendſhip is as followeth.

A Friend is long fought for, ſcarce to find, and hard to keep ; a Friend is always ready to Comfort in Adverſity, to Help in Neceſſity, to bear with ones Infirmary, and reprove his Errors gently. But the Hollanders are contrary in their Friendſhip, for they are like an ill Bird that lays an ill Egg, an ill Tree that brings forth ill Fruit, or a young Cubb that grows Crafty like his Dam ; they praſtiſe and follow the ſteps of their Predeceſſors ; they make Riches the Heaven of their Thoughts ; and as it is held no hurt to know Ill but to do it, theſe People are perfect Artiſts, as well in doing as knowing Miſchief.

Yet to ſpeak Truth, their natural Ill has been nourish'd and made worſe by us ; for if we had not conniv'd at them and their Actions, to our own prejudice, they had wanted Power to have executed their Ingratitude : Therefore it had behov'd us to conſider what we gave, before we gave, as alſo to whom we gave, and how we gave it ; for States ought to be govern'd by Wiſdom, and not by popular Affection or Paſſion. Wiſe Men ſhould not meaſure things by outward Appearance, but by Diſcretion and Reaſon, or elſe they behold their Actions in a falſe Glaſs.

But now let us at laſt ſeek to avoid that evil we have done in making the Hollanders too great for us to tolerate, leſt we feel the effect of Repentance. It is not the meanest point of Wiſdom to doubt and miſtruſt the worſt ; for Doubts beget Underſtanding, and thereby Prevention : And as in natural Bodies, the longer one lives in Health, Sickneſs is the more dangerous when it comes, ſo it is with us and the Hollanders ; the longer we have liv'd in a mutual and unſeparable Peace, now that they have overwrought us with Cunning, and made us feeble by the ſtrength they have ſuck'd from us, it will behove us to recover our antient Vigour and Valour, four, and be no longer deluded with false pretences of Safety to us and the Commonwealth. Let us follow the old Rule in seeking to put out the Fire of our Neighbour's House, tho' he be our Enemy, lest it should flame into our own; for it is an easier thing to oppose Danger abroad, than repulse it at home.

I have had occasion to insert some part of this last Leaf in my former Fourth Book, which is there to be seen.

MOST of the Modern East-India Voyages that have been published of late years, being very defective either in respect of the many fabulous Relations that are inserted frequently, rather to please the Reader, than to pursue the strict Rules of Truth (not to mention the Errors in the Computation of the distances of Places, and frequent unnecessary Digressions) it is no wonder if the most curious in History have conceiv'd a very indifferent opinion, if not an entire aversion to them. It was upon this Consideration, that the ensuing Treatise coming to our hands, we thought it absolutely worthy the publick view, it being agreed by all who have had the opportunity of travelling in those Countries, that the same may in respect of its sincerity and exactness challenge the Prerogative before any other hitherto publish'd upon the same Subject. For, considering that the Author thereof liv'd not only in the Station of a Minister in divers places of Malabar and Coromandel, and especially for several years in the Kingdom of Jafnapatnam in the Isle of Ceylon, but also assisted in Person in divers Sieges and Expeditions, and thereby had more than ordinary opportunity to be inform'd concerning the Nature and Constitution of those Countries, their Products, Inhabitants, Manners, Customs, Religion, Ceremonies, Oeconomy, Traffick, Manufacturies, Civil and Military Exploits, and what else may be requisite for the accomplishment of a good History, founded upon the Faith of one who had been an Eye-witness of those Transactions; consequently he might challenge the Preference before many, who relate matters chiefly upon hearsay. As to those things which are not ground'd upon his Ocular Testimony, the same were taken from Authentick Records and Manuscripts, and illustrated with Maps and Draughts of those several Countries, Cities, Nations, &c. done to the Life. What relates to the Idolatry of these Pagans, we are convinc'd by his own Testimony, that besides the opportunity he had of visiting their Pagodes, or Temples (a thing rarely allow'd there) one of their most learned Brahmans liv'd with him in the same House for a considerable time, from whom he by constant Conversation, as well as out of their own Records, learn'd the most secret Re-cesses of their Religion, and had the exact Draughts of their Idols, much beyond what Abraham Royerius (who writ upon the same Subject) can pretend to upon that account. As for our part, we have made it our chiefest care to give you an exact Delineation of the before-mention'd Draughts in the best Copper Plates that could be procur'd, and that with all imaginable exactness according to the true Originals, contrary to what is practis'd by many, who study to represent matters of this kind, rather according to their own Fancy, than to Truth. We have only this to add, that to avoid all unnecessary Prolixity, it was judg'd requisite to omit many Digressions, tending not so much towards the Elucidation of the History, as (we suppose) to shew the Author's Criticism in the Holy Scripture.

An Exact Description of the Coasts of Malabar and Coromandel in the East-Indies.

CHAP. I.

The Division and Limits of the Indies. The Author's purpose in the ensuing Treatise. A Description of Cambaja and Suratte. The Treaty with the Great Mogul, by Mr. Van Teylingen.

THE main Design of the ensuing Treatise being to give an exact Account of the Indies, as far as is come to our knowledge, either by our own Experience, or the constant Conversation with People of unquestionable Credit, viz. the Coasts of Malabar and Coromandel, together with the Isle of Ceylon, and places thereunto belonging; we thought it not beyond our scope to insert the true Limits and Division of the whole Indies, whereby the Reader (together with the annexed Map) may form to himself the more clear Idea of the Situation of these Places.

Limits of the Indies. India therefore borders to the West upon the River Indus, towards the Arabian Sea; to the North it is inclosed by the Mount Taurus, on the East-side by the vast Eastern Ocean, and to the South by the Indian Sea. India was antiently divided into two Parts by the River Ganges; thence the more Eastern Part was call'd India beyond the Ganges, and the Western Part India, on this side of the Ganges, now known by the Name of Indostan; and according to the opinion of some Authors, is the same mention'd in the Scripture by the Name of Havila.

India is besides this divided into several Kingdoms and Provinces, to wit, The Empire of the Great Mogul, Decan, Malabar, Coromandel, Crika, Bengale, Pagu, Siam and Cambodia, besides the Mal-dive Isles (of which there is a vast number) the Islands of Ceylon (of which in the second Book) of Sumatra, Borneo, Celebes, Amboina, Banda, and the Molucque Isles, viz. Termate, Machian, Bacbian, Tidor, Motir, Potbacker, and divers others.

As it is not my Intention to treat of the whole Indies, but to confine my self to those parts I have for the most part seen my self, and to give you a relation of such remarkable Transactions both of Peace and War as have happen'd there; so I will begin with the Kingdom of Cambaja, and its Capital City having the same Name, and end with Sumatrasam upon the Coast of Oriza, bordering upon Bengale.

Cambaja is a different Province from Gujuratte, situate at 22 deg. of Northern Latitude; it has got its Name from its Capital City nam'd Cambaja, (formerly the Indian Cayrus) seated at the mouth of the River Indus (or Sandus) known by different Names among divers Nations: it rises among the Mountains of Paramisus, and being augmented by at least nineteen other Rivers (among which are the Hydaspes and Hypasis, whither Alexander the Great carried his Arms) it falls by seven different Channels, or as some will have it by five, into the Sea; two of which pass through and exonerate themselves into the Sea in this Kingdom of Cambaja. It borders to the East upon the Country of Mandoa, to the West upon the Country of the Nautakers or Gedrossers, to the North it has the Kingdoms of Sanga and Dulcinga, and to the South that of Decan. It is one of the most fruitful Provinces of the Indies, which furnishes the circumjacent places with Corn, Wheat, Rice, Pease, Butter, Oil, and divers other Provisions. The Inhabitants are generally either Gujurattians or Benjans, being much addicted to Traffick, and very quick in their dealings. They make here the best Calico's of all sorts; and the Country abounds in Indigo, Granates, Hyacinths, Ame-Amethists, and divers others precious Commodities. According to Cluver's Computation Cambaja is 150 German Leagues long, and as many broad.

 The City of Cambaja (call'd the Ben-jan Paradise) lies according to the common Computation 16 Leagues to the West of Brochia, seated at the Entrance of one of the largest Channels of the River Indus. About three Leagues thence on the opposite Shore is a great Village, inhabited by the Rebellious Rasputes, a perverse Generation, living for the most part upon Rapine. This River is almost dry all the Winter, tho at high Tide it rises several Fathoms deep, so that then Ships may come up to the very Walls of the City, where at low Tide it is fordable. This City is reckoned as big again as Suratte, being well built, and fortify'd with a triple Wall. It has three Bazars, or great Market-places, for the sale of all sorts of Merchandises, and twelve Gates, besides that almost every Street has a peculiar Gate, which is shut up every night to prevent Disorders: Its whole Circuit is about six or seven English Miles; and without the Gates are four very delicious large Cisterns or Ponds, and fifteen Gardens, for the Diversion of such of the Inhabitants as are pleas'd to divert themselves there with walking in the cool of the Evening. They are for the most part Pagans, and addicted to Traffick, especially in all sorts of Stuffs for clothing, which they transport to Diu, Goa, Atchin, Mecha and Persia.

 Amadabath the Capital City of the Province of Gusuratte, lies 18 Leagues from Cambaja, about  $23\frac{1}{2}$  deg. Northern Latit. and consequently directly under the Tropick of Cancer: It is seated in a great and most delightful Plain, just on the Bank of a very fine River: It is both strong and populous, being fortified with a goodly Wall with round Turrets and twelve Gates.

The Streets are very broad, the Houses very handsom, and the Pagan Temples stately built. In the Center of the City is the Castle, the Residence of the Governor, surrounded with a very high Wall, the Gates whereof are guarded by a certain Body of Troops, who let nobody pass or repass without leave: This being formerly the ordinary Seat of their Kings. The Commodities found at Amadabath are Girdles, Turbants, Gold Tissues, Silk Stuffs, Satins, Damasks, Tapestries, Suchar, Amspien or Opium, Gummi Lacca, Borax, preserv'd Ginger, Mirabolans, Sal-Armoniack and Indigo. Under the Jurisdiction of Amadabath are 25 considerable Towns, and 2998 Villages.

The City of Suratte is a place of great Traffick, both the English and Dutch having Factories here: It lies open to the Water-side, except that the Castle is well provided with Cannon brought from the Ship Middleburgh, which was lost there 1617. But on the Land-side it is fortified by a Wall of Stone, the old Fortifications being only of Earth: It has no more than three Gates, but two Governors independent on one another, one of the Castle, the other of the City. Next adjacent to the Palace of the last stands the Custom-house, where all Goods imported or exported pay  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per Cent. Custom, except Gold and Silver, which pay only 2 per Cent.

These Custom-house Officers are very troublesome and injurious to Strangers, and have often given great cause of Complaint to our Company, as will appear from the following Petition, and the Mogul's Patent (or Edman) granted to the said Company, and dated the 15th day of the Month Rammasay, in the 16th year of the King's Reign, and since that of Mahomet 1052.

"The Dutch are approach'd to the Gates of your Majesty's Court, expecting at the feet of your Majesty's Throne (whose Brightness is like that of the Sun, and reaches to the Skies) the happiness of seeing the Eyes of the greatest Monarch, to offer their just Complaints against the Officers of your Majesty at Suratte, who have been extremely troublesome to them, in exacting from them illegal Duties of their Goods bought at Agra and Amadabath, and thence brought to Suratte: They humbly request your Majesty to send your Orders by your Dewan or Commissioner to the Custom-house Officers at Suratte, with strict Command to regulate themselves accordingly, as they expect to be accountable for it to your Majesty.

The King did immediately dispatch his Orders, that the Custom-house Officers should not take from the Commodities bought at Agra and belonging to the Dutch, from 10 to 12 per Cent. and those bought at Amadabath 10 or  $10\frac{1}{2}$  per Cent. that they should be oblig'd to rest satisfied with the Bills of Loading given them by the Dutch Merchants, and exact no more Custom under any other pretence: That furthermore all Commodities bought at Brodera and Suratte should pay according to the Price they were bought for, and that they should avoid giving any just reason of complaint to the Dutch. But these Promises had not the desired Effect, as will appear out of the next following Letter of Mr. John van Teylingen President and Governor of the Dutch Factories in Gufuratte, Indostan, and Mocha.

W. van Teylingen's
Letter.

Whereas by the manifold Exactions and Injuries, the robbing of the Factory of our Company, the Detention of Daniel Massow Barber's Mate, and divers other enormous Proceedings; the Persons in the Service of the Company, in the Empire of the Great Mogul, have received considerable Detriment from divers of the Great Mogul's Officers (contrary to the intent of his Firman, or Letters Patents) which must needs tend to the great damage of the Company in general: It has, after mature deliberation, been thought expedient, by Mr. Cornel. van der Lijn Governor-General, and the rest of the Members of the Council of the Indies, to redress the said Affronts and Injuries by Force of Arms. The Yachts, the Larch, the Sluice, the Lillo, and the Eight-Churches, being equipped lately for that purpose, and to be join'd by divers other Ships from Batavia, we give the Command thereof, during my absence from the Fleet, to the Head Factor Gerard Pelgrim, which however shall cease that Minute, when I come aboard any one of these Ships in Person. To prevent all Disorders, Rapine, and other Enormities, I do by these Presents give a strict Charge to all the Officers, of what degree soever, and to all the Soldiers and Seamen aboard these Vessels, not to hurt the Moors either in their Lives or Estates (this being contrary to the Intention of the Council) but only to seize upon their Ships, Money, and Goods, and to secure them, till Satisfaction be obtain'd by the Company upon their just Pretensions. We therefore once more command all the Officers, Soldiers and Seamen, without exception, not to injure or rob (after the seizing of any of these Ships) the Moors in their Persons or Goods, under the penalty of corporal punishment, and (according to the nature of the Crime) of the loss of their Lives, as they will answer the same to the contrary at their peril.

Given at the Dutch Factory at Suratte, Feb. 10. 1649.

John van Teylingen.

The following Order was likewise directed to the Head Factor Gerard Pelgrim, and the Factor Peter Rutens.

Baldau.

"It being firmly resolv'd in Council, the 25th of Octob. to prosecute with the utmost vigour the Design laid formerly by the Governour General and the Council of the Indies (which was delay'd by our long stay) with the first opportunity, the Yachts the Sluice, Larch, Lillo, and Eight-Churches, are chosen for that purpose: But two of them being now at Mocha, and the other two ordered to stay there the Winter at Dabul, we constitute the Head Factor Mr. Gerard Pelgrim Commodore over the said Ships, as soon as they are rejoin'd aboard the Larch, or any other of these Ships he shall be pleased to chuse, where he shall carry the Flag, with Authority to call on board the Council of War, when Occasion requires. In his absence, or separation of the Ships, the Factor, Peter Rutens, shall exercise the same Authority as Gerard Pelgrim, both which however shall cease, with the arrival of the President Mr. John van Teylingen. Whether the two beforementioned Yachts shall leave Mocha together or not, is not yet determined; but in the mean while we strictly charge you, that so soon as you have notice that the Chasirovan (a Ship of a vast bulk) or any of the other Ships belonging to Suratte, are preparing to depart, you set sail some days before them, under pretence of being bound (according as we used to do) for Gamron. All which is to be understood, provided Matters be not brought to a happy conclusion before that time; for if that were, you have nothing to do but to prosecute your Voyage in good earnest thither, unless you had a sure prospect of gaining considerably by your stay, and increasing the price of your Cargo. For the rest, it is to be your main concern, to take effectual care that none of the Great Mogul's Ships, nay even such as trade thither from Diu, escape your hands; and especially to keep a watchful Eye over the Chasirovan, which commonly sails sooner than the rest, and has more ready Money aboard. In case it should happen (which we hope it will not) that the Yacht the Eight Churches, which is to return from Gamron, should, by some Accident or other, be detain'd in her Voyage,

Secret Order to Mr. G. Pelgrim, and P. Rutens.

Baldicus.

“Voyage, we have provided against it, by dispatching to the Commanders thereof a Copy of these Orders for their direction upon occasion; which after the return from their Voyage they are to deliver sealed up into your custody, where the same is to remain till you set sail again, which is to be redelivered to them to serve for a sure direction, in case you should be separated at Sea. Silence ought to be your most peculiar care in this case, for fear the Secret coming to the Ears of the Moors, they should stop the departure of their Ships. The Larch and the Lillo, and in default of those the Post, after their first appearance here, shall be sent to Gamron, whence they shall sail pretty late, as if bound for Batavia, but, under pretence of being unable to prosecute their Voyage, come to an anchor in the Road before Dabul, from whence they shall sail Aug. 15. steering their Course directly for the River of Suratte; where they are to stay till the arrival of the President Mr. John van Teylingen aboard them; and in the mean while seize upon all the Moors Vessels coming from Mocha; yet so, as not to commit any further Outrages against them, except only to keep them in safe custody till the Company shall have received Satisfaction from the King Chastiaan. So soon as they have retaken a Vessel, they shall take the Nachodas Merchants and Seamen over in their Ships, and keep them under a good Guard, yet without any molestation, rather shewing them all the marks of Respect and Civility that can be; and shall put as many Soldiers and Seamen of ours aboard such a Ship as shall be thought sufficient to keep her: and Proclamation is to be made, enjoining every body to abstain from doing the least injury to the seized Moors, either in their Persons or Goods; and Officers are to be appointed to see the same put in execution. After we have got all, or most of the Moorish Vessels into our hands, you shall take care to embark all the Facquiers and other loose People in one Ship, and to let them sail their ways where they please, they being not worth our keeping. This done, you shall take the first opportunity of fair Weather to transport, first the ready Money, and afterwards the Merchandizes aboard our Vessels; but so, as that they be well pack'd and seal'd up first, and exact Inventory made, with the Names or Marks of the respective Owners: Each Parcel is to be mark'd with a peculiar Letter; a Copy of which is to be given to the Owners, and a written Acknowledgment to be taken from the Nachodas of what is thus taken, and to be redelivered, in case Matters be adjusted hereafter, that so every one may know where to look for his own; the Factor being to be careful in this Point in the Transportation, as well as the Master of the Ship in receiving, as they will answer for the loss at their peril. The English Yacht coming from Mocha you are to let pass unmolested, for weighty Reasons, pursuant to the Resolution taken in Council the 14th. The same is to be done in respect of all French, Danish, and all other Ships in amity with the States, provided they don't attempt any thing upon the Moors in your custody; in which case you shall defend your selves to the last Extremity. Lastly, If the Matter could be so contriv'd, that our Vessels coming from Mocha might intercept and seize the Ships of Cambaja, and carry them to the River of Suratte, it would be a singular piece of Service, and much hasten the Accommodation. I conclude, wishing you Health and Happiness in your Voyage and Undertaking, for your own Glory, and the Interest of the Company.

The Treaty carried on. What Articles were proposed by the Dutch, and agreed to by the King. His Patent or Firman; and Ratification of the Treaty.

FOR fear of exasperating the Great Mogul beyond redress, it was thought fit to dispatch the following Letter to his Majesty.

"Most Renown'd, most Potent, and most Illustrious King, and Lord, fill'd with Majesty and Wealth, the brightest Princes among the most Powerful: As an unjust War is deservedly detested by all Nations, and seldom comes to a happy Conclusion; so our being oblig'd to act against your Majesty (pursuant to the Command of our General, and the Council of the Indies) is founded upon very just and legal Pretensions. Had your Officers thought fit to treat us according to the Tenour of your Majesty's Patent, or Firman, granted to us, we should never have attempted to raise any Differences betwixt your Majesty and us, much less have had recourse to open Hostilities. But when we were forced to see our Traffick, not only in this Place, but also at Bengale, interrupted and spoil'd by most injurious Monopolies (to the great Detriment of the Company) by intolerable Affronts, and refusing our just Request, and humble Petitions, to have the two Fugitives, and since circumcised Servants of the Company, delivered into our hands; and to have due reparation made for the Damage sustained by the Company in the Robbery committed upon their Factory: All these injurious Proceedings have obliged our Governor-General, and the Council of the Indies, to have Recourse to the Law of Arms, to procure us reasonable Satisfaction; and having for this purpose sent us four Ships from Batavia, we did the 12th and 16th of this Month, seize your Majesty's Ships the Genjamer and Sababbi (coming from Mocha) and after having taken out of them all the ready Money they had aboard, and understanding that the said Genjamer and Sababbi belonged properly to your Majesty, we thought fit (out of respect to your Person) to have them carried by our Seamen into the River, and under the Castle of Suratte, not questioning but what we have been forced to undertake upon this account for the maintaining of our Just Rights, will meet with a favourable construction from your Majesty. The Money seized by our Vessels, shall not suffer the least diminution, but be kept with all security, till such time that your Majesty shall grant us a new Patent in due Form, pursuant to such Articles as we have Orders from our Superiors to represent to your Majesty, and are as follows.

"I. It is desired that leave be given to build a Warehouse for our own Use, either in or near the Square of the Castle, where we may lay up safely our Merchandizes at the first hand, free from those Diminutions and Losses we sustained yearly in the Alphandigo, paying exactly the usual Customs; that done, we shall be at liberty to carry on our Traffick, as formerly, undisturbed and unmolested.

The Governour's Answer was, 'That either a Place or House should be granted us just without the Castle, not far from the Alphandigo, for our proper use only.

"II. We desire that our Traffick may be carried on without disturbance at Bengale, and in the circumjacent Places, free from paying any Dutys, except what is paid usually at Pipeli (the place where Goods are embark'd, pursuant to the Patent formerly granted by his Majesty, but contravened by the avaritious Governours.

Hereunto it was answered, 'That the Governour Miermosa should endeavour to obtain this Point from the King.

"III. Restitution was required of such Sums of Money as of late Years had been unjustly detained, both at Suratte and Amadabath, and full Satisfaction desired for what Customs had been extorted from our Ships betwixt Agra and Amadabath, contrary to the express Words of his Majesty's Patent; the whole Sum amounting to 41479 Ropias.

"IV. His Majesty was requested to issue his Orders for the full restitution of what Money was taken out of our Factory at Suratte, and that a certain Sum (as his Majesty should direct) might be allotted in lieu of Satisfaction for the Robbery committed upon the said Factory, the murdering of the Company's Servants, and the Injuries and Affronts put upon us: The Sum of the Money taken away from thence amounting to 66000 Ropias.

Unto these two Points the answer was made; 'That the restitution of what was taken from us, was a reasonable Request, but to give satisfaction, for that other Enormities were committed by Robbers (since fled from Justice) was not in their power; but if any of these Criminals could be taken, they should be delivered into our hands.

V. That for the future none of his Majesty's Ships, or any others belonging to those of Suratte, Bengale, or other places, should traffick to Achin, Pera, Queda, Oedjang-Salang, Malacca, &c. and in case they should, they might be seized and declared as good Prizes by our Vessels, by reason that the Company being then engaged in a War against these places, were resolved to block up their Rivers, and to keep all Foreigners from trafficking with them by Sea, till they have received entire Satisfaction at their hands.

VI. It was desired that his Majesty's Majesty would deliver to us the (beforementioned) two circumcised Servants of the Company; and if they were at present out of reach, to deposit into our hands in lieu of them 400000 Ropias; which Sum shall be restored immediately after the delivery of these two Persons.

The Answer was; 'That one of these circumcised Fellows was retreated many Years before into Persia, and the last died in his flight about eight Months before: But if they would have his Bones, they would endeavour to procure them.

VII. That if ever any of the Company's Servants shall run away hereafter, they shall not be protected, much less be circumcised; and in case any of the inferior Officers should notwithstanding this detain any of them (contrary to your Majesty's knowledg) they shall be obliged to deliver the same to us.

This Article was granted, provided they did not take refuge among the Raspoutes then in rebellion against the Mogul.

VIII. That Satisfaction should be given for what Expences the Company had been forced to be at both by Sea and Land, since the Robbery committed upon their Factory.

This Article was rejected, a general Satisfaction being promised already.

IX. That for the future a sufficient Guard should be kept to protect the Servants and Goods of the Company from the like danger; and that in case any such thing should ever happen again, the Governor shall be obliged to make satisfaction.

It was promised that for the future a Guard should be kept to secure the Company against all danger.

X. If our Cassila, or Caravan (which God forbid) should be plundered by the way, that the Governour shall be obliged to find out the Goods; and if found, restore them to us, and in case of neglect, to make satisfaction for them.

It was answered; 'That we must sue for a Firman, or Patent, on that account, which would without question be granted.

XI. That in all the Citys, Towns and Territories under his Majesty's Jurisdiction, we shall be exempted from paying any Dutys, Customs, or Impositions, except the Customs at Suratte and Bombay; and in case any Money should be exacted from the Servants upon that account, the Money shall be made good by his Majesty's Dewan, or Commisioner, at Suratte.

XII. That the Custom payable from such Goods as are to be exported, shall continue on the same foot as settled by the King's last Firman, or Patent.

This Article was granted without the least limitation.

XIII. That the Customs of the Merchandizes imported, shall (as formerly) be satisfied with Merchandizes each in its kind.

This was also granted.

XIV. That we shall be at liberty to dispose and sell our Cargo's and Goods where and when we please, without being controuled therein by the Governor, or any other Merchant.

This was likewise agreed to.

XV. That no Governor, of what quality or degree soever, shall obstruct us in the buying up what Commodities we have occasion for, or employing of Brokers and other Servants for that purpose, such as we judge may be most serviceable to us; neither shall they be taxed or otherwise molested on that score.

It was answered; 'That doubtless his Majesty would grant that Article, and that in the mean time no body should intermeddle with the Traffick belonging to the Company.

XVI. That no body of what degree or quality whatever shall pretend to obstruct us in the sending away of our Goods, or stop our Cassilas (Caravans) or Carts, and Camels thereunto belonging, much less to endeavour to detain the same after they have been hired.

Unto this it was answer'd, that the King would doubtless grant this Request.

XVII. In case of any Contests arising betwixt both the Nations, whereby Murder or Manlaughter may ensue (which God forbid) the Governors shall have power only to punish the Criminal, if he be one of his Subjects; but if he belong to the Company, he is to be put into the hands of our Directory, in order to be punish'd according to the Laws of our Country; and if any of our People engage with any of the Indian Women, the same shall be deliver'd up to us to suffer condign Punishment.

Unto this it was answer'd, that this Article must be refer'd to the King's Determination; but that further Satisfaction should be given upon this Head to the Dutch Company at Suratte.

XVIII. If by Tempests or other Accident some of our Ships should be stranded, or otherwise be lost on these Coasts, the Goods sav'd by your Majesty's Subjects shall be restor'd to the Owners.

This was granted.

XIX. That we shall be maintain'd and protected in the quiet enjoyment of the propagating and refining of the Saltpeter; and that we shall meet with no opposition from the Governors in transporting the same, or be burdened with new Exactions, as it happen'd two years before, when the Prince of Zaatschan squeeze'd 600 Ropias out of the Company.

This Article was refer'd to the King.

XX. That such as shall be injurious in words to any of our Nation, shall be punish'd by the Governor, in the presence of the affronted Party, to prevent further Inconveniences, which otherwise might arise from thence.

This Article being very just, was agreed to.

XXI. That we shall have full liberty to keep and maintain the Yatch we always have had upon the River of Suratte, and (in case this becomes useless) to build another, and use it as formerly, for our Diverfion, or other occasions.

Vol. III.

We don't in the least doubt, but that your Majesty, according to your wonted Bounty, will take into serious Consideration this our humble, but nevertheless just and equitable Request; it being our constant wish, that matters may be brought to a speedy Accommodation: and we promise that immediately on the receipt of your Majesty's Firman, or Letters Patent, we will discharge what Money and Persons are in our Custody, and carry on our Traffick in your Majesty's Dominions, as before: But in case your Majesty (which we hope not) should refuse our Petition, we desire notice may be given us thereof, that we may in time (with your Majesty's Consent) remove our Effects, and quit your Territories; it being our firm Resolution not to stay here, unless your Majesty will be pleas'd to grant our just Request; notwithstanding which we live in hopes of a favourable Answer from your Majesty's Goodness.

Unto this was affix'd another Paper, as follows.

Most Potent King!

JUST upon the Conclusion of our humble Petition, the Deputies empower'd by Miermosa the Governor, to treat with us concerning the Differences on foot betwixt us, viz. Mierfia Mammeth, Hagie Siastbecq, Zabandaar, and several other Persons of Note, have promised us to give satisfaction for the Money (pursuant to your Majesty's Orders) taken from us, to stop all Traffick from Bengale, and this place, &c. to Aetchin, Pera, Queda, and Oetjang-Salang, &c. till the Differences betwixt us and those Places be brought to a Conclusion; concerning which we expect further Orders from our Governor-General of the Indies. It was further promised us, that a Place should be assign'd us for the building of a Warehouse near the Alphandigo; which as well as the other Articles being confirm'd to us by Oath of the before-mention'd Deputies, we were on our side willing to release the Goods seiz'd by our Ships, which we have done accordingly, and resettled our Traffick at Suratte, as before: All which we hope will not be unacceptable to your Majesty; humbly begging your Majesty to be pleas'd to take our further Proposals into Consideration, and to favour us with your Royal Firman, to avoid all further Differences,

E e e e 2 and

Baldan. and to establish a mutual, firm and everlasting Correspondence betwixt us, which we shall very religiously observe (as long as your Majesty's Governors don't act contrary to the said Firman) without the least interruption on our side. We wish your Majesty a prosperous and long Life, and Victory over your Enemies.

Dated in your Majesty's City of Suratte, 28 Sept. in the year 1649 after the Birth of Christ.

The King's Letter was thus.

The King Chasjan sends the following Directions to Mierfia Arep his Governor of Suratte.

King's Letter, or Firman.

Just as the Sajetes are esteem'd among the Saints, so is Mierfia Arep respected in his Family. I would have you rest secure of my Royal Favour: Besides what Dignities you were possess'd of before, we have thought fit to bestow upon you the Reward of Paans Zeddi, and 300 Horses for your Services, in the Government of the open Country; and since the departure of Miermosa have put you into his place; and for the better maintaining of your Grandeur, have allotted you the Royal Revenues of both your Governments, in the Administration of which you shall be very vigilant and courteous; towards the chief Merchants you shall comport your self very obligingly, and give a helping hand to all the foreign Nations trafficking there, as tending to the no small increase of our Treasury. Your Authority shall not extend to exact more than the usual Customs, even of the meanest Persons, but you shall act in every thing as a Man of Honour and Conscience: What Rarities you happen to meet with coming from foreign places, you shall (like your Predecessor Miermosa) send to my Daughter Sahelbejon, who twice a month pays her Respect before my Throne; whatever is extraordinary fine and rare, let it be valued, and purchase it of the Owner accordingly; but if you can't agree, send him hither, that he may be satisfied in his just Demands. So soon as my Royal Firman comes to your hands, you shall endeavour to list 10 Christian Constables, well versed in their Art, into our Service, and you shall spare no Cost to have some great Cannon cast for our use. We have been inform'd, that about two years ago the Dutch Factory was robb'd of 50000 Ropias, for which they have seiz'd divers Sums of Money belonging to our Merchants, and coming in their Ships from Mocha, and have thereupon declar'd their Sentiments to the Governour Miermosa; it is therefore that I command you to oblige the Hollanders to restore the said Money to the Owners, who have neither the least share or knowledge in what relates to their loss: And in case you should not be able to bring things to an agreement with the Hollanders, we command you to demand the said Sums of Money of Miermosa and Ommernan, and pay the same to the said Merchants (whose Effects are seiz'd) in recompence of their Loss.

These are the Contents of the King's Letter, as it was translated from the Persian.

CHAP. III.

The Chom of Suhali, or the Road before Suratte. Traffick of the Dutch, English, Moors and Portugueses to Suratte, Gufuratte, Brochia, Goga, Pattapane, Mangerol, Brodera, and other places.

THE City Suratte did (pursuant to the ancient Records) pay a yearly Tribut of 2000000 Mamoids, or 1000000 Ropies, or 400000 Crowns, to their King Shahab, one Ganna Ganna being then the Governour, who had 1800 Villages under his Jurisdiction. All about Suratte are abundance of very pleasant and stately Summer-Seats, and magnificent Burying-places (a thing much in request among the Moors) besides several large Cisterns, or rather Ponds, fac'd with Freestone. Among the rest one deserves particularly to be taken notice of, as having no less than a hundred Angles of 28 yards each, with Stone Steps to lead you down into the Cistern; in the midst of which stands the Tomb of the Founder.

About

About an hour and a half to the North from the Mouth of the River of Suratte (named Tapp-gyly) is a Road, where Ships may ride at anchor near a ridg of Sand-banks, which, together with part of the Continent, breaks the force of the Winds. This Road, commonly call'd Cbon Suhali, or Sualicom, lies at 21 deg. 50 min. North Latitude, extending from North-East to North, and again South-West to South: The entrance of it is but narrow, and at high Water not above 7, but at low Water scarce 5 Fathoms deep, with a hard sandy bottom: The North-North-East, and South-South-West Winds make here the highest Tides. The Harbour of Suhali is not bove a Musket-shot broad: The South-South-West Winds make this Road unsafe, the Land-Shelves lying then almost dry. The English settled their Factory there 1609. and the Dutch 1616. who carry their Merchandizes upon Waggon drawn by Oxen from the said Road 4 Leagues to the City.

It is to the Settlements of those two Nations, Suratte owes its chief increase in Trade, many rich Merchants and Artisans having been drawn thither since that time, who send their Commodities thence by the Red-Sea to Arabia, Aden, Mocha, Hideda, Juda, Mecca, Chibiry, Casiny, Doffey, and Souakin (in Ethiopia) consisting in fine and coarse Indian, Gujuratte, Decan, and Bengale Stuffs and Cloths, Callicoets, Indigo, Sugar, Gums, Ginger, Tobacco, Wheat, Rice, Butter, and other Provisions, in which this Country abounds. Besides that, two or three of the King's Ships trade into these Parts, and transport certain precious Commodities belonging to some peculiar Merchants and Persons of the first Rank; these are generally obliged to the Company, for furnishing them with some able Seamen and Constables (the Moors being but ill versed in these things) especially while they were at enmity with the Danes.

One of the Kings Ships, named Saby, arrived here 1618. in its return from the Red-Sea; the Cargo whereof consisted in Coral, Camlets, Sattins, Velvets, Woollen and Linen Cloths, Tin, Quick-silver, Cinaber, Leather, Saffron, Slaves, (both Black and White) Gum Arabic, Aloes of Socotora, Amber, Clivet, Sanguis Draconis, Myrrh, Raisins, Almonds, Dates, Coffee-Berries, and about six of seven hundred Passengers returning from Mabomet's Tomb at Mecca and Medina; the whole valued at 2500000 Ropias, each Ropia being about half a Rix-Dollar.

These Ships set sail in March and April for the Red-Sea, and return in September or October; they seldom spend above 25 days in their passage. The Inhabitants of Goa, Dabul, Bassain, Daman and Diu, do also send their Ships to Mocha and some other places in the Red-Sea; and the Benjans and Armenians used to come thence to Suratte in their light Ships laden with all sorts of Trifles, which they exchange for Wheat, Linen, Rice, and Coffee-Berries.

Towards the latter end of the Mousson, viz. in March and April, abundance of Malabars resort hither: these being mortal Enemies of the Portugueses, are commonly well arm'd with Fire-locks and Scimeters, and formerly used to be very mischievous to them. The Commodities they bring to sale here, are coarse Sugar, Cardamon, Pepper, and Cayr (of which they make Cables and Ropes) and Coco-Nuts.

Formerly the Inhabitants of Suratte used to send yearly one or two Ships in May or June (when the Portuguese Ships were in harbour) to Achin, Tanasserri, Queda, and the Maldiva Islands, laden with Stuffs, and Cloths, and Callicoets; and return'd with Pepper, Camphire, Cloves, Nutmegs, Mace, Sandel-wood, Porcelain, Chinese Silks (brought thither by those of Malacca) Tin, Benzorn, Elephants Teeth, and Coconuts, the last being almost the only product of the Maldiva Isles.

The Men in Power here are generally very haughty and fierce; and tho sufficiently curb'd by the King's absolute Sway, yet by reason of the distance of the Provinces from his Residence, commit many Enormities; his Territories bordering upon Persia, Auwa, the River Ganges, and Bengale, thence to Decan, and to the West by the Sea.

The Province of Gujuratte (in which all the beforementioned Citys lie) extends in length from South to North; it begins at Damana, and reaches 40 Cos beyond Amadabath, bordering upon the Country of Patbane inhabited by Pagans, so that its whole length is 180 Cos, or 90 Dutch Leagues: to the East it borders upon the Country of Parta Bassa, or at least within 40 Cos or 20 Leagues of it, extending further Eastward for three days journey towards Amadabath, and to the West to the Sea, and the Kingdom of Suadi, which is divided from Persia by a great Desert. It was a most fruitful and populous Country, before it was reduced by the Great Mogul.

About

 About 12 Leagues to the North of Su-Baldaus, lies the City of Brochia about 9 or 10 Leagues from the Sea, and 21 deg. 56 min. upon the River Nardabath, which coming down by Decan and Mandow, affords a good Passage for Ships, about half way from the Sea towards Brochia, the passage being stop'd up there by a Sand-bank, which has not above 9 or 10 foot Water. The situation of this City is both very convenient and pleasant, upon a Hill, being surrounded by a strong Stone Wall: This place is famous for its Manufactories of Linen and Cloths, of which they make more here than in any other place of the Indies; and they have the best way of whitening the flax. The Malabars used formerly to come hither every Year with 9 or 10 Ships. The Dutch and English have had their Factories here a considerable time ago. Its Inhabitants are for the most part Benjians, who are very expert in managing the Linen Manufactory: The two Suburbs of the City are chiefly inhabited by Callicoweavers and Merchants; Brochia is reckoned to contain 87 Villages in its Territories, the Country round about being all low Grounds, except that about five or six Leagues to the South-East the Mountains of Vindat have their beginning, which are very rich in Achatfens. All Merchandizes passing through Brochia pay 2 per Cent. Custom.

Goga is a small City seated in the Bay of Cambaja, where it grows so freight, that it rather resembles a River than an Arm of the Sea: It has neither Walls nor Gates to the Land-side, but is defended by a stone Wall towards the Sea. Here all the Ships designed for Arabia, and the Southern parts (by the Merchants of Cambaja and Amadabath) are careen'd and victuall'd, there being a safe Road here, tho somewhat shallow: Here also the Portuguese Convoys used to keep their station, to expect the coming of their Merchantmen.

There are besides these several other Places of less note belonging to this Province, as Pattapatane, Mangerol (mentioned by some under other Names) the Inhabitants whereof live upon Husbandry, and managing of Cotton; Brodera an inland Town, inhabited by Husbandmen and Clothiers; the Company used to keep some Factors there, to buy up coarse Cloth for the Arabians and Ethiopians. Not to mention here its Fortifications, Gardens, Tombs, &c.

Mamadabath.

Mamadabath was for its pleasant situation sometimes honoured with the Residence of its Kings, but is since come to decay to that degree, that it is no more than a poor Village now. We will also make mention only of Nariau, Wasser (a very ancient Castle) Iffempour, Batona, and their Products, such as Indigo, Saltpeter, Borax, Alfa Fetida, Amfion or Opium, Gummi Laca, and divers other Commodities.

But before we leave the Province of Gufuratte, and take our way thence over Diu, Daman, &c. to Goa, and so to the Malabars; we must say something of its Traffick. It is beyond all dispute that the Traffick of Suratte, and adjacent Places, is of great consequence, provided there be no want of ready Money, and the management thereof be committed to Persons of understanding. I remember that the College of XVII give these following By-rules to their Factors: To inform themselves of the Constitution and Manners of the Inhabitants, what Commodities are vented, and best to be vented there; who, and how potent our Enemies are; what Religion and Coin is most regarded, and the true situation of the Place where they settle, in respect to its Northern or Southern Latitude. Certain it is, that the Inhabitants of the Province of Gufuratte are a cunning and settled Generation, who must therefore be managed with dexterity, and much reservedness, mix'd with a becoming gravity and outward splendor, wherewith these People are much taken, yet without ever attempting to lord it over them, a thing which after has proved detrimental, if not destructive to the Undertakers. It is to the wife Conduct of our Forefathers that we are obliged for the Establishment and Improvement of our Traffick at Suratte; where our Factory was no sooner settled, but we sent from thence 1624. Jan. 20. our first Ship call'd the Heusden, along the Coast of Melinde and Soffala, and thence to the Cape of Good Hope, and so to Holland.

This was follow'd the same Year, 12 March, by another call'd the Peuca, but was forced to winter on the Coast of Coromandel. These were follow'd 1625. April 23. by the Ship the City of Dort, and the Wesop Yacht, but were obliged to winter in the Isle of St. Mawrice. In the Year 1626. the following Ships were sent to Holland, taking their way through the South Sea, viz. The Golden Lion, Walcheren, and Orange. 1628. The City of Dort was sent thence to Holland through the Straits of Madagascar, along the Coast of Fussalia.

CHAP. IV.

Of what consequence the Traffick of Suratte is. A particular Description of the City of Mocha, and of its peculiar Customs. The City of Agra, and its Strength. The Descent of the Great Mogul, his Pomp and Riches.

OF what Consequence the Traffick of Suratte is to the Dutch, they have been sufficiently made sensible by their Factors ever since 1616. The chief Commodities to be vented here, are, Lead, Quick-silver, Cinabar, Ivory, Tin, Copper, Cumeta's, Cloves, Nutmegs, Mace, Pepper, Porcelain, &c. And this Traffick is the more considerable in respect of the Communication it maintains with our other Factories in those parts, with Agra, Mocha, and divers other places upon the Coast of the happy Arabia, where our Traffick seems to be well established, provided we take care to live in good Correspondence with those Nations, which must be maintain'd by all possible means, by avoiding such things as tend to the Dissolution thereof. Amongst these the seizing of the Moorish Ships has several times brought our Traffick into no small jeopardy, as it happen'd 1621. when our Ships the Samson and Wesfos having made Reprisals upon some Moorish Vessels, our Trade into Arabia was quite interrupted, and likely to have been quite lost. And we run the same danger 1628. after the Yacht the Grottenbroeck had taken a Ship of Gusuratte upon the Coast of Coromandel; and tho our late Seizure happen'd not to prove much to our disadvantage, yet can't we at all times promise our selves the same success, it being certain, that tho the Moors court our Friendship, yet are they on the other hand very stubborn, and not easily reconcil'd.

Another thing absolutely requisite for the carrying on of the Trade here, is, the King's Firman, or Patent, to keep the avaritious Governours of Cambaja, Suratte, Brochia, and other places, in awe; besides, that the Portuguese Priests are always busy to create an ill Opinion of us in the Moors: They must be carefully watch'd in their Measures and Weights, without which they will play you the same Game as Godjanifan and Godjaassan did many years ago to Sir Henry Middleton, an English Knight, who put them in Irons aboard his Ship till they had given him full satisfaction.

Our Traffick to Mocha is likewise of great Consequence to us: Mocha is seated in the Happy Arabia, at the entrance of the Red Sea at 13 deg. 28 min. Northern Latitude: It is of a considerable extent, without any Walls, in a barren ground, but well built with red and blue Stones, the Houses flat on the top like those of Constantinople; it has three very fine Pagodes, or Pagan Temples, two whereof have no Steeples, the third, in the midst of the City, being adorn'd with a very high Steeple. At the North end stands a small Castle like a Redoubt built, of blue Stone, for the Defence of the Harbour, 1612.

Mocha was about 90 or 100 years ago no more than a Village inhabited by Fishermen; but since its Reduction by the Turks, is so encreased by degrees, that it is one of the chief Places on that Coast now; the Traffick of the Indian Ships that used to come to an Anchor at Aden (formerly a great Trading City) being transferr'd to Mocha, by reason of the Caravans which come thither with more conveniency at certain times of the year. Its Inhabitants are Turks, Arabians, Benjans and Jews: Here is constantly a great concourse of People from the beginning of March to the middle of September; about which time the great Ship call'd Mansouri (which is kept by the Turkish Sultan for the Transportation of the richest Commodities from the farthest parts of the Red Sea hither) arrives here, its Cargo being generally esteem'd at 2500000 or 3000000 Reals, and consisting in Pieces of Eight, Golden Ducats, Italian Golden Tissues, Camlets, Saffron, Quick-silver, and divers other Commodities, besides Slaves of of both Sexes taken in the Levant, or Esidians, thereabouts, being generally Grecians, Hungarians, or of the Isle of Cyprus; of all which they pay 10 per Cent. Custom. The same Ship sails back again the first of January, laden with Spices, Indigo, fine Callico's, Turbants, and such like Indian Commodities.

Besides this, there comes every year in March a Caravla or Caravan, consisting commonly of 1600 Camels, the Merchants being for the most part Turks, Arabians and Armenians; these come by the way of Aleppo and Alexandria hither, and spend commonly two Months in their whole Journey, because they travel not above three or four Dutch Leagues in a day. They bring along with them twisted Silk, Gold Wire, red Coral, Cinabar, Saffron, Myrrhe, divers sorts of small Wares, Needles, Spectacles, Knives, Sciffars, Looking-glasses, &c. This Caravan leaves the place again in December, laden with all sorts of Indian Commodities, and thus spends near a twelve month in their whole Journey.

At Cairo you see a vast multitude of Pilgrims towards the beginning of the year, who take the conveniency of this Caravan to travel to Mocha, eight Leagues from whence lies Medina, where is the Tomb of Mahomet, which is thus yearly visited by betwixt 30000 and 40000 Pilgrims.

Mocha has been so rich for many years past, that in Customs and Taxes it pays no less than 200000 Reals, or Pieces of Eight every year to the Grand Signior, being one of the largest and most considerable places under the Jurisdiction of the Bassa of Yemak. The Governour of the City sits sometimes in Person at the Custom-house visiting the Packs and Chests, he having a certain allowance out of every Chest or Pack. All Indian Ships coming to an Anchor here are oblig'd to pay, besides the ordinary Customs, Anchorage-money, according to their Bulk, from 10 to 50 Reals, which with some other Exactions makes the whole amount to 15 per Cent. The Turks here have also another Invention of squeezing some Money out of the Moorish Nachodes, or Officers of the Ships; for the Governour having summon'd them immediately after their arrival to appear in his Presence, they are conducted thither in great State, attended by his Drums, Pipes, &c. and being reconducted to their Lodgings, the Clothes are taken away again. The same is repeated afterwards just before their departure, when they are reconducted to their Boats; and their Clothes being taken off again, each Officer is oblig'd to pay for this mock Dress 20 or 25 Reals each time.

No sooner are the Moorish Ships come into the Roads after they have dropt their Anchor, but they must carry their Rudder and Sails ashore, and unload the whole Cargo of the Ship (whether they sell it or not) of which they are oblig'd to pay the full Customs. After they are quite unloaden, they give a Signal with a Cannon for the Governour or his Deputies to come aboard, to see whether any thing be left behind; and then they have liberty to fell.

In the Spring the Portugueses come hither with their Ships from Goa, Goga, and other places; their Cargo is commonly Indigo, Sarcas, Callico's, Sail-cloth, all sorts of Gufuratte Stuffs and Clothing, Tobacco, Rice, and Medicines; most of which Commodities are sold to the Turky Caravans, except the Rice and Tobacco, which is consum'd in the Country. They carry back Reals or Pieces of Eight, Golden Ducats, a certain Root used by the Indians in dying red. A little before, or about the same time, used also to come to Mocha the Ships of Daman, Cambaja and the Malabar Coast, laden with Pepper, Clothings of Cambaja and Coromandel, Allegias, Taffacelas, red and white Cassien, red Jetas, Canekyns, Baslas, fine Turbants, white and blue Girdles, painted Callico's, Rice, Tobacco, coarse and fine Porcelain, in lieu of which they carry back Horses, Raisins, Almonds, Camlets, Elephants Teeth of Soffala, red Roots for dying, which grow only in Arabia, Chauru or Coffee-berries. Besides these, the Inhabitants of Achin, of Paty, and other places on the Coast of Melinda, trade hither; they commonly set sail from home in February, or beginning of March, and return from Mocha about August, to take the conveniency of the Mousson.

The want of good Water and Fuel, which the Ships much purchase here at a dear rate, is a great defect in Mocha: However, not far from the City lies a small Isle, where the English used to lay up and careen their Ships; here you may have Provisions for old Clothes in abundance, as likewise Fuel and Water enough; whence it is evident that the Trade of Suratte, Agra, Mocha and Libry (a City seated on the Red Sea at 14 deg. 50 min. fortified with four round Bastions, and adorn'd with three Temples) is one of the most considerable in those parts; parts; as the English have found by Experience.

But before we take quite our leave of Suratte, and the adjacent Territories, we must say something also concerning the City and Castle of Agra. This Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Great Mogul, is one of the most noble Structures of the East, seated upon the Banks of the River Jemini, fortified with a strong Wall of red Stone, with large and deep Ditches, Draw-bridges, and four Gates. Here is also kept the King's Treasury, and the whole Court, or General Assembly of the Great Men of the Empire, who oftentimes are not refrain'd by the Absolute Authority of their Monarch, from committing most barbarous Enormities.

Thus it happen'd August 4. 1644. in the Evening after Sun-set, when all the Persons of Quality used to appear in the Golichanna to salute the King; among the rest, Raja Ammerfing (a Commander over 5000 Horse, who had been absent some days by reason of his Indisposition) making his appearance there, was ask'd by Sillabatchan the King's chief Bakia, why he had not appear'd there in several days? He answer'd him; That he had been prevented by his Indisposition; wherewith the other being not satisfied, gave Raja some opprobrious words, which so exasperated him, that without more ado he run Sillabatchan with his Scymeter thro the Body, laying him dead upon the ground. Another Lord named Galichan, seeing the other murder'd in the King's sight, cut almost off the Arm of Raja, and another Gentleman, the Son of Raja Rintelda, dispatch'd him quite. The King seeing this Tragical Spectacle, gave immediately Orders that the Body of Sillabatchan should be carried to his House in order to his Burial; but that the Body of Raja Ammerfing should be thrown into the River: but scarce were they got with the Body without the Gate to execute the King's Command, when some of the Rasboutes (a rebellious Crew) who had serv'd under him, seeing their Commander's Body drag'd thus along, did fall upon the King's Servants, and kill'd above thirty of them, among whom was the King's Scepter-bearer; so that if the King would see his Orders put in Execution, he was oblig'd to send a confide-able Force to protect them against the Baldaw, Rasboutes.

Agra has four Gates, one on the North-side, cover'd by strong Works; the second on the West-side, where is the Market-place, and the Royal Court of Judicature; the third on the South-side leads to the Royal Palace, being always chain'd up to prevent any body from passing through it on Horse-back, except the King and his Children: The fourth faces the River, where the King every day salutes the Sun, and about Noon sees the Engagements of Elephants, Lions, and other wild Beasts.

The City of Agra therefore is now the Capital City (as Lahor was formerly) of that part of the Indies on this side of the Ganges, which is under the Jurisdiction of the Great Mogul. The Castle is said to have been founded by King Accbar (descended from the Great Tamerlan) after the Conquest of Gujarat.

Wealth and Strength of the Mogul.

I will not pretend to give you an exact account of the Wealth of the Mogul, but leave you to guess at his Strength by the Forces he brought into the Field 1630, against Ghasiam, which consisted in 144500 Horse, and 5000 Elephants; these last the Mogul also uses for his Divisions, and he is often seen in great State on the back of an Elephant richly accoutred, attended by a great number of Horse. When these Elephants are to engage against one another before the King, they pay their Reverence by bending their Knees, and shaking their Trunks to the King; which done, they fall on with a great deal of fierceness; but as soon as they are hotly engag'd, certain Persons are appointed to part them; which done, all Enmity ceases betwixt them, they touch one another with their Trunks, and are fed with Sugar Reeds, and Arack, or Strong-waters.

Combat of the Elephants.

As to the Wealth of the Great Mogul, the same appears in its Lustre on certain Festival days: The New-year's Feast kept on the day of the first New-Moon in March, which lasts eighteen days. On the young Prince's Birth-day every body brings his Offerings to the King, who in his turn makes Presents to his Courtiers, bestows new Places and Dignities upon such as have deserv'd well, and augments their yearly Salaries. The People flock on that day to the Queen's Palace (if she be living) where having likewise made their Offerings under the sound of their Musical Instruments, the Prince is weigh'd in a Golden pair of Scales against Gold and Silver, which (after the weight thereof is set down) is distributed the next day among the Poor.

The present King's Birth-day is celebrated the second of September, when the King is weigh'd in the same manner, against Precious Stones, Gold, Silver, Gold Tissues, Silk Stuffs, Butter, Rice, Fruits, &c. which is afterwards bestow'd upon the Brabmans; and Nuts made so curiously of Gold Wire (as likewise Almonds, and other Fruits) are thrown among the People, that 1000 of them weigh not above 20 Ropias, and cost about 60 Ropias. The whole Ceremony is concluded with drinking to a great excess all the night long, notwithstanding Mahomet's Law. Sir Thomas Row relates, that he had a Golden Cup beset with Turquoises, Rubies and Smaragdes, presented him by the Great Mogul on his Birth-day, but not till he had emptied it four or five times.

The Moors also celebrate a certain Feast to the Memory of two Brothers, Servants to Mahomet Raly, who being on their way to Coromandel on Pilgrimage, were forced by the Pagans of the Country to seek for shelter in a certain Castle; but being destitute of Water, they sallied out courageously upon the Pagans, and after having killed many of them, were at last slain themselves. Their Memory is celebrated in June ten days after the New-Moon, when they carry a Bear along the Streets laden with Turbants, Arrows, Bows and Scymeters, certain Priests singing doleful Tunes, and flashing themselves with Knives, till the Blood follows very plentifully. In the Market-place they set up the Figures of two Men of Straw, representing the Murderers of these two Saints, at which they let fly their Arrows, and at last burn them to Ashes. They keep also another Feast in June, when they kill abundance of He-Goats, and afterwards feast upon the Meat: This is said to be done in Commemoration of the Sacrifice of Abraham.

Another Feast.

The Great Mogul being absolute Lord over 37 large Provinces and Kingdoms, the Persons and Estates of all which are at his sole disposal, besides the immense Presents of his Subjects (none of whom dare approach his Person without them) must needs be Master of immense Treasures: The King of Vissapour sent at one time 30 Elephants, two whereof were girded by Golden Chains, weighing 400 Pound weight; two others with Silver Chains, the rest of Brass, besides 500 Horses, the Saddles and

CHAP. V.

IT is most surprizing to understand what God-like Titles the Subjects of the Great Mogul bestow upon their Lord and Master! How all his Words are look'd upon as Oracles, and all his Actions receiv'd with a profound Amazement! Hence it is that the vulgar sort are really of opinion, that certain Rays dart from his Head and Turbant, which admit not of the near approach of indifferent Persons; and that they scarce ever mention his Name without the additional Titles of the Most Potent upon Earth, Lord of the World, Great Monarch, The most exalted Majesty, The brightest of Princes among the Great Ones, &c. 'Tis true, most of the Indian Kings affect most magnificent, or rather vainglorious Titles; but the Kings of Achem and Siam seem to outvie all the rest in this point: The first styles himself 'King of the World, created by God, whose Body shines like the Sun at Noon-day: A King unto whom God has given the Lustre of Full-Moon; a King chosen by God, a King perfect as the North-star, King of Kings, of the Posterity of Alexander the Great; a King before whom all other Kings must bow their Heads, and pay Homage; a King as wise as a round Globe, and happy like the Sea; a King who is God's Slave and Servant; who sees God, and lets the World know the Justice of God; a Protector of God's Justice, a King blessed by God, a King who covers the Iniquities of Men, and forgives their Offences; a King, under whose Shade Slaves seek for shelter; a King perfect and infallible in his Councils; a King and Benefactor to his People; a just King, who maintains God's Justice; the most beneficial King upon Earth, the Soles of whose Feet emit a most odoriferous Scent, beyond all other Kings; a King whom God has blessed with his Gold Mines, whose Eyes are as bright as the Morning Star: A King who is Master of many Elephants of all sorts: A King unto whom God has given Riches to a dorn his Elephants with Gold and precious Stones; besides a great number of Elephants of War, armed with Iron Teeth and Copper Shoes: A King upon whom God has bestowed Horses with golden Harnesses beset with precious Stones, and many thousand Horses for War; the choicest Stone-horses of Arabia, Turkey, Catti, and Balacki: A King whose Territories extend from the South to North: A King who bestows his Favours upon all that love him, and rejoices such as are disturbed in Mind: A King who has in his custody every thing that God has created; A King whom God has placed above all things, to rule, and to shew the Lustre of the Throne of Achem.

The King of Siam goes still beyond it, as may be seen by his Letter written 1636. to the late Prince of Orange, Frederick Henry.

"THIS is a Golden Letter of Friendship and Confederacy, replenish'd with the Brightness of God, the most Excellent, comprehending all that is to be known; the most fortunate above what is to be found by Men; the best and the most secure in Heaven, Earth, and in Hell; the most magnificent, delicious, and most agreeable Words; the Glory and irresistible Virtue whereof pass all over the Earth, with the same Vigor, as if thro God's Power the Dead were revived from their Graves, and purify'd from all their Iniquities, to the surprise, not only of the Priests, but also of Merchants, and all the servile sort of Mankind. For what King can compare with Me, who am the most Potent, most Illustrious and Invincible? The Master of 100 Crowns, adorn'd with nine sorts of precious Stones: Supreme Lord (we pass by some blasphemous Expressions) of the vast and most noble Kingdom of Siam; the Brightness of the most beautiful City of India, the "Capital City of the World, the Streets whereof are crowded daily with People; a City adorned with all the Beauties of the World, and irrigated with delicious Brooks; whose Lord has a Palace of Gold and precious Stones; a Master of gilded Thrones, of the white, red, and round-tail'd Elephants, which three sorts God has not bestowed upon any other Kings; a Divine Lord, in whose Territories is deposited the Victorious Sword, and who resembles the God of War with four Arms.

The Mogul's Court.

But to return to the Great Mogul and his Court: The Persian Language is the Court Language there, tho besides this there are at least three other Languages used throughout his Territories. The chief Lords of his Courts have their certain monthly Salaries allotted them, out of which they are obliged to maintain a certain number of Horses; among these are four who maintain 12000 Horses each (the King's Sons entertain 15000 Horses) others 1000, others 100, in proportion to their Salaries; the whole number of Horses maintained by his Courtiers, being computed at 100000 Horses.

The Mogul changes his Clothes every day for new ones, which he bestows upon his Courtiers. The Mogul entertains certain Officers of Quality, call'd Nababes, at Suratte and other places, whose business is, to enter upon Treaties with Foreigners, and to keep the Roads free from Robbers, by punishing them with the utmost Severity. The Mogul has also a laudable custom, to lay up vast Sums of Money and Provisions in certain places, to be reserved for necessitous Occasions. He appears three times a day, and sits in Council, from seven till nine in the Evening.

Religion.

The Moguls profess the Mahometan Religion, but are no great Zealots in it, as Atbanasius Kircher has well observed in Geld Edim Mahomet, the tenth of the Moguls descended from the Great Tamerlan the first, who call'd the Jesuits into his Empire; and their continual Debaucheries in strong Liquor (directly contrary to the Law of Mahomet) is an infallible sign of their indifferency in point of Religion: Besides, that throughout all the Empire they are not near so well versed in the Alcoran, and the Law of Mahomet, as the Africans, those of Fez and Morocco, &c. Notwithstanding all their Ignorance, this accursed Doctrine has spread it self within fifty or sixty Years, from hence all over the Isles of Java,

Borneo, and Celebes, besides divers other Countries in those parts.

The Mahometans are obliged to pray five times every day, viz. in the morning, at noon, in the afternoon, after Sun-set, and at midnight; certain People being appointed, who from the Steeples of the Mosques, exhort them to their Prayers, by crying Lailla illa illa, Mahomed Reful Lalla: when they are going to pray, they stand upright upon a Carpet spread upon the ground, holding both their Hands to their Ears; sometimes bowing towards the ground, sometimes standing upright again. The Alcoran is the Law Book of the Mahometans, containing 114 Chapters, being a mixture of the Jewish and Christian Doctrine. Mahomet flourished about the Year of Christ 600, and died 632. His Companion was one Sergius an Arian. The Father of Mahomet was one Abdalla, and his Mother Emine, descended of the illustrious Family of the Koresbites.

Mahomet first served in the Wars under the Emperor Heracius, and afterwards served a Merchant; after whose death he married Chadiga a rich Widow; and being addicted to Enthusiasm, he and his Companion Sergius compiled the Alcoran, pretending that he kept correspondence with the Arch-Angel Gabriel, who in his Trances (which were nothing but Epileptic Fits) had revealed to him these Secrets. He was born at Mecca, but being forced from thence fled to Medina, from which time the Mahometans take their Epoch, and call it Medina Ahnabi, or the City of the Great Prophet. His Doctrine was first received by his Wife Chadiga, and his Servant Seydin; afterwards by Hali, Abubeker, Omar, Otman, and others his Followers, who were called Caliphs. The Persians prefer Hali before Mahomet, and the Turks, Omar. Abubeker reign'd two Years, Omar ten Years; it is he who regulated the Alcoran, and instituted the Fast in the Month Rammedan. Otman reign'd 12 Years, and conquered Mauritania and Cyprus. Hali was by Mahomet appointed his Successor; but the other three having usurped the Kingdom, with the exclusion of Hali, this is the reason the Persians, who adhere to the last, abominate the three former.

The hatred between the Persians and Turks (tho both Mahometans) proceeds from the different Interpretations of the Alcoran, and certain Ceremonies relating to their Prayers, covering their Heads, &c.

The Feasts, Sabbath, and some other things belonging to the Mahometans; their Priests, Holy Orders, Manners and Customs.

NOT to insist here upon the fabulous Trifles of Mahomet's Visions, contained in some parts of the Alcoran, we will proceed to give you a short Account of the most material Parts of the Mahometan Religion.

They commonly circumcise Boys and Girls at thirteen Years of Age, viz. so soon as they are able to say their Confessions; There is but one God, and Mahomet his Prophet. If a Jew turns Turk, he is not circumcised again, but only washed with Water. Their Washing, or Bathing, is performed upon a threefold occasion.

1. After they have eased Nature, or cohabited with their Wives.

2. When they are to go to the Mosque, or to read the Alcoran. And,

3. After they have committed some enormous Sins.

Their High Priest is call'd Mufti, in great esteem with the Grand Seignior, and a Member of his Privy Council. Next to him are the Cadileghers, or Provincial High Priests of Europe, Natolia, &c. These are followed by the Cady, Scribes, Santoncs, Hoggy, Talijmans, and Deruises.

The Sabbath of the Mahometans is on Friday, which they keep with the same strictness as the Jews do theirs on Saturday, at least with more devotion, as the Christians their Sunday. They have in each City, besides the other Mosques, one great Mosque, where they then assemble to perform their Devotion. Their Lent begins in February with the New Moon, and continues thirty days, with a great deal of severity, for they neither eat nor drink all the day long; but some make themselves amends at Night, tho the Zealots will not taste the least of Wine, or any other strong Liquor all that time, nor converse with their Wives. They are permitted to marry as many Wives as they please, tho the Alcoran allows no more than four Wives.

Their Churches are flat on the top, commonly built on a rising Ground, so as to be seen at a distance above the other Houses. They have within nothing but bare white Walls, without Pictures or Hangings; tho on some of their Tombs we see certain Passages engrav'd out of the Alcoran. On the South-East of the Mosque stands the Pulpit made of Brick-work, about three steps from the Ground, from whence their Teachers say their publick Prayers, and explain the Alcoran. Their Great Mosques are generally adorn'd with two high Steeples, each having Stairs within from the bottom to the top. Their Mosques have scarce any Revenues belonging to them, except what the Priest makes by letting some few Chambers belonging to them: Many of them are built by charitable Persons, and some of these have a settled Income. It is further worth observation, that if a Jew will turn Mahometan, he must first own Christ, before they will receive him among the Musselmens.

They have many Ecclesiastical Orders among them, three whereof have no Possessions, or any other Propriety; and some pretend to such a degree of Purity, that they profess themselves born without manly Seed. Some make certain Vows, like the Roman Catholick Monks; some appear quite naked, others only cover their Privities. Some have vow'd perpetual Silence; some carry Water without Reward; some prick themselves with sharp-pointed Needles or Instruments; others carry a Ring of three pound weight in their Privy Members.

For the rest, they believe God a Corporeal Being, who is carried in a Throne by the Angels, and Christ to be only a Man, and Mahomet the Comforter mentioned by John 14. 16. They believe a third place besides Heaven and Hell, and therefore pray for the Dead; as also a General Judgment, but implicated in many fabulous Absurdities; for they tell you that two black Angels, one call'd Munger, the other Quaregner, will appear, the first with an Iron Club, the other with a large Fork in his hand; that every Man besides is to have two Angels to assist him; but if after all he cannot give a good account of himself, the Angel with the Club knocks him down, and so he is carried to Hell. And because they are of opinion that those Angels appear to them in their Graves, these are generally built hollow; whence also they often make the following Ejaculation: Good God, preserve us from the Interrogating Angel, from from the Pain of the Grave, and from the Baldew. Evil Way. They add many fabulous things concerning the Angel Adriel, who at the approach of the day of Judgment, is to kill all living things, and to hang himself at last, till after forty Years the Angel Seraphiel shall waken the Souls; and such-like Fables too long to be inserted here.

Paradise. Concerning Beatitude, and the Paradise, they believe it consists in a continued enjoyment of Pleasures there. They divide it into seven different Apartments; one whereof is of Gold, the second of Silver, another of Pearls, precious Stones, and so forth. Here they are to pass their time in Pleasures, with certain most beautiful Women, created for that purpose by God, whilst their Wives shall look through a Grate, and be Spectators of the Enjoyments of their Husbands with these most beautiful Women, who shall not be subject to the monthly times, or Child-bearing, and the Men as vigorous as Mahomet himself, who gloried in his having outdone by double the number Ovid himself; Et memini, numeros sustinuisse novem. They say they shall drink in Paradise of the Spring of Alcazar mentioned by Mahomet; they shall be delighted with the scent of the most odoriferous Citrons, which shall produce most beautiful Virgins that shall embrace the Musfulmans, and delight them with their Charms for fifty Years together: and more such like Notions tending to elevate the Thoughts with imaginary corporeal Pleasures to be enjoy'd in the next World, by such as have observ'd the following Rules in their life-time, which they reckon absolutely requisite to attain to this Bliss.

Rules to attain Eternal Bliss. To believe one God, and Mahomet his Prophet, and a Day of Judgment; to pray at certain times; to wash, bow, and observe certain other Ceremonies in praying: To pay the Tithes, to fast in the Month Rammedan; to go on Pilgrimage to Mecca; to abstain from Extortions, Wine, and Hogs-flesh, because they believe the Hogs to have been progenerated out of the Elephants and Mens Dung in the Ark of Noah. They are also forbid not to use Tables nor Dice, not to swear by God, not to be rash in our Judgment, or deceive a Brother either in publick or private; not to part from a virtuous Wife; not to be too forward to object and discover the Faults of a Brother, or to despise him; not to set the Fear of God and his Punishment out of our Eyes, or to calumniate our Neighbour, and spread what is heard upon slight Reports. On the other hand, they are enjoined to be thankful for God's Mercy; to be patient in Adversities, and not to despair of God's Mercy; and to believe that whatever happens to us does not come by chance (for the Mahometans maintain strongly God's Providence) not to deny a Brother's Request out of Avaritiously, not to raise God's Anger out of love to his Creatures, or to prefer a Temporal Interest before that which is to come: In all Ghostly Affairs to have a respect to him that is above us, and in Temporal Matters to those that are below us: Not to enter into any Association with the Devils; to refrain from Vanity, allow Orphans and Widows their own; to instruct their Children in such things as relate to the Divine Service; to do good to your Neighbour, not to curse any of God's Creatures, but to praise him in his Works; to read the Alcoran (except when you are unclean) to appear at the publick Congregations, and to do as you would be done by. It is further their opinion, that the Souls of the Brutes are likewise to be reviv'd and join'd with their Bodies.

In relation to their Manners and Customs, I will begin here with the Character given them by a Person of extraordinary Learning, viz. That in their whole Behaviour they are declar'd Enemies to Vanity, as well in their Words and Deeds as in their Clothing, which makes them look upon many of us Christians like Monks, who are apt to imitate every thing they see; whereas the Turks of both Sexes, young and old, rich or poor, are as regular and decent in their Habits, as if they belong'd to one certain Order; and are so careful in the Education of their Youth, that their School-Masters prescribe every day a certain part of the Alcoran, which they learn by heart, and so in two years time pass through the whole Alcoran.

In their Marriages, and the tokens of Marriageableness and Virginity, they observe the following Rules: As soon as the monthly Times begin to appear, they carry the Maiden for seven days together, adorn'd with Flowers, and as it were in Triumph, to the next Brook, during which time she is to eat nothing but what comes from the Coco-tree. The Portugueses (who perhaps have got it from the Moors) publish the Marriageableness of their Daughters by the sound of Trumpets, and invite their next Relations to a Feast. When a Marriage is to be concluded, they bargain very hard for the Dowry; but this being past, and the Agreement made betwixt the Parents, Guardians, or other nearest Relations, the Day for the Consummation thereof is appointed: then the Bridegroom on Horse-back adorn'd with sweet-scented Flowers, under two Umbrello's, passes with his next Friends through the chiefest Streets under the sound of Trumpets, Hautboys, Drums, and other such like Instruments, to the Bride's House, where having stay'd half an hour at the door, and entertain'd his Bride with the Musick and the throwing of some Squibs, and other small Fireworks, he is admitted into the House; and being seated upon a Chair raised somewhat from the ground, and cover'd with Tapestry, the Bride is brought to him by her Parents and Relations, in the presence of a Priest and the Judge of the Place (without whose Consent no Marriage is valid): The Priest having read certain Passages out of a Book, the Bridegroom swears, that in case of a Divorce from his Wife, he will be ready to restore her Dowry; which done, the Priest gives the Benedictions, and they are married, the whole being concluded at that time with a Present of Betel and Arack to the Guests, yet not to any excess, tho afterwards they keep the Wedding for three, four, six, seven or eight days together, according to every ones pleasure and ability.

However Divorces are very frequent among the Moors (or Indian Mahometans) which is soon done, if the Husband pursuant to his Promise returns the Dowry, which consists commonly in nothing else but the Woman's Apparel. A Man is at liberty to kill his Wife in case of Adultery, but a Woman may not so much as sue a Divorce upon the same score. When a Woman is divorced from her Husband, she takes generally her Daughters along with her, leaving the Sons to the Husband's disposal. The next morning after the Bridegroom has lain with his Bride, and found her a Virgin, publick Proclamation is made throughout the whole Town (for the honour of her Parents) when the Bride's Mother hastening to her Daughter's Bed-Chamber, and finding the usual tokens of Virginity in the Sheets or Clothes laid for that purpose, she carries them to the Bridegroom's Parents, who rejoice with her at the Conquest of their Son over the Maiden's Virginity. But if these Tokens are not apparent, matters are carried off with less Pomp and more Silence.

The Mahometans in general are Enemies to Incest, so that even the Grand Signior's Son after the death of his Father never touches his Concubines, but shuts them up in a certain Castle; on the other hand, they are extremely addicted not only to Lust, but also to Sodomy it self, and Combination with Brutes. There are Instances, that two Prostitutes in Persia have been condemned, one to be occupied by a Horse, the other by an Ass; the first died, but the second escap'd with Life.

The Moors feed generally upon Rice instead of Bread, which is well tasted here, and grows in great plenty in Bengale, and divers other Provinces; the same is in much request throughout the Indies, in China, Japan, in the Isles of Formosa, Javia, Celebes, Borneo, Ceylon, in Malabar, and other places, tho Japan and Bengale produce likewise very good Wheat. The poorer sort, who can't get above 4 or 5 d. a day to maintain themselves, are forc'd to be contented with Kizery (a mixture of Beanflower and Rice) boil'd in Water. Their Habitations are also very low and mean, made of Clay, and their Household-stuff suitable to their Houses; for besides a few Vessels of Brass, and the two Bedsteads where the Man and Wife lie (who never sleep together) there is nothing to be seen there, they having neither Benches nor Chairs, but only Mats to sit upon. In some places they use Cording instead of Wood for Fuel: But the Houses of People of fashion are spacious, and divided into many Apartments, flat on the top, whereupon they take the cool Air in the Evening. They are very splendid in their Entertainments, Wives and Houses, but especially in Gold and Silver Plate.

Their Clothing is very grave, and they scarce ever change the fashion thereof; the Men wear Coats of Callico, or rich Tissues and Silks; they are strait above, close to the Body, fastened with a Girdle round the Waste, and reach down to the Knees: their Breeches are wide above, and narrow at the bottom, reaching down to the Legs, and trimm'd with Fringes; their Shoes are of gilt Leather, which they turn down at the heels, for the conveniency of throwing them off upon occasion. When they salute one another, they touch the Turbant with the Hand only, but never move them as we do our Hats. They are girt about their Loins with a Girdle of some fine Stuff, over which they wear another of fine Linen, and a broad Dagger on the left side.

Baldæus. The Ornament of the Women consists chiefly in Bracelets about their Arms and Feet, Ear-pendants, Nose-rings, and other Jewels; when they are going abroad, they cover their Heads with a Veil, with several hair Locks twisted together, hanging down their backs.

They observe certain peculiar Customs in their Burials; for no sooner is the Breath out of the Body, but their Wives, Children and Neighbours make a most lamentable Outcry, asking ever and anon the Deceased, what made him die, whether he wanted any thing in his life-time? This they continue for three days successively; then they invite his Friends to a Feast in memory of the Deceased, whose Corps being in the mean while well washed, and sow'd up in some white Stuff, with all sorts of odoriferous Drugs, is laid upon a Bier, and accompanied by three Priests (who sing and read all the way) carried by ten or twelve Persons to the Grave: here they lay him upon his right side, with the Feet to the South, the Head to the North, and the Face to the West. This done, they lay Boards over the whole Corps to keep the Earth from touching it; and whilst they are filling up the Grave, the Standers-by mutter out certain Prayers, and then return to the House of the Deceased, with the Priests, who for several days after pray for his Soul, shorter or longer, according as they are able to pay them. During this time no Fire must be seen in the House, what Victuals they use being dress'd without doors. Upon the Grave they lay two Stones, one at the Head, and another at the Feet, the Interstice being of the same length with the dead Corps underneath it: upon these the Priests read certain Chapters out of the Alcoran, and distribute some Bread among the Poor: Upon the same at the Head, they set sometimes a Turbant, and if a Female be buried there, a kind of a Bonnet. Thus much of the Mahometan Subjects of the Great Mogul; of the Idolatry of the Gentives we shall have occasion to treat at large in the third Book.

CHAP. VII.

A Description of Diu. A Sea-Engagement of the Portugueses with Jazy and Hocenus. The singular Bravery of Laurence d'Almeida, and Nonnius Vasques Pereria. The Harbour of Diu taken by the Portugueses. The Flight of Jazy and Hocenus. Moorish Colours sent to Portugal.

AT the uttermost Southern Point of Guswarie lies the City of Diu, the Draught whereof you see here annexed, where the Portugueses have three strong Forts. It's commonly call'd Diu, tho its right Name is believ'd to be Tivo, i. e. an Isle, in the Malabar Language, as may be seen in the Names of Naynativo, Anchativo, Maltivo, or the Maldive Islands, which being in all sixty in number, extend from the Cape Commoryn from the 7 deg. of Northern Latitude, to the third deg. of Southern Latitude, a Tract of 140 or 150 German Leagues.

Origin of Diu.

As to the Origin of Diu, they relate, that one Jazy, a Native of Sarmatia, did settle in this Island; but being taken Prisoner and made a Slave by the Mahometans in these parts, he chang'd the Christian Religion for that of the Turks, and being sold into Cambaja, was at last for his singular dexterity in managing the Bow and Arrow, prefer'd to the Service of K. Madrasakoon the Father of K. Mamudius. Jazy, to give a Proof of his Skill, shooting one day a certain Bird of Prey flying, he gain'd thereby so much Credit, that the King not long after gave him his liberty, and restor'd to him the Isle of Diu.

This Isle, which at that time had nothing to shew but the Ruins and miserable Remnants of a once flourishing City, began to recover part of its former Splendor under Jazy, by reason of its convenient Situation, betwixt the Arabian Shoar, and the Kingdom of Decan. Having provided for the security of the place, by erecting divers Forts and other Fortifications, and his Wealth increasing in a few years, he began to equip a Fleet, in order to attack his Enemies Ships at Sea. Hocenus (otherwise named Amiraxem) a Persian by Birth, and Commander in chief of the Ships that were to come from Egypt into the Indies, having lately had a smart Engagement with the Portugueses, Lawrence and Francis d'Almeida, and coming that way, Jazy thought fit to enter into a Contederacy with with him, which was done accordingly: Whilst they were consulting by what means best to annoy their Enemies with their joint Fleets, News was brought, that Lawrence d'Almeida was with a few Ships come to an Anchor before Chaul, and had landed his Men (as being quite ignorant of the arrival of the Egyptian Fleet in those parts.) One Nizamaluc reign'd at that time at Chaul, for the great Persons of Decan having imprison'd their King, had divided his Kingdom among themselves, whereof this part was fallen to his share. Nizamaluc, tho no great Friend to the Christians, yet for Interest sake had order'd his Subjects to maintain a good Correspondence with the Portuguese trafficking in those parts; which Almeida being not ignorant of, he thought he might stay here with safety enough, till he had the opportunity of convoying the Portuguese Merchant Ships to Cochin. It was indeed rumour'd abroad, that the Egyptian Fleet had been seen on that Coast; but the Portuguese imagining that the same might be occasion'd by the arrival of certain Ships coming about that time of the year from Mocha, they made no great account of it: One of the Ship's Crew at length espy'd a considerable Fleet from the top of the Main-mast, but could not discern their Strength, till at last they began to suspect the truth; for Hocenus was advancing that way, and Jazy preparing to follow him, in order to attack the Portuguese. Certain Intelligence being at last brought to Almeida, that the Enemy was at hand, he order'd his Men aboard, which was scarce done when they saw the Egyptians advancing against them. These Barbarians had flatter'd themselves with hopes to surprize the Portuguese, but these having just had time enough to put themselves in a good posture of Defence, receiv'd their Enemies so warmly, that they thought fit to stay for the arrival of Jazy; however, they charged one another (but at a distance) all that day, but towards night Hocenus retreated with his Vessels to the other Bank of the River among the Sands, for his greater Security's sake.

great fury, in hopes of boarding the Baldus, Egyptian Ships; but not being able to come close enough up with them by reason of the Sands, he was forc'd to rest satisfied with plying them with his Cannon, which he did all the day long, notwithstanding the Enemy were much stronger in Ships and Men. The Engagement was very hot, Laurence d'Almeyda being himself wounded twice with an Arrow: The Combat continued thus with considerable loss on both sides, till towards night, Jazy came to the Relief of the Egyptians with 40 Ships, but not daring to engage with the Portuguese, came to an Anchor at the Entrance of the River, to be nearer to Hocenus in order to join with him the next day.

The Portuguese being somewhat moved at this unexpected fight, represented to their Admiral Almeyda, that having gain'd sufficient Honour in the yesterday's Engagement, they ought now to consult Prudence, and to endeavour to bring their Ships out of the Harbour in the night time into the open Sea. Almeyda did not disapprove the Advice of his Sea-Commanders, but as he was of a haughty Temper, so he could not resolve to steal away by night, but determin'd to make the best of his way to-morrow by day-light; with this Resolution he order'd all his Ships, as well Merchants as others, to be ready to set sail with the first Tide by break of day. The Moors no sooner perceiv'd his Intention, but they made towards them in order to intercept their Passage; in this Engagement a Bullet happening to strike through the Portuguese Admiral next to the Rudder, she took much Water, and was cast upon the Rocks, whence she could not be got off: The Portuguese Commanders seeing the impossibility of saving the Ship, sent a Boat to the Admiral, desiring him to save his Person, and preserve himself for another occasion; but in vain, for he told them, that he would never be guilty of such a piece of Treachery, as to leave those who had hitherto been his Companions in the Danger, in the lurch. Accordingly he animated his Men both with his Words and Example to defend themselves to the utmost extremity; being thus animated by their Admiral, they fought like Lions, rejecting all Proposals offer'd them by the Enemy, resolving either to save the Ship, or die in the defence thereof.

In the mean while Almeyda having one of his Thighs shot off by a Bullet, lost however not his wonted Courage, but ordering his Men to place him upon a Chair near the Main-mast, he there gave his Orders as occasion requir'd; but whilst he was busy in encouraging his Men, another unfortunate Ball took away part of his Breast and Ribs, so that his Entrails falling out he gave up the Ghost immediately, and his dead Carcase was carried below Deck immediately. This was the end of the Brave Almeyda, who had signalized himself so often by his Bravery in the Service of his King and Country.

And kill'd.

There were besides him two other brave Fellows, tho much inferior in Rank, whose Names do well deserve a place in this History; one was Laurentius Frerius Catus, a Servant to the deceased Admiral, who being wounded with an Arrow in one of his Eyes, threw himself notwithstanding this upon his Master's Body, and when he saw the Moors enter the Ship, fell in pell-mell among them, and kill'd several of them with his Sword before they could dispatch him. The other was a Sailor, named Andrew Van Kertua, who standing on the top of the Main-mast, and being wounded by a Musquet-Ball in his Shoulder, and having before lost the use of his Right-hand, defended himself from thence with his left hand for two whole days against those Barbarians, till at length they promised him his Life, upon which he surrender'd, and afterwards return'd safely into Portugal, where he was honourably rewarded for his Bravery.

The taking of the Admiral's Ship of the Portuguese, tho it cost the Barbarians 600 Men (140 being lost on the Christians side) yet occasion'd no small joy in their Fleet; as on the other hand, the loss thereof soon reach'd to Cochin by such Ships as were fled thither: However the Portuguese were so far from being dismay'd thereat, that resolving to be reveng'd upon those Barbarians, they left no stone unturn'd to gather a more formidable Strength at Sea; and Albuquerque after having settled matters at Socotora (an Isle at the entrance of the Red-Sea) did considerable mischief to the Moors near Ormus, as Laurence d'Almeyda (the Father of the Admiral lately kill'd) reveng'd himself for the Death of his Son, by the taking of Dabul, Diu and Panane, whereof we shall give you a more ample account anon.

For Emanuel King of Portugal, being inform'd concerning the convenient Situation of the Harbour of Diu, sent his Orders

Orders to Sequeria to build a Fortrefs there, cost it what it would. Accordingly Francis d'Almeyda, after the taking of Dabul, steer'd his course for the Harbour of Diu. Hocenus was for engaging the Portugueses without the Harbour; but at the perswasion of Jazy laid aside that Design, it being thought much more expedient to expect the coming of the Christians with their joint Forces, and to annoy them at their approach both by Sea and Land; for which purpose they had besides the Egyptian Ships and those of Diu receiv'd 80 Brigantines of Calecut, and had planted their Cannon at convenient distances along the shore. The Portuguese Admiral was somewhat surpriz'd to see the Enemy keep so close beyond expectation; yet interpreting the same as a good Omen of his future Victory, he spent the remainder of the day in viewing the Posture of the Enemy, and Consultations what was best to be done.

He having declar'd his Resolution of attacking the Admiral's Ship of the Egyptians, aboard of which was Hocenus, the same was approved; but he desir'd not to expose his Person at this critical juncture, but to commit the management of the Design to Nonnius Vasques Pereria: Accordingly, every thing being got in readiness, they enter'd the Harbour the next morning with the first Tide, and a strong Sea-Wind, Nonnius leading the Van in his Ship with 200 chosen Men, being follow'd by the Admiral d'Almeyda to protect and cover his Rear. Nonnius advanced bravely under the thundering Noise of the Cannon (by which ten Seamen that were furling the Sails were kill'd at once) and making his way through the midst of the Barbarians, at last board'd Hocenus in his Ship, tho not without great slaughter on both sides, he himself having the misfortune to be wounded in the Throat by an Arrow, of which he died three days after.

The Portugueses not being dismay'd at the disaster of their Commander, but inflam'd with Revenge, redoubled their Fury, which the Barbarians being no longer able to withstand, they gave all over for lost, Hocenus himself narrowly escaping in a Boat to the shore, and (being somewhat diffident of Jazy) took Horse immediately, in order to fly to the King of Baldem. Cambaja, where he was well receiv'd. Those of Calecut seeing the best of their Brigantines ruin'd by the Enemy's Shot, thought it their best way to save themselves with the lightest over the Sands, and two of Hocenus his Gallies were carried off by Roderic Soares; many of the Barbarians leap'd into the Sea, where they lost their Lives, the rest got ashore, and dispersed, Jazy not being able to stop their flight.

There was as yet remaining the Ship of Jazy, a Vessel of a vast Bulk, appearing like a Castle well provided with Artillery and Men, being besides this cover'd with Oxes Hides to keep off the Arrows, and hinder the Enemy from boarding by its slipperiness: The Portugueses made several attempts to master it, but being as often repulsed, at last sunk her with their Cannon. The loss of the Barbarians was computed at 3000 Men, the Portugueses had only 30 kill'd, but 300 wounded. The Portugueses relate, that Nonnius his Ship being very old, yet held out very well during the Combat, but immediately after was found leaky in many places; most of the Mamaluques or Egyptians were slain in this Engagement. How slenderly the Portugueses were provided with all manner of Necessaries, may be guessed from hence, that when Nonnius his Wound was to be dress'd, there was no Linen in the Ship to do it with, but they were forc'd to tear a Shirt for that purpose. Certain it is that the Portugueses can make harder shift than most other Nations, a thing of great consequence in time of War, Plenty and Luxury being often the ruin of the best Armies. The Booty got by the Portugueses in this Engagement was considerable; for besides four War-ships, and as many Merchant-Men, with their Artillery, they got a considerable quantity of Gold, Silver and precious Stuffs and Cloths, all which was given a Prey to the Soldiers and Ships Crew: Three of the Sultan's Colours were sent to Portugal to be preserv'd there in memory of so remarkable a Victory; which made an ample amends to the Portugueses for the loss they had sustain'd some time before near Chaul.

Peace made with Jazy. Ferdinand Coutinho made Viceroy. Differences arisen betwixt Almeyda and Albuquerque. The Portugueses take Diu, which is re fortified by Jazy. Nonnius goes to Diu. The Isle Betel taken. Saldania surprizes Goga.

for Peace.

Jazy thought it now time to sue for Peace, to obtain which he was not sparing in his Promises, to endeavour to engage all the Neighbouring Princes into the Interest of Portugal; so the Peace was concluded under condition that he should surrender all the remaining Egyptian Ships to the Portugueses, release the Prisoners taken near Chaul, and provide their Fleet with all manner of Necessaries. Jazy being very willing, or rather necessitated, to comply with the Conditions, the Portugueses thought fit not to attempt anything further against Diu for that time, as being unwilling to embroil themselves with the King of Cambaja. Thus Almeyda retir'd victorious to Cochim, having paid to Nizamaluc, as he pass'd that way, the usual Presents that were in Arrears.

Almeyda

Coutinho.

Differences betwixt

But Almeyda did not long enjoy the fruits of his late Victory, for Ferdinand Coutinho a Person of Quality, was soon after sent with 15 Ships and 3000 Men to join with Albuquerque in order to attack the Moors, and especially the City of Calecut; for some Differences being arisen betwixt Almeyda and Albuquerque, which were fomented by some malicious Persons, the King of Portugal thought he could pitch upon no better Expedient to prevent the ill Consequences thereof, than by sending Coutinho to succeed Almeyda, who preferring the King's Interest before his private Interest, quietly surrendred his Charge, and at the same time was reconcil'd to Albuquerque, after he had managed the Government of the Indies with more than ordinary Conduct and Wisdom; a Person worthy of a much better Fortune than what happen'd to him afterwards. For in his return to Portugal having occasion to touch at the Cape of good Hope, to take in some fresh Provisions, some of his Men being got ashore, and falling into Differences with some of the Natives about the exchange of their Commodities, Almeyda running thither with Sword in hand, to see what was the matter, the Natives began to fall upon him and his Men; and being reinforced with fresh Numbers, set so hard upon the Portugueses, that they were not able to get to their Ships without fighting their way through them, which they did with a great deal of Bravery, but alas! not without the loss of their Commander Almeyda (who was run through the Body with a Stick pointed at the end) and twelve more of their best Soldiers; this was the unfortunate end of this great Man, so famous for his great Achievements both in Europe and Asia, being forc'd to end his days upon the shore of Africa, which robb'd him both of the Rewards due to his Services, and even of a Christian Sepulture.

We told you before, that the Portugueses thought fit not to attempt any thing further against Diu; it is now time to shew you what further measures were taken to bring about their design to erect a Fort in that Island. They had so far agreed the matter with the King of Cambaja, that he favour'd their Intentions, or at least was not against them; but Jazy not only us'd all his Endeavours at Court to obstruct the design of the Portugueses, but also prepar'd every thing for a vigorous Resistance in case of need. In the mean while he was not sparing in fair Words or Promises, nay even in Deeds, to the Portugueses; for no sooner arriv'd Sequeria at Diu from Ormu, but he regal'd the Fleet with fresh Provisions, and the Officers with Presents, with a great many Protestations of Friendship to the Crown of Portugal: but when Sequeria began to talk to Jazy concerning the intended Fort, he declin'd the matter, alledging that it lay not alone in his power, and therefore they must obtain the King of Cambaja's Consent, in which he would assist them with all his Interest.

Sequeria was not so stupid as not to smell the Rat, but thinking it best to repay him in his own coin, he dissembl'd the matter, and returning his Compliments with much Civility, he prepar'd underhand for War; but Jazy who had a watchful Eye upon all his Actions, knew so well how to improve his time, and provide for his Security, that Sequeria thought it most advisable to delay his Project

Project till the next year, against which time he expected some considerable Reinforcement.

Sequeria was no sooner departed, but Jazy imbrac'd this opportunity of strengthening himself on all sides; he added several new Works to the place, and erected a Castle in the midst of the Entrance of the Harbour, and betwixt that and the City, defended it with a strong Chain: He kept several Ships loaden with Ballast ready to be sunk upon occasion, to stop up the Passage on the other side, and order'd vast pieces of Stones and Rocks to be sunk under the Walls, to prevent the Portugueses Gallies from approaching near to them: He also for the better Defence of the Harbour hir'd 180 Brigantines, and some Merchant-men, man'd with Arabians, Perfians and Turks (profess'd Enemies of the Christians) leaving in the mean while no stone unturn'd to thwart the design'd Project of the Portugueses at the Court of the King of Cambaja.

Neither were the Portugueses idle on their side, but having made what Preparations they thought fit for such an Undertaking, Nonnius Acunia the chief Commander of the Portugueses in the Indies, set forward in order to put it in Execution: But being resolv'd to make use both of Cunning and Force at the same time, he had by Presents engag'd several bold and cunning Fellows, who were to pass to Diu in the Quality and Habit of Merchants, but in effect to serve for Spies, and to give notice of what they thought worth his knowledg. Thus prepar'd, the time and place of the Rendezvous of the whole Fleet being appointed at Chaul, he set sail from thence with 300 Sail great and small, well provided with Artillery and Ammunition, having aboard 3000 Portugueses, as many Malabars, and 2000 Canarines, for Dabul, a small City in the Confines of Cambaja; where the Portugueses, being much animated by the Presence and Speech of a certain Franciscan Frier, named Anthony Petron, declar'd that they would not desist, till they had forced the Barbarians from their strong Holds in those parts. But finding the Place deserted by its Inhabitants, they steer'd their course towards Betel (a small rocky Isle not above a League in compass, separated from the Continent only by a narrow Strait) about 80 Leagues from Diu. The Situation of this Isle being such, by reason of the Rocks which inclose the Isle near the shore, that it might easily be made defensible by an indifferent Force, the King of Cambaja had not long before sent thither a certain Commander, a Turk by Birth, with 2000 Soldiers, and 1000 Workmen, to erect certain Fortifications there; but having not had sufficient time to bring them into such a condition as to be able to resist such a Force as this, they thought it their safest way to capitulate.

The Commander in chief (having obtain'd a Passport for that purpose) had an Interview with the Portuguese General, offering to surrender the Isle, under condition that they might have liberty to depart with all their Baggage and Goods. Nonnius allow'd the first, but would not consent to their taking the least thing away with them, except what they had about them. This harsh Answer was no sooner known in the Isle, but they resolv'd to abide the utmost extremity, rather than comply with it. The King's Treasurer found means to have a Boat built, wherewith he transported all the King's Money and Goods to the Continent: Many of the Garison enraged with Revenge and Despair, brought all their Horses, best Moveables, Wives and Children together, and burnt them and themselves. There were about 700 left, most of them Votaries, resolv'd to die with Sword in hand: These like mad Men fell upon the Portugueses with more fury than effect; for the Portuguese General having repulsed them, attack'd the next night by the light of the Moon their Intrenchments with so much Vigor, that after a most obstinate Resistance (in which the Turkish Commander was kill'd) they left them to the Portugueses, some running to the Rocks, from whence they precipitated themselves into the Sea; others endeavouring to escape the Sword by hiding themselves in the hollowneses of the Rocks, but being discover'd, some of them were cut to pieces, the rest made Slaves. A certain Moor having nothing left but his Sword, and seeing his Comrade slain just by his side, and a Portuguese advancing with his Pike towards him, in order to kill him, ran desperately towards him, and thrusting himself upon the Portuguese's Lance, at the same time kill'd his Enemy with his Sword, so that they both died upon the spot.

The Portugueses lost in this Action about 17 Persons of Note, and had 150 wounded, many of whom died afterwards. Nonnius thought fit to tarry here eight days, in hopes of receiving some Intelligence from his Spies at Diu; this prov'd of great advantage to those of Diu, for in the mean while Mustapha and Sophar

Baldacus Aden coming to an Anchor with 600 Turks and 1300 Arabians before Diu, the Inhabitants thereof (who before that time thought of nothing else than how to come to a good Composition) being encouraged by this Reinforcement, were resolv'd to venture all for their Defence. Misfapha was no sooner enter'd the City but he order'd the Women, Children, and other defenceless People to be sent out of the Town; the rest being muster'd were found 11,000 in number (without the Turks and Arabians) able to bear Arms; strict Watches were set in all places, to let nobody pass in or out of the Town without special licence; the Cannon were planted on the Walls, Mines dug and fill'd, Chains made across the Harbour, and the Entrance thereof defended by 73 well man'd Brigantines: To be short, nothing was omitted that was thought necessary to strengthen themselves either by Sea or Land.

Preparations at Diu.

Nonnius Acunia in the mean time tarried at Betel, in expectation of the Tidings he waited for from his Spies there; but these being too narrowly watch'd to send any Intelligence, he resolv'd to take his chance, and so set sail for Diu, where he cast his Anchor in hopes to come to a Parley with the Inhabitants: but he was not a little surpriz'd when he heard the Cannon from the Ramparts thunder among his Ships, and three Bullets that pass'd cross the Admiral's Ship, gave him sufficient warning, that it was not safe staying there long, which made him give immediate Orders for the whole Fleet to weigh Anchor, and to secure themselves without the reach of the Cannon from the City. Being by this time sufficiently convinc'd (without consulting his Spies) that there were but little hopes of Peace or a Surrender, he took a full view of the Town, to see on what side it might be most conveniently attack'd; and finding more probability to succeed on the Harbour than on the Land-side (especially since he was better provided for a Sea than Land Enterprize) he order'd all his Ships and Artillery to be got in a readiness, in order to attack the Castle at the entrance of the Harbour, break the Chains, and to fall upon the Enemy's Fleet, from whence he might annoy the City with his Cannon on the North-side. The Attempt was made accordingly, but without success, the Portuguese being so fiercely gall'd on all sides by the Enemy's Cannon, that they were forced to desist, and Nonnius thought fit to retreat to Betel, from whence he return'd with his Fleet to Goa, leaving Anthony Saldania with some Ships on the Coast of Cambaja, to watch the Enemy's Motions. Saldania, after having done considerable Mischief to the Enemy, by the taking of the small City of Goga, and burning 25 Brigantines, left James Sylveria behind him, and return'd afterwards to Goa, where having spent the greatest part of the Winter in refitting their Ships, Nonnius in the Spring set sail for Chaul about two Leagues from Calecut, to intercept the Arabian Ships trading in those parts.

Sylveria was in the mean while not idle, but took many Ships bound for Diu, burnt some Villages, and kept the place so block'd up on all sides, that in a little time they were within reduced to great scarcity of Provisions: The next following year Sylveria continued to play the same game, by destroying many Towns, Villages and Ships; he also took the Cities of Pate and Patane, as also Mangalor in Cambaja, with a vast Booty, and a great number of Prisoners; the new King of Cambaja being not in a condition to assist those of Diu, by reason of some intestine Troubles.

Nonnius at the same time keeping still in remembrance the Disgrace he had receiv'd before Diu, and being resolv'd to let slip no opportunity of revenging himself, he laid his Design against Bazain in Cambaja; accordingly he set sail with a Fleet of 80 Ships great and small, with 4000 Land-men aboard them (half Portuguese, half Malabars) he sent Emanuel Albu-

Albuquerque with some Ships before, to secure the Entrance of the Harbour, sent for James Sylveria, who had his Station on the other side of Diu, and follow'd himself with the whole Fleet.

Tocan the Chief of Diu, had, upon notice that the Portugueses were arming against him, intrench'd himself with a considerable number of Horse and Foot at Bazain. Nonnius on the other hand, being well inform'd of the Condition of the place by certain Deferters, divided his Troops into three Bodies: The Vanguard was led by James Sylveria, the main Battel by Ferdinand de Za, the Rear being commanded by Nonnius in Person.

As they were advancing towards the Town, they receiv'd several smart Salutes from the Enemy's Cannon, and whole showers of Arrows, Tocan having intrench'd himself with 10000 Men in the Out-works; notwithstanding which the Portugueses lost not so much as one Man whilst they were advancing towards the Enemy, whom they charg'd so briskly, that they were forc'd to betake to their heels; and the Inhabitants seeing themselves deserted by their Protectors, follow'd their Footsteps. Thus this City with all its Works fell into the hands of the Portugueses, with the loss only of six Men on their side; whereas the loss of the Moors was computed at 550. They found in it a considerable Booty of Provisions and Ammunition, as Bullets, Gunpowder, and Brimstone. Nonnius highly extoll'd the Bravery of Sylveria, who commanding the Vanguard, had behav'd himself so gallantly, that the main Battel did not as much as come to the Charge, and as an acknowledgment of his Services presented him and all his Officers. After they had destroy'd all the Fruits of the Field round about it, they destroy'd the City, and demolish'd the Fortifications, as thinking it not for their interest to spare a sufficient number of Troops to garison it. Thus Nonnius having taken an ample Revenge upon the Barbarians, return'd with his Fleet to Goa; and the Mahometans being convinc'd by this as well as the loss of the Isle of Betel (and afterwards that of Daman) of the Strength and Bravery of the Portugueses, began to remit much of their Fierceneß, and were at last forced to submit to the building of a Fort upon the Isle of Diu, as will appear out of the sequel of the matter.

Martinius Alphonsus Soza being come lately from Portugal (in the quality of Admiral) to Goa with five stout Vessels, and being join'd by 35 Ships and 600 Land-Souldiers of Nonnius his Squadron, he set sail for Daman, a City of Cambaja, about 14 Leagues from Bazain: This being a Place of no strength, the Inhabitants had deserted their Habitations; but the Rasboutes, a daring and unruly Generation, being join'd by some Turks to the number of 5000 in all, had intrench'd themselves near the Harbour, and defended the Entrance thereof with a good number of great Cannon.

Alphonsus Soza took peculiar care in taking a view of the posture of the Enemy; and as he was going in his Boat from the Harbour along the shoar, having taken notice of a place in the City which was but ill guarded, he order'd scaling Ladders to be hung to the Walls, so that whilst they were scaling the Town the Defenders fled, and thereby gave an opportunity to the Portugueses to make themselves Masters of a Gate; here it was the Slaughter begun, the Fight being carried on with equal Obstinacy for some time, till the Rasboutes being forc'd to give way, many of them were cut to pieces by the Portugueses, who lost no more than ten Men in this Action, but had many more wounded. Three days were spent in demolishing the Fortifications, and laying the whole City level with the ground: Which done, Soza turn'd his victorious Arms towards Diu, and all along the Coast of Cambaja.

Badur King of Cambaja, being extremely nettled at the success of the Portugueses, whom he was not in a condition to oppose, at a time when he saw himself intangled in another War, thought it his best way to sue for Peace with Nonnius Acunia, offering not only Bazain, but also the adjacent Isles (among which were likewise the Salfetes) and a considerable Tract of Land on the Continent, thereby to engage the Portugueses in his Interest against his Enemies, viz. Cremantina the Queen Dowager of Sanga, and the Mogores, a Warlike Nation descended from the Scyæ, who are frequently at War with the Persians: Their King Miramadus, who boasted himself to be descended from the Great Tamerlan, having not long before made a powerful Irruption into Cambaja.

The Intention of Badur was first to vanquish the Queen of Sanga, and afterwards the Mogores: His whole Force consisted in 150000 Horse, and 50000 Foot, besides 15000 hir'd Foreigners, 200 Elephants train'd for the War, and a very good Train of great Artillery; with with this Army he march'd to Citor, a very fine and populous City under the Queen of Sanga, who was not long before retreated thence with her Children. The Inhabitants of Citor, unable to resist so powerful an Army, resolv'd to follow the footsteps of those in the Isle of Betel (mention'd before) and having brought together all their Gold, Silver, and precious Stones, &c. burnt themselves with their Wives and Children, with the Treasure. It is said, that during the Conflagration, which lasted three days, more than 70000 Persons perish'd by the Flames. Badur enter'd victoriously into Citor, where having rewarded the Services of his Officers that behav'd themselves well with Presents, he march'd directly against the Mogores, but with very different success; for being twice put to the rout by them, and deserted by Mustapha his General, he was forc'd to fly to Diu, and being full of despair, would have taken a Resolution to leave his Kingdom, and to send his Treasure to Mecca; but being, at the earnest entreaty of his Friends, remov'd from that Resolution, he sent an Ambassador to Soliman the Grand Signior, to offer him 600000 Crowns, provided he would send a certain number of well-disciplin'd Troops to his Assistance; but fearing lest the desir'd Succours should come too late, he offer'd to Soza, who then lay before Chaul, as also to Nonnius Acunia, a proper place for the erecting of a Fort near Diu, provided they would assist him against his Enemies.

The Portugueses willing to take the opportunity by the forelock, Soza sail'd to Diu immediately, and being follow'd by Nonnius, the Treaty was sign'd, and a place assign'd, viz. the Hill which overlooks the Harbour of Diu. This happen'd in the year 1535. The Portugueses went to work immediately, and laid the Foundation of a Triangular Fort, the Wall from the Sea-side to the Hill being 17 Foot thick, and 20 high, at the end whereof just upon a Hill near the City was erected a Redoubt, and on the other end a Stone Tower (such a one as the Portugueses have at Cranganor and Cananor) from whence extended another Wall to the other Corner of the Island: The Wall was defended by a deep Ditch as far as the Rocks would permit. In the midst whereof was a Gate defended by two Towers, named St. Thomas and St. James. Thus King Badur saw a goodly Fortrefs perfected by the Portugueses within 49 days, that part to the Seaside being set aside till another opportunity.

One James Bortelbo a brave Commander, but fallen into Disgrace with Emanuel King of Portugal, being willing to court any opportunity of being restor'd to the King's favour, got a Brigantine built on purpose of 18 foot in length, and six broad; and having provided himself with as many Seamen as were requir'd to manage her at Sea, he set sail from Diu, without letting them whither they were bound, and prov'd so prosperous in his Voyage, that without any remarkable Accident, he arriv'd safely at Lisbon, and brought the kind Advice of their good success at Diu.

The Portugueses left a Garison of 800 Men under Emanuel Soza in the Fort, and were no sooner retir'd from thence with their Fleet, but Badur began to repent of his having admitt'd the Portugueses into the Isle of Diu (especially since the promised Succours arriv'd but slowly) whereupon he order'd the Governor Ninan to surround the City with a new Wall, and to enclose the Royal Square without the place, whereby their Fortifications must approach very near to, and lie directly opposite to those of the Portugueses. These being resolv'd not to permit a thing of this nature, which must needs tend to their Prejudice, Badur was much incens'd thereat, exclaiming highly against their Proceedings, and endeavour'd to have surpriz'd them in their Fort, which not succeeding, he sought for Aid from the Samoryn of Calecut, and several Malabar Kings against them.

Nonnius being advertis'd of all these Treacheries, sets sail once more with 20 Ships, and 500 chosen Portuguese Soldiers for Diu, ordering Martin Alphonso to follow him from the Malaba: Coast. No sooner had he cast Anchor before Diu, but feigning himself sick aboard, he sent certain Persons to compliment King Badur, and beg his Excuse for his not coming in Person: Whereupon Badur went aboard together with Soza the Governor of the Fort to give a Visit to Nonnius, who met Badur at the Door of his great Cabin, and saluted him with a great deal of Civility. For tho the Death of Badur was resolv'd on before-hand, yet that they might not seem to violate the Laws of Hospitality, they had thought fit to defer the Execution thereof till his return towards the shore: It was not long before Badur went into his Boat again in order to return, but was no sooner got into into it, and making the best way to the shore, when Nonnius giving the Signal to his Men, and exhorting them to do their Duty, they leap'd into Boats kept for that purpose, and following that of Badur attack'd him on all sides. The King being grown desperate, exhorted his People to a brave Defence, encouraging both by his Words and Example, which made the Fight so obstinate, that the Portugueses were in danger of losing their Prey, Soza himself being slain in the first Attack. The Bravery of a certain Servant of Badur deserves our particular notice, he being observ'd to have wounded with 18 Arrows, as many Portugueses, till he was kill'd by a Mulquet-shot himself.

In the mean while three Yachts arm'd with Turks were sent from the shore to succour the King; but being most of them kill'd, and the King's Galley struck upon a Bank, he leapt into the Sea, and tho' forely wounded, did swim to the Galley of Tristan Pavia, and discovering himself to be the Sultan, beg'd his Life, which Tristan Pavia would willingly have granted, but just as the King was entering the Vessel, he was slain by a Seaman, who knock'd his Brains out with a Eadur Club. This was the unfortunate end of Badur, one of the most Potent Kings of Asia, who not long before had been a Terror to all the circumjacent Countries.

Sofar made a Prisoner. The Portugueses become Masters of the whole Isle. Mamud King of Cambaja. A considerable number of Ottomans sent to the Indies. Diu besieg'd by the Turks. A smart Engagement betwixt the Mahometans and Portugueses. Diu reliev'd. Garzias Noronia constituted Vice-Roy.

BUT to return to Diu, and the Sea-Engagement, where Sofar being taken Prisoner, was kindly entertain'd by Nonnius. The Death of Badur (tho' not very honourable on the Portugueses side) prov'd however of very great consequence, the Portugueses becoming thereby Masters of the whole Island without much opposition, the said Badur being deservedly hated by his Subjects, by reason of his Tyranny and Cruelty; 600 Foot were left there in Garrison, and all necessary care was taken that the Customs both at Diu and Rumenstadt might be regularly paid. Massæus in his 4th Book of the Indian History, says, that Rumenstadt or Rumopolis (lying not far from Diu) was built by Jazy (mention'd before) and got its Name from the Constantinopolitan Turks, that scour sometimes in the Indies, call'd by them Rumes.

The Portugueses found no great Treasure of ready Money at Diu, but considerable Stores of Ammunition and Provision, and the better to strengthen themselves, fortified the City on the Sea-side.

Badur was succeeded in the Kingdom of Cambaja by Mamud his Sister's Son, who being an Infant, under the Tuition of Driacan, Madremaluc and Alucan, these were solicited by Sofar (out of a hatred to the Portugueses) to engage in a War for the recovery of Diu. Alucan having got together a Body of 5000 Horse, and 10000 Foot, and Sofar 3000 Foot, and 1000 Horse, they pitch'd their Tents in June not far from Rumenstadt. Sofa attack'd the Town vigorously, but being in one of the Attacks wounded in both his hands, the Portugueses got a little breathing time, and in the mean while repair'd the Walls of Rumendstadt, which for some reasons they had demolished before: For Anthonus Sylveria having resolv'd to fortify and defend the whole Island against the Indians, was disappointed in his design by Alucan, who improving the loss of some Portuguese Ships by Tempest to his advantage, gall'd the Portugueses so sorely from his Ships in their Entrenchments, that they were forced to quit their Posts; so that Alucan landing his Men, soon became Master of the whole Isle and the Suburbs, where there happen'd frequent Skirmishes betwixt them, the Indians being not strong enough to attack the Fort, which was bravely defended by Lupo Soza Coutinho.

Whilst these things were transacting in Cambaja, the Grand Signior, to revenge the Murder of Badur (at the request of his Widow) had equip'd a Fleet of 64 stout Gallies, which being join'd by 7 Ships of Cambuja and three Baldens. Moors of Malabar with 3500 Land-men aboard them, under the Command of Solyman Bassa of Egypt, they set sail from Aden, not questioning but they would soon be masters of the Portuguese Fort, and consequently of the Island, from whence they might extend their Conquests into the Continent of the Indies. Matters being concerted beforehand betwixt Solyman and Sofar, the last went out to meet the Turkish Squadron about 15 Leagues at Sea; and Antonio Sylveria being advertis'd of their approach, took all imaginable Precaution for his Security, in disposing what Force he had to make a vigorous Defence, and at the same time gave notice thereof to Goa, to sollicite for prompt Succours from thence, encouraging his Men both by his Example and Exhortations. By this time Solyman having cast Anchor in the Road of Diu, he order'd 700 chosen Men to land, and attempt the Attack of the Portuguese Fortrefs, which they did accordingly, but were forced to retire to Sofar's Fort with the loss of 50 Janizaries kill'd, and a greater number wounded; the Portuguese had also six Men kill'd, and 20 wounded.

About the same time the Turkish Fleet being in great danger of being forc'd by a strong South Wind upon the Coast, and much expos'd to the Enemy's Shot, he retreated to the Harbour of Madrasaba five Leagues from Diu; where having concerted new measures with Sofar, he sent back his Land Forces to renew the Siege of Diu. But Alucan one of the Tutors of King Mamud having conceiv'd a jealousy of the Design of the Turks, retir'd with his Forces from before Diu, and having represented their ambitious Projects to the King, he soon obtained of him a Prohibition in all his Territories not to furnish the Turkish Camp with Provisions.

This prov'd no small disappointment to Solyman, who notwithstanding this did not lose Courage, but pursued his design of carrying the place, cost it what it would: For this purpose the Turks contriv'd a very large Fireship, which under favour of the Tide and the smok of some burning Wood, they intended to send into the Harbour, and to fix to the Fortifications; and whilst the Portuguese were busied in quenching the Flames, they were to attempt the surprising of the Fort on the Land-side: but whilst they were staying for the Spring-Tide, great hazard, being oblig'd to pass twice the Enemies fire; 20 of the Turks aboard the Fireship leap'd into the Sea, and were all slain. The Turks were so incensed at this disappointment, that they exerted all their Fury against Rumenstadi, the Walls whereof being to ruin'd as not to be maintain'd any longer against a vigorous Attack, Paticco the chief Commander thereof thought fit to quit it in time. The Turks flush'd with this Success, renew'd the Siege of Diu both by Sea and Land with more vigor than ever, leaving nothing unattempted, with Cannonading, Mining, or whatever might be attempted to reduce the place; whilst the Portuguese on the other hand with Countermines, Retrenchments and frequent Salles endevour'd to stop their Fury. The Turks being at last by means of a Gallery advanc'd over the Ditch, and entering the Breach, a most furious Combat ensu'd for four hours successively, the Portuguese defending themselves like Lions. Massau relates, that a Portuguese having spent all his Balls, pull'd out one of his Teeth and charg'd his Musquet with it. At last the Turks were forced to retire with the loss of 500 Men slain, and 1000 wounded: The Portuguese also on their side had 14 of their best Officers slain, and so many of their Soldiers either kill'd or wounded, that they had scarce 40 Men left fit for Service. Besides this they began to be in such want of Provisions and Ammunition, that they were very near reduced to the last extremity. However they did not lose Courage, but encouraged one another rather to die upon the spot, than to submit to the most sordid slavery; the Women and Children were even not backward in giving all the Assistance they were able.

Francisco Goveano a Portuguese found means to set it on fire, tho not without

In the mean time Nonnius Acunia being sufficiently sensible of the danger of the Fortrefs of Diu, had left no Stone unturn'd for the relief thereof; but the case admitting of no delay, he sent 16 Patachos or Yachts thither: these coming to an Anchor in the night time before Madrasaba, had each put four Lanthorns on their Sterns, with an intention to terrify the Enemy. This succeeded accordingly; for the Turks having by this time lost above 3000 Men, and fearing the Succour expected from Goa might be much stronger than really it was, set fire to the City, and leaving 500 wounded Men, and most of their great Cannon behind, reimbarc'd the first of November, steering their Coast towards Arabia; and

Sofar with the Remnants of his Forces retir'd to the Continent, to the no small honour of the Portugueses, who with so small a number had defended themselves not against barbarous undisciplin'd Indians, but against a Body of warlike well-exercis'd Turkish Troops. It's said, that Francis I. King of France, was so highly pleas'd with this brave Action, that he desir'd and had an Original Picture of the brave Sylvia, the Governour of the place.

Whilst Nonnius was busied in making all the necessary Preparations for the Relief of Diu, Goa Garzias Noronia was sent by Don John King of Portugal with 11 Men of War, and 7000 Land-Men to relieve Nonnius: Among these there was one Ship fill'd with Malefactors and Criminals of all sorts, who had obtain'd their Pardon from the King; but this being separated from the rest, was never heard of afterwards. Nonnius Acunia having surrender'd the Government to *Noron*ia after a stay of ten years in those parts, set sail for Portugal, his Native Country, but before he could reach it died at Sea, near the Cape of Good Hope on the African Coast.

C H A P. XI.

*Noron*ia makes an Agreement with King Mamud. Lupius Soza constituted Governour of Diu. Sofar's sinister Designs against the Portugueses. He besieges Diu in conjunction with Mamud: Is slain in the Enterprize. The City is vigorously assaulted, and as bravely defended. An unsuccessful Sally made by the Portugueses.

*Noron*ia apply'd all his Thoughts to the Affairs of Diu; and having dispatch'd certain Deputies to Mamud to treat with him of a Peace, they at last, not without a great deal of difficulty, came to the following Agreement, in the Negotiation of which they met with no small opposition from the Grand-mother of Mamud and Sofar, who were continually inciting the young King to revenge the Death of his Uncle King Baldur; viz. That the King of Cambaja should remain in the Possession of the City of Deu, and the Portugueses continue Masters of the Fort and Harbour thereof; that they should divide the Customs share and share alike, and that the Cambajans should be at liberty to erect a Wall to front the Castle, provided the same were done at a convenient distance.

Matters being thus settled, Lupius Soza was constituted Governour of the place instead of Sylvia, with a Garrison of 900 Men. But it was not long before Mamud, at the Instigation of his Grand-mother, sent a considerable Body to attack Bazain; but Laurentius Tavora making a vigorous Sally upon them, constrained them to seek for Peace. Sofar in the mean time having recover'd himself, had for six years together bent all his thoughts upon the ruin of the Portugueses; and having found means to ingratiate himself into King Mamud his favour, they sent underhand their Emisseries to the neighbouring Indian Princes, to engage them against the Portugueses, who they told them did lord it over them; under pretence of trafficking in the Indies. The Affairs of the Portugueses were at that time but in a very indifferent condition in those parts, their Treasures exhausted, their Naval Strength neglected, their Seamen very scarce; and the Land Soldiers deserted in such numbers, that of the 900 that were in Garrison under the Command of Lupius Soza, there were not above 250 left in the Government of Mascarenhas; and what was worse, there was not above a month's Provision, and a slender share of Ammunition left.

Sofar was not unacquainted with these things, having learn'd them from divers Portuguese Merchants; so that looking upon this as a fit opportunity to execute their projected Design, they pitch'd upon the Winter-season, when they knew the Portugueses could not be so easily secured from Goa. Sofar being in the mean while not negligent to cajole Mascarenhas the Portuguese Governour by his Letters into a belief of his Sincerity, the same did not discover his real Intentions, till it was almost too late; but finding no other redress but in a brave Defence, he made all the necessary Preparations for it, by sending away all the useless Mouths, and fortifying himself after the best manner he could: and having bought up what quantity of Rice, Flesh and dried Baldew. Fish he could get of the Portugueses, he sent Advice of his approaching danger to Bazain, Chaul and Goa. This happen'd in the year 1546. Sofar took for a pretence the new Walls that were to be erected at one end of the City, which being built too near the Portuguese Forts, these stop't the Progress thereof, which soon gave occasion to open Hostilities. Mascarenhas to animate his Soldiers told them, "That they ought to remember the brave Actions of the Portugueses in this very place, where they had frustrated the Designs of the Turks, of which the same Sofar who now came to attack them had born his share; that God would certainly punish the breach of Faith of this Wretch; and that they ought not to be dismay'd at the Winter-season, there being no question but that the Portugueses by their Skill in Maritime Affairs, would overcome these Difficulties, and succour them in due time. The next thing he did, was to take care of all the Posts; the Water-Redoubt he committed to the care of Martinbo Carvalho with 30 Men, and the Defence of the shore towards Cambaja to Jacobo Leti.

Sofar by this time had begun to carry on his Approaches a good way, and ply'd the place warmly with his Cannon, but could not without much difficulty attempt an Assault by reason of the Ditch, which being enlarg'd of late, was as broad again now as it was in Sylveria his time; however he ceased not to play with his Cannon, especially in the night time; and being sensible of advantage it would be to him if he could make himself Master of the Harbour, by taking the Water-Redoubt, he contriv'd such another Engine or Fireship as the Turks had made use of in the former Siege, which they intended to set on fire, and to carry with the high Tide under the Fort: But the Portugueses having receiv'd Intelligence of this Design, sent out Jacobo Leti with 20 Men to burn her, which he did with incredible Bravery, and the loss of one Man only, being forc'd to carry the Vessel through the Enemy's Fire on both sides, till he brought her within a certain distance of the Fort, where she was set on fire, and consequently Sofar's Project vanish'd into smoke.

Not

Not long after the Portugueses were rejoic'd with a fresh supply of Men, Provisions and Ammunition from Goa, under the Command of the young de Castro, a brave Gentleman, who, after he had been afflicted with very hard Tempests at Sea (in which several of his Vessels were separated from his Squadron) came with the rest, being eight in number, into the Road of Diu, and in spite of the Besiegers, landed his Men, Ammunition and Provisions, which increased the Number of the Garrison to 450 Men. About the same time Mamud King of Cambaja came in Person with a good number of Troops into the Camp: Mascarenhas being willing to know their exact number, sent out several Desperado's, who engaging the Outguard of the Enemy, three of them were kill'd in the Skirmish, but the rest had the good fortune to carry off one of the Enemy's Sentinels, by whom Mascarenhas was inform'd of what he had a mind to know. Mascarenhas having order'd certain Signals of rejoicing to be made, the Enemy sent a Messenger to know the reason thereof, who was answer'd, that 'twas done on account of the King's arrival in the Camp, which put them in hopes that for the future they should fight against a great Prince, whereas hitherto they had been engag'd with Vagabonds and Rogues.

Mamud immediately after his arrival level'd his Cannon with great fury against the Walls of the Fortrefs, and having brought along with him an expert Gunner, he order'd him to cast certain fiery Balls into the place, tho without much success, till the said Constable being kill'd, another succeeded in his place, who was so unskillful in his Art, that his Fireworks did more mischief in the Camp than to the Enemy. However by the continual battering of the Enemies Cannon, a large Breach was made by this time in the Wall, which the Besieged repair'd to the best of their power; but their main Reliance was upon the breadth of the Ditch, which the Besiegers were endeavouring to pass by the help of their Galleries. To prevent this, the Portugueses had open'd an old Vault at the foot of the Wall, in which they spent several days and nights, but turn'd to their advantage, since from thence they could take away great part of the Materials the Enemy had brought thither for the filling up of the Ditch. From hence it was also that Sofar receiv'd his Death's wound, being slain by a Bullet which pass'd through his Hand and Forehead, which occasion'd no small disturbance in the Enemies Camp; and had it not been for Rumecan his Son, the Siege had been likely to have been rais'd at that time.

The Joy the Portugueses had conceiv'd at the death of Sofar their mortal Enemy, was not a little allay'd by the perseverance of the Besieged in filling up the Ditch, and that with such success, that having stop't up the before-mention'd Vault, Mascarenhas began to be reduced to the utmost necessity, of which he gave notice to the Viceroy of Goa, requesting immediate Succours. It was now about the middle of August, when the Mahometans were preparing for the general Assault: They visit'd their Mosques with a great deal of Devotion, and St. James's day being appointed for this Attack, they advanc'd without the least noise in two Bodies before break of day towards the Breach, in hopes of surprizing the Portugueses; but finding 'em upon their guard, they enter'd the Breach with most terrible and dreadful Outcries, which however was so far from terrifying the brave Portugueses, that they were repulsed with great slaughter: Some of the Indians taking the advantage of the low Tide, got into the Water-Fort, where they pitch'd Mahomet's Standard, which Mascarenhas no sooner perceiv'd, but flying thither, he gave them such a Reception, that after 30 of them were slain upon the spot, the rest were forc'd down headlong over the Wall. This done, he return'd to his Post, where both by his Words and Actions he so encouraged his Men, that Rumecan, after a hot Dispute of six hours, saw himself oblig'd to sound a Retreat. In this Action not only Mascarenhas, but also Ludovico Soza, Ferdinando de Castro, Ambronio Passando, and all the Portugueses in general acquir'd immortal Honour, several Women having expos'd themselves in the midst of the Combat.

Notwithstanding this Repulse, the Indians did not cease to continue their Fire against the Fortrefs, which not succeeding according to expectation, they began to apply their Mines, not without some success. Mascarenhas having taken notice that the Enemy retreated sometimes without any necessity, near a certain Tower, gave notice thereof to de Castro, and some other Officers of note, commanding them to quit it; but these flush'd with their last success, refus'd to obey, for which they paid dear soon after: for the Enemy taking the opportunity, when they perceiv'd the Tower full of Soldiers, blew blew it up on a sudden with at least 100 Baldacus. Portugueses in it, and among them de Castro, and several others of Quality; and such was the Barbarity of the Indians, that they thrust their Swords through the half-dead Bodies of such Portugueses as were thrown up into the Air before by the Mine. They were for improving this opportunity, and during the Confusion occasion'd by this Disaster, attack'd the Fort with incredible Fury, but were so warmly receiv'd by Mascarenhas, that they were glad to retreat. To prevent the like for the future, the Portuguese Governour order'd his Men to act with more caution for the future, and the Tower of St. James to be blown up, which was executed; and not long after, finding the Enemy ready to attack the Tower of St. Thomas, he blew up the Mine underneath it, and with it 300 Indians.

300 Indians blown up by a Mine.

The Portuguese Affairs in the Fortrefs began notwithstanding all this to grow worse and worse; for tho they had made Intrenchments within Intrenchments, yet had they (after a Siege of four Months) not above 150 Men left for the defence thereof; and being reduc'd to great extremity for want of Provisions, were forc'd to feed upon unwholesom things, which so discourag'd the Garrison, that they were resolv'd to put an end to their Misery by fighting their way through the Enemy.

But being just upon the point of putting their Design in execution, they were rejoic'd with a most unexpected Relief from Goa, whence they had sent 50 Frigats under the Command of Alvares de Castro, and Franciscus de Meneses, who arriv'd happily at Bazain. Alvares sail'd straightways thence with part of his Forces (amounting to 900 in all) for Diu, and good store of Ammunition and Provisions, the rest follow'd before the end of September. You may easily imagine with what Joy the poor emaciated Soldiers of the Garrison receiv'd this welcome News, which however they would not improve to so much advantage as they might have done, out of a perverse Temper, peculiar to the Portugueses, who as they are soon dejected in Adversity, so are they insupportable in Prosperity: For now the Soldiery began to accuse Mascarenhas of Cowardice and Neglect, telling him in plain terms, that they were resolv'd no more to be shut up within the Walls, but to act like brave Portugueses, to attack the Enemy in their Works, and to make him opce for all to repent that ever he had attempted the Portugueses, whose Glorious Name was dreadful all over the Indies; this they told him they were fully resolv'd to put in execution, and if he refus'd to head them, they would choose another, the first, the best they could. Mascarenhas, who knew very well the stubborn Pride of the Portugueses, when flush'd with Success, did what he could to divert them from their Design by all the mild Insinuations and most forcible Arguments he could invent, telling them that the securest Methods were always the best, and how dangerous it might prove to hazard the losing of the Fort, when they were in a condition to keep it till the approaching Spring, when they expected sufficient Succours from Goa; but finding them deaf to his Periwations, he spok to them in the following manner: "Soldiers, ye are not insensible that, if you would consider your Duty, you ought rather to follow my Commands than your own Directions; but since you have ty'd up my hands, and both by your Words and Actions, nay by your very Looks, give me sufficiently to understand, that instead of commanding, I must obey; go on and shew your Courage, your Knowledge and Experience in Martial Affairs: Go on, I say, I will instead of leading you on, follow you, with this Caution however, that I would have you remember to take care to return with the same marks of Bravery as you march out. Then dividing the whole Garrison into three Bodies, he order'd Alvares de Castro to command the Van, the main Battel he gave in charge to Francisco de Meneses, himself remaining to guard the Rear: Thus they march'd towards the Enemy, but with far different success from what they had promised themselves; most of them after the first Charge retreating towards the Town, instead of pushing forward; the Body commanded by Meneses being charg'd in Front and Flank, betook themselves to their heels, and de Castro himself being sorely wounded by a Stone, was hardly sav'd by Mascarenhas, who crying out to the Soldiers, that it was now time to shew their Bravery they had so much boasted of before, would fain have stop't their Flight, but in vain; for they retreated with so much fear and precipitation, that for some time after they scarce durst look the Enemy in the face, or keep their Post; whereas the Indians, encourag'd by this Success, approach'd with their Engines nearer and nearer to the Walls of the Town.

De Castro comes to Diu. Takes some Arabian Vessels. Routs the Indians, who leave the Isle. Rumezan kill'd. Soliman's Transactions before Aden. He causes the King of that place to be hang'd on his Mast, and makes himself Master of the City. A Description of Daman, Dabul and Vifiapour.

De Castro Viceroy of Goa had no sooner receiv'd the unwelcome News of the Death of his Son, and the distressed Condition of Diu, but he sent at the beginning of the Spring Alvares de Acuria with five Men of War and 400 Land-Men thither, with strict Orders that they should keep within their Fortifications till the whole Fleet with the intended Succours should arrive there. Alvares in his Passage thither took several Arabian Vessels, aboard of which were several Persons of Note belonging to Sofar, who, tho they offer'd a great Sum of Money for their Ransom, were all cut to pieces, and their Heads thrown into the River.

The Spring being pretty well advanced by this time, De Castro set sail for Bacaim with 40 Yachts, having aboard 1400 Portuguese Land-Soldiers, and 300 Canarins. With these, after having for some time infested the Coast of Cambaja, he arriv'd in the Ilha dos mortos, whence he sent an Express to Mascarenhas with Orders to batter the Enemies Entrenchments near the Sea-side with his Cannon, to facilitate his landing; which being bravely executed by Mascarenhas, De Castro enter'd the Harbour without much opposition, and soon after landed his Men. De Castro being not a little surpriz'd to see the Fort appear more like a heap of Rubbish than a Fortification, the very Ditches being laid level with the ground, he call'd a Council of War to consult of the most proper means to put an end to the Siege: Some were of opinion, that some time ought to be allow'd to the Soldiers to refresh themselves after the Fatigues of the Sea; but De Castro telling them, that it would be a great disgrace for a Portuguese Viceroy to be lock'd up in a Fort, it was resolv'd to attack the Enemy next day.

Accordingly they march'd out in good order, De Castro ordering the Draw-bridges to be drawn up, to cut off all hopes of retreating into the Fort, and leaving Antonio Correa with some Men to guard it against any sudden Attempt. The better to distract the Enemy's Forces,

Nicolao Goncalvo was commanded to make a false Attack with some Ships on the backside of the Island. Rumezan on the other hand, trusting to his Number, took care to guard his Posts on all sides, against which De Castro march'd with a much lesser Force, exhorting his Soldiers in a few words: That they ought to remember that they serv'd a King, who never fail'd to reward such of his Soldiers as fought bravely for God's Cause, and the Defence of his Territories in the Indies, the Preservation whereof depended on this Battel; that therefore they should fight like Men, and consider that all their Safety lay in their hands, all hopes of retreating being cut off by the shutting up of the Gates of the Fort, and the removal of the Fleet to the backside of the Isle.

Things being thus dispos'd, Goncalvo made his false Attack on the other side of the Island, which so alarm'd the Indians, that they hasten'd in whole Troops thither, which gave opportunity to the Portuguese (who were about 3000 strong) animated by the Example of De Castro and Mascarenhas their Leaders, to break in upon the Indians with such fury, that they were not able to resist them. Rumezan finding his Forces to give way, and imagining that the Fort was left destitute of Men to defend it, assaulted the same full of despair; but being repulsed by Correa, was forced to follow the rest, and being closely pursued by the Portuguese, quitted the Isle, and with the Remnants of his Forces pass'd over to the Continent. The Portuguese enter'd the City, where they kill'd all they met with, without any regard to Age or Sex, where they got an incredible Booty, and among other things the Standard of Cambaja, a prodigious quantity of Arms, and 35 Brass Cannon, one whereof being of an extraordinary size, is kept to this day in the Arsenal at Lisbon, with certain Arabick Characters upon it. The Portuguese lost not above 60 Men in this Action, whereas of the Indians were kill'd no less than 4000, and 600 taken Prisoners; Rumezan himself lost his Life as he was preparing to pass over to the Continent.

tincent. De Castro after having given the King of Portugal an account in his Letter of his glorious Victory, and the Bravery of his Officers and Soldiers, gave Orders for the repairing the Fortifications of the Fort, and return'd triumphant to Goa, where he was receiv'd with the general Acclamations of the People.

Castagnedo gives a somewhat different Relation of this Action; for he tells us that Rumecan wanted neither Bravery nor Conduct, and that he put the Portugueses so hard to it, that had it not been for Mascarenbas, who led in Person the Soldiers to the Charge, the Portugueses would in all likelihood have lost the day. He says further, that they had 150 Men kill'd, and among them divers brave Officers, George de Souze, John Manoel, Francisco Azevedo, Cosmo de Paiva, Balthazar George, Eduardo Rodrigo, Juliano Ferdinando, Vasques Ferdinando, and others; that the Indians loss amounted to 3000 Men, and that the whole Siege of Diu consumed the Portugueses at least 2000 Men.

We told you before, that Solyman did come with his Fleet before Diu, from Aden; about 20 Leagues thence coming to an Anchor to take in fresh Water, he sent certain Deputies with a Letter to the King of Aden, with the usual Present of a Brocado'd Vest of Tissue of Gold, offering him his Friendship, and requiring him in the Grand Signior's Name to furnish his Fleet with Fleth and Fuel, if he could not assist in Person in the Expedition he was going upon, to extirpate the Portugueses (declar'd Enemies of the Mahometans) out of the Indies. The King of Aden was at that time a Tributary to the Portugueses, unto whom he paid yearly 10000 Ducats Tribute, notwithstanding which he gave a very honourable Entertainment to the Messengers, promising to furnish them with what Necessaries they wanted. About seven days after the whole Turkish Fleet entering the Harbour of Aden, was receiv'd with singular Demonstrations of Joy, the King sending one of his chief Courtiers aboard to congratulate Solyman upon his arrival, and to invite him ashore. Solyman return'd for Answer, That he should be glad to imbrace the King's kind Offers, but that the late Fatigues of the Sea had put him into such a disorder, that he could not stir at present; but as soon as he should be recover'd of his present Indisposition, he would not fail to pay his Respects to the King.

The King's Messengers were no sooner return'd to the City, but Solyman sent 300 Men after them, under pretence of refreshing themselves, and taking a view of the place (being all chosen Men) and the better to cover his Treachery, he sent word to the King, that to prevent any Disorders, he would send 100 Men the next day to bring them aboard again. The King of Aden was so credulous as to assign these 300 Men their Quarters in his Castle, which Solyman had no sooner notice of, but he sent the next day instead of the 100 Men, no less than 2000 Janizaries, to the no small Astonishment of the King, who now beginning to mistrust the matter, did not know what course best to take; but whilst he was considering what measures to take, News was brought, that a much stronger Body of Turks was advancing into the City, who had no sooner posted themselves near the Castle, but the Commander in chief told the King with a smile, that he would be pleased to give a Visit with two or three of his Courtiers to Solyman, who was indisposed aboard his Vessels. The King now began plainly to see the danger that threatened him, but not being in a condition to make any opposition, he was forced to submit; and being brought before Solyman, he ask'd them with an unparallel'd Magnanimity, Under what colour he could presume to take in Custody a Prince in Amity with the Grand Signior, and to treat him no otherwise than as a Criminal? Unto which Solyman reply'd, And are you not asham'd to let the Admiral of the Grand Signior stay three days in your Harbour without paying him a Visit? The King return'd, Had the Grand Signior been here in Person, I ought to have done no more than what I have done, and I am sure I should not have been treated thus. 'Tis true, I am now in your power, which I might have prevented had I not trusted my self and my Kingdom with those who now are going to betray both; without which Aden need not have stood in fear of your Strength: I am now, too late, sensible of my approaching Destiny, seeing my self in the hands of a treacherous Tyrant; but tho you may dispose of my Body, I hope the Bravery of the Inhabitants of Aden, and the Grandure of their Princes will outlast your barbarous Cruelties. He had no sooner ended his Speech, but Solyman order'd him to be hang'd on the Main-mast Yard, with four of his chief Courtiers, and afterwards seized upon the City, excusing his Treachery with the Grand Signior's Signior's Order, to punish the King for his being a Friend to the Portugueses.

Diu being one of the chiefest places of the Indies, we thought it would not be unacceptable to the Reader to insert the entire History thereof here. We will now proceed to the Description of the other places: Daman was one of the most antient and noted Places of the Kingdom of Cambaja, which, as we told you before, was taken and destroy'd by Martino Alphonso de Soza. As to Chaul and Bazain, there is scarce any thing remarkable to be said of them, except what has already been mention'd in the account of Diu.

Dibul is a City seated at 17 deg. 45 min. of Northern Latitude upon a most pleasant River, arising out of the Mountain Ballaguante, about two Leagues from the Sea, in former times much frequented by Foreign Merchants, and famous for its Traffick and Riches. Sabajus (a declar'd Enemy of the Portugueses) had surround'd this City with a Wall, and fortified the Harbour thereof with a strong Castle, which being garison'd with 6000 Men, (among whom were 500 Turks) he thought himself secure against any Attempts of the Portugueses.

But D'Almeyda the Portuguese Admiral, appearing with his Fleet (aboard whereof were 1300 European Land Souldiers, besides 400 Malabars) sent some of his Gallies to make a false Attack upon the Castle, whilst he took this opportunity of landing his Men at some distance from thence. The Indians perceiving their Error, march'd with all possible speed out of their Gates against the Portugueses, whom they gall'd sorely with their Arrows; but these advancing with Sword in hand against their Enemies, made such a havock among them, that they were glad to retreat towards the City, and being closely pursued by the Portugueses, these enter'd pell mell with them, and made a great slaughter, killing all they met with, without sparing Men, Women or Children. They got here a considerable Booty, tho a great part of the best Moveables were burnt with the City, which was set on fire by the Portugueses.

We have hitherto given you an account of the most considerable Cities of the Kingdom of Decan, bordering to the

the South upon Malabar, upon Bisnagar to the East, upon the Sea to the West, and upon Cambaja to the North; it's divided into three parts, viz. into Cuncan, Canara and Ballaguatte, the last of which is a ridg of high Mountains flat on the top, with most excellent Pastures, extending even beyond Goa. The next in order is the Kingdom of Visiapour, the length whereof is no less than 250 Leagues, and its breadth 130. Its Capital City, which bears the same Name, lies 70 Leagues beyond Goa, 80 from Dabul, and is said to be five Leagues in Compass, with very strong Walls, and five noble Gates, on which are mounted above a thousand Brass and Iron pieces of great Cannon; they tell us, that among these there is one carrying no less than 540 Pound weight of Gunpowder, cast by a certain Italian, a Native of Rome, who being question'd by one of the King's Commissioners concerning the Money he had disbursed upon this account, threw him into the same hole where he had cast the Cannon before. Some have reckon'd this City, but erroneously, among the Cities of Cambaja. The King of Visiapour was formerly absolute Sovereign of this Kingdom, but after a long and heavy War was forced with divers other Princes in those parts, to become a Vassal to the Great Mogul: He used also sometimes to be embroil'd with the Portugueses.

This Kingdom borders to the South of Wingurla upon the River Mirsee, the Boundary of the Country of Carnatica, in the Territory of Sivipaneyk. To the North of Wingurla lies the Sea-port of Danno, the Boundary of the Kingdom of Visiapour on the side of the Empire of the Great Mogul, about 10 Leagues from Daman. The River here has  $4\frac{1}{2}$  fathom Water at high Tide, and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  fathom at low Water. The second River is named Terrapour, having at low Water half a fathom, and with high Tide two fathoms depth. The third call'd Chunam, has generally two fathoms. The fourth call'd Machyn, has  $2\frac{1}{2}$  fathom at high Water, and half a fathom at low Tide. The fifth Harbour is call'd Quelieny; the sixth Bazain; the seventh Bombain, (Bombay) where the depth is six fathom at high, and four at low Water: The eighth is call'd Siouwel, where at high Water there is six fathom deep. All these Rivers belong to the Kingdom of Visiapour, but are for the most part in the possession of the Portugueses, who have built their Forts upon them: As for instance, at Bombain (Bombay) a spacious Harbour (at 18 deg. 50 min. Northern Latit.) where Ships may lie safe at Anchor against all the Winds; here the Portugueses have built a very fine Castle, (the Draught whereof you may see in the next Cut) which commands the whole Road, and was in 1662 given in part of a Dowry, together with Tangier in the Straits of Gibraltar, to the Infanta of Portugal, upon her Marriage with Charles II. King of England; whereby the English thought to have got a great Booty from the Portugueses, whereas they are in effect Places of no considerable Traffick. The Rivers Dabul, Radiapour and Carapatan, are entirely possess'd by the Natives.

For the rest, this Kingdom abounds in Saltpeter Works. The Royal Palace lies in the Center of the Capital City, defended by a double Wall and Ditch, with 100 battering Pieces, and a Garison of 2000 Men; the richest Merchants dwell in the Suburbs. The other Cities of note of this Kingdom are Cintapour, a Seaport Town, Razapour, Banda, Rajeabaag, Inland Cities; Arec, Mirdy, Alfa, Tamba and Wingurla, where the Hollanders have a stately Factory; it is seated at 15 deg. 7 min. of Northern Latit. a place very considerable, not only for its plenty in Wheat, Rice, and all sorts of Provisions and Refreshments, but also for its situation near Goa, which stood the Dutch in no small stead, whilst they were engag'd in War with the Portugueses, and had block'd up that Harbour. The Forces of the King of Visiapour consists in 150000 Horse, and 8000 Foot, of which more anon in the Description of Negapatan. We will in the next place proceed to the Description of Goa, together with its Origin, and what afterwards happen'd most remarkable in those parts, betwixt our Nation and the Portugueses.

Death,

C H A P. XIII.

Baldew.

Goa taken by Albuquerque. The Death of Sabajus. Hidalcan comes before Goa. Albuquerque takes Goa a second time: Routs the Moors, and establishes Christianity in that City. The Life and Actions of Xaverius in the Indies, China and Japan. His Zeal and Piety.

Goa has a hot Air, and most of its Provisions from the Continent.
 THE City of Goa is seated in an Isle of a considerable bigness, at 16 deg. of Northern Latit. The Air or Climat is not very wholesom here, so that the Portugueses have in this place (as the Dutch have at Batavia) their great Hospital of the Indies, because many of the Europeans die here immediately after their arrival, and many more fall sick by reason of the moisture of the Air, as it was formerly at Batavia, which has been remedied since in some measure, by draining the fens thereabouts. Goa is the Capital City of the Portuguese Indies, the chief Residence of their Viceroy and Archbishop. The City is built after the Portuguese manner, each House having its peculiar Garden, as at Cochin, and other Portuguese Cities in the Indies.

Goa taken by Albuquerque.
 The famous City of Goa was conquer'd for the Portugueses by Albuquerque in the following manner: One Timoja a famous Person in those parts, having possess'd himself of a small Isle belonging to the Kingdom of Onor, was a declar'd Enemy of Sabajus (of whom before) and the Mahometans of Goa, who interfering with him in their Commerce, he had destroy'd many of the Ships of the Egyptians and Saracens trading thither. Thus being link'd in point of Interest to the Portugueses, he had declar'd to Almeyda his readiness to do what Service he was able to perform to Emanuel then King of Portugal.

Sabajus his Death.
Albuquerque coming into those parts, sent for Timoja, to consult with him concerning certain matters of moment relating to those parts, who inform'd him, that Sabajus being a declar'd Enemy of the Portugueses, had after the taking of Dabul, bestow'd vast Sums of Money in making Preparations against the Christians; but being prevented by Death from putting them in execution, he was succeed'd by his Son Hidalcan, who being engag'd in a War with the neighbouring Kings, and Goa at this time embroil'd with intestine Divisions, which had made most of the Garrison desert his Service, he was of opinion, that in case Albuquerque would for this time set aside his Expedition against Ormuz, and attack Goa, he might make himself master of that City without much opposition: and to convince him of the sincerity of his Intention, he offer'd to go along with him in Person, and to take his share in all the danger. Albuquerque approving of the Counsel of Timoja, call'd together a Council of War, in which it being agreed to lay aside the Design upon Ormuz, and in lieu thereof to attack Goa, Timoja list'd a good number of Soldiers (under pretence that they were to be employ'd against Ormuz) and soon after having join'd Albuquerque with 14 Ships, they arriv'd near 11 days in the Isle of Anchediva: For some of the Portugueses began to question the success of this Enterprize, alledging that there were 4000 Men in Garrison in the City, and that it was imprudence to rely too much upon Timoja; but Albuquerque persisting in his Resolution, set sail from the Isle, and came to an Anchor before the Bar of Goa.

From hence he detach'd Anthony Noronia his Sister's Son, and Timoja with some light Vessels, to make themselves masters of the two Forts that defended the Entrance towards the City; which being done with all imaginable success, he sent his Messengers to Goa, to let the Inhabitants know, that if they would submit, they should be treated like Friends, and be discharged of one third part of the Tribute they were oblig'd to pay to Hidalcan; but in case of refusal they must expect no Mercy. The Inhabitants of Goa seeing themselves reduc'd to this nonplus, in the absence of Hidalcan, most of their Soldiers having deserted, and their Forts in the Enemies hands, thought it their wisest course not to abide the extremity, but to accept of the Offers of the Portugueses, which they did accordingly, and receiv'd Albuquerque with all the Demonstrations of Friendship, who rode triumphantly on Horseback into the City under the Acclamations of the People, a Dominican carrying an Ensign with the Crofs in it, and another the Keys of the City (surrender'd to him) before him. He was very punctual in performing all the Articles agreed upon betwixt him and the Inhabitants, forbidding the Soldiers under the most severe Penalties, to commit the least Outrages. His next care was, to take a view of the condition of the City, where he found divers goodly Vessels, some lately built, others upon the Stocks; the Arsenal very well provided with Artillery, and the King's Stables with a considerable number of the best Arabian Horses. And finding by the situation of the Place, of what consequence it might prove to the Portuguese for the future, in carrying on the War upon the Continent of Cambaja and the Cape of Coru, and to keep the neighbouring Princes in awe, he left no stone unturn'd to provide for its Security.

Thus much for the first Enterprize of the Portuguese upon Goa. We will now also give you a short account of their further success, how they lost it again by Treachery, and regain'd it a second time the 25th of Novemb. 1510. where these following Persons signaliz'd themselves to their immortal Honour, Manuel de Cinba, Manuel de Lacerda, Don John de Lima, and his Brother Don Jeronimo de Lima, Denys Fernandes, Diego Mendes de Vasconcelos, with many others.

Hidalcan prepares for the recovery of Goa.

For Hidalcan had no sooner receiv'd the surprizing News of the loss of Goa, but he made a Peace with the neighbouring Princes upon the best Conditions he could, with an intention to bend all his Forces towards the recovery of Goa. The better to compass his Design, he sent Camalcan his General, a brave Soldier, before with 8000 Foot, and 1500 Horse, to endeavour to pass a certain Branch of the Sea which incloses the Isle, he himself intending to follow with an Army of 5000 Horse, and 40000 Foot, as soon as he had made all the necessary Preparations for such an Enterprize.

Camalcan having pitch'd his Tents near the Sea-shore, this, together with the News of the approach of Hidalcan with a most powerful Army, caus'd no small Conternation in the Island. Goa was inhabited at that time by two sorts of People, viz. the Mahometans and Pagans; the first out of an irreconcilable hatred to the Christians, cry'd out for Hidalcan the Son of Sabajus, who was of the same Religion with them; and the Pagans fearing lest they should be severely chastised for their having surrendred the City upon such easy terms, were for purchasing Hidalcan's favour by betraying Albuquerque's Counsels to him. The worst of all was, that many even among the Portuguese began to upbraid Albuquerque with want of Conduct, who they said, out of Vain-glory only, without the least regard to the Interest of Portugal, had with a handful of Men ventur'd upon so desperate an Enterprize as the seizing of so populous a City.

Albuquerque nothing dismay'd at all these Obstacles, endeavour'd to appease the Portuguese by fair words and promises, took 100 of the chief Inhabitants into custody, and having intercepted a Letter directed to Camalcan, he punish'd the Author thereof with Death, with divers others who were convicted of a Correspondence with the Enemy. But as his chief aim was to dispute their Passage cross the Branch of the Sea, he had erected Batteries provided with Cannon, at convenient distances near the Sea-side, and secur'd all their Boats, by which means he had repuls'd them several times in their Attempts. At last taking the advantage of a dark tempestuous night, they brought over both their Horse and Foot, without receiving any considerable damage from the Portuguese. Thus approaching to the City in Battel-array, most of the Inhabitants join'd with them, which oblig'd the Portuguese to retreat thither, tho without any great prospect of Security.

Camalcan summon'd Albuquerque to a surrender under certain Conditions; but tho he was sensible of the approaching danger, and the difficulty there would be of receiving any Relief in the Winter-season from May till September, when the frequent Storms render the Seas thereabouts unnavigable, and choak up the Entrance of the Harbour of Goa, yet was he resolv'd to expect the arrival of Hidalcan, and to abide the utmost Extremities rather than to surrender the place, resolving if all fail'd to pass the Winter in his Ships in the Harbour in spite of the Enemy. Camalcan, astonish'd at the Resolution of the Portuguese, made several fierce Attacks upon them, but in vain, till at last Hidalcan appearing with all his Forces, he resolv'd to cut of all manner of Provisions from the Portuguese, by which means he did not question to become Masters of the Place without Bloodshed.

He resolv'd however to send a Herald to Albuquerque to offer him honourable Conditions if he would depart; but whilst they were treating upon that Head, he found means to have a Ship loaden with Ballast sunk below the City, where the Branch of the Sea is pretty narrow, and the Albuquerque endeavours to hinder their Passage into the Isle.

Camalcan passes into the Isle.

Albuquerque's Attempts to hinder the Portuguese.

Channel very strait, with an intention to have another sunk hard by it: Albuquerque was no sooner adverted thereof, but he call'd a Council of War, in which it was unanimously agreed, that they should embark the next night, before they had stopp'd up the whole Channel, that the Enemy might not intercept their Passage.

Accordingly they march'd out in the dead time of the night; but having set fire to their Magazine, they were discover'd and attack'd by the Enemy, so that with much ado they got to their Ships, when they weigh'd their Anchors, and with incredible difficulty pass'd through the narrow Channel at some distance from the Town: By which however they were not freed from their Misery or Danger; for by the continual windings of the River they were frequently expos'd to the Enemy's Fire, and being destitute of fresh Water, they were forc'd to drink salt corrupted Water; what Horse-flesh they had left being also consum'd, they were reduc'd to feed upon Mice, Cats and Leather, which occasion'd a great Mortality among the Portugueses: Add to this, that they were continually annoy'd with the Enemy's Cannon from the two before-mention'd Forts (left by the Portugueses for want of Men) and saw no way how to pass them without a most manifest hazard.

Albuquerque being put to these straits, resolv'd upon a thing which at first sight appear'd rather to be a madness than founded upon serious Considerations: but the Event shew'd, that in Extremities the boldest and most hazardous Undertakings are often the best. Both these Forts were provided with good Garisons, but being sensible of the Misery of the Portugueses, they regarded them so little, that they scarce thought it worth their while to guard their Posts: Albuquerque having receiv'd some notice thereof, detach'd 300 chosen Men, whom he divided into two Troops; these being animated with great Promises and Revenge, advanced towards the Forts at the same time, and finding the Centrys asleep, kill'd them, and so entering the Forts soon put the rest to flight, took possession of the Fort, and carried off the Cannon aboard their Vessels. Hidalcan was so surpriz'd at this bold Enterprize, that not thinking himself secure in the place where he was, he order'd his Tent to be pitch'd at a greater distance.

The next thing the Indians attempted was, to endeavour to set fire to the Portuguese Fleet by means of dry Brushwood and Faggots dipt in Pitch and Rosin; to prevent which Albuquerque man'd out certain Boats to burn them before they could come near enough: This occasion'd a smart Engagement, wherein Anthony Noronia (a brave young Gentleman, declar'd Viceroy of the Indies after Albuquerque) being dangerously wounded in the Knee, died a few days after. The Enemy's loss was also very considerable; but the Death of Noronia, together with the manifold Miseries, Dangers, and Difficulties they had daily to struggle with, made the Portugueses resolve to sail to the Isle of Anchedra to set ashore their sick Men, who stood in great need of Refreshments for their Recovery.

Whilst Albuquerque was here ruminating with himself how to recover Goa, a Squadron of 10 Portuguese Men of War arriv'd in the Indies. Strengthened with this Succour, and having new modell'd his Forces by purging them of some mutinous Spirits, he embark'd 1500 Land-Soldiers, and 300 Malabars aboard 34 Vessels; and steering his course to the Isle of Onor, he concerted new measures with Timoja for the Recovery of Goa: and having engag'd him to list as many Forces as possibly he could, he set sail immediately towards Goa with such an astonishing Confidence of success, that the Indians upon his approach deserted the Forts without firing a Cannon.

Advancing from hence to the City, a bloody Engagement ensu'd near the Royal Palace, which Hidalcan's Soldiers pretending to defend to the utmost extremity, but being routed, the rest threw down their Arms, some precipitating themselves from the Walls into the Ditch, others seeking Refuge, or rather Death, among the Waves, whilst the rest dispersed in the Island. This Engagement lasted above six hours. Immediately after Timoja coming to the Assistance of the Portugueses, they enter'd the City, where they made a most miserable havock among the Moors, whom they were resolv'd to extirpate root and branch; 7000 whereof are suppos'd to have been slain in four days times; the Pagans themselves being exasperated at them for having dispossest them of their Lands, cut many of them to pieces, and among the rest the Treasurer of Hidalcan, in whose House they found a good Booty. Such of the Mahometans as were taken Prisoners, Albuquerque order'd to be enclosed in a Turkish Mosque, together with a certain Renegado Christian, who had deserted to Goa, and to set it on fire.

The next thing Albuquerque took care of, was to have Bricks and Lime made for the rebuilding and strengthening of the Fortifications; and (if we may credit the Portugueses) as they were digging under the Ruins of some old Walls, they found a Brazen Cross, which (considering no Christians were ever known to have liv'd there before) was look'd upon by them as a miraculous good Omen, prefiging the Establishment of the Christian Religion there.

A Cross found in the Ruins of Goa.

Albuquerque having punish'd with Death such of the Inhabitants as had had a hand in the first Mutiny, order'd that the Portugueses should marry the young Women of the Country (after they had been baptiz'd) the better to people the City, which from that time began to encrease considerably: Sequeria having caused the first Church that was built, with the adjacent Houses and Convent, to be dedicated to S. Francis. And in the year 1548. the Church and Convent of Dominicans was erected of Brick-work, 12 Fathers of that Order being about that time introduced into the Indies by James Bermudius a Castilian. After the arrival of the Jesuits in those parts (who have also a fine College here) there were in four years time baptiz'd no less than 17290 Indians, without reckoning those converted by the Franciscans and Dominicans before. In the Jesuits Chappel lies interrench'd the Body of Francis Xavierius, of which the Portugueses relate strange Miracles, as well as of his whole Life; an ample relation whereof may be seen in John de Lucena in Portuguese, by Daniel Bartholi in Italian, and by several others in Latin; and in another Treatise of Bartholi printed at Rome 1653. concerning the Actions of the antient Fathers of the Jesuitical Order. It will be sufficient for us to touch upon some of the chief Heads related by the Portugueses of this Saint.

Increase of the Christians.

The Death of Xavierius.

His Body uncorrupted.

He died in the Isle of Sanchan in China 1552. the second of December, of a violent Fever, in the eleventh year of his Voyage over the Indies. His dead Carcase was laid in a Coffin with his Clothes on, fill'd with Lime, with an intention to transport his Bones thence after the Flesh had been consum'd by the quick Lime. Many days after the Portugueses opening the Coffin, found his Body not only uncorrupted, but also of a lively Colour, and most agreeable Scent: Thence being transported to Malacca, and the Coffin being opened a second time, above three Months after his Decease, they found neither the least signs of Corruption, or any nauseous Stench. After he had been buried here five Months, a certain Jesuit travelling that way from Goa, being desirous to see the Body of Xaverius, found not only the Body, but also his Clothes uncorrupted, and of a very odoriferous Scent.

Thus it being judg'd unseemly that his Body should remain any longer underground, Didacus Pereria caused a magnificent Coffin adorn'd with Gold and Silk to be made, wherein the Body was deposited at Malacca, till it could be transported to Goa, where it was received with incredible demonstrations of Joy by the Viceroy, all the Persons of note, and especially by the Jesuits, and deposited with a great deal of Ceremony in the Chappel of S. Paul. And finding that the People were so eager to touch his Body, that it was to be fear'd they would in time consume it, or carry it away by piece-meals, it was inclosed in an Iron Grate; such being the Zeal of the People of Goa at that time, that they would embrace the Body of Xaverius without intermission, lay their Beads upon it, rub it with their Hands, &c. and the whole City rung of the Praises of this Saint, of his uncommon Zeal, Piety, Charity, Mildness, his Dangers in his Voyages, his Chastity, Temperance, Fasts, Prayers, Miracles, Constancy, Prudence, and great Actions for the Honour of Christ.

The Speech he made upon his departure for Japan and China to his Friends, who were for dissuading him from so dangerous an Undertaking, is so excellent in its kind, that it very well deserves a place in this Treatise.

"I am surpriz'd to see you who spend your days in the Praise of God Almighty's Power and Mercy, should now be so dissident thereof in regard of my Person. Have you forgot who is the Supreme Governor of the Universe, and that every thing is rul'd by his Will? Can you be destitute of Instants? What is his nature? Don't the Waves of the Sea, who open'd a way to the servants of God through the depth thereof, furnish you with an undeniable Example? Don't the Winds who allay'd their fury by his Command, proclaim his Power? Pray look upon Job, who could not be afflicted by the Devil without God's special Permission. The Mouth of Truth himself tells you, that the Hairs " of our Heads are number'd. As we " see Ambassadors of Temporal Princes, " relying upon their Characters, and the " Power of their Masters, pass unarm'd " and undisturb'd through an Enemy's " Camp; so it becomes us who bear the " Character of Interpreters of the Di-

 " Heathens, to rely upon nothing but

 " vine Majesty, which without any other " Weapons can carry us safely through " all Dangers both by Sea and Land,
 " through Fire and Sword, or what else
 " may seem to oppose the accomplish" ment of his Will. And if it happen " that some of his faithful Ministers fall " into the hands of cruel Persons, if they " are devour'd by wild Beasts, suffer
 " Shipwracks, or are expos'd to Hunger, " Thirst, Cold, Heat, Sickneses, and " other Miseries, all these are to be " look'd upon as the Effects of the Di-

 " Constancy of his Servants: For were
 " it not so, we are sufficiently convinc'd
 " by many Examples, in what manner
 " our God has a careful Eye over them;
 " how he has sent the Ravens to feed
 " them, the Angels to feed them, how " the wildest Beasts have deposited " their natural Fury and become mild,
 " how the Flame it self has not been " able to hurt them, nor the greatest " Tyrants to execute their Cruelties
 " upon them. 'Tis true, the Victory
 " does not always incline on our side,
 " and we are often frustrated in the ex" pectation of the fruits of our Labour;
 " but those Disappointments ought not " in the least stop the hand of a zealous
 " Minister, in attempting every thing
 " that may conduce to God's Honour,
 " and the Salvation of Souls. If a Sol" dier in hopes of a small share of Ho" nour, ventures his Life in the midst of " his Enemies; if the Seaman for the " hopes of an inconsiderable Lucre, leave
 " the shore, and commit his Life to the " merciless Waves, would it not be a " shame for a Minister of Christ to re" fuse to hazard his Life for God's Ser" vice, and to look upon every thing as " a trifle in comparison of the Kingdom " of Heaven, and its Increase? Let no " such thoughts enter our Minds, there " being nothing so precious, that ought " in this regard to hinder us from the " promoting of God's Service.

A most excellent Speech, worthy to be imprinted in the Hearts of all faithful Ministers of Christ, and the more valuable upon that score, that his Deeds were altogether agreeable to his Words:
 For embarking at Goa for Malacca, he thence set sail in a Chinese Joncke or Vessel for Japan, where he arriv'd happily at Cangaxima, where this great Man did not think it below himself to be instructed in the first Rudiments of that Language for Christ's sake. The next thing he applies himself to was, to have the chief Articles of the Christian Faith translated into the Japanese Language, making use for this purpose of an Interpreter, till he attain'd himself to the Perfection thereof, in which he ceased not to labour day and night; being mov'd by an uncontrollable Zeal of planting the Gospel among these Pagans. Truly a very commendable Zeal, not to be forgotten by " who bear the Name of Christians; and tho Xaverius his Religion differs in certain Points from ours, yet might his Piety and other commendable Virtues serve as an Encouragement to all pious Ministers, to follow his Footsteps in performing the Service of God to the utmost of their Power. It must be confess'd on all hands, that had not the active Spirit of the Jesuits awaken'd the Franciscans, and other Religious Orders from their Drowsiness, the Roman Church had before this time been buried in its Ruins: And as for my self, I am very willing to own, that my Pen is not capable of expressing the worth of so great a Man; tho at the same time I am of opinion, that if Xaverius were alive now, he would disown many things, especially as to his Miracles, since publish'd by his followers.

Increase of the City of Goa. Its Traffick, Manners, and way of living of the Portugueses there. The War betwixt the Dutch Company and the Portugueses. Their Ambassadors appear in the Great Council at Batavia; their Propositions and Transactions.

Increase and Traf-fick of Goa.Inhibitions.The way of living of the Portu-
gueses.

THE City of Goa increasing every year in Riches and Traffick, increased also in Strength by the addition of several Forts near the Water-side; this being the Capital City of the Portugueses in the Indies. Its Traffick was much more considerable formerly than of late years, since by our blocking up the Bar of Goa they were not a little disturb'd by our Ships. Whilst Goa was in its flourishing State, they used to send their Ships to Pegu, Siam, Japan, Persia, Cambaja, Arabia, Malabar, Coromandel, Bengale, Achem, besides divers other places. It's well inhabited not only by Europeans, but also Canarins, Moors, and Pagans of all Nations, who live for the most part upon trading, or are Handicrafts Men. The great Street of Goa has many rich Shops well-stor'd with Silks, Porcellain, and other precious Commodities, Drugstery Wares, Manufactories, &c. Some of these as well as fresh Provisions are sold every day in the Market-places, where you hear a Crier, or Auctioneer (call'd by them Lalang) to sell in publick all sorts of Goods, both movable and unmovable, Cattle, Slaves, &c. to the fairest Bidder; but they leave off early, by reason of the excessive Heat about mid-day.

The manner of living of the Portugueses is the same here as in most other places of the Indies; they are distinguish'd into Cazados, i. e. married People, and Zoldados, single People; the last are most esteem'd. The Portugueses here are generally very idle, seldom applying themselves to any Employment, leaving the management of their business for the most part to their Slaves, even the Women committing the care of their Children to the Female Slaves, who also give them suck. The Men frequently marry with the Natives of the Country, yet not so much now as formerly: The Children begot betwixt a Portuguese and an Indian Woman are call'd Mistices, as the Children of these Mistices are call'd Caslicos.

The Men are generally addicted to excessive Lust; and I remember to have seen three Women Slaves lie in at once, who were got with Child by their Masters; Fornication and Adultery being consider'd among them as Errors of little moment; but they are very averse to Drunkenness, notwithstanding which Quarrels and Murders are frequent among them.

The Men are also generally excessive proud, there being scarce any of them that thinks himself remov'd a little above the vulgar sort, but what has his Umbrello carried over his Head, another Servant to carry his Cloke after him, and another who holds his Sword: They use frequently Snuff, not excepting even the Maidens and Women; and as they walk along the Streets, they are continually stroking and setting up their Whiskers. The Women never appear abroad either a foot or in Chairs unveil'd, their Husbands being (and perhaps not without reason) very jealous of them; for which reason also they keep them at home in their Apartments above stairs. The Windows whereof are so contriv'd, that they can look upwards, but not downwards into the Streets.

The Distempers most in vogue at Goa are the burning Fevers, which the Portugueses cure by Venesection, sometimes five or six times aday, but they let but little at a time. The French or Spanish Pox are also so common here (as in most other parts of the Indies) that a Fidalgo or Gentleman here does not look upon it as a disgrace to have been afflicted with it twice or thrice in his life-time. For the rest, the Portugueses use much Sweetmeats, and take a Draught of cool Water after it, they being Enemies to strong Liguors, and moderate in their Diet, a small share sufficing for a good number of People. The Women feed much upon Rice, tho they have excellent Wheaten Bread; they also use frequently Betel and Areek, and all sorts of Pickles, which makes them have a pale Colour.

The King of Vijapour has more than once shewn his Inclination of attacking Goa by Land, especially at that time whilst Cornelius Simonse commanded the Dutch Fleet in those parts, he being much respected among the Mahometans ever since his burning of the Galleons near Mormagon: But the Death of the said Admiral prevented the design of that King, as much questioning whether his Successor might be a Man of the same stamp. In the year 1641. the said King promised a second time to form the Siege of Goa, provided the Dutch Company would engage to let a certain number of their Ships winter at Dalul, Orizery, or some other of his Majesty's Harbours, which was no more than a necessary Precaution; it being certain, that in case the Siege should miscarry, the Portugueses without our Assistance would have made themselves Masters of these Harbours. Formerly it was accounted dangerous to send our Ships to the Bar of Goa before October; but Experience has taught us since, that this Coast of the Indies is navigable towards the latter end of August, or in September, the exact time when the rich Ships come from Mosambique, Mascate, and divers other places, which have sometimes been taken by our Ships; whereas if they come later, they have nothing else to do but to attempt the Galleons under the Castle. In the year 1640. the Portugueses made shift to bring into the Harbour two Caracks, and as many Galleons, well provided with Men, and all other Necessaries; which gave them the opportunity to fortify the Isle of Mormagon; since which time, to render the Blockade by Sea the more effectual, the Hollanders have order'd certain Frigates to cruise with a Sloop near the Cape and the Burned Islands (call'd Ibas quimadas) whereby the Portuguese Cassilas, which supply them with Provisions, are prevented from going out or in.

It is sufficiently demonstrable, that the Dutch Company did at first judg it for their interest to be Masters of Goa, but laid it aside afterwards, thinking it more for their interest to block up the Bar of Goa: Certain it is, that both the Directors and the Governor and Members of the Great Council of the Indies, look'd upon the War betwixt them and Portugal as propitious to them, as is evident from the Petition deliver'd in May 1641. by the said Directors in the Hague to the States General of the United Provinces.

The chief intent of this Petition was, to shew, That tho it was beyond all question that the Dutch East-India Company was erected in its first beginning in the years 1601, 1602, and 1604. to carry on a peaceable Commerce in the Indies; but that since Experience had sufficiently convinc'd them, that the Portugueses, who had play'd the Masters in the Indies for many years before, had left no stone unturn'd to disturb the Commerce of the Dutch, by seizing their Ships, and imprinting very disadvantageous Notions of them into the Indian Princes. That in 1602. when the Dutch East-India Trade was incorporated into one Society or Company, two peculiar Advantages were (among others) obtain'd thereby at that time: First, Full Authority of protecting their Traffick jointly in the Indies by force of Arms: The Consequence whereof had been, secondly, That the Indian Princes were enter'd into an Engagement with the said Dutch Company, out of hatred and fear of the Portugueses; that by these means the Ships of the Dutch Company having purged the Seas of the Pirats, had settled since the year 1604. their Factories and Traffick, not only in all the Islands from the Red Sea as far as Japan, but also in the Territories of the Grand Signior, in Arabia, at Mocha, in Persia, even in the Capital City of Ispahan, in the Kingdom of Cambaja, and the Empire of the Great Mogul, in Decan, in Malabar, Narsinga, Coromandel, Golgonda, Bengale, Araacan, Pegu, Albin, Sumatra, Jambi, Palimban, Bantam, Cambodia, Siam, Cochin-China, Tonquin, &c. That since the Establishment of these Factories, the security of their Commerce was chiefly founded upon this Maxim, to maintain a War against the declar'd Enemy of these Indian Princes, their Engagements to us being founded upon their opinion of our Enmity with the Portugueses. To prove this they alledg the following ten Reasons.

1. Because the Dutch East-India Company was chiefly by means of the War with the Portugueses arriv'd to that Greatness it is now at, their whole Traffick in the Indies being founded upon this Basis, whence they draw yearly a return of 78910 Millions of Gelders; and if the said Foundation were not shaken, they might expect every year larger Returns.

2. That in case of a Truce they should not reap the fruits of the Victories, viz. to put a stop to their Power, a thing absolutely to be consider'd.

3. In case of a Truce the Equipment of many Ships of War would be laid aside, by which means Holland would be depriv'd of the Strength of a considerable number of Men of War in case of necessity.

4. That

Justus Schouten, a Member of the Great Council of the Indies, Simon van Alphen, Doctor of the Laws, Sheriff of the City of Batavia, Sebald Wandelaar, Receiver-General, Peter Soury, Barent Wichmans, Dirk Snoek, Emoud Spieringh, head Factors, John Lamoot, Serjeant-Major, Gerard Herbers, Doctor of the Laws, head Factor, Francisco de Souza de Castro, and Antonio Fialho Pereira, both Portuguese Gentlemen, were sent to conduct them from aboard their Vessel to the General's Palace, under the discharge of five pieces of Cannon; and being immediately introduc'd into the Apartment where the Great Council was then assembled, after the first Compliments on both sides, one of the Ambassadors began to make his Harangue: "That Portugal having withdrawn it self from the Spanish Jurisdiction, had chosen Don John Duke of Braganza their King; that the said King having soon after sent an Ambassador to their High and Mightinesses to treat of a Peace and an Alliance betwixt both Nations, they had all the reason to believe that the same was brought to a happy Conclusion before this time: In regard of which they were sent by the Viceroy of Goa, to treat with their Excellencies about a Cessation of Arms, as would more at large appear out of their Credentials, which they deliver'd at the same time to the Governor-General with this Superscription:

A. O. Senhor Antonio de Dienien, Capitao General de Nacao Ollandesa n' este Oriente. On the other side was written, De Conde d' Aveiras Viceroy e Capitao d' India.

The Letter was seal'd with the Arms of Portugal, and written in the Portuguese Language, as follows.

Their Credentials.

"IN the beginning of September arriv'd in our Fort Onor, a Caravel, sent from Portugal, whereby we were inform'd, that the Portuguese have proclaim'd and acknowledg'd a King of their own, by the general Consent of that Nation. His Majesty of Portugal did in one of his Letters give notice to us, that certain Ambassadors having been dispatch'd to their High and Mightinesses the States General, to treat about a Peace, it was not doubted, but the same would be soon concluded, a Truce having been already agreed upon betwixt the two Nations in Europe, whereof notice had been given by the said Majesty to the

"Commodore Quast, intimating, that as a Cessation of Arms was concluded in Europe, so the same might take effect in these parts, and that he had given orders to the Viceroy of Goa accordingly. After the Decease of the said Commodore, we gave notice thereof to Cornelius Leendertsz Blauw his Successor, who excusing himself with his want of Power, as being oblig'd to follow strictly the Orders of the Great Council of the Indies, we thought fit to send Diego Mendes de Britto, Gentleman of the King's Household, and Father Gonsalvo Viloso, to treat with your Excellencies concerning this Point; they being provided with Credentials from his Majesty, that whatever shall be agreed upon with them, shall be valid and kept inviolably. We wish all Blessings to the Crown of Portugal, and the United Provinces. Dated 6 Decemb. 1641.

The Great Council having told them, that they would take the matter into serious Consideration, the Discourse began to turn upon indifferent matters, and among the rest concerning the Caraque, lately taken by the Dutch. The Ambassadors being ask'd whether the Captain did not present the Viceroy with two or three Casks of Wine; they answer'd, No; At which the Governor-General shew'd a great dislike, telling the Ambassadors, that they must pardon the matter, it being a common thing for the best Seamen to make the worst Courtiers. After the Ambassadors had din'd with his Excellency, they were conducted to their Lodgings at Mr. James Harder's House. They were both Persons of a goodly Aspect, the Franciscan being betwixt 60 and 70 years of Age, the other of about 50. Their Train consisted in two Pages, and four Portuguese Footmen, besides the Negroes and Mistices, a Gentleman, a Secretary, Surgeon, and two Boys; their Livery was Orange Colour.

The 8th of February the said Ambassadors demanded a second Audience, which being for weighty Reasons defer'd till the 10th, they appear'd a second time at Nine a Clock in the Morning in the Great Council, reiterating their former Propositions concerning a Cessation of Arms: And lest the Governor-General might not as yet have receiv'd a full account of what had been transacted in Europe, they produc'd certain Original Letters.

Baldæus. Letters, sent by his Portuguese Majesty to the Viceroy; but these being only private Letters from certain Dutch Merchants living at Lisbon, and another Letter from the States-General to the Admiralty of that place, and consequently the same that were before sent hither from our Squadron at Goa, by the way of Coromandel, by the Sloop call'd the Pipeli: His Excellency the Governor-General reply'd, that the last being sent to the Council before by the Commodore Quast, they had perus'd the same, and found that in the Letter of the States-General, it was expressly said that the Dutch should not molest the Portugueses on the other side of the Line; which being to be understood of the North-side, the Indians were not comprehended therein; besides that they had not receiv'd any Instructions upon that account from the Governors and Directors of the East-India Company.

But to convince the Ambassadors that they were not enter'd into this War out of any other motive than to obtain an honourable Peace; they could not but put them in mind, that tho they had deliver'd their Credentials from the Viceroy, they had not brought along with them any positive Proof whether the said Viceroy were authorized by his Majesty of Portugal to treat concerning matters of such great consequence; and it was consequently to be doubted whether the same would be approv'd of and ratify'd by his Majesty.

One of the Ambassadors reply'd, that the Viceroy of India was always endow'd with a Power of making Peace and War, many Instances of which could be alledg'd upon divers occasions; which would leave no room to question his Authority in this case; but if they did, they were ready to remain as Hostages for the accomplishment of what should be agreed upon. His Excellency the Governour-General return'd, That he was satisfied of the Authority of the Viceroy in making Peace or War with the Indian Princes, but remain'd doubtful, whether the same did extend also to the European Nations: Nevertheless, that he believ'd the Viceroy would not transgress his Commission, and that therefore they had been acknowledg'd as Plenipotentiaries; which being done, there remained nothing now to do, but to proceed to the Treaty it self, and to make their Propositions under what Conditions they would have the Truce settled.

The Ambassadors answer'd, that they look'd upon it as unnecessary to insist upon many Conditions or Limitations at this juncture, when they expected every day to hear of a Peace concluded betwixt both Nations in Europe, according to the Conditions of which, both Parties would be oblig'd to regulate themselves hereafter: That their only aim now being to obtain a Cessation of Arms, the main thing in question was, to fix a certain time of its beginning, which they thought ought to be taken from that very hour the Truce was agreed upon and sign'd betwixt them.

The Governor-General told them that he agreed with them in that point, that not many Conditions were requir'd at this time, but that it would be next to an impossibility the Truce should commence from the very hour the same was sign'd, it being very probable that the Dutch Squadron would in the mean while not let slip any opportunity of taking their advantage over the Portugueses; as the Forces lately sent to Ceylon, perhaps might have made an Enterprize upon Negumbo or Columbo; as on the other hand, the Portugueses might probably have undertaken something against Gale, or have obtain'd some advantages against the Dutch in other places: The Viceroy himself having commanded Don Philippo Mascarenhas, that he should (till the News of the Truce did arrive) act with his utmost vigor against the Dutch in Zeylon. He urg'd, that all these things consider'd, it was to be fear'd that in case the Truce commenced according to their desire, this might furnish occasion to new Misunderstandings, it being more than probable that neither of the two Parties would be willing to restore what they had conquer'd in the mean while; that therefore it was his opinion, that the beginning of the said Truce must be so fix'd, as that sufficient time might be allow'd for giving notice thereof to the Subjects of both Parties.

The Ambassadors made many Objections against this, insinuating that the beginning of the Truce settled from the Date of the signing thereof, alledging among the rest, that they could scarce imagine the Viceroy should have sent such Orders to Mascarenhas. The Governor-General reply'd, that he had certain advice of it from Ceylon, but that notwithstanding this, he hoped the Ambassadors should not leave Batavia unsatisfied. He at the same time invited them to dine with him, where they were splendidly entertain'd, and drank to the Health of the King of Portugal, and the Prince of Orange.

Their third audience.

The 18th of February the said Ambassadors had another Audience, wherein they desir'd a positive Answer to their Propositions, the time desir'd by the Governor to consult with the Great Council being expir'd. They urg'd, that since the 14th of February some Yachts were arriv'd, which had brought the Confirmation of the News of the Peace lately concluded betwixt both Nations, therefore they did not question but their Excellencies would no longer deny them the desir'd Trade.

The Governour-General gave for Answer, That the said Yachts had touch'd at Fernambuco, from whence they had brought the Articles of a ten years Truce betwixt his Portuguese Majesty Don John IV. and the High and Mighty the States General of the United Provinces, in respect of their Territories in Europe, with Exception however of the Places and Colonies belonging to the East and West-India Companies; that they had also brought along with them the Articles or Conditions agreed upon betwixt their High and Mightinesses and Tristan de Mendoza the Portuguese Ambassador, concerning the West-India Company: whence it appear'd, that the same ought to be first ratified by his Portuguese Majesty, and sent back to the States General; and that the same after that should not take effect before notice be given thereof in Brazil: and the same being agreed upon in reference to the East-India Company, and our Ships which left Holland in September last, being expected every day in these parts with the Ratifications of the said Treaty, it was thought convenient by the Great Council to expect their coming, and to regulate themselves according to the Conditions agreed upon betwixt their respective Masters, especially since the said Ships would probably arrive before the season would permit the Ambassadors to depart for Goa, and consequently there would be no loss of time in this respect.

The Ambassadors told them that they could not but think it strange, that since both Nations liv'd in Amity in Europe, they should act in a hostile manner against one another in the Indies. The Governor-General reply'd, that since their respective Masters had thought it convenient it should be so, till the Ratification of the Treaty by his Portuguese Majesty, and that notice had been given thereof to them, they were oblig'd to take their measures accordingly. The Ambassadors answer'd, that they had promised themselves a quite other Answer, tho in all other respects they acknowledg'd the Honours and obliging Entertainment they had receiv'd, desiring that a Copy might be given them containing an exact account of all the Transactions during their stay here, betwixt their Excellencies and them, by which it might appear that they had not been defective in their Zeal and Industry to bring this matter to the desir'd effect. This was promised by the Governour-General, with this addition, that to give them all imaginable Satisfaction concerning the Truce, they would also give them a faithful Copy of the Articles thereof, not questioning but that the Ships would arrive in the mean while; but if they should happen to stay longer, beyond expectation, they would consult all proper means to give them what satisfaction they could. They thankfully receiv'd this Answer, extolling once more the obliging Entertainment they had met with at their hands; they din'd with most of the Members of the Great Council at the Governour-General's House, and towards the Evening took the Air on Horse-back.

The 30th of March the said Ambassadors had another Audience, in which they deliver'd a Memorial to the Great Council; which being read, the Governour-General told them, that what was alleg'd in the said Memorial was a Matter of Fact, and agreeable to what had been enter'd in their Records; but that they would not have them despond concerning the arrival of the Ships, which he was sorry staid so long behind; but that notwithstanding this, he hoped they should not depart without Satisfaction. The Ambassadors reply'd, his Excellency would be pleas'd to remember his Promise, of not letting them depart without Satisfaction, or obtaining the end of their Commission, in case the Ships should not arrive.

The Governour-General return'd for Answer, That by saying so, he did not intend to consent to the Truce, which was beyond his Power, at least till the arrival of the said Ships; but to give them all the possible marks of his Goodwill and Esteem, and that they should be dismiss'd with all the marks of Respect they were able to pay them. That since his Masters had thought fit to limit the beginning of the Truce to the time of its being ratified by his Majesty of Portugal, and being return'd into Holland, and thence to the East-Indies, they were absolutely oblig'd to wait for the arrival of it, lest it should seem as if they thought them-

One of the Ambassadors made Answer, That they were periwaded his Excellency the Governour-General, was sufficiently authorized to make Peace and War at his pleasure in these Countries, the same tending to the advantage of the Dutch Nation; and that this Cessation of Arms could not but be acceptable to the States-General, who had so lately concluded a Peace with the King of Portugal. He further told them, that the Viceroy of Goa was always authorized with such a Power, but in a more peculiar manner at this time, having receiv'd expresse Orders for that purpose by a Caravel from his Majesty.

At last the Ambassadors perceiving that the Great Council remain'd stedfast in their Resolution, they thought it unfit to push the matter any further for that time, reiterating their former Request of having a Copy granted them concerning their Transactions here, and desiring that since the Season began to open the Passage by Sea to Coromandel, they might be dismiss'd forthwith, in order to prosecute their Journey by Land to Goa before the Winter, the same being impracticable afterwards, by reason of the frequent Rains. The Governour-General promis'd them entire Satisfaction upon both these Heads, and that a Ship should be got ready for their Excellencies; but that however he could not forbear to tell them, that in his opinion they would do better to tarry a little longer, in expectation of the before-mentioned Ships, and the Ratification expected to be brought over by them. They reply'd, That having receiv'd expresse Orders from the Viceroy to return to Goa with the first opportunity, they were oblig'd to obey, unless his Excellency would lay his Commands upon them to the contrary. The Governour-General answer'd, That it was not in his power to command them, what he had said being only by way of Advice; but if they were resolv'd to the contrary, they should not be in the least detain'd: That if they thought fit, Advice might be sent thereof to the Viceroy by the Ship that was then just ready to sail for Coromandel; or if they disliked this Proposition, one of them might tarry at Batavia till the arrival of the Ratification, whilst the other return'd to Goa. This Expedient being approv'd by them, it was agreed that the Franciscan Father should go back to Goa by the way of Coromandel, and the other stay at Batavia, till the arrival of the Ratification.

Then the Ambassadors desir'd the Releasement of certain Misfices and Negroes that were Prisoners among us; which being soon granted by the Governour-General, he ask'd the same favour in behalf of four other Persons who had been clapt in Irons on occasion of some Mutiny at Batavia, in which they were the Ringleaders; which was also granted, under Condition that they should depart the Country with the Franciscan Father. They also made the like Request concerning Francisco de Souza de Castro, who (at the request of the Governor-General) being releas'd out of his Prison by those of Achin, was deliver'd up to the Dutch; he had likewise leave given him to depart with the Franciscan Father, provided he paid his Debts before his departure.

The first of April the two Ships call'd the Tiger and Nassau, which had left Holland the 16th of September last, being arriv'd at Batavia, the said Ambassadors appear'd once more in the Great Council, intimating, that they being inform'd that at the time of the departure of these Ships out of Holland, the Ratification of the Articles of his Portuguese Majesty concerning the East-Indies was not arriv'd, at which they were much surpriz'd, as not knowing what might be the reason thereof: They desir'd to know whether his Excellency had not receiv'd any more particular Intelligence, which might induce him to grant the desir'd Cessation of Arms. The Governour-General reply'd, that he had put it beyond all doubt, that the Ratification would have been brought along with these Ships; but since it had happen'd otherwise, it was not in his power to grant the requir'd Truce. The Ambassadors ask'd whether they should both depart, or whether his Excellency thought convenient that one of them should stay behind: The Governour-General told them that they were at their own disposal; but that, since they expected every day the arrival of their Winter-Ships, which infallibly would bring over the said Ratification, he judg'd it might be best for them to continue a little longer at Batavia.

Hereupon they resolv'd once more, that the Franciscan Father should go back over Coromandel to Goa, whilst the other should stay at Batavia for the arrival of the Ratification. Accordingly a written Certificate was given to the Ambassadors concerning their Zeal and Industry, in incompassing their Commission, sign'd by his Excellency the Governour-General Anthony van Diemen, by Cornelius van der Lijn, John Maatzwyker, Justus Schouten, Cornelius Witzen, and Peter Boreel, in the Castle of Batavia, April 9. 1642. To the Franciscan Father the Council gave the following Letter, directed to the Viceroy of Goa.

Most Illustrious Lord!

Letter to the Viceroy of Goa
 " Diego Mendes de Britto, Gentleman of the King's Household, and the Reverend Father, Brother Goncalvo de S. Joseph, your Excellency's Ambassadors, being come in our Road the 28th of January aboard the Dolphin, were honourably receiv'd by us the next day. They have deliver'd to us your Excellency's Credential Letters, dated in Goa the 6th of December of the last year, as also the Letters of his Portuguese Majesty to you, concerning the Truce betwixt Portugal and the United Provinces. The before-mentioned Ambassadors have not been remiss in their Zeal, Industry and Duty, to press in their several Audiences the obtaining of a Truce; which we would willingly have granted, had not we receiv'd certain Advice by some Ships arriv'd the 14th of February by the way of Fernambuco, and others arriv'd the first of April here, of a Truce concluded betwixt his Majesty of Portugal and the States-General of the United Provinces;

" wherein it was expressly agreed with his Majesty's Plenipotentiary Tristao de Mendonça Furtado, among other Points, that the Truce agreed upon for 10 years in Europe, should be of the same validity in these parts, yet so that the same should not commence before that his Portuguese Majesty should have sent back his Ratification into Holland, and the same be publicly proclaim'd afterwards in these parts, as will more fully appear to your Excellencies out of the enclosed Letters. Thus being oblig'd to follow the Directions of our Lords and Masters, we could not proceed further in this business till the arrival of the next Ships from Holland; which being expected daily, with the said Ratification, we did advise your Ambassadors to stay (or at least one of them) for the coming of the said Ships, as the only means not to render your Excellency's Embassy altogether fruitless: Accordingly Mr. Diego Mendes de Britto intends to hasten his Journey to Goa, immediately after the first further notice of the said Ratification, which we hope will prove agreeable to your Excellency's Sentiments. We recommend your Excellency to God's Protection. Dated in the Castle of Batavia, April 8. 1642.

Subscribed,

The Governour-General for the United Provinces in the East-Indies.

 " THE so much desir'd Ratification (signed at Lisbon the 16th of January 1642. and deliver'd at the Hague the 15th of February following) being at last brought to Batavia, the same was publish'd the 8th of October throughout the Indies.

" Anthony van Diemen Governour-General, and the Members of the Great Council of the East-Indies under the Jurisdiction of the United

" Provinces, make known to all it may concern; That whereas by two several Letters, dated the 22d of February, and 15th of March 1642. brought over by the Ship the Salamander, we have been advertis'd, That the 12th of June 1641. a firm Alliance and Truce has been concluded for 10 years betwixt the most Potent Don John IV. King of Portugal, Algerue, and Lord of Guinea, and of the Conquests made on the Shoar of Ethiopia, Arabia, Persia and India.

"India, on one side, and their High and Mightinesses the States General of the United Provinces on the other side, including all the before-mentioned Kingdoms, Countries, Provinces, Islands, and other places on both sides of the Equinoctial Line (without exception) all such as now actually are, or for the future may be under the Jurisdiction of the said King and the States-General; during which space of ten years successively all Hostilities betwixt their respective Subjects shall cease both by Sea and Land, without limitation or exception of any Places, Persons or Circumstances, as by the Articles of the said Truce does more amply and fully appear. It is therefore that we are commanded to surcease all manner of Hostilities from this day for the next succeeding ten years, according to which all our Subjects shall regulate themselves; and to take effectual care that nothing may be transacted any wise contrary to the true intent of the Articles of the said Alliance and Truce, but to maintain the same inviolably. And that nobody may plead ignorance in this case, we have order'd these Presents to be publish'd, enjoying every body under severe Penalties, not to infringe any of the before-mentioned Articles, as they will answer the same at their peril. Dated in the Castle of Batavia, Octob. 4. 1642. and first publish'd the 7th of the same Month, under the Great Seal of the Company in red Wax.

Anthony van Diemen.

By Order of his Excellency,

Peter Mcjdach, Secretary.

The Protest sent to the Count d'Avicira:

However this Truce was but ill observ'd by the Viceroy of Goa, especially in the Territories of Gale in the Isle of Ceylon, which induc'd the Dutch General and Great Council to send him this following Protest.

"BY Letters from our Commissary Peter Boreel, whom (after the Ratification of the Truce betwixt his Portuguese Majesty and the States General of the United Provinces) we dispatch'd to Goa, to give notice thereof to your Excellency, we have been inform'd beyond all expectation, that upon his arrival there, and his earnest request to your Excellency (pursuant "to our Orders) to withdraw the Army under the Command of Don Philip of Mascarenbas, from the Territories of Puntegale under our Jurisdiction, your Excellency has been pleas'd to shew so much aversion to comply with his Demands, tho founded upon undeniable and just grounds represented to your Commissioners in the several Conferences held upon that Subject *, that he finding his Presence usefess at Goa, he was forced to return from thence without being able to encompass his just Designs, and (pursuant to his Orders receiv'd from us) to denounce before his departure, the Continuation of the War to your Excellency, till Satisfaction might be obtain'd upon this score. And since the unjust detention of the Territories of Gale tends to our considerable Detriment, we declare, that upon perusal of the Writings sent to us by your Excellency by the hands of our Commissary, we can make no better Construction of the whole matter, than that your Excellency's Intention is, under this framed Proteft, to render the Truce concluded betwixt our respective Masters, invalid and of no worth. It is therefore that we think our selves oblig'd to approve every thing that has been transacted upon this Head by our Commissary, and to make use of such means for the Justification of our Rights, as God has put into our hands, and are altogether futable to the Laws of Nations. And as upon these Considerations, we have sent back this Fleet, by which your Excellency will at once receive this Protest, and be made sensible at the same time of our Resolution of maintaining our just Cause, which will questionless prove the occasion of new Differences betwixt his Portuguese Majesty and the States General of the United Provinces, as also of much Effusion of Blood, of vast Expences, and many other Inconveniences; we call God to witness, and declare and protest by these Presents, that we are innocent, and are not answerable for the direful Consequences of this breach of the Truce, which we were ready to have punctually observ'd on our side, pursuant to the Intention of our Masters, had not your Excellency bereav'd us of all hopes of adjusting matters by an amicable Composition, for the recovery of our Rights in the Country

Thus matters remain'd in suspense betwixt the Portuguese and us till the year 1644. when Mr. Maatzuyker being authorized by their High and Mightinesses, as also by the General and Great Council of the Indies, to treat with the Count d'Avicras Viceroy of Goa, concerning a firm Truce, and to adjust the remaining Differences for that purpose (yet upon the approbation of their respective Masters) the same at last concluded a Truce the 10th of November, upon the following Conditions.

" I. Both Parties declare, that this " present Agreement, intended for the " composing of such Differences as have " hitherto occasion'd much Bloodshed,
" and obstructed the so long desir'd Peace,
" shall in no wise be deem'd, or be pre-
" judicial to the Rights and Sovereignties " either of the most Illustrious King of " Portugal, or of their High and Mighti-" nesses the States-General of the United " Provinces, as the same are establish'd
" (by the Truce agreed upon betwixt
" his Portuguese Majesty and the said " States General) in their respective " Cities, Castles, Fortresses, Towns, Har-" bours, and Seas in the Indies; and that " this Agreement shall be inviolably ob" serv'd on both sides immediately after " its second Publication at Goa.

" II. Since the happy Effects of the " Truce have been obstructed hitherto,
" by certain Differences arisen about the " just Division of the Limits in the Isle of " Ceylon, it is agreed that the Decision " thereof shall be entirely remitted to
" the respective Masters and Lords of " both Nations, and in the mean while
" a full Cessation of Arms and all Hosti" lities to be kept inviolably, and all
" Forts, Territories, and other matters " to remain in the same state as they " were at the day of the Publication of " these Presents at Goa; so that not the " least Alteration or Innovation is to be " made either in building, rebuilding,
" or mending any thing, much less in " making any Preparations either for a " Defensive or Offensive War.

Vol. III.

" III. But that, whilst the before-men" tioned Differences remain undecided, Baldew.
" the Products of the Country may not " be neglected, or lost, by reason of the " Differences betwixt the Possessors, it " is agreed that the same shall be di" vided into two equal shares betwixt
" the Portuguese and the Dutch, yet so " that the same shall be deposited (re" main in Custody) with the last, till the " decision of these Differences by their " respective Principals in Europe: where" by they oblige themselves at the same " time to a full Restitution in case the " same be agreed upon by the said Prin" cipals. And the said Ambassador de" clares and protests, that the word
" deposited, inserted at the request of the " Viceroy (for the better adjusting of " matters) shall not in any wise be in" terpreted as prejudicial to the Posses" sion and Title of the States General to " these Lands and their Products. And " to avoid all Contests concerning the " gathering of these Fruits, it is agreed
" the Portuguese shall have full liberty " to gather, without any molestation or " hinderance, such Fruits as grow in one " part of the Lands in dispute, viz. that " part which is next adjacent to their
" Fort; as on the other hand, the Hol" landers shall enjoy the same freedom in " gathering the Fruits in that half part " adjoining to their Fortress. The same " is also to be understood of equally
" sharing the Administration of Justice
" in these parts, lest Malefactors may be " encourag'd, and Crimes pass unpun" ish'd, by reason of the uncertainty of " the Administration of Justice; publick
" Proclamation hereof being to be made " in this Isle by the respective Gover-" nours of both Nations.

" IV. Raja Singa the King of Candy
" shall be comprehended in this Truce,
" (according to the third Article) with " all his Kingdoms, Provinces and Posses" sions.

" V. All Proprietors, Owners, or Far" mers in the Villages, shall have full " liberty to return to their Possessions
" and Farms of what nature soever,
" with their Families, provided they re" turn within the space of six Months,

" ties, and pay the usual Taxes and Du" ties to those under whose Jurisdiction
" they live, without any trouble. And

" all Parishes or Villages, except in the fortified Places belonging to the Hollanders, till the before-mentioned Decision be arrived out of Europe.

" VI. The Labourers of the Isle of Ceylon, call'd Sobalias, employ'd in peeling of the Cinnamon, shall have liberty to work with both Parties, yet not without the consent of that Party under whose Jurisdiction they live; and the better to maintain the Truce, neither Party shall be permitted to entice these Labourers of Ceylon, or any other of the Natives out of one another's Service, without mutual Consent, but shall be oblig'd to send them back to their respective Dwelling-places.

" VII. All the Goods seiz'd on account of or during these Differences, shall be restor'd, or else the Value thereof paid in Money, provided they were actually in the Possession of either Party, and not otherwise; upon which account the Dutch Ambassador promises to pay here at Goa, or at Suratte, in the next following Month of January at farthest, the Sum of 100000 Spanish Reals, to be accounted for according to the true value thereof they bear at Batavia, as the payment of the Money shall be made, according to the course of Money in those places where these Goods were taxed; to be understood of such Goods as notwithstanding the payment of the before-said Money, are found to remain as yet unsatisfied for from the 22d day of February 1643. being a twelve-month after the Ratification of his Portuguese Majesty was sent to the Hague.

" VIII. In case during this Truce any Differences should arise betwixt both Parties, this Agreement shall remain firm and inviolable, and every thing remain in the same state, till the Decision of the respective Principals; and in case the nature of the matter admits of no delay, the same is to be refer'd to the Determination of certain Arbitrators, to be chosen by both Parties; and whilst the same is in agitation, the pretended Party to remain in Possession till the Point is decided by the said Arbitrators.

" IX. This present Agreement is not in the least to be prejudicial to such Judgments or Decisions as have been made or given betwixt contending Parties, or may be given for the future by our respective Principals; but the same shall be regarded and taken as " valid in all respects by both Parties, notwithstanding this Agreement, intended only for the removing of Differences till the same can be approv'd of by our respective Principals. Which Agreement for the ceasing of all manner of Hostilities, and maintaining a firm Truce in the Isle of Ceylon, is promised by both Parties to be publish'd immediately, and inviolably observ'd both in respect of the Governours and Subjects: as his Excellency the Viceroy engages the same for himself and his Successors, Generals, and Governours; and my Lord Ambassador for the States of the United Provinces, and the East-India Company, pursuant to the Authority granted him by the most Noble Anthony van Diemen, General-Governour of the Indies. In Confirmation whereof this Agreement is authoriz'd and confirm'd by a solemn Oath taken upon the Gospel in the presence of the most Reverend Archbishop and Primate of Goa, Don Frey Francisco de Martyres, and Don Alphonso Medis, Patriarch of Ethiopia, Members of the Privy-Council of his Majesty; and in the presence of the other Privy-Counsellors of Goa, who have given their full Approbation and Consent therunto; as also in the Presence of Wollebrand Gleyzen, Chief Director in Persia, Abraham Fierens, Minister of the Gospel, John Pottey Fiscal, Andreas Frisius Secretary, Thomas Kuyk, head Factor; who together with his Excellency the Viceroy, and his Excellency the Ambassador, did set their Hands to it; Joseph de Chaves Costo Major, his Excellency the Viceroy's Secretary, having taken care to make the Draughts thereof.

Joseph Pinto Pereira, Wolfebrand Gleyntz the younger.

In the year 1643. Jan. 10. the Division of the Limits in the Isle of Ceylon was agreed upon in the City of Columbo, Don Philippo Mascarenbas, Succellor to the Count d'Aveiras, being then Viceroy of Goa.

"The Countries betwixt Columbo and Negumbo, shall be divided into two equal shares, according to their several Districts (call'd Corles) as far as the same can be done, to prevent the Confusion which might otherwise arise from the Division of the ancient Jurisdictions; but in such places where the same is not to be done, this Division is to be made by sharing the Villages: so that considering there are 17 Districts betwixt the two before-mentioned Forts, seven thereof are to be annexed to the Jurisdiction of Columbo, viz. Herra-coria, Omapauduna-coria, Quatigora-coria, Bilgal-coria, Gabare-coria, Apitigan-coria, and Pernacur-coria, lying altogether towards that side. To the Fort of Negumbo are to be annex'd eight Districts, viz. Pitigal-coria, Diomedes-coria, Orupula-coria, Carvagat-coria, Vili-coria, Madura-coria, Hiericia-coria, and Mangur-coria; the rest to be divided into two equal shares, Alicur-coria by the River Dandagan to be the common Boundary of both Nations; so that

"part which lies to the North shall belong to Negumbo, and to Columbo what lies on this side. The Province of Catugambala-coria is to be divided by the same River, together with its three lesser Districts, Udaacabapato, Miendapato and Jetigalapato; so that Jetigala shall fall to the share of Negumbo, and Udaraba to Columbo; but Miendapato shall be divided into two equal parts, in proportion to its Villages, such Villages as lie next Jetigalapato to be under the Jurisdiction of Negumbo, and those on the side of Uda-caba under Columbo. The Portuguese shall remain in the possession of Pattelaon and Calpentyu; but the River of Alican is to be the Boundary betwixt Columbo and Gale: so that part lying on the other side of the River shall remain to the Hollanders, but the other part on this side, together with the River and Harbour to the Portuguese, in the same manner as they were formerly possess'd of it, under this Condition however, that the Hollanders living here or in any other parts shall have the free use of the said River in fishing, or exporting and importing their Merchandizes without paying any Customs. And whereas by the 7th Article of the Agreement made at Goa, it was agreed, that the Labourers (call'd Schalias) who peel the Cinnamon, shall be employ'd by both Parties to prevent all further Differences for the future upon this Head; it is agreed, that the Hollanders shall every year in Harvest time send one half of these Labourers out of the Villages of Bili and Colgura, under their Jurisdiction on the other side of the River Alican, to assist as formerly the Portuguese in peeling of Cinnamon, under condition that the Cinnamon thus peeled by them in the Portuguese Territories, shall be laid up in a certain place upon the River Dandagan, to be divided once every year in two equal shares betwixt the two Parties, provided that each Party pay the usual Price to the Schalias for the peeling of their share of Cinnamon. This Division is to take place, and to stand firm till the same be otherwise decided by our respective Principals in Europe, with this reserve nevertheless in regard of the Hollanders, who being ignorant hitherto in the true situation of the Country, may easily be deceiv'd in this point, and therefore ought to have the liberty to appeal to better Judgment, and desire a recompensa-

"tion of their Losses: But in case the Parties should disagree upon this Head, this shall not occasion any Rupture, but the Truce shall notwithstanding this remain in its full force, according to the intent of the 9th Article of the before-mentioned Agreement. Don Philippo Mascarenhas the present Viceroy, and Mr. John Maatzuyker do also engage to cause this Treaty of the Division of the Limits to be publish'd immediately, for the general benefit of all such as have any concern therein, that the Inhabitants of this Isle may no longer remain in ignorance under whose Jurisdiction they live; and for the due performance thereof, have confirm'd the same with their Oaths, and subscrib'd the Draughts thereof both in Latin and Portuguese; yet so, that in case of any doubt, recourse is to be had to the Latin Original.

betwixt
Philippo Mascarenhas, and Cornelius
van Sanen.

In the year 1647. a provisional Agreement was made by Don Philippo Mascarenhas, the then Viceroy, and Cornelius van Sanen, head Factor and Director of Wingurla, for the adjusting of the Differences concerning the Fortress of Malacca.

"IN the Name of God, Amen. Be it known to all who are concern'd in this present Agreement, That 1647. April 18. the following Agreement has been made in the Castle of the City of Goa, in the presence of his Excellency Don Philippo Mascarenhas Viceroy of Goa, and Cornelius van Sanen, head Factor and Director of Wingurla, authorized by the Governour-General and Great Council of the Indies, for the adjusting of the Differences arising concerning some pretended Rights of the City and Fortress of Malacca, concerning the Customs and Duties to be paid at Malacca; several Conferences having been held with the Merchants of Macau, yet could not the same be reduc'd to any just Equilibrium, or settled upon a firm Basis, tho we made as reasonable offers as possibly could be expected: so that in case your Excellency thinks it convenient to proceed further in this matter, you may treat upon this Head with Cornelius van Sanen, our head Factor at Wingurla. By virtue of this Commission I represented to the Viceroy, that in point of Justice, such of our Ships as pass by Malacca without unloading or selling any of their Commodities,

"ought to pay no Customs there: unto which his Excellency having given for Answer, that it appear'd out of the Treaties and Writings agreed upon betwixt both Parties, that they ought to pay the same; it was thought fit for the preventing of further Differences, and maintaining a good Correspondence betwixt both Nations, to agree upon the following provisional Treaty, till the full Decision of our respective Principals, and with this Proviso, that this Agreement shall not in the least tend to the prejudice either of his Portuguese Majesty, or of the States General in their respective Rights and Possessions. That his Majesty's Ships as well as the Dutch Merchant-men bound to China, or any other of the Southern parts, coming to Malacca, shall only be oblig'd to pay 6 per Cent. for such Goods as they shall actually sell there; the same to be paid to the Dutch from all such Goods as they shall sell in any of his Majesty's Harbours. Pursuant to the Agreement made at Batavia by the Great Council with the Merchants of Macau, in the presence of the Reverend Frey Goncalvo de S. Joseph, each Vessel, whether small or great, bound to Macau, whether it sells or unloads any Goods at Malacca or not, shall pay two Scutellins of Gold for its Passage thither and backwards; from which Duties however are to be exempted his Majesty's Ships, provided they may be searched, and an Oath taken thereupon, that they have no Merchandizes aboard; and if any are found, the Owners are to pay 4  $\frac{1}{2}$  per Cent. That such Ships as pass by Malacca, and are not bound to China, shall pay 4  $\frac{1}{2}$  per Cent. whether they unload or sell any Goods or not; then they may proceed in their Voyage without any Molestation. Which Agreement is to be publish'd and strictly observ'd by both Parties, and confirm'd by Oath, till the Decision of our both sides respective Principals.

Signed,

THE Isle of Anchediva, not far from Goa, and about 30 Leagues from Calecut, is almost covered with Woods and Forests, but well stor'd with Fish; the Portugueses had formerly a Fort here: Sebajus, the Father of Hidalcas, sent a Fleet of 60 Ships to Anchediva (whilst Glineyda was at Cananor) to chase the Portugueses from that Island, under the Command of Anthony Fernando, a most impious Wretch, who having forsaken both his Religion, and the Service of his Native Country, turn'd Mahometan, assuming the Name of Abdala; and being well versed in Maritime Affairs, was in great Favour with Sebajus. This Renegade having landed a good Body of Men in this Isle, left no Stone unturn'd to make himself Master of the Fort, erected there by the Portugueses: But being bravely defended by Emanuel Passa gie, a Native of Genoa, descended from a great Family, and famous for his brave Actions; Abdala hearing of the return of the victorious Fleet, was glad to leave both the Fort and the Isle. The Fort was not long after demolished by the Portugueses themselves, who had been taught by experience, that too great a number of Fortresses consum'd all their Profit, and exposes them besides to no small danger; like a Hen who has more Chickens than she can protect with her Wings, often loses one by the rapacious Kite.

The Country of Canara is very fertile in Rice and other Necessaries of human Life; its Inhabitants, commonly called Canarins, are very robust, and fit for all manner of hard Labour. The chief City near the Sea-shoar, are the City and Kingdom of Onor, not far distant from Goa, where the Portugueses had also a Fort, it being formerly a Place of considerable Traffick. Next to Onor lies Batecalo, about 2 1/2 Leagues from Goa, the King whereof became tributary to the Crown of Portugal under the Reign of Emanuel; but refusing afterwards to pay the usual Tribute, Sequeria sent Alphonso Menes with some Ships to block up the Harbour, which soon reduc'd the King to Obedience. Afterwards the Queen of Batecalo entertaining the Pyrats in her Harbours, and refusing likewise to pay the Tribute, Sofa sail'd thither with 49 Ships and 1500 Landmen; and after he had cast Anchor in the Harbour, sent his Messengers into the City to require the Payment of the Tribute, and the surrendering of the Pyrats: She being frightened at the Sight of so powerful a Fleet, surrendred four of the Pyrats Ships; but endeavouring for the rest to detain the Portugueses with fair Words, these landed their Men, not a little incommoded by the Arrows shot at 'em by the Inhabitants from the Coco Trees; but having put themselves in order of Battle, they advanced towards the City, where they were (in the Absence of the Queen) so warmly engag'd by the Inhabitants, that the Combat remain'd doubtful for some time, till these being worsted, they set the City on fire, with the Loss of 12 Men only on their side. In this Action one Almeyda a brave Portuguese, seeing his Comrade enclosed on all sides by the Enemy, fought his way thro' 'em; and having rescued his Companion, withstood the whole Force of the Enemy, till he was relieved by a Body of the Portugueses. Afterwards they made Incursions into the Country, which soon obliged the Queen to consent to the Payment of the Tribute.

Barcelor, Baranor and Mangalor, being Places of no great consequence, deserve no particular Descriptions; wherefore we will proceed to the Country of Malabar, which (according to common Computation) begins about 30 Leagues to the South of Goa, and extends to the Cape of Comorin, to the utmost Borders of India, on this side of Ganges. This whole Country being full of Rivers, is consequently of an easy Passage; tho' most of the Rivers here are so shallow, that they are not capable of bearing any Ships of Bulk or Burden. The largest Rivers are Bergeva (a great Receptacle for Pirats) Panane and Cranganor, the common Boundaries of the Kingdoms of Calecut and Cochin; these as well as the River of Cochin are about 18 or 19 Foot deep at High-Water. The whole Country of Malabar is divided into five Kingdoms, viz. Cananor, Calecut, Cranganor, Cochin and Coulang, unto which some add the Kingdom of Trevancor, the least fertile tile of all, and the two petty Kingdoms of Porca and Caleoulang.

In former Ages Malabar was subject to one Sovereign Prince, who kept his Court at Calecut, now the Residence of the Great Sannoryn. This King having at the Persuasion of some of his Courtiers, undertaken a Voyage over the Red-Sea, to visit Mahomet's Tomb, and to be thorowly instructed in that Faith, died in his return from thence; and leaving no Issue, the whole Empire was divided between his Esquire, Sword-bearer, and Scepter-bearer: The first taking for his share Cananor, the second Calecut, and the third Cochin.

The Nights are very cold all along the Coast of Malabar, with very thick Fogs, especially in January, February, and March, when the days are excellent hot. They have every day a Sea and Land Wind; the first begins every Morning at 9 or to a Clock, and holds till Sunset. This Coast is scarce navigable from June till November, the best time here being from April till June. Their Winter begins in May, and continues till November.

The chief Products of Malabar, are Pepper and Cardamome: Cochin affords great Quantities of Pepper, but Cananor yields the best; especially in the Inland Countries, whence the Moors and other Merchants from Carnatica and Visiapour use to fetch it in considerable Quantities. The Pepper of Calecut is better of Grain than those of Cananor and Cochin. This Commodity is generally cheaper at one Place than another. They buy it by the Canda, at the rate of 390 or 400 Fanams a Canda, a Fanam being worth about 10 Pence of our Money. In the Year 1640, the Price rose to 450 Fanams. The Pepper delights in shady Places, the Stem is weak like those of the Vines, and uses to be upheld by Stalks like our Hops: Each Stem bears commonly 6 Bunches, every one a foot long, resembling in colour to our Grapes before they are ripe. They are gathered green in October and November, and dry'd in the Sun upon Mats, when they turn black. Besides the Pepper and Cardamome, this Country produces also Ginger and Borborri of a Saffron Colour. Formerly these two Commodities us'd to be sold for 5 Fanams a Man: It affords also some Aloes, but in no great Quantity. Besides these, Malabar affords very few Commodities, except a few Bezoar-Stones,* found about Cananor, Salt-peter, Gummilacca (tho none of the best, being sold for a Fanam the Man) and abundance of Wax and Honey.

The whole Country is covered with innumerable Coco-Trees, besides such other Trees as generally grow in the East Indies. The Commodities carry'd to, and to be sold in Malabar, are Amson or Opium, much in use here, especially among the Nairos when they are to fight, to intoxicate their Brains. Ambergreece also is in great Esteem among the Malabars, and transported thither from the Maldive Islands. I have seen an Ounce of it sold at Cananor for six Reals. Malabar consumes also abundance of Cloves, Nutmegs and Altee, as also Allum, China-root, Lead, Tin, Brass, Copper, Brimstone, Cinnamon, Scarlet and Crimson Clothes, red Damasks, Benzoin, and coarse Porcelain.

The whole Coast of Malabar abounds in Fishes, and at Cochin they have most excellent Cods. Belly Provisions are also here in great Plenty, and bought at an easy rate; for they abound in Oxen, Swine and Poultry. The Coco-Trees furnish them with Drink, which if not used to excess, is tolerably wholesome. Out of this Liquor they distil their Arack, much courted by the common Soldiers and Seamen, to their great detriment.

The first is the King of Cananor, not in respect so much of his Power, but of his Situation next to Goa. His Residence is about three or four Leagues in the Country from the River of Bahapatan; the extent of his Kingdom is from Mantledely to Bergera; he maintains a considerable number of Musketeers and Archers, who are very expert in managing their Scymeters.

Cananor is a populous City, inhabited chiefly by rich Mahometan Merchants, who live without, yet under the Cannon of the Fortifications. They had formerly a considerable Traffick to Surat, Cambaja and the Red-Sea, whither they used to send yearly 25 or 30 Ships; but this Place is much decayed in Trade of late Years, and is likely to be worse.

About two Leagues to the South of Cananor, lies the City of Temmapatan, under the Jurisdiction of a Mahometan; it is strengthened to the Land side by a good Wall. The rebellious Pirates of Bergera do considerable Mischief to the King of Cananor and his Subjects, who, as well as the other Nations trading in these Seas, are forced to buy Passports of them for their Security. They used formerly to infest these Seas with 40 Frigates at a time, but are not so potent of late Years, since the Dutch have frightened the Portugueses.

Portugueses out of these Parts, since which time they have now and then attempted the Dutch, as they did with the Ship called the Dolphin, but got nothing but Blows. Their Chiefs are Mahometans, and the Soldiers partly Moors, partly Pagans.

Cananor lies about 40 Leagues to the North of Cochin, having a spacious and secure Harbour; the Country thereabouts abounding in Pepper, Cardamom, Ginger, Musk, Alans, Tamarinds, &c. Peter Alvares Capralis, Commander in Chief of the second Fleet sent by Emanuel King of Portugal into the Indies, after having given a Visit to the King of Cochin, and the Great Sammoryn, came also to Cananor, where being kindly received, the King sent an Ambassador along with him to the King of Portugal. Almeida did erect here (with the King's Consent) a strong Fort, for the Security of their Commerce; which being afterwards most vigorously attack'd by those of Calecut and Cranganor, was bravely defended by Laurence de Britto to his Immortal Honour. And upon this occasion it will not be beyond our purpose, to give you the Reasons which induced the Moors to enter upon this War, which was accompany'd with many most remarkable Actions.

The Portugueses having made themselves Masters at Sea, not only on the Coast of Aethiopia, but also of India and Arabia, would not permit the Inhabitants of these Countries to send out their Ships, without Passports obtain'd from them; for which purpose they kept a strict eye over all the Malabars, in a most peculiar manner. A certain Portuguese, Captain of a Man of War, having attack'd a Vessel of Cananor, which he supposed to have come from Calecut without a Pass; he caused the Master thereof, and another Person of Note on board her, to be fowled up in a Cloth, and so threw them overboard; which being done not far from Cananor, the dead Carcasses were cast ashore there. The Inhabitants knowing the Persons, and understanding their Fate, were so exasperated at the Portugueses, that they cry'd out for Vengeance, and assaulted the Fort: Almeida offer'd them Satisfaction, and cashier'd the Captain, but in vain, the Moors continuing obstinate, and resolving to revenge the Death of their Countrymen upon the Portugueses in the Fort.

Laurence de Britto being sensible that he must expect a formal Siege, resolv'd to stand the Brunt bravely, and sent his Messengers to Almeyda, to desire prompt Succours. In the mean time the King of Cananor was not idle, but having entrench'd himself near the Harbour, all along the Sea-side he erected certain Forts, to cut off the Communication betwixt the City and Castle: At the same time being reinforced by 20000 Men, sent from Calecut, they now resolv'd upon a formal Siege. There was a certain Spring betwixt the City and Castle, which being the only one whence the Portuguese Garrison could be supply'd with fresh Water, this occasion'd frequent and bloody Skirmishes, so that they were forc'd to purchase their Water with much effusion of Blood. Laurence Britto had with him in the Fort a certain Mathematician, named Thomas Ferdinand, by whose Advice they digg'd from the Fort underground to the Spring, and by Pipes convey'd it to the Place where they had occasion for it; so that after having supplied their own Wants, they stoop'd in the next Sally to the Spring, so that the Moors were forc'd to remove their Camp from thence, but they in the Fort enjoyed the Benefit thereof. They then began their Attack on the other side, and by the help of Sacks filled with Cotton, advancing to the Ditch, fill'd it with Faggots, and made a fierce Assault; but being bravely repuls'd by the Portuguese, and forc'd to retreat, these sally'd out upon them, and made a great Slaughter of the Barbarians.

These finding that Force was not likely to do their Business, resolv'd to reduce it by Famine, knowing that the Winter Seasons would cut off all hopes of Relief to the Besieged. On the other hand the Portuguese made many successful Sallies upon them; in one of which a Castilian, nam'd Guadalajara, charg'd with 150 Men a strong Body of the Enemy, killing above 300 of them upon the Spot, and taking some of their great Cannon. Soon after it happen'd unfortunately for the Portuguese, that a Fire arising in the Fort by the carelessness of a Slave, some part of their Magazines of Provisions was consum'd, whereby a great Scarcity being occasion'd in the Fort, many Negroes run over to the Enemy, and gave them a full account of the condition of the Garrison, who were now forc'd to feed upon Cats, Rats, Mice, &c. At last Heaven was pleas'd to commiserate the miserable State of the Portuguese, by sending a prodigious quantity of Locusts from the Sea (a thing not unfrequent in those Parts) which serv'd them both for Food and Refreshment. The Spring beginning to approach, when the Sammoryn fearing the Besieged might be shortly reliev'd by their Countrymen, redoubl'd his Fury against the Fort; and having sent them divers considerable Supplies of Men (which had increas'd his Army to 50000 Men) he resolv'd to try his utmost to reduce them by Force (the Portuguese being in the mean while supply'd with Provisions by a certain Prince of the Country, an Enemy to the Sammoryn) De Britto having receiv'd Intelligence that the Enemy were preparing for a general Assault, took care to guard all the Avenues both on the Sea and Land-side. The Moors assaulted the Portuguese with their utmost Fury, promising themselves an assur'd Victory, by reason they continually reliev'd their Men with fresh Troops; but the Portuguese receiv'd them so warmly, that after a smart Fight they put them to the Rout, and pursuing them with great Slaughter, the King of Cananor thought of it his best way to make Peace with the Portuguese.

Thus much of Cananor whilst in the Hands of the Portuguese; the next thing which falls under our Consideration is, how it came to fall into the Hands of the Hollanders. These having made themselves Masters of Cranganor, Cochin, and Coulang, sail'd 1663. from Cochin with a considerable Fleet, and a good Number of Land Forces, under the Command of Jacob Hustar, Peter du Pon, Henry van Rhede, and divers other brave Officers, for Cananor. Having landed their Men, and soon made themselves Masters of the City (which was without defence) they batter'd the Fort with their great Cannon, but without any great Success: the Bastions and Ditches on the Land side being cut out of the Rocks, and the Fortifications to the Sea side impregnable. However after a Siege of few days the Portuguese considering, that by the taking of Cochin all hopes of Relief were banish'd, they surrendred upon honourable Terms; and the Dutch having put a Garrison of 200 Men in the Fort, entr'd into a strict Alliance with the King of Cananor, 1664.

A Description of Calcut and Panane. The Arrival of Vasco de Gama. His Treaty with the Sammoryn. Panane fortified, besieg'd, and demolish'd by the Portugueses. Alliance betwixt the Dutch and the Sammoryn. The Portuguese Fort in Calcut attack'd by the Sammoryn, and defended by John de Lima.

THE second Kingdom of Malabar is that of Calcut under the Jurisdiction of the Sammoryn; it begins about three or four Leagues to the South of Bergera, and ends at the River Cranganor; its whole extent being in length 32 Leagues, and 20 in breadth. This King is the most Potent of all the Malabar Kings, having a considerable number of Nairos under his Jurisdiction, who are very expert both in handling the Bow and Fire-Arms. He has made considerable Encroachments upon his Neighbours of late years; the Revenues of his new Conquests amounting now to 300000 Fanams yearly. The Sammoryn who reign'd 1662. was when I saw him not above 50 years of Age, and yet much impair'd in his intellectual Parts by the excessive use of Opium, a Drug much in request among the Malabars.

In the Kingdom of the Sammoryn, and in most others along the Coast of Malabar, the Crown is not inherited by the Son of the King, but by him who is next or an to his Mother or Sister; for they looking upon that as the surer side, they have introduc'd this Custom to prevent the bastardizing of the Crown. Thus the King who reign'd 1642. was succeeded by his Uncle on the Mother's side, and he was to be succeeded by his Sister's Son. The Sammoryn monopolizes all the Pepper of the growth of his Country, none of his Subjects being allow'd to sell it to any but his Factors.

Betwixt Cananor and Calcut lies the Town of Panane, seated upon the Seashore: Here the Dutch came 1607. to treat with the Sammoryn, but he being then in the field against the Portugueses, the Admiral sent three Deputies to him with a Letter from Prince Mawice of Nassaw. In this place the Sammoryn kept his Residence at that time, when Don Vasco de Gama came into these parts. He having cast Anchor before Calcut, dispatch'd immediately a Messenger to the Sammoryn, to give notice of his arrival, and to let the King know that the Renown of his great Name having reach'd the Ears of the King of Portugal, his Majesty had intrusted him with a Letter, which he being desirous to deliver in Person, therefore desir'd leave to wait on his Majesty.

The Sammoryn being extremely pleas'd with the Complement, sent immediately certain Pilots to conduct the Portuguese Fleet into the Harbour of Capocate, where there was much better and safer Anchorage, from whence he was conducted with extraordinary Pomp to the Sammoryn.

For Don Gama being got ashore attended by eight Gentlemen richly attir'd, was receiv'd in the Sammoryn's Name by the Catual (or he that manages all Foreign Affairs) accompanied with a vast number of Guards, Hautboys, Drums and Litters, and thence carried through Calcut to Panane (where the Sammoryn then resided) under such a vast concourse of Spectators, that several were crowded to death. At Court Gama was welcom'd by the Caimales (or chief Courtiers) and afterwards by the High-Priest of the Brahmans dress'd in white Callico, who taking Gama by the hand conducted him to many spacious Apartments (at the Door of each whereof stood about ten Sentinels) into a spacious Hall, the Walls and Floor whereof were cover'd with rich Tapestry, and Carpets of Silk and Gold, the chief Men of the Kingdom sitting round the Hall upon Wooden Seats, artificially wrought one above another, like the Seats in an Amphitheater. The Sammoryn himself was seated (according to the Custom of the Country) upon an Alkatsy, or Carpet, dress'd in white fine Callico, brocado'd with Flowers of Gold, adorn'd with divers rows of Diamonds of great value: In his Ears he had stately Pendants of precious Stones, and on his Head a Cap (after their Country fashion) cover'd with Diamonds, Pearls, and other precious Stones; his bare Feet being likewise adorn'd with Rings set with all sorts of precious Stones.

Baldaus.

One of the King's Attendants offer'd his Majesty a Golden Vessel with Arak and Betel, which the Indians chew almost continually to preserve their Teeth and Gums, and treat their Guests with it as we do with Wine, strong Liquors being not much in use here. Gama after having paid his Obedysance to the King began thus:

"Emanuel, the present King of Portugal, my Master, mov'd by the Renown of the Greatness of your Majesty among the Kings of Malabar, has sent me with Credentials, to enter into a strict League with You, in order to settle a firm Correspondence and Commerce betwixt both Nations; which my Master would have been willing to have perform'd in Person, had not the vast distance of your Majesty's Dominions prov'd an invincible Obstacle to his generous Intentions. After which having deliver'd his Presents, the King answer'd by his Interpreter: "That he had not the least doubt of the good Intentions of his Brother Emanuel, King of Portugal, having such convincing Proofs thereof before his Eyes,

"by honouring him with so splendid a Legation notwithstanding the vast distance of their Countries; that he was willing to enter with them into a strict League and Amity, and that they should enjoy the benefit of a free Commerce in his Territories. Then the King having ask'd them several Particulars concerning their Voyage, Shipping and Traffick, order'd Gama to be conducted to the Lodgings prepar'd for his Reception.

The News of this Embassy soon came to the Ears of the Moorish Merchants in those parts, who fearing, not without reason, that the Portugueses would do them considerable Mischief in their Traffick, join'd with the Arabians trading in those parts, to hinder the Consummation of this Treaty; for which purpose having purchased the favour of many of the Courtiers by Money, they insinuated into the King, that Gama was no more than a great Pirate, who endeavour'd to get a footing in the King's Dominions, which in time might prove his ruin; whereas he might rest secure in his Dominions, by encouraging his Subjects in their Traffick with the exclusion of Foreigners. These Insinuations prov'd so effectual, that the Sammoryn began to give a favourable Ear to them, and had perhaps prov'd of very ill Consequence to Gama, had not a certain African, a Native of Tunis, who understood Portuguese, and had formerly convers'd with them, discover'd the danger to him, who thereupon without further delay got aboard his own Ships with his Attendants, and having weigh'd his Anchors kept at a greater distance from the Shore, whence he writ to the Sammoryn.

"That the ill Designs of the Moors against his Person being discover'd to him, he had thought fit to retire aboard, and to desire his Majesty not to be diverted from his Promise by their false Insinuations, assuring him that he would reap much more benefit by the Friendship of the King of Portugal than by the Moors and Arabians. The Sammoryn promis'd the Messenger to make a strict Enquiry after and to punish severely these Offenders, who had infringed the Law of Nations; and in his Letter to the King of Portugal assures him, "That the arrival of the Portuguese in his Dominions was very acceptable to him, provided they might regulate themselves so, as not to give any occasion of disturbance there, and that the League he was entering upon with his Majesty, might not prove prejudicial to the good Correspondence he had hitherto entertain'd with divers other Nations. Gama having receiv'd this Letter, set sail for the Isle of Anchediva, where having furnish'd himself with fresh Provisions, he return'd to Portugal, to give an account of his Transactions to King Emanuel. The famous Vasco de Gama died 1524. being the first who discover'd the Passage into the East-Indies by the Cape of Good Hope.

And upon this occasion I can't pass by in silence what is mention'd by Ferdinand * hist. Ind. Lopes de Castanbeda *, viz. That Gama with some of his Retinue being at Calecut, and entering into one of the Pagan Temples, paid their Reverence to the Images, as taking them for the same they had left in their own Churches in Portugal; a convincing Proof that Superstition and Idolatry very near resemble one another.

Panane being well fortified by the Sammoryn with two Forts, erected on both sides of the Entrance of the Harbour, the Portuguese notwithstanding this resolve to attempt it. They no sooner appear'd in sight of the Harbour, but a certain number of the Mahometans associated themselves in one of the Pagodes, and with direful Execrations engag'd to one another to defend the City, or die in the Attempt. Tristan d'Acunba the Portuguese General detach'd a certain Body of his best Troops under the Command of Laurence and Nomius in small Gallies, to lead the Van, being to be follow'd by the great Ships: These enter'd the Harbour with unpeakable Bravery, notwithstanding the Enemies Fire, who sent their great and small Shot very thick upon them from both sides of the Shore, but without any considerable effect, most of their Bullets passing over their Heads, because the Soldiers kept close lying upon their Bellies in the Gallies. The Enemy seeing them enter'd the Harbour, leap'd in whole Troops into the Water, attacking them with incredible Fury in hopes of boarding them: but the Portuguese stood to it with so much Resolution, that at last they forced the Indians to give way; and pursuing them to the Shore, made themselves Masters of the two Forts, and set fire to all the Ships in the Harbour, which were richly laden, as also to the City. In this Action a certain Portuguese Ensign with his Soldiers did Wonders, and the Mahometans fought like Lions; but one of their Commanders, a Fellow of a huge bulk, being slain by Laurence, the rest betook themselves to their heels. The Indians lost 500 Men in this Engagement, and the Portuguese about 22. After which Almeyda and Acunba sail'd to Commor, from whence the first steer'd his course to Cochin, and the second for Portugal. About Panane grows besides Cardamom, the best Pepper, and is sold here at a very reasonable rate.

Thus much of Panane: we will now proceed to give you an account of Calecut, the Capital City of Malabar, and the Residence of the Sammoryn, where Steven van der Haeghe the then Dutch Admiral, in 1604. enter'd into a strict League with that King, who granted a free Commerce to the Dutch throughout all his Dominions. Many years before the Portuguese had obtain'd the same liberty of the Sammoryn, who had assign'd them certain Habitations in that City; so that they began to flourish in their Commerce, and the Portuguese Priests were very successful in the Conversion of many of the Pagans. This exasperated the Moors and Arabians, who caused the Nurots (always greedy after Prey) to fall to the number of 4000 upon the Portuguese (not above 70 strong) in their Factory, who were almost all massacred by them.

Pedro Alvares Capral the Portuguese General in those parts, being inform'd of this barbarous Attempt, and finding that the Sammoryn had not been altogether ignorant of the matter, to revenge the Death of his Country-men, burnt ten of their Merchant Ships richly laden, batter'd the City with his Great Guns, and kill'd them above 600 Men. The same Treatment these Barbarians receiv'd afterwards from Meneses. We will not in this place pretend to give a particular account of all the Differences and War-like Exploits of the Portuguese here, and of the famous Actions of Albuquerque, Henry Meneses, James Sylveira, Capral, &c. we will only mention in this place, that the Portuguese having found means to erect a Fort at Calicut by the Connivance of Nambedar the old Sammoryn's Sister's Son (who favour'd the Portuguese) the Kings of Cananor and Cochin were so nettled thereat, that they did not desist till they had engag'd the Sam-

moryn to attack it.

It being then in the Winter-season when the Portuguese could scarce expect any Relief, and the Fort provided with a Garrison of 300 Men only, they were driven to great Distress; a certain Renegado, a Native of Sicily, who had serv'd as an Engineer in the Siege of Rhodes, directing the Moors in their Attacks, Hereupon John de Lima Governor of the Fort did all he could to defend himself, in hopes of the approaching Spring; and having extended his Fortifications (by means of great Casks fill'd with Sand) to the Shore, sent notice of his distressed state to Henry de Meneses, who without delay sent 140 Land Soldiers aboard two Ships commanded by Christopher Jusart and Edward Fonseca to his Relief: but the last being becalm'd near the Shore of Calicut, and the other not having above 80 Men aboard, John Lima did not think it advisable to land with so small a number, as being not sufficient to break through the Enemies Works into the Fort. However Jusart being resolv'd to venture at all, landed in a Boat with 30 Volunteers, who fought their way through the Enemy, and with the loss of four of their Men reach'd the Fort, which in the mean while was assaulted by the Barbarians, who were so warmly receiv'd by the Portuguese Grandeers, that they were glad to retire in great Confusion to their Works.

Soon after Fonseca arriving with his Ship, convey'd a Letter fastned to an Arrow into the Fort, intimating his arrival, and desiring his Instructions how to serve him. Lima sent an Answer, that he thought it not advisable to expose himself and his Men to the same danger as Jusart had done, but that he should return with all speed to Meneses, and solicit a Succour of 500 Men, with a good quantity of Ammunition, where-with he did not question but to defend the place. Fonseca being return'd to Cochin, and having deliver'd his Message to Meneses, he dispatch'd immediately Anthony de Sylva with some Ships, for the relief of the besieged, whilst he was making all necessary Preparations to follow with a much greater Force in the Spring.

The Sammoryn fearing the worst, left no stone unturn'd to oblige the Besieged to a Surrender before that time: and the before-mention'd Sicilian having done his utmost Endeavours with Mines, Mortars and Battering Pieces, but in vain, he resolv'd to reduce them by Famine, which he might questionless have effected, had he had only a small Squadron of Ships to block up the Harbour. But the Besieged being from time to time supply'd with Provisions and Refreshments by small Boats which enter'd in the night time, when Meneses arriving with 1500 Portuguese, landed his Men, and having put the Malabars to the rout, with the loss of 3000 Men on their side (among whom was also the Sicilian) the Sammoryn was so terrified thereat, that to prevent his Country from being ravag'd by the Portuguese, he clap'd up a sudden Peace: And the Portuguese judging the Fort too chargeable to keep, did afterwards demolish it of their own accord; in the springing up of which many Malabars (greedy after Prey) were blown up into the Air.

Notwithstanding this Peace, the Sammoryn let slip no opportunity of doing mischief to the Portuguese; being encourag'd thereunto by the Differences arisen betwixt the Portuguese Generals, as betwixt Meneses and Gama, and Sampajo and Mascarenhas, about the Viceroyship, which had almost prov'd fatal to the Portuguese Affairs in the Indies. This is evident from a Letter writ by Christopher de Sousa to the said Sampajo, in which he represents to him the danger unto which the Portuguese (a small number in comparison of their Enemies) were exposed daily in the Indies, by his Difference with Mascarenhas about the Viceroyalty, exhorting him not to have recourse to Violence, but the Arbitration of such Persons as were competent Judges; telling him, that in case of refusal he must not expect to be obey'd by him. Which coming from a Person noted for his Courage, Liberality and Generosity in these parts, did not a little abate the Haughtiness of Sampajo: and Mascarenhas returning into Portugal, was favourably receiv'd by the King, who having recall'd Sampajo, oblig'd him to give full satisfaction to Mascarenhas for the Imprisonments, Affronts and Damages he had sustain'd upon that account. For the more ample Relation of which we refer our selves to the Portuguese Historians. From Calecut we will turn towards Cranganor, in order to give you a Description of its Origin and Situation, and by what means it fell into the Hands of the Hollanders.

divers times; for in the beginning they had only a Tower, which they afterwards strengthen'd by a Wall, and at last enclosed the whole by regular Fortifications of Earth. The King of Cranganor keeps his Residence not far from Cranganor: He that then reigned, was a young, lusty, and tall Person, a declared Enemy of the Portugueses, as well as the Sammorin.

In the Year 1661. after the Dutch had made themselves masters of Coulang, and by strengthening the same with Fortifications, and a good Garison, had secured the South side, they thought it expedient (before they attempted the Conquest of Cochin) to get also a firm footing on the North side at Cranganor, especially since they fear'd they might be obliged to pass the Winter thereabouts, it being in December. According we land'd our Men, but found (beyond expectation) the Fortifications in such a state, as not to be attack'd without great Cannon. Above 14 days being spent in raising Batteries, making of Trenches and Breaches, but to no great purpose, and the approaching Season obliging us to carry on the Siege with all possible expedition, it was resolv'd (upon intelligence given by a certain Person, concerning the Condition of the Place) to attack the Point next to the River, on Sunday Jan. 15. 1662. very early in the morning.

The Signal being given accordingly by a Cannon Shot, our Forces advanced, under the favour of the Smoke of our great Artillery, to the Bulwork, which they took with Sword in hand, chasing the Portugueses thence to the Jesuits Church. In this Action the Dutch Captains, Poolmann, Schulenburg, and Simon Werding, as also Lieutenant Silvester, acquired immortal Honour, being slain as they were mounting the Breach, with 78 common Soldiers, and many wounded.

On the Portuguese side above 200 Christians were killed, besides a great number of the Nairos; and among the rest Urbano Fialho Fereira the Governour of the Place.

The Portugueses then hung out a white Flag, desiring a Parley upon reasonable Conditions; which were granted them, and by virtue thereof the Portuguese Soldiers transported into Europe. During this Siege we found the Nights very cold, tho the Days were almost insupportable by the excessive Heat. And after the Conquest thereof, being ordered to preach the Thanksgiving Sermon in one of the Parish Churches (of which there were 7)

I pitch'd upon a Text in Deuteronom. Chap. 23. v. 14.

The Hollanders judging it at that time convenient to surrender the Place into the King's hands, the same was done accordingly; but regain'd and reforcify'd the same afterwards, when they found themselves engag'd in a War with the Sammorin, who made frequent Excursions as far as Cochin; a thing so common among these Barbarians, that no settled Peace can be expected with so many Kings.

And upon this Occasion I can't sufficiently commiserate the Condition of the Inhabitants of the Countries about Cranganor and Cochin, who being guided by ignorant Romish Priests, are in great danger of falling by degrees into Paganism again; the District of Cranganor having formerly been so considerable for the great numbers of Christians of St. Thomas (as they are call'd) inhabiting there, that a Portuguese Archbishop had his Residence in that City. It is the general Opinion here, that St. Thomas the Apostle coming first to Socotora, an Isle at the entrance into the Red Sea, there preached the Gospel with good success; whence coming to Cranganor and Coulang, he converted a great number to the Christian Faith. From hence taking his way thro Coromandel into China, he returned to Maliapour, where he suffered Martyrdom. But of these Christians of St. Thomas, we shall have occasion to say more hereafter, our present purpose being to say something of the State of Affairs in the Portuguese Times.

First then, at our arrival at Cranganor, we found there a Noble College of the Jesuits, with a stately Library belonging to it, the Structure it self being not inferior to many in Europe. Besides the Church of the Franciscans, they had a stately Cathedral, adorn'd with the Tombs of the Archbishops of this Place. Without the Wall of Cranganor was the College of Chanotte, famous for the resort of the Christians of St. Thomas hither, who exercised their Religious Worship here in the Syriac Language; and having erected a School for the Education of their Youth, had several Masters and Priests of their own: Of which more in the Description of Cochin.

This Language being in high esteem among the Natives here, and used sometimes also by our Saviour and his Apostles; not only a Printing House, but a Seminary has been erected at Rome for the cultivating thereof, and propagating the same among the Youth.

Thus 1622. a Syriac Dictionary was published at Rome, by John Baptist Ferrarius, a Native of Siena; and the Syriac Grammar of Georgius Ameira, a famous Divine and Philosopher of the College of the Maronites, born near the Mount Libanus. And 1628. Abrahamus Eccebelensis obliged the World with his Introduction to the Fundamentals of the Christian Faith, in the same Language. Whence it is evident that the Roman Clergy exceed ours, in their zeal of propagating the Roman Religion; tho on the other hand it must be allow'd that their Plenty furnishes them with sufficient opportunities of performing those things which the Reformed Ministers for want of Means are forced to let alone. I have seen divers Books printed with the Portuguese Characters, in the Malabar Language, for the instruction of the Paruas, one whereof I keep by me to this day; tho at the time time I must confess, that in case we should follow the same Method, in printing with our Characters, though in their Language, it would not have the same effect, they being much bigotted both to the Roman Clergy and the Portuguese Language; so that I have met with some of the Paruas who spoke as good Portuguese as they do at Lisbon. For the rest, the Products of Cranganor are the same as in the other Parts of Malabar, except that now and then they meet with some Gold Dust, but in no great quantity.

Between the River of Cranganor and that of Cochim, lies the Isle of Vaypin. When the Dutch, in Feb. 1662. besieged Cochim the first time, they erected a Fort upon the Bank of the River, from whence they batter'd the Place, the River being there not above a Musket-shot over: This Fort was call'd the New Orange, and here we found a goodly Edifice, formerly belonging to the Bishop of the Place; as also a very large Church, in which I preach'd the 29th of Jan. 1662. The Isle it self is tolerably fertile, under the Jurisdiction of the King of Cochim, whose Dominions extend from the River of Cranganor, six Leagues South of Cochim, the whole length being about ten Leagues. The Kings of Cochim have always kept firm to the Portuguese Interest, ever since Triumpara, being conquered by the King of Calicut, sought for refuge among the Portugueses, who restored him to his Kingdom, tho he afterward prefer'd a private Life before his Crown.

Cochim is a very antient City, but was not fortify'd till 1504. in the time of the two Albuquerque, who set sail 1503. from Belem in Portugal; and after many smart Engagements with the Sammoryn, Alphonfus return'd into Portugal, where he obtain'd the Surname of The Great, his Actions being describ'd in a peculiar Treatise publish'd at Lisbon 1576. by John Eatreira. Soon after the Portugueses built a Church there, and enter'd into a League with the Sammoryn, and the Fortifications were considerably augmented by Edward Pateco, and a Wall erected by L. Vasco towards the Sea side. In some Years after this City began to increase so considerably, that it might compare with some of the best in Europe, its length being near two English Miles.

At first the Christians and Mahometans lived promiscuously in the City; which occasioning frequent Disturbances, Albuquerque obtain'd from the King Naubadora, that each should have their peculiar Quarters assign'd them to live in. In and about the City of Cochim, lived also formerly some Jews, who even now have a Synagogue allow'd them without the Fortifications; they are neither White nor Brown, but quite Black. The Portuguese Histories mention, that at a certain time, certain blasphemous Papers against our Saviour, with some severe Reflections against the Jesuit Goncalous Pereira (who afterwards suffer'd Martyrdom at Monopatapa) being found in a Box set in the Great Church for the gathering of Alms; and the same being supposed to be laid there by some European Jews, who now and then used to resort thither privately, this gave occasion to introduce the Inquisition into Goa.

Cochim may for its bigness justly challenge the second Place after Goa among the Indian Cities formerly in the possession of the Portugueses, tho at present it is not near so big as the City of Batavia. Its situation lies at 10 Degrees of North Latitude, bordering to the West upon the Sea, and the River has about 17 or 18 fathom Water at high Tide; but its Entrance is very difficult in the Winter-time, being commonly choak'd up by the Sands which are carried thither by the Stream in the Winter Season, which however are again removed by the violence of the Current in the Summer-time.

About Cochim, as well as all along the Coast of Malabar, they have every day two sorts of Winds, viz. The Land Wind beginning in the Evening, and the Sea Wind at ten in the Morning. Cochim is not accounted so wholesome as most of the other places seated on the Coast of Malabar, by reason of its situation in low and marshy Grounds; but abounds both in Fish and Flesh, and its situation is extremely delightful, by reason of the many Brooks, and adjacent little Islands in the River, wherein many of the Portugueses have built themselves very pleasant Summer Seats.

Baldeis.

Christians and Mahometans lived first together.

Cochim is very wholesome, but plentiful.

The River runs on the back-side of the best Houses of the City, where they catch fish with Calling-nets, at which the Chinenses inhabiting here are very dexterous. Formerly this City could boast of divers stately Churches, since demolished by the Dutch. The Jesuits Church and College facing the Sea-shore, had a lofty Steeple and a most excellent set of Bells: The College, which was 3 Stories high, and contained about 20 or 30 Apartments, being surrounded with a strong Wall. The Cathedral was also a noble piece of Architecture, adorn'd with two rows of Pillars, and a lofty Steeple.

Cochin.

The Church and Convent of the Austrian Friars stood upon the Bank of the River; and the Church of the Dominicans with their Convents, were two rare pieces of Workmanship, beautified with a double row of Pillars of most excellent Stone. The Church and Monastery of the Franciscans is the only that remains standing as yet, but has no more than two Brothers left, who are allow'd the free exercise of their Religion.

The best Houses of Cochin have their Court-yards and Gardens belonging to them, enclosed with very thin, yet strong and high Walls, so that the Neighbours can't overlook one another. The situation of the City is much more in length than breadth, without any Channels in the Streets; however that end towards the Sea-side is much broader than the other, as may be seen by the annexed Draught, which also representing an exact view of its Fortifications, we will refer the Reader to it.

The Mala-

The Malabar Cochin is seated somewhat lower, and built after the Indian fashion, with very broad Streets: it is very populous, and the Royal Palace is built with Bricks and Mortar after the European way, with Apartments very spacious and lofty; near which stands the Pagode, with a very large Cistern adjoining to it.

Anno 1662, in Febr. at the time of our first landing before Cochin, the Nairos inhabiting hereabouts (notwithstanding we positively declar'd we were no Enemies of the King, but only of the Portugueses) assembled in great Numbers in this Palace and the Pagode, and from thence assaulted our Forces, which obliged us to drive them from thence, with the slaughter of 400 on their side, they fighting very desperately, by reason they had beforehand intoxicated their Brains with very large Doses of Opium. The old Queen of Cochin being taken Prisoner in the Fray, by Henry van Rhede an Ensign, was kept in safe custody for some time after.

Afterwards we began to form our Attacks against the Portuguese Cochin in three several places; that on the Land-side near the Church of St. Thomas (which served us for a Chappel and Hospital) being commanded by the General in Person; that along the Sea-side by Tsbrand Gotsken; and the third near the River by the Commodore Roothaus. After some time spent in making of Trenches, and raising of Batteries, it was thought expedient to surprize the Enemy on that side near the River. The first Sunday in February being appointed for that purpose, Capt. Peter Wajh was ordered to begin the Assault with a certain Detachment at four a Clock in the Morning: but it being after Sun-rising before they could reach the Place, the Portugueses took the Alarm; and being timely sustain'd by fresh Troops drawn thither by the ringing of the Bells, gave such a warm Reception to the Hollanders, that after a most obstinate Engagement, they were forced to found the Retreat, with the loss of divers of their best Men, and among them the beforemention'd Captain, who was kill'd by two Musket Bullets. The General Ryetus van Goens, and the Commodore Roothaus, were also both in great danger, the first receiving several Shots through his Hair, the last being likely to have been cast into a deep Well.

Notwithstanding this Disappointment, the Trenches were carried on with all imaginable speed, tho not without great difficulty, by reason of the marshy Grounds, which cost us a good number of Men, more than we could conveniently spare at that time, when our Forces were not a little weakened before; we having left at least 300 sick and wounded at Coulang, and a considerable Garrison at Cranganor, and in the Fort of New-Orange on the Point of the Isle of Paypin. We continued however to batter the Town incessantly with our great Artillery, and to omit nothing we thought might annoy the Enemy; till a whole Month being spent in this Siege, and the Number of our Men reduced to 1400. we began to consider of the approaching Winter, the uncertainty of the Event, and the want of several things necessary to carry on a long Siege; so that after mature deliberation, it was judged necessary to raise the Siege, and delay the Execution thereof to a more convenient time.

Accordingly our Cannon, Ammunition and other Moveables being sent aboard upon Floats, the General made a safe Retreat in the Night-time without beat of Drum; and the better to cover his Design, had gain'd a certain Jew by Money to make the Clock of S. Thomas Church strike as usually: to which also contributed not a little the ingenious Invention of a certain Gunner, named Henry Boerdorp, who went the Rounds all Night long, and calling Who is there? Stand, and that in a different Tone, deceived the Enemies Centinels, that they had not the least Suspicion of our Retreat; so that all the Dutch Forces got safely aboard, without the Loss of as much as one Man, except a Negro Slave. When the Dutch Soldiers saw the Artillery and Baggage going on board, they were not a little dissatisfied thereat, but being appeased by Commodore Rothous, who told them that it was done only to secure them against the Enemy, who intended to make a general Sally, they were afterwards glad to follow their Officers Directions in the Retreat.

It was almost noon before the Portuguese were convinced of our Retreat, as suspecting the same to be only a Stratagem to draw them into an Ambush; but when they saw us weigh our Anchors, they express'd their Joy with the Discharge of their Cannon round the Walls. The Dutch General having left a sufficient Garison for the guard of the Fort of New-Orange, another at Cvanganor under the Command of Captain Perspreet, and constituted Peter du Pon, a brave Soldier, Commander in Chief of all the Forces in those Parts, sail'd to Coulang; which Place being likewise provided with all Necessaries, he took his course towards Batavia, with an Intention to give Cochin a second Visit in the Spring, which he did accordingly with better Success.

The City made more compact, and strengthened with regular Fortifications. The Roman Catholick Bishop of the Christians of S. Thomas comes to Cochin. His Original Bull of Indulgence.*

BY this time we were sufficiently inform'd of the miserable State of our Countrymen in the Isle of Formosa (which the Portuguese would often upbraid us with during the Siege) a compleat account whereof would be perhaps too tedious, and look'd upon as beyond our purpose; therefore I will only for the Satisfaction of the Reader, insert a Letter written by the Reverend Mr. John Kruyf, Minister of the Gospel there in the Fort of Zealand, and afterwards at Negapatan on the Coast of Coromandel (where he died) and directed to me, and Mr. *A. To give you a particular Account of the late miserable State of the Isle of Formosa, is both beyond the compass of a Letter, and my present Strength; and tho I tremble at the very Thoughts of it, yet will I mention the chiefest Transactions: The first Assault of the furious Chineses was made against the Castle of Sacam, whereabouts, after they had cut some of our Soldiers in pieces, they took my eldest Son and my Wife's Brother, who, tho very

The next day our Ship called the Hector being engag'd with a vast Number of Chinese Jones, was blown up, and in her some of our best Soldiers, among whom was also my Father-in-law Thomas Pedel. The Fort of Sacam being, after a defence of a few days, forc'd to surrender for want of fresh Water and other Necessaries, the Ministers, Officers, Schoolmasters, Soldiers, and in general all the Inhabitants of the flat Country, were forc'd to make the best Terms they could for themselves. The Squadron of Ships commanded by Mr. Kaum, (after it had for a small time rejoic'd our drooping Spirits) being dispers'd by Tempests, and the Ship the Ork forc'd upon the Sands, and taken by the Enemy, the same was neither seen nor heard of in five or six Weeks after. To be short, the whole Country being over-run by the Chinese, our Soldiers every where routed, Koukerken laid in Ashes in sight of our Fort: Such of our Contrymen as had not secur'd themselves by a timely Flight, fell into the Hands of the merciless Enemies, who sacrific'd the Reverend Mr. Hambroek with his Son, and divers others in Tilocen, to their Fury: As also Mr. Peter Mus Minister of Favorlang, and Mr. Arnold Winsheim Minister of Sinkan, who had their Heads cut off, and their Wives with many others carried into Slavery. By this there being great want of Necessaries in the Forts, the Soldiers died daily of the Bloody Flux, Scurvy and Dropsy; so that in nine Months time, having lost above 1600 Men, both by Famine and the Sword, we were forc'd (for the Preservation of our Lives) to capitulate. Who can without Tears remember the unexpected Destruction and Ruin of so many Families, and of near 30 Ministers, partly in their Lives, partly in their Fortunes (among whom I had my share, having lost all that I had gather'd in 15 Years time) the Loss and Dishonour of the Company, with the unspeakable Miseries, among which I reckon mine none of the least, as the Loss of three Parts of my Library? All which we ought to look upon as the effects of God's just Indignation, on account of our manifold Sins. I have no more to add, than that it is none of the least among my other Afflictions, that Matters are

Your affectionate Colleague
Negapatnam 13.
Octob. 1652. to serve you,

Joannes Krug

But it is time to leave the miserable in the Isle of Formosa, and to come to the second Siege of Cochin. Anno 1662. in September, Jacob Hugart late Governour of the Molukes and Amboyna, and afterwards residing in the same Quality in Ceylon and Malabar, set sail from Batavia with a good Squadron of Ships, Isbrand Goske Commodore, for Cochin, leaving Mr. Ryklof Van Goums at Batavia by reason of his Sicknets, but follow'd soon after. In November we began to batter the place most furiously, being willing to reduce it before we could receive the News of a Peace concluded betwixt us and the Portugueses (which we expected every day) and having the last year receiv'd certain Instructions from the Governours of our Company to allow free Commerce, and Liberty of Religion to all such Portugueses as would submit to us, we propos'd to the Belieged that they should be left in full possession of their Churches (except one) provided they would receive a Dutch Garrison. This was not ill relish'd by some, but Ignatio Sernento the Governour refusing to comply with it, we resolv'd to lose no time to reduce the place by force.

Accordingly it was resolv'd in a Council of War to assault it on the River side at low Tide; and to render the Passage the less difficult, a great number of Sacks fill'd with Sand were prepar'd to be thrown into the River. But this Attempt prov'd unsuccessful, our People meeting with so hot a Reception there, that they were glad to think of retreating. But as we had no time to lose, so we soon pitch'd upon another, which was carried on with better success: For that brave Commander Peter du Pon being order'd to assault the Bastion on the Bank of the River, he executed his Commission so successfully, that (tho not without great Resistance) he broke through the Enemy, and maintain'd himself in some of the adjacent Houses against the whole Force of the Enemy, till being seconded by fresh Troops of his own, they put out the white Flag, and sent their Deputies puties to capitulate upon the following Conditions.

The Franciscans to enjoy the free Exercise of their Religion under the Protection of the States: The Clergy to have free liberty to carry away all their Images, Church-Ornaments, Relicks, &c. and what else belong'd to them. The Governor Ignatio Sernento and his Family, together with all the Officers, to be receiv'd civilly by the Dutch. The Garrison to march out with Ensigns display'd, Drums beating, with Bag and Baggage, and to be conducted in Dutch Vessels to Goa, except such of the Soldiers as Baldaw, were in immediate Pay of his Majesty, who were to be transported to Portugal. Such of the Inhabitants as were willing to stay behind under the Jurisdiction of the Dutch Company, to have free liberty to remain in their full Possessions, and that care should be taken of the sick and wounded. All which was punctually perform'd, and the Keys of the City deliver'd to our General, who soon after enter'd victorious on Horse-back in great Pomp, and order'd a solemn Thanksgiving to be made in the great Church lately belonging to the Jesuits, for the Conquest of so important a place, which was done accordingly.

Being thus become entirely Masters of Cochim, after it had been 150 years in the possession of the Portugueses; the Dutch General made it his chiefest care to issue his Orders not to molest the Portugueses, but to observe punctually the Articles of the Capitulation. The next was to demolish a certain part of the Houses and Churches of the City, in order to draw it into a more narrow compass, and to render the Fortifications the more regular, the former requiring too great a number of Men to defend them. The King of Cochim being crown'd, and divers of the neighbouring petty Princes oblig'd to become his Tributaries, several strict Alliances were made with the neighbouring Kings to the South of the River of Cochim.

About the same time Joseph de Sancta Maria, of the Order of the Discalceated Carmelites, sent by the Pope in quality of a Bishop among the Christians of St. Thomas, came (in his return into Europe) to Cochim to salute our General, and was

Concerning the Christians of St. Thomas we shall speak more at large anon.

But to return to the Bishop, Brother Joseph de Sancta Maria, he was sent from Rome with a Bull of Indulgence, granted Jan. 18. 1660. in the fifth year of Alexander VII. Pope of Rome, subscribed by the Cardinal Barberini, Joseph Caetanus, &c. the true Original whereof being in my Custody, and containing many things tending to the Elucidation of the Affairs of the Christians of St. Thomas (of whom we are to treat immediately after) we thought it not beyond our scope to oblige the Reader with the Translation thereof.

The Voyages, Miracles and Death of St. Thomas the Apostle. The Doctrine of the Christians of St. Thomas; of the Greek, Syriac, and Georgian Christians; of the Russians, Nestorians, Jacobites, Coptes, Abyssines, Armenians, Maronites. A good Correspondence betwixt the Eastern and Western Churches very necessary.

IT is the general opinion that the Apostle St. Thomas did come into the Indies, but especially into these parts:
 His first coming was in the Isle of Soco-
tora (at the entrance of the Red Sea) where he converted many to the Christian Faith; it being certain that to this day many of the Inhabitants stile themselves Christians of St. Thomas, which also induced Xaverius to touch at that Island in his Voyage to the Indies; and, if we may credit John de Lucena, would fain have staid there. From Socotora St. Thomas sail'd to Cranganor, whence, after he had converted many to the Christian Faith, he went to Coulang. Upon the Rocks near the Sea-shore of Coulang stands a Stone Pillar *, erected there (as the Inhabitants report) by St. Thomas. From Coulang crossing the high and dangerous Mountains he travell'd into Coromandel, where having likewise planted the Seed of the Gospel he sail'd into China, where, after he had preach'd the Gospel to the Infidels, he return'd to Maliapour, to confirm some of the new converted Christians in their Faith, and there suffer'd Martyrdom.

His several Voyages.

* I saw

Maliapour (afterwards call'd St. Tho- mas by the Portugueses) was at that time a famous City in Coromandel, where this holy Man would fain have built a Church, but was prevented by the Brahmans, and their King Sagam. They relate a very miraculous thing of St. Thomas. The Sea having cast up a Tree of a vast bulk, the King, who was desirous to use it in the building of a House, had employ'd a great number of Men and Elephants to bring it from thence, but in vain, the Wood being not to be moved from the place: St. Thomas standing by told the King, that if he would present him with the piece of Wood, he would carry it alone to the City (then ten Leagues from the Shore): The King looking upon him as a mad Man, told him he should do with it what he pleas'd; whereupon St. Thomas tying his Girdle to one of the Branches, and making the sign of the Cross, drew the whole Tree after him with a great deal of ease, follow'd by a vast number of People; and coming to the City erected a Stone Cross there, telling the Spectators, that whenever the Sea should rise up to that place, God would send certain Strangers from far distant places to settle the Christian Religion here, which the Portugueses would have to be verified at the time of their coming there.

Baldau. the Conversion of a vast number of Pagans, arriv'd to a great Authority among them; this so incens'd the Brabmans, that one of them kill'd him with his Launce upon a Hill near the City, where he us'd to perform his Devotion. They had before that accus'd him falsely of a Murder, but St. Thomas having resuscitated the Child from Death, he declar'd his own Father to have been his Murderer; which had so powerful an influence upon many of the chief Men of the Country, and the King himself, that they receiv'd Baptism. Some say that St. Thomas was kill'd at Calaminba, by mistaking this word for Calurmina, i. e. upon a Stone; Calur signifying in the Malabar Language a Stone, and mina upon; St. Thomas having been slain upon a Rock: whence it is, that if to this day you ask one of the Christians of St. Thomas, where St. Thomas suffer'd Martyrdom, they will tell you, Maliapour Calurmina, at Maliapour upon the Stone, where he was ston'd, and at last run through with a Launce.

His Death.

They tell you of a certain Cross made by his Blood, and a vast number of Miracles wrought by it, for which I will refer my self to Lucena, Oforius, and Baronius *. The Christians of St. Thomas teach their Children in their very Infancy these following Heads concerning St. Thomas. St. Thomas was the Man who first abolish'd Idolatry; it was he who converted the Chineses and Negroes; it was he that baptiz'd them, and taught them the true Faith, and to profess God the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost. They also tell you, that he converted the three Kings of the East (one of whom, call'd Perumal, they say was King of Ceylon) and that St. Thomas's Body was transferr'd from Maliapour to Edessa in Mesopotamia.

But setting aside all these uncertain Relations, the most secure way (founded upon no small Probabilities) is, that St. Thomas was actually in these Parts, and converted a great number of People to the Christian Faith; which contradicts that bold Assertion of the Roman Catholics, that all Nations have receiv'd the Christian Faith from Rome; it being beyond all question, that at the time of the arrival of the Portugueses in those parts under de Gama, the Inhabitants declar'd themselves to be Christians from most antient times, desiring the Protection of the King of Portugal against the Pagans, and in token of their Obedience presented him with a Silver Scepter gilt. Nay, the Church of Rome can't boast of that Honour, even of all parts of Europe it self; since the Kings of England and Scotland, Lucius and Donaldu, embrac'd the Christian Faith 124 years after our Saviour's Nativity, without having the least Communication with the Church of Rome; whence Tertullian rightly says, Britannorum loca Romanis inaccessa Christo subdita sunt. And Cyprianus says to the same purpose, 240 years after the Birth of Christ, That the Vine-branches of the Gospel have spread themselves beyond the extent of the Roman Empire. Thus Dorotheus Bishop of Tyru under the Reign of Constantine the Great, positively asserts, That the Chamberlain of Queen Candace did introduce the Gospel into Ceylon and the Happy Arabia.

The Christians of St. Thomas remain'd many years in the Primitive Purity of the Christian Religion, till in time, for want of good Pastors, they began to be infected with some Pagan Superstitions, and were in most imminent danger of losing the Remnants of the Truths of the Gospel, had not Martome a Native of Syria, taken care of the decay'd state of Christianity in these parts; and being seconded in his Endeavours by divers other Teachers out of Syria, Babylonia, Chaldea and Egypt, the Syriac Language was introduc'd, and the former Purity of Religion restor'd among them, till in time the Nestorian Heresy got footing in Syria, and was from thence transplanted hither, as is sufficiently evident from the Records of the Malabars.

This Martome (signifying in their Language as much as Lord Thomas) being much respected by the Kings of Cranganor and Coulang, and by the Christians of St. Thomas in general, was declar'd by them their Head: and the Bishops of Cochin, Coulang and Cranganor, being afterwards sent for out of Syria, these introduc'd the Syriac Language, and acknowledg'd the Patriarch of Alexandria or Babylon for their Metropolitan, till at last they submitted to the Pope of Rome: For the Supreme Ecclesiastical Head of the Indians (at the perswasion of the Portugueses) did 1562. acknowledg'd the Supremacy of the Pope of Rome, provided they might continue in the former free Exercise of their Religion, which was confirm'd in the Synod of Goa, where they would not consent to the least Alteration of any of their Church-Ceremonies. But after the Decease of this Bishop, his Successor 1599, embrac'd with the rest of his Clergy in another Synod, the Roman Faith.

The Christians of St. Thomas inhabit for the most part on the Coast of Malabar, about Cranganor, Cochin, Coulang, Travancor, and some in Coromandel, amounting in all to a considerable Number. Before they were united with the Church of Rome, they were infected with the Nestorian Heresy, as some are still to this day; whence it is that they deny the two Natures in the Person of Christ. This Nestorius was Bishop of Constantinople, and Eutyches Archbishop of Constantinople was Abbot in the same City. His Doctrine was received at first in the Council of Ephesus, by the Interest of Chrysostom (to please Eudoxia the Empress) Lord Chamberlain to Theodosius the Emperor; but Chrysostom being slain at the instigation of Pulcheria, the Sister of the Emperor, the same was afterwards condemned in another Synod of Ephesus held in the Year 431. Two Years after the Death of St. Austin, wherein Cyril Bishop of Alexandria presided; as the before-mentioned Council of Ephesus, and the Doctrine of Eutyches was condemned in the Council of Chalcedon 451.

For the rest, the ancient Christians of St. Thomas did administer the Holy Sacrament in both Kinds, using Salt, Bread, and the use of Raisins instead of Wine. It was a very ancient Custom among them, not to baptize their Children till they were forty days old, except in case of imminent danger of Life. They used no Unction, neither any Images, except that they had Crosses in their Churches. Their Priests were forbid to marry a second time. They were declared Enemies of Cyril of Alexandria, a great Antagonist of the Nestorians, but revered Nestorius and Dioscorus as Saints. They did not acknowledg the Superiority of the Pope of Rome, and used the Syriac New Testament in their Churches.

As divers Religions have been broach'd of late Years in Europe, so there are many Sects of antient standing in the East. The chiefest of these are the Greeks, who acknowledg the Patriarch of Constantinople for their Head, viz. those of Naxos (except Armenia and Cilicia) Greece, Russia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Valachia, Moldavia, Podolia and Muscovia.

The next are the Melchites, the most numerous of all the Sects in the East; they are call'd Syrians from Syria, and Melchites by their Enemies, because they conform'd themselves in their Religious Worship, according to the Emperor's Orders. * They acknowledg for their Head the Archbishop of Damascus, who antiently had his Residence at Antioch.

The third Sect is that of the Georgians, inhabiting the antient Iberia between the Euxine and Caspian Seas. Some would have them to be call'd Georgians, because, as they say, they reverence S. George as their Patron; but erroneously, the Georgians having been mention'd both by Pliny and Mela, long before S. George was known. They are of the same Religion with the Greeks, and have eighteen Bishops of their own, besides a Metropolitan.

The fourth Sect is the Russians, who likewise profess the Greek Religion, denying with them the Proceeding of the Holy Ghost from Father and Son, the main Point in question betwixt the Eastern and Western Churches.

The fifth Sect of the Nestorians follow the Heretical Doctrine of Nestorius, and live for the most part among the Pagans and Mahometans, in Babylon, Assyria, Mesopotamia, Parthia, Media, &c. Nay, Paulus Venetus affirms, that they are found from the North side of Casaja, to the most Southerly Parts of the Indies; so that on the East side beyond the River Tigris, scarce any other Christian Sect is to be met with: The reason whereof they alledg to be, that Cosroes King of Persia, a declared Enemy of the Emperor Heraclius, forced all his Subjects to embrace this Doctrine. The Patriarchal Seat of the Nestorians is at Muzal, a City of Mesopotamia upon the River Tigris, now subject to the Turks; notwithstanding which it has 40000 Christians and 15 Churches. Some of the Nestorians did submit to the Roman Jurisdiction under Pope Julius III. who was created Pope 1550. and reign'd five Years. And the Patriarch Abdiesu, who was invested with the Episcopal Dignity by Pope Pius IV. was present at the Council of Trent.

The sixth is that of the Jacobites, having got their Name from one Jacob a Native of Syria, and a Follower of the Doctrine of Eutyches, 530. according to Nicephorus and Damascenus. They inhabit for the most part in Syria, Aleppo, Cyprus, Mesopotamia, Babylon, and Palestine, whence the Patriarch of Jerusalem is also a Jacobite; but the Patriarch of the Jacobites resides at Caranot, an antient noted City in Mesopotamia. They acknowledg but one Nature in Christ, make the Sign of the Cross with one Finger only; they mark their young Children with the sign of the Cross by means of an hot Iron; use both Baptism and Circumcision, and reject the Purgatory, it being their Opinion

nion that the Soul remains with the Body under-ground till the Day of Judgment; and that the Angels are composed of a fiery and lucid Substance.

The seventh are the Coptes, or Egyptian Christians, being rather the Name of a Nation, than belonging to any peculiar Religion: They are the same with the Jacobites, the word Copti being the same with Aegypht. For notwithstanding the Doctrine of Eutyches was condemned in the Council of Chalcedon, and Dioscorus Patriarch of Alexandria deposed upon that score, the same took deep Root in the Eastern Parts, and more especially in Egypt. These Egyptians (according to Tecla Maria an Abyssine Priest) agree in Point of Doctrine with the Abyssines, and acknowledg the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Alexandria, whose Residence is now at Cairo.

8. The Abyssines.

* Preslegan now the Title of a certain Abatick Prince; some will have it a Persian word.

The eighth Sect is that of the Abyssines, or Mediterranean Ethiopians, being generally Jacobites, whence their King (call'd erroneously by some * Prester John) is stiled the Prince of the Jacobites. They reject absolutely the Council of Chalcedon, and will allow it no place in their Writings. To their Patriarch they give the Name of Albana, i. e. Our Father, who must be a Native out of the Territories of Alexandria, and of S. Anthony's Order; for it is observable that all the Patriarchs and Bishops in the East, are either of the Order of S. Basil Bishop of Cesaria and Cappadocia, or else of the Order of S. Anthony. The Patriarchs of Constantinople, Antiochia and Armenia, are of the Order of S. Basil; those of Alexandria and Ethiopia, and Ethiopia, as also those of the Jacobites and Maronites, of S. Anthony's Order; but the Patriarchs of the Nestoreans are promiscuously of either of these two Orders. The Abyssines have for their Head the Patriarch of Ethiopia: They are rebaptized once every Year, on 12th day, as indeed are most of the other Eastern Christians. They follow the Rules of the Old Testament in reference to clean and unclean things. It is observable, that contrary to the custom of all the other Eastern Christians (except the Armenians) they use unleavened Bread in the Holy Sacrament; tho some affirm that this is only done on Thursday in the Holy Week, and that at other times they use leavened Bread. All Persons, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, take and receive the Sacrament standing, and that always in the Church, the King himself not being dispensed with in this Point: The Priest gives the Bread, and the Deacons

the Wine; and that day the Sacrament is received (which is generally once a week) they are forbidden to spit. They baptize both with Fire and Water; besides which they circumcise their Children on the 8th day, and that both Sexes, not according to the manner of the Jews, but after the Mahometan way, whence it seems as if it were rather a Custom than a Point of Religion. And if we deduce their Original from the ancient Ethiopians, Herodotus tells us, that they used to practise the same in very antient Times; if from the Arabians, the Matter is sufficiently evident, the Arabians being descended from Ismail, tho they are generally ambitious to trace their Origin rather from Sarab than Hagar. For the rest, they reject Purgatory, and Prayers for the Dead; as also all Traditions, looking upon the Word of God as the only Rule of Faith; but with the Jacobites, allow no more than one Nature in Christ. Of the Religion of the Abyssines, Damian a Goos, Athanas. Kircher, Alvarius, and others, have given a more ample account.

The ninth Sect is that of the Armenians, in great esteem among the Mahometans, by reason of their Traffick and Riches; tho some alledg another Reason, viz. that an Armenian did foretell Mahomet his future Greatness. In the Year 1656. a certain Armenian Merchant, named Goya Salomon, a very grave and sober Person, travell'd in our company to Adacassar, where we were to treat about a Peace with the King, and he to fetch some Money due to him from the Danish Company, who gave us several needful Instructions concerning both the Ecclesiastical and Political Affairs of the Armenians. They antiently belonged to the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, pursuant to a Decree of the Council of Chalcedon; but afterwards having withdrawn themselves from the Great Church, set up two Patriarchs of their own, viz. one in the Greater, the other in the Lesser Armenia. We were told that they administer the Sacrament to the very Infants, whereas the Russians don't allow it to Children under seven Years of Age. They declare positively against the Purgatory and Transubstantiation. They rebaptize such as turn to their Religion from the Western Churches; They don't allow any Happiness to the Souls of the deceased till after the Day of Judgment.

The tenth Sect is that of the Armenians, having got their Name, not from the

the famous Heretick Maron (as William Tyrius and Prateolus falsely imagine) but from a certain Holy Man, in certain ancient Records, mention being made of the Convent of St. Maron, the Friars whereof were call'd Maronites: Some of them inhabit in Aleppo, Damascus, Tripolis, Syria, and Cyprus; but their chief Seat is the Mount Libanus, whose whole compass being computed of 700 Leagues, but in most places rocky and barren, is inhabited by about 12000 Families of the Maronites, who pay to the Grand Signior seventeen Crowns per annum apiece for every Head that is above twelve years old; and a Crown a year for each piece of Ground of sixteen Spans in the Square. The Mountain is of such a height, that it may be discovered at 40 Leagues distance. The Patriarch of the Maronites has eight or nine Suffraganean Bishops, he himself being always a Friar of the Order of S. Anthony, and resides sometimes near the Mount Libanus, in a Convent of S. Anthony, sometimes at Tripolis. The Maronites are at present under the Jurisdiction of the See of Rome; and Pope Gregory XIII. (the same who caused the Alteration of the New Stile to be inserted in the Almanack) erected a College of the Maronites at Rome. The Maronites agree with the Greek Church in this Opinion, That the Holy Ghost proceeds only from the Father, that every Soul was created in the beginning. They look upon a Female Infant as unclean for eighty days after its Birth, and the Males for forty, which is the reason they don't baptize them before that time; and administer the Sacrament to the Children soon after they are baptized. They don't carry the Sacrament in Procession, and allow not of a fourth Marriage; but don't ordain any Priests or Deacons without they are married before; and allow a Parent the power of annulling the Marriage of his Son or Daughter, if the same be done without his consent. Beatitude they don't believe till after the Day of Judgment. For the rest they follow the Opinion of the Monothelites, that there is but one Nature in Christ. The Maronites had united themselves 400 Years ago with the See of Rome; but when Saladyn King of Egypt and Syria did conquer those Parts, the Maronites relinquish'd the Roman Communion, till they were reunited to them a second time under Gregory XIII. and Clement VIII. Of the S. Thomas Christians we have spoken before.

Among all these Eastern Sects, there are few who teach any Points contrary to Vol. III.

Salvation, except those of Nestorius and Eutyches; for they execrate the Adoration of Images, reject Purgatory, allow Marriage to the Clergy, administer the Sacrament to the Laity in both kinds, deny Transubstantiation, and don't acknowledge the Jurisdiction of the See of Rome.

Maffaeus relates, that the Patriarch of the Abyssines being desired by their King to dispute with the Jesuit Roterigio, told the King, That he would not enter into Dispute with an Heretick, and charged the King, under pain of Eternal Damnation, not to read their Writings. It is beyond all dispute, that the Coptes avoid the Latin Church as much as the Jews. Cardinal Baronius tells us indeed, that Marcus Patriarch of Alexandria, did send his Deputies to Pope Clement VIII. in order to subject himself and all Egypt to the Papal Chair; but the same proved abortive, and proved no more than a Compliment in the end. See Thomas a Jesuit, l. 7. c. 6. Whence it is evident, that setting aside the Doctrine of the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father only, they are subject to not near so many Errors as the Roman Catholics.

The Eastern Christians exercise their Religious Worship in different Languages: Some are of opinion that all the Primitive Christians, for 120 Years after Christ's Nativity, viz. till the Reign of Hadrianus the Emperor, used only one Language, viz. the Hebrew, but without any certainty: Certain it is, that the Armenians have a Translation of the Bible into their own Language; which by some is attributed to Chrysostom while in exile. Alvares affirms that the Abyssines have translated the Bible in their own Language, and so have the Russians, or Muscovites, contrary to what is practised by the Romans; for Pope Pius IV. put the Bible among the prohibited Books. And Erasmus in his Letter to Charles Vtenbofer tells him, that Lewis Berquin was 1529. burnt at Paris, for no other reason, but his having asserted, that the Bible might be translated into the Vulgar Tongue, and read by the common People; notwithstanding St. Jerom and Chrysostom had employed themselves in the Work.

The other Eastern Christians perform their Religious Service in the Greek, Latin, and Chaldean Languages; and use divers Liturgies, as those composed by Petrus, Jacobus, Sixtus, &c. Whence it is evident that it would be no very difficult task, to settle a good mutual Correspondence betwixt them and the Protestant Churches of Europe, which has

Baldau.

The Eastern Churches deny the Supremacy of the Roman See. The Greeks used always five days before Easter to excommunicate the Pope.

In what Language the Christians worship God.

been too much neglected hitherto, tho we have had several opportunities given us by the Eastern Christians to embrace so useful a Design. Thus (as Camerarius tells us) the Greeks of Constantinople did encourage the Bohemians and Hussites against the Roman Catholics. Joseph Patriarch of Constantinople, sent one Demetrius a Deacon to Wittenbergh, to confer with the Divines there concerning an Union, who carried a Greek Copy of the Augustan Confession back with him to Constantinople. At the Synod of Tboon in Poland 1595. certain Deputies sent by the Greek Christians appeared to exhort to a Unity, and endeavour a Reconciliation betwixt the Calvinists and Lutherans. And in the Year 1616. Cyril Patriarch of Alexandria, sent one of his Priests to George Abbot the famous Archbishop of Canterbury, in order to have him instructed in the University of Oxford in the true Principles of the Protestant Churches. Neither ought we to pass by in silence the Confession of Cyril Patriarch of Constantinople, of his adhering to the Doctrine of Calvin, which drew upon him the hatred of the Jesuits, who could not rest satisfy'd till they had underhand procured his Death 1638.

His Letter, writ upon that Subject to a certain Friend of his, and preserved by the Learned Andrew Rivet, is as follows.

" Percio ho voluto scriver a V. R. e protestarvi che mi siate testimonio se io more, que jo more Catholico Orthodoxo, nella fede del N. Cyrillo Patriarcha di Constantinopoli.

Which translated into English runs thus :

" Therefore I was willing to declare to you, and desire you to be my Witness, that in case I die an Orthodox Catholic, and in the Purity of the Faith taught by Jesu Christ, agreeable to the Confession of Faith of the Church of the United Provinces, mine being altogether the same with theirs, and with the other Evangelical Churches. I abhor the Errors of the Roman Church, and the Superstitions of the Greek, but approve and embrace the Doctrine of the most Worthy John Calvin, and of all those that have the same Sentiments with him. I call you to witness, that I believe, confess, and attest the same by these Presents, recommending this my Confession to your care, in order to communicate the same (in case of my Death) to all truly believing Brethren, and my self to your Prayers.

The 15. 25. March.

As the preceding Letter is a convincing Proof of the stedfastness of Cyril, in his adhering to the Doctrine of Calvin; so out of what hath been said before, it is evident that most of the Eastern Christians have an aversion to the Roman Religion. And I remember that Benjamin the Jew in his Travels, makes the same Observation in particular, in respect of the Patriarch of Constantinople. In the Year 1664. being at Cochin, I addressed my self to Mr. Jacob Huiskart our General, to grant leave to the Arch-Deacon, or Chief of the Christians of S. Thomas in Ecclesiastical Affairs, to come thither, in order to have a free Conference with him: Which being readily granted, he sent his Letter to the Arch-Deacon for that purpose; but he excused himself, alledging (and not without reason) that we having given so extraordinary a Reception to the Roman Bishop, Joseph de Sancta Maria, he could not appear in Person among us, without his Prejudice, to my great Dissatisfaction, being extremely sorry it was not in my power to perform my Promise made in my Letters to the States General 1662. And upon this occasion I can't, without praise, mention the generous Zeal of the States General, who at their own Charge did order

A Description of the Kingdom of Percatti, and Calecoulang. Coulang twice taken by the Hollanders. The nature and manner of living of the Nairos. The Paruas made Christians. Extraordinary Zeal of Don John King of Portugal.

THE Kingdom of Percatti (call'd by some Porca) begins about four or five Leagues to the South of Cochin, and extends to Coulang, its whole length being about 12 Leagues.

In the Year 1642. the Dutch appear'd the first time in this Place, and treated with the then King of Siam, Banchery Yaubaar (who was not above 23 Years of Age) concerning a free Trade with Pepper. Which the King was very glad to accept of, being three Years past engaged in a War with the Portugueses, who had seized upon part of his Dominions, and would have erected some Fortifications there. He delivered to our Deputies a sealed Letter, directed to the General and Great Council of the Indies, in which he requested, that we would at least once a Year send thither a Ship freighted with such Commodities, as before that time used to be carried to Camamor and Calecut; whereupon an Interpreter was sent aboard the next day, to desire a Passport from his Majesty for such of our Ships as pass'd that way; which was granted.

The King who reign'd here 1664. of whom Mr. Jacob Hufart and I had Audience at that time, was about 24 Years old; a very active and well-limb'd Person; his Hands, Feet, and Ears, adorn'd with Jewels of a great value. Formerly they used to transport their Pepper from hence to Mocha; but since that time the English have traffick'd there in that Commodity, who had their Factory just upon the Sea-shore. The greatest Strength of this King consists in about 500 small Gallies, wherewith in the rainy Season, when the Rice-fields lie under Water, he used to make his Excursions from the utmost Point of the Cape of Comoryn as far as Panane, and especially to annoy the King of Cochin. He proved a troublesome Neighbour to the Dutch Company, till by the Terror of their Arms they brought him to submission, having in the Siege of Cochin sided with the Portugueses against us.

Deeper into the Country live abundance of Christians converted by the Portugueses: They get their Livelihood by managing and gathering the Pepper, which they are obliged to sell to the King's Factor, a Brahman.

The Air of this Country being accounted extremely unwholesom; hence it is, that most of the Inhabitants are troubled with swell'd Legs, the Cause whereof they attribute to the Nitrous Water, which they use for their common Drink; Blindness is also an ordinary Distemper here. For the rest, the Ground is exceeding fertile, and very fit for Tillage, so that most of the Inhabitants live upon Husbandry, especially of Rice.

The next adjoining Kingdom is that of Calecoulang, of no great extent; here the Dutch Company has had their Factory many years ago, which used to buy up a great quantity of Pepper in these parts.

The least among the Malabar Kingdoms is that of Coulang, extending to the utmost Point of the Cape Comoryn, about 15 or 16 Leagues in length. The City of Coulang was first built by the Portugueses, being much of the same bigness as Puntegale in the Isle of Ceylon; having no less than seven Churches, some very good Houses, and many thousands of Trees, especially towards the Sea-side. This City is reckon'd one of the wholesomest on the whole Coast of Malabar by reason of its pure Air, and most excellent Springs. The Portugueses at their first coming erected only a strong House, defend to themselves in case of necessity against the Inhabitants; notwithstanding which, they were at a certain time surpriz'd by them, and cut all to pieces; which Barbarity was afterwards reveng'd by Lawrence Almeyda Son to Franciscus Almeyda, who burnt 20 of their Ships richly loaden.

The Harbour or Bay

e Harbour or Bay

Baldacus. In the year 1503, one Brother Rhoteric a Dominican Friar, coming into these parts to propagate the Gospel, did convert many of the Pagans, and encouraged the Christians of St. Thomas inhabiting here to persevere in their Faith.

The Inhabitants treacherous.

The Inhabitants are generally very barbarous and treacherous, of which they have given several times sufficient Proofs to the Dutch. At a certain time they assaulted the City by night, and had almost carried it by Surprise; and at another time Capt. Henry Gluwing taking the fresh Air with some Officers without the Gate, were treacherously murder'd by them.

A Pagan

by the Por-tugueses in time of Peace.

In the time of the Portugueses there stood a certain Pagode about four Leagues without the City, famous for its Riches throughout the Indies, which induced Sofa to plunder it, notwithstanding there was then a Peace betwixt them and the Portugueses. The Nairos reveng'd the Loss by killing about 30 of the Portugueses; and Sofa having sent a large Vessel full of Fanams (their Coin) to John King of Portugal, the same was by the advice of the Pope sent back to the King of Coulang, by whom it was placed again in the said Pagode.

The Dutch
besiege Coulang, a second time, having lost
it before.

In the year 1661. when the Hollanders came to these parts to besiege the City of Coulang, they were forc'd to have three smart Engagements with the Nairos, who to the number of 7000 or 8000 Men, arm'd with Scymeters and Musquets, and being intoxicated with Opium, fell upon them like desperate Men; in which Action Mr. Dublet our under-Factor lost his Life.

The Nairos.

And upon this occasion we ought not to pass by the Nairos. These are the Gentlemen of Malabar, descended for the most part either from Royal Families, or Brabmans, and are for that reason exceedingly haughty, proud and bold: If they meet any of the common People in the Street, they cry out, Po, Po, i. e. Give way, Give way. They seldom appear without their Scymeters and Shields, which they leave at the door when (by a peculiar Privilege) they go to give a private Visit to one of their Neighbours Wives, as a sign that no body must enter there in the mean while to disturb them. They are all bred to the War, even from the seventh year of Age, when they begin to anoint their Limbs with certain Ointments to render the Nerves pliable, which makes them very active and nimble, and the best Wrestlers in the World. They are not only well acquainted with the use of Bows and Arrows, but also with Musquets and great Cannon; for I have seen them give a Salvo with the same order and dexterity as our best disciplin'd Troops in Europe; and they are of late years arriv'd to that Perfection, that they make their own Gun-barrels, Gun-powder and Matches. They commonly engage naked, having only a piece of Stuff wrapt about the middle: Being very nimble they often turn their Backs, but soon return to the Charge, when they find the least opportunity of having an advantage against their Enemies. On the Hilt of their Swords they wear certain pieces of Metal, which making a noise as they move, serves them for a certain Musick: They are very dexterous in defending their Bodies with their Shields, and consequently are better at handy Blows than at firing, for they commonly fire too high. Among the Nairos those who call themselves Amok are the worst, being a Company of Desperadoes, who engage themselves and their Families by Oaths to revenge such Injuries as are done them. They are often seen at Batavia. The Power of the Kings of Malabar is generally esteem'd by the number of the Nairos under their Jurisdiction. If any of their Kings should be murder'd, they would sacrifice all to revenge his Death. As they are naturally fierce and addicted to all manner of Lust and Pride, so they are declar'd Enemies of the Christians.

Scarce were the Dutch Masters of Coulang, but their Fleet consisting of 23 Ships great and small, were surpris'd by so violent a Tempest (which lasted three days) that they thought to have been all lost, as lying at Anchor under a low Shore, and therefore expos'd to the utmost fury of the Winds. The Ships Names were, the Ulieland, Seabreeze, Haddock, Bantam, Flushing, Marygold flower, Cat, Tertolen, Red Lion, Erafmus, Shuyce, Achilles, the Romer, Flower Valley, Walnut Tree, the House of Swieten, the Elburgh, Stadthouse of Amsterdam, and the Exchange of Amsterdam, the four last being lately come from Holland freighted with Provisions, such as Meal, Bacon, Cheese, Wine, Oil and Mum, besides a good number of Land-men, many whereof were ill of the bloody Flux. During this Storm we sent our fervent and constant Prayers up to Heaven for the delivery of our Fleet, on which depended all our Safety; for the Stadthouse of Amsterdam was in such distress, that she gave one signal after another for Relief,

The fury of the Tempest beginning to allay on the third day, just at the very time when we were coming from Prayers out of the Church, and by midnight the same being quite ceased, a solemn Thanksgiving was order'd to be kept the 23<sup>d</sup> of November. 1661. when I preach'd upon the Text of Psal. 66. 12. By this time it being judged fit for our Fleet to depart, a convenient Garrison was left in the place under Capt. Kicks and Mr. Nybof, for the defence of the Fortifications of the City, which were lately made of Earth.

dom of Trevan-
cor.

The Kingdom of Trevancor borders upon that of Coulang: All along the Sea-shore inhabite the Paruas, who being for the most part Christians, you see the Shore all along as far as Comoryn, and even beyond it to Tutecoryn, full of little Churches, some of Wood, others of Stone. These People owe their Conversion to Franciscus Xavierius, he being the first who planted the Principles of Christianity among them; they being so much taken with the reasonableness of the Ten Commandments, that they receiv'd Baptism in great numbers, tho an accidental Quarrel betwixt a Parua and a Mahometan prov'd a strong Motive to their Conversion: whence it is that John de Lucena says, As the Differences arisen betwixt the Jews and the Egyptians, prov'd the means of the delivery of the People of God, and of the recovery of their Spiritual and Temporal Liberty; so by God's Direction a Quarrel which happen'd betwixt a Parua and a Mahometan, prov'd the delivery of the first from their Spiritual and Temporal Slavery.

The Paruas being sorely oppress'd by the Mahometans, one John de Crus, a Native of Malabar, but who had been in Portugal, and honourably treated by John the then King of Portugal, advis'd them to seek for Aid at Cochin against the Mooris, and to receive Baptism. Accordingly some of the chief Men among them (call'd Parangatys in their Language) were sent upon that Errand to Cochin, where being kindly receiv'd, they (in honour of him who had given this Advice) took upon them the Surname of Crus, a Name still retain'd by most Persons of Note among the Paruas. In short, being deliver'd from the Moorish Yoke, and the Pearl-fishery (which formerly belong'd to them) restor'd to the right Owners, above 20000 of them receiv'd Baptism.

But tho they were baptiz'd, most of them being deficient in the knowledge of the true Fundamentals of the Christian Religion for want of Teachers, they had in a little time scarce any marks of Christianity left among them except the Ceremony of Baptism; as Maffeus, John de Lucena, and Michael Vas in his Speech to Franciscus Xavierius sufficiently testify. For the Portugueses being too eager in baptizing these People, provided they could say by heart the Credo, Our Father, and Ave Mary, and being unprovided with Teachers to instruct them, they soon return'd to Paganism; so that upon this score the Romish Priests need not talk so big as they often do.

John the then King of Portugal being sensible of this defect, did all that in him lay to remedy this Evil, by sending divers young Scholars to the Universities of Salamanca, Paris and Comimbria, to be educated and fitted for the Missions into the Indies. About the same time Ignatius Loyola, the Founder of the Jesuits Order, began to be famous at Rome, for having with his Society made a Vow to preach the Gospel throughout the World: Whereupon the King of Portugal order'd Peter Mascarenbas his Ambassador there, to confer upon that Head with Ignatius, and to desire six Missionaries for the East-Indies; two being only granted, Simon Roterigius a Portuguese (who had studied at Paris at the King's Charge) and Franciscus Aspilcota Navarrus, surnamed Xaverius, were selected for that purpose; but the first being seized by a Quartan Ague, and forc'd to stay at Lisbon, Xaverius (after having receiv'd Pope Paul's Benediction) set out 1540. for the Indies.

goes to the Indies.

He was no sooner come thither, but having understood the deplorable State of the Paruas from the mouth of Michael Vas, he did not rest satisfied till he might deliver them out of their Darkness: For this purpose having had several Conferences with John Albuquerque Bishop of Goa, and Martin Alphonso de Sousa the Viceroy, he obtain'd leave to go among them; for tho he appear'd there in the quality of the Apostolical Nuncio, yet would he pay his due Respects to the Civil Government.

He left Goa in the beginning of November 1542. in Company of Franciscus among the Paruas.
educa-

educated in the College of St. Paul; and coming among the Paruas, apply'd all his care in having the chief Fundamentals of the Christian Religion translated into the Malabar Language, or in instructing the School-masters in the right way of educating their Youth. For the rest, with what Zeal John King of Portugal prosecuted the Propagation of the Christian Religion in the Indies, will best appear out of his Letter written 1546. to Don John de Castro his Viceroy of the Indies, as follows.

To John de Castro Viceroy of India, all Happiness:

John King of Portugal's Letter.

“YOU knowing what an abominable thing Idolatry is in our Eyes, the same shall for the future not be tolerated in my Dominions. Being inform'd that in the Country about Goa the Pagan Temples are suffer'd and frequented both in publick and private, as well as divers sorts of Pagan Diversions, we command you once for all to have the same demolish'd, burnt and rooted out; and that all imaginable care be taken to prevent the Importation of Idols, either of Wood, Metal, Earth, or any other Matter. The Heathenish Sports shall be abolish'd, and the Brahmans not in the least encouraged, and such as contravene this our Mandat shall be severely punish'd. And, considering that the Pagans may be brought over to our Religion, not only by the hopes of Eternal Salvation, but also by Temporal Interest and Preferments, you shall for the future not bestow any Offices, or any other Places in the Custom-house (as has been practis'd hitherto) upon the Heathens, but only upon the Christians. We understand also that you commonly press the Indians for our Sea-service; in which case we would have you shew as much Favour as you can to the Christians, and, if necessity will not allow you to excuse them from that Service, to encourage them with good Pay and Rewards: In which Point you shall consult with Michael Vas, a Person well known to us for his Piety and Zeal in propagating the Christian Religion. Being further inform'd, that oftentimes Negro Slaves that might be instructed in the Principles of our Religion, are for filthy lucre fake sold to the Mahometans, the same shall be strictly prohibited, and care

“taken against all manner of Usury. In the City of Bazain you shall build a Church, and dedicate it to St. Joseph, and provide for the Subsistence of the Vicar and his Assistants; to accomplish which you may employ something out of our Revenues, and the 3000 Pardaus formerly employ'd to the maintenance of the Mahometan Mosque and their Service, shall for the future be allotted for the Subsistence of the Priests, and such other Persons as give a helping hand towards the Conversion of the Infidels. Among the new Converts, or all such as have hitherto, or for the future may be brought over to the Christian Religion, by the care of Michael Vas, you shall distribute yearly 900 Quarters of Rice, out of our Revenue: It being our Will, that all the Agreements made with the Christians of S. Thomas, concerning the Weight, Measures, and Price of their Commodities, shall be inviolably observed. And understanding nevertheless that the contrary is practis'd in and about Cochin, in the Pepper Trade, we command you to assist these Christians, and to take effectual care they may not be damnified, but treated with all mildness as becomes Christians. You shall also sollicite the King of Cochin, not to permit any Sorcery or such like things to be transacted, by the Sale of Pepper; and being inform'd that the said King beaues such of his Subjects as embrace Christianity, of all their means, you shall earnestly intercede with him on their behalf, and we will also write to him for that purpose. We could with heartily, that the Business of Socotora (which you have recommended to our care in your Letter) might be settled so as to deliver those miserable People out of their Slavery, provided the same could be done without exasperating the Grand Seigneur, under whose Jurisdiction they live. You may upon this Head consult with Michael Vas, and act in the matter according to your discretion. It being also come to our Ears, that the Paruas are sometimes but very indifferently us'd by our Officers, who force them to sell their Pearls (got by fishing or diving) at what rate they please to take them, this you shall not allow of, but permit them to dispose of their Commodities at the best Price they can get. You shall make an exact Inquiry, whether the Inhabitants of the Sea-shore might

You shall consult and debate with Francisus Xaverius, whether it were not practicable for the better increase of the Christians, that the Pearl-fishery might be permitted only to the Christians, with exclusion of the Mahometans and Pagans: and as many among the Paruas, who have embraced Christianity, meet with very ill Treatment from their Pagan Friends and Relations, and are despoiled of all; these you shall assist out of our Revenues, according as Michael Vas shall judge it convenient.

"We have further understood that a certain Royal Youth has escaped from his Father or Uncle to Goa, in order to be baptized; as his Conversion is of great moment, so you shall be very careful of his Person, and of his Instruction and Education in the College of S. Paul, and provide for his Entertainment in Clothes, Attendance and other matters, suitable to his Quality. He having notified to us in his Letter, that he is the legal Heir of the Crown of Ceylon; you shall make due Enquiry after that matter, and write to us your Sentiment thereof. The furious Attempts of the Tyrant of Ceylon against such of his Subjects as embrace Christianity, oblige us to command you, to take a slow and secure, but a severe Revenge of him, to let the World see, that we are ready to give all imaginable Protection to those poor Creatures, who have renounced their Pagan and Diabolical Idolatries. It being a general Rumour here, that the Images of our Saviour and the Virgin Mary are made and sold by the Pagans, a thing unseemly and unbecoming the Christian Name, the same ought not to be allowed of. The Cathedral Churches of Cochim and Coulang, which have been building for a considerable time, being (as we hear) going to decay, we command to be finished, and covered with a good Roof, to keep out the Rains. It is also our Pleasure, that a Church dedicated to S. Thomas shall be built in the Street of Noroa, and that the Church of St. Cruz, lately begun to be built at Calapor, shall be brought to perfection. In the Isle of Cioran, you shall order a Church and some Meeting-Houses to be built, for the convenience of the new Converts to be catechized in, and to be instructed in the Word of God. We could also wish with all our Heart, that Idolatry might be banished out of Salsese and Bardes; but in this matter you must proceed with Caution, for fear of exasperating the Minds of the People; which End may be most conveniently obtained, by shewing them with all imaginable Mildness, their gross Errors, and how instead of the true God they pay their Devotion to insensible Images and Idols. For the same reason you shall not neglect to confer with their Principal Men upon this Head, and to encourage such as embrace Christianity by your Favour, Presents, and otherwise. It is our Will, that a peculiar regard shall be had to this our Letter, and the Contents thereof punctually observed.

C H A P. XXII.

A Description of Tutecoryn and the Pearl fishery. That City taken by the Hollanders. The Isle of Rammanakoyel, Adams-Bridge; the Shape of his Foot imprinted in a Stone. Tindi. The taking of Negapatan, which is besieged by the Naikes, reduced to great Extremity by Famine; once more attacked and maintained.

The Paruas are now very distinguished in the Romish Superstitions.

THE Paruas ever since this Union with the Romish Church, are such Zealots in that Religion, that there are scarce any hopes of ever bringing them over to our side; their Ignorance in Religious Concerns being such, that besides the use of their Beads, and making the Sign of the Cross, they know nothing of the true Fundamentals of the Christian Religion they pretend to profess. In the Year 1661. I was ordered to take a Journey from Tutecoryn to Coulang, to visit the Churches along the Sea-shore, and endeavour to introduce a Reformation there; but my endeavours proved ineffectual by reason of the great number

Waldew. of Popish Priests yet remaining in that Country; and supposing a Reformation could have been introduced, there were no Ministers to maintain it in so large a Tract of Land, where the Paruas were for the most part great Favourers of the Portugueses, and blind Zealots in their Religion, of which I had sufficient Proofs before at Tutecoryn. For the Dutch being become Masters of that Place, 1658. I was soon after employed in the business of Reformation, but without Success; for when I preach'd in Portuguese, scarce any one of the Paruas durst enter into the Church, but remained in the Porch, for fear of the Romish Priests living among them; for tho these Priests did not then live in the City, nevertheless the Inhabitants would carry their Children a great way into the Country, to be baptized by the Priests.

Blind Zeal of the Paruas.

I remember that passing one time thro the Market-place of Tutecoryn, a great number of People, at the accidental ringing of a Bell, prostrated themselves upon the Ground, whom I ask'd whether they thought this a fit place for their Devotion, when the Church was so near at hand, desiring them to follow me thither; they answered, that since the Church was despoil'd of the Images and other Ornaments by us, they must look upon us as Enemies to their Religion. I replied, that we were no Enemies of Images, but only of the worshipping of them, as appeared by several Histories of the Baptism of our Saviour, the Conversion of S. Paul and others, remaining in the Churches: To be short, I found that the whole knowledg of the Paruas (both young and old) consisted in being able to say by Heart the Creed, Our Father, the Ten Commandments, and the Ave Mary.

Ferreira employed in reforming the Paruas.

After my Departure the Reverend Mr. John Ferreira Almeyda a Native of Lisbon, was for a whole Year employed in the Reformation of the Paruas, but with less Success than my self, they having conceived an Odium against him, as one who had quitted that Religion, and whose Effigies upon that score was burnt at Goa.

Tutecoryn taken by the Dutch.

In the Year 1658 in Jan. we set sail from Negumbo, and in the beginning of Febr. landed near Tutecoryn, after some resistance from the Natives, who set the City and their small Gallies on fire, and so retired deeper into the Country. Tutecoryn is properly no more than a large Village without Walls, Ditches, or Gates; it has three spacious Churches, and abundance of goodly Houses built of Stone, which afford a good Prospect at Sea. Hereabouts they make the best Lime in India. The Dutch Company has been several times endeavouring to erect some Fortifications here; but the Naike, or Lord of the Country, not willing to consent to it, they have hitherto been contented with a Factory in one of the three Churches; where always resides a Factor and Under-Factor, with three Assistants, and six or eight Soldiers.

Near this Place is the famous Pearl-Fishery, whereof there are no more than three in the East, viz. one near Ormuz, the second in the Bay of Ainam on the Chinese Coast, and the third in the Bay betwixt Cape Comoryn and the Isle of Ceylon, wherein are also comprehended Manaar and Aripou. The Pearls are found in certain Oyster Shells (which are not good to eat) and are taken by diving 7, 8, 9, or 10 Fathom deep, sometimes not without great danger. The Pearl-Fishery is not allowed every Year, sometimes the Oyster-banks being cover'd with Sand, and sometimes the Oysters not being come to their full Maturity. To make a Trial of the last, they take out a few, and by the quantity and quality of the Pearls taken in them, judg whether it will quit cost to fish or not. If the Fishing be resolved upon, the Inhabitants of the circumjacent Parts come in great Numbers with their Families and Boats, and pitch their Tents near the Seaside, where they remain until the Fishery is over. The Dutch Company has a certain share in what is taken for their Protection, the rest being sold publicly in the Markets of Tutecoryn and Calipatnam. The Paruas also dive sometimes for certain hours for a kind of Sea-Snails called Glaucos, whereof they make Rings, that bear a good Price at Bengale.

The Pearls of Tutecoryn and Manaar are neither in colour nor brightness comparable to those taken near Ormuz on the Persian Coast. The Pearls are questionless nourished both by the Sea and River Water, as being often found at the time of low Tides in the Rivers. Abundance of Pearl Dust is from hence transported into Europe, where it is used in the Cordial Medicines. The large Pearls are valued according to their bigness, shape and whiteness. Much Cloth is made at Tutecoryn, the Weaving-Trade being very considerable here, which together with the plenty of Estates, Rice, Sugar, &c. makes this Place to be much regarded by the Company.

This Tract of Land is subject to most furious Winds in October, November and December; and in the Winter Seasons to sudden and heavy Rains. It is very sandy near the Sea-shore, and has nothing but Salt-water, which produces Scabs and other cutaneous Distempers, as I can testify by my own Experience. During the Months of January, February and March, the Nights are extremely cold, by reason of the thick Fogs which fall constantly at that time, the Days being at the same time so excessive hot, that there is no touching of the Ground without their Shoes, called Seripous by the Inhabitants.

And upon this occasion I can't pass by without making this Observation, that notwithstanding the nearness of Tutecoryn and Comoryn, they at the same time have very different Seasons: For in April, May, June, July, August and September, those inhabiting on the South-side of the said Cape, enjoy all the Blessings of the Summer Season, whilst those living on the North-side are at the same time subject to all the inconveniences of the Winter: This side being then constantly pestered with tempestuous Winds, whilst on the other side the Air is serene and calm; the difference of which must needs be look'd for among the Mountains, the receptacles of Winds, Rains and Snow, the same being observed in other Parts of the Indies, as well as in Africa. For if Africa were not mountainous, it would be altogether barren and uninhabitable, no more than the Countries under the Torrid Zone, which if they were destitute of Mountains, would also want Rivers (the sources of them being all in the Mountains) nor hard Rains. Thus it is observable, that about Columbo, Gale, and Matwe, abundance of Rains fall at different times, because that part of the Isle of Ceylon is mountainous; whereas near Manaar, Jafnapatnam and the other Places, where there is a flat Country, it rains only in October, November, and a little in December, all the rest of the Year being without the least Rains, the defect whereof is however supplied in some measure by the Fogs or Dew; the South Winds, which blow then from the Cape of Comoryn, prevent the Rains on that side. The Inhabitants of Peru are very sensible of this difference; for whilst the Inhabitants of the Mountains are often rejoiced with sudden Showers of Rain, those of the flat Country, and especially near the Seaside, never feel any Rain, but only a thick Fog or Dew.

Vol. III.

Whence it is evident, that according as the Mountains send forth the Winds and Rains on one side or the other, they produce the difference of Seasons in these Parts; this is very perspicuous on the Cape of South Point of Africa, where such violent gushes of Wind are sometimes sent forth out of the Concavities of the Mountains, that they are able to overturn all that meets in their way. I remember that travelling, once that way, I had enough to do to keep my self and my Horse upright; and at another time a Coach belonging to the Dutch Company there, was overturn'd by such a gush of Wind. They take it for an infallible Sign of an approaching Tempest on the Cape of Good Hope, when they see thick Clouds appear on the top of Tablemountain. The same is observed in most other Mountains under the Torrid Zone; for the Inhabitants near the Equinoctial Line have their due rainy Seasons twice a Year, viz. in Spring and Autumn, occasioned by the gathering of the Clouds in the Mountains, the Pinacles of which reaching very high, stop the course of the Air (which in those Parts moves constantly from East to West) which thereby being condensed into Clouds, these produce of necessity either sudden Winds or Rains on one side, and blesses the other side at the same time with a serene Air and happy Climate; the tops of these Mountains being in these Parts like a Partition Wall to Summer and Winter. For the further Elucidation whereof, I will refer my self to the most ingenious Lord Bacon, and des Cartes.

From Tutecoryn towards the Isle of Rammanakoyel, are to be seen divers Churches of the Paruas, as at Baipaar, Manapaar, &c. where Xaverius planted the Christian Doctrine. The Isle of Rammanakoyel abounds in Cattel, having got its Name from Bramma or Ramma, and the Malabar Word Koyel, i. e. The Temple of Ramma; for near the Sea-side is to be seen the Pagode of the Teuver, or Lord of the Isle, which they say contains an incredible Treasure. The Foundation is strengthened and supported with Stones of a vast bigness towards the Sea-side, to break the Force of the raging Waves, when the South Winds blow. The Isle is however but indifferently fertile, being in some Parts very sandy, which is very troublesome to the Eyes, when the Winds blow very hard. The Lord of the Isle has built a strong Castle opposite to the Coast of Coromandel, and the Country under the Jurisdiction of the Naik. In the Year 1662. I and Lieutenant Herman Egbertsz travelling that way, were seized upon by the Inhabitants and committed Prisoners, being forced to live without Victuals or Drink for a considerable time; till a certain Inhabitant of Manaar coming that way, and knowing me, released us out of our Captivity. The Cannon of the Cattle commands a certain strait Passage, which leading to Manaar, Jafnapatnam and Negapatnam, the same may be stopt at pleasure by the Lord of the Isle, by linking only a few Stones in the Channel, whereby the Navigation that way is at his absolute disposal.

*Adams

Not far from hence is that they call Adams-Bridge, being a Ridge of Sands and Rocks extending as far as Manaar, being sometimes passable in small Boats. In the description of Ceylon, we shall have occasion to speak something more of this Adams-Bridge, and the Adams-Mount. Certain it is, that the Cingalese as well as the Siamese have some knowledge of Adam; for the last shew you the print of a Foot (said to belong to the first Man) in a rocky Mountain of a yard and a half in length, three quarters broad, and a quarter deep, edged round about with Silver, near which is built a most magnificent Temple, much frequented by the Siamese Priests, and other Inhabitants of the circumjacent Country; it being their Opinion, that the least drop of the Water gathered in this Print of the Foot, and dropp'd upon their Heads, cleanses them from their Sins: for which reason they never use it without a great deal of Reverence, no body daring to enter the Temple without 10, 12, or more Wax Candles lighted, according to their respective Abilities; and when they return, they take some of this Holy Water along with them in Bamboc-Canes, for the use of their Friends, that have not the Opportunity of coming thither in Person. The King himself goes once every Year on Pilgrimage with all his Atandans (or great Courtiers) to this Temple, where they use this Water at the time of the Full Moon, and conclude the Night with dancing and drinking. Some of the Siamese Priests did by special leave from his Majesty, shew to certain Hollanders, 1654, in March, a Plate of Gold, of the same length and breadth as the before-mentioned Adam's Foot, with 68 Figures engraven upon it, which they said were formerly to be seen in the print of Adam's Foot in the Rock, but vanished as soon as they were engraven in Concerning all which the Priests give you their Interpretations. The before-mentioned Adam's-Bridge extends to Telleanaar, the furthermost point of the Isle of Manaar, of which more anon in the Description of Ceylon.

We will now take our turn in the Southern Parts of Coromandel, subject for the most part to the Naik of Madure and Tanjower. Tondy is the first place next to the Territories of Jafnapatnam, and I remember my self, that setting Sail one Morning about 11 a Clock from Jafnapatnam, we were within sight of the Shore by 4 in the Afternoon, and the same Night at 9 a Clock cast Anchor before Negapatnam. From Tondy they transport yearly many hundred Heads of Cattel to Jafnapatnam; near the first stands a certain Pagode, called Kailicmeer, a very high Structure, in the Road to Negapatnam or Negapatnam, i. e. Language a Serpent, and Patnama City; because the Country hereabouts abounds with a certain sort of venomous Serpents, called by the Cobres Capellos, which are in such reverence among the Pagans, that if they should happen to kill one of them, they will look upon it as an expiable Crime, and to forebode some great Misfortune.

This City was taken by composition without striking a Stroke, by John van der Laan, and Lucas van der Dussen, Commanders of the Dutch Forces, 1658. the last of the two being since made Governor of Cochin, and the other Forts on the Malabar Coast, subject to the Hollanders. The Portugueses were permitted to depart with their Goods, Families, Church-Ornaments, &c. in certain Ships appointed for that purpose by the Dutch Company. The City is seated near the Shoar, has no convenient Harbour, as indeed the whole Coast of Coromandel is destitute of them. Its Buildings are very stately, especially the Church, which affords a very goodly Prospect towards the Sea-side: The Land-Winds are excessive hot and stifling here, as on the other hand the Sea-Winds are refreshing both to Men and Beasts. It is observable that whilst the Land-Wind blows, they gather Water in Stone Vessels, which keeps very cool; the worst is, that these Winds prevent People from sweating, which makes the Heat the more insupportable. The same is to be observed at Majulipatan, where they are so stifling that many People are killed by them.

In the Year 1660. 14 July, I set sail from Jafnapatnam to Negapatnam, to introduce the Reformed Religion there, and accordingly preached the first time the 18th, both in Dutch and Portuguese, and administered the Holy Sacrament to 20 Persons, and Baptism to several Children. After Mr. Frederick Frontenius and my self had spent sometime there in settling the Protestant Religion, Mr. John Kruijs, formerly Minister in the Castle, called the Seelandia in the Isle of Tajowan, was constituted Minister at Negapatnam, who after his Death was succeeded by Mr. Nathaniel de Pape, a Person of indefatigable care, who in a very small time has made considerable Advancements in the Portuguese and Malabar Languages, who by the encouragement, and under the Protection of Mr. Cornelius Speelman Governour of the Coast of Coromandel, and famous for his late Victories obtain'd against the Macassars, and the King of the Isle of Celebes, has settled and spread the Doctrine of the Gospel in the circumjacent Villages.

At the time of our first Arrival, we found the Affairs of Negapatnam in no small Confusion; the City having been just before besieged by the Naik, who after a vigorous Sally made by the Besieged, had been forced to retreat with the Loss of 300 or 400 Men. Besides this, the King of Vishapour had not long before the Siege made an Inroad into the Country, and by destroying all the Fruits of the Earth, and whatever else he met with, occasion'd such a Famine, that the poor Country Wretches being forc'd to fly to the City for want of Rice and other Eatables, you saw the Streets cover'd with emaciated and half-starv'd Persons, who offer'd themselves to Slavery for a small quantity of Bread, and you might have bought as many as you pleas'd at the rate of 10 Shillings a Head; above 5000 of them were there bought and carried to Jafnapatnam, as many to Columbo, besides several thousands that were transported to Batavia.

In the Year 1669. the Naik was again embroil'd with the Dutch Company, but being bravely repuls'd was glad to be at quiet. Without the Gates on the North-side of the City stands a very lofty Pagode, called China, near which is a Summer-Seat, with very pleasant Gardens and Orchards, formerly belonging to Francisco d'Almeida, an antient rich Portuguese, now living at Trangebar.

CHAP. XXIII.

A Description of Carcal, Trangebar, Trimilivaas, Colderon, Porto Novo, Tegnatan, Tirepoplier, Chengier, Sadraspatan, Madraspatan, St. Thomas, Paliacatte, Carnatica, Penna, Calcutre, Perapouli, and Masulipatan.

Carcas.

TWO Leagues from Negapatan lies Carcas, where, as well as in most other Southern Places, Adrian van der Meyden Head Factor of our Company, did erect a Factory some years ago; but since we have been Masters of Negapatan, the Factory of Carcas is not regarded. The chief Commodities here are certain Stuffs, especially those call'd Rambotyns, much in request among the Japoneses.

Trangebar.

From Carcas to the Danish Fort call'd Trangebar are about three Leagues: It has four Bulworks, and the Garison consists for the most part of Tepasses and Negros, under the Command of one Eskel Andres. The Inhabitants consist of Portugueses, Pagans and Mahometans: Their Traffick is very inconsiderable, their chiefest Advantage arising from the Excursions they make upon the neighbouring Mahometans, with whom they are in constant Enmity, by reason of the ill usage they have ever received from them. About two Years before our departure thence, one Simon van Medenblick had got a Commission from the Danes, and took a rich Moorish Vessel, and kill'd the whole Ships Crew. I have often wonder'd why the Danes should not more encourage their Trade in the Indies than they do, since they have the same or rather a better opportunity for so doing than the English.

Colderon.

From Trangebar you go by the way of Trimilivaas to Colderon, where there is a very dangerous Sand-Bank. From thence you come to the Place call'd the Four Pagodis, and so to Porto Novo or Newhaven, about 4 or 5 Leagues from Trangebar. At Porto Novo inhabit some Portugueses; their Trade consists chiefly in a certain hard Wood call'd Hunters-wood, Coco-nuts, Arch, Cair, &c.

Porto Novo.

Tegnatan.

Tirepoplier.

About a League from Porto Novo stands Tegnatan, where the Hollanders have likewise a Factory. Next to this lies Tirepoplier, upon a River which is navigable, within half a League of the Dutch Factory. The Road lies at  $11\frac{1}{2}$  Degrees of Northern Latitude, having 77 Fathom Water, with a grey sandy Ground, very fit for Anchorage not above a Mile from the Shore. There is safe riding at Anchor here (as all along the Coast of Cornmandel) during the South Mousson, but very dangerous in the North Mousson. The Castle of Tirepoplier is tolerably strong, according to the fashion of the Genoises. The Factory formerly belonging to the Dutch was within the Castle, where is also a stately large Pagode, with a high Stone Tower flat at top, which serves the Mariners for a Guide. The Mines of the old Castle, belonging formerly to the Portugueses, upon an Ascent near the Sea-Shore on the North Side of the River, are also seen a good way at Sea. The Country hereabouts is generally sandy, and sometimes rocky. Tirepoplier is under the Jurisdiction of the Cristappaneyk, whose Residence is at Chengier, about two days Journey to the South of Tirepoplier.

The City of Chengier is very populous, Chengier and three times as big as Rotterdam, seated in a most pleasant Valley, near a delightful River, to the South of it: It is fortify'd with double Stone Walls, and has four high Rocks without, upon three of which are built as many strong Forts, and upon the fourth a Pagode. The first of these Rocks is enclos'd with a very strong Wall, the second with four Walls, and the third with no less than seven, with as many Gates all of Stone, and kept by a considerable Garison; the Ascents to the Forts being cut out of the Rock, and scarce accessible by reason of their Steepness and Straitness. On the top of these Rocks are most delicious Springs, Fresh-water Ponds and Gardens. Besides which there is another Fortress upon an unaccessible Rock without the City, commanding the Avenues towards it on that side. The Naik's Palace stands betwixt two of the before-mention'd Rocks, most pleasantly situate, and well fortify'd. Great Cannon are a kind of rarity here, and those few they have (like those in the Siege of Negapatan, 1658.) are made of long and broad Bars of Iron, join'd together with Iron Hoops; their Bullets are of Stone, and cut round.

The Naik was at our first arrival in these Parts, very obliging to our Deputys, whom whom he treated very splendidly for 14 Days together; and after he had given them a full view of his prodigious Wealth, consisting in most sumptuous Apparel, Silver, Gold, and Jewels, as also of his Wives, Concubines, and Forces, both Horse and Foot, he dismiss'd them very honourably, upon the news of Iteragio being on his march against us.

The Naik being almost arriv'd to the Age of Dotage, one Trinvingelaya (who had emaculated himself) was Administrator of the Kingdom, a cruel and bloody-minded Person, very covetous and implacable in his Hatred, who by his Severity against Criminals had rendered the Country free from Robberies and Pillages. This Aya or Administrator General was very urgent with our Deputies to agree with him once for all for the yearly Sum of 1800 Rixdollars in lieu of the Customs, offering to us the Government of Tegnapatan, the free Exercise of the Christian Religion, and full Power to rebuild the ruin'd Castle of the Portugueses.

The Country hereabouts abounds in Rice, Salt, Fruits, and other Eatables; notwithstanding which, by reason of the vast number of the Inhabitants, they must be supply'd with Provisions from abroad. Their chief Commodities to be exported are Linen and Woollen Stuffs, much in request among those of the Molouques, Amboyna, Banda, and other Malayan Places. But great care must be taken these Stuffs agree with their Patterns, especially in the goodness of the Colour, wherein they are very deceitful. The Commodities imported and exchanged here are Nutmegs, Mace, Pepper, Sandal-wood, Chinese Silks, Velvets, Sattins, embroider'd and wrought Carpets of all sorts of Colours, raw Silks, Patana Girdles, Musk, Cinnamon, Quick-silver, (but no Porcelain or Chinese Campher) Brazain, Tin, Lead, Copper, &c.

From Tirepopliar you go over Poelezere, Poelmoer & Alembroe to Sadraspatan, where the Dutch have a Factory, and from thence to Madraspatan, otherwise Chinnepatan, where the English have the Fort of S. George, garison'd with Topazes and Mistices, and from whence they send their Ships every Year, as well as from Surat. S. Thomas is a City belonging to the Portugueses, situate in Maliapour, at  $23\frac{1}{2}$  Degrees Northern Latitude, about a days Journey from Paliacatta; but taken from them about 8 or 9 Years ago by the Moors. It is an antient trading City, their chief Traffick consisting in colour'd Stuffs, their Weavers here being famous throughout the Indies, as well as their Dyers: They are transported to Malaga, Java, the Molouques, Baldaw, Siam, Pegu, &c. The Excellency and Lustingness of their Dying are attributed to a peculiar Quality in their Water, the Springs whereof arise out of very white sandy Ground, without the least mixture of Clay.

Paliacatta, i. e. the Old Fort in the Malabar Language, is seated at 13 Degr. 22 Min. of Northern Latitude,  $\frac{1}{2}$  long Leagues from St. Thomas. About 6 Leagues into the Country, in a direct Line from the Harbour of Paliacatta, you see a ridg of high Mountains extending from South to North: On the Southern part you see an Interstice or Valley, where in antient Times stood the Castle of Rama Geridorgon; in lieu whereof was afterwards built the Fort Geldria, where the Dutch Governour keeps his Residence. Fort Geldria. It is not very large, yet fortified with some Bulworks, sufficient to resist the Power of the neighbouring Moors. Mr. Anthony Pavilion, Counsellor of the Indies, had at that time his Residence there, as Governour, after Mr. Cornelius Speelman; and the Garison consisted of about 80 or 90 men. The Road is very good at half a League from the Shore, where you may ride safely at Anchor at 7 or 8 Fathom Depth during the Southern Mousson; but not in the Northern Mousson, when the Waves breaking forth with great violence out of the Bay of Bengal and the Ganges against this Shore, render Anchorage very dangerous.

About  $3\frac{1}{2}$  Leagues from the Road is a certain Sand-bank, extending from the River into the Sea for a League together, where there is no Anchorage within 4 or 5 fathoms Water. Two Leagues to the North is the Point of Sicerecourdi, from whence jets out into the Sea a Sand-Ridg for above two Leagues and half, near which there is no safe Anchorage within 6 or 7 fathoms Water. Near the Bar there is from 6 to 10 fathoms Water in the South Mousson at high Tide; but the Boats or Lighters that carry the Merchandizes must keep under the Southern Shoar, there being abundance of Shelves under the Northern Shoar. About a good Cannon-shot within the mouth of the River, within reach of the Castle, is a good Winter-Road for the Indian Ships. This River lies at least 5 Leagues to the North-West into the Country, by the City of Armagon and the Forest of Sicerecourdi, from whence Paliacatta is furnished with Wood for Building and Fuel, whereof there is great great scarcity in the barren Grounds round that City. A small Brook runs also by the Fort, where we used often to divert our selves in Boats.

The Canal leading to Paliacatta is almost dry during the South Mousson, but overflows the Country for two Leagues round in the Northern Mousson. The Grounds about Paliacatta are very nitrous, sandy, and unfit to produce any thing in great quantity; which is the reason that they must be supply'd with most sorts of Provisions (except Fish, whereof they have plenty) from other places. The Fortifications being built upon Fenny Grounds, which reach for four or five Leagues round, have been often in danger of being swallow'd up by the Waters in the rainy season, and were therefore not maintain'd without vast Charges. Under the Cannon of the Fort of Geldria lie two Villages, one to the South call'd Diramamy, built upon a small Isle, the other on the North-side within reach of a Musquet, call'd Coupon, and inhabited by Christian Fishermen, being converted to the Christian Faith in the time of the Portugueses.

We will now proceed to the Kingdom of Carnatica, extending 60 Badagarian Leagues (one whereof is equivalent to three Dutch Miles) from South to North, and 40 from Paliacatta to the Coast of Malabar. In this Country it was that the three Nais, or chief Lords of the Crown of Velour, keep their Residence, who pay a certain yearly Tribute to that Crown, viz. the Vitapanak of Madure, the King's Bafon-Bearer, 200 Pagodes (each of which is worth six Holland Guilders) per annum; the Christapanak of Chengier the King's Betel Box-bearer, as many; and the Naik of Tanjouwer his Umbrello-bearer (who is Lord of Negapatan) 400 per annum. These Dignities being hereditary time out of mind, the Countries of Madure, Chengier and Tanjouwer have been annexed to them, under condition of a yearly Tribute, and are besides this oblig'd to give their personal Attendance at the Coronation of the lawful Successor of the before-mentioned Kingdom.

Further to the North (about a days Voyage) from Paliacatta, lie Penna and Caleture, betwixt which places is found the best Effaye Roots, which are also to be found in the Isles near Tasnapatan: It is a small Root no bigger than a little sprig of about a span in length, used by the Dyers. The way to try its goodness, is to break it to pieces, and to see whether it be very red within, or else to chew a piece of it, and if you perceive a nitrous taste in it, it is very good. To try the true Dye thereof upon Callico's, you may squeeze some Lemmon Juice upon it, and let it dry in the Sun; if it be not true it will change pale. There is also a live corner'd Fruit call'd Carantelle, the Juice whereof being sharper than that of Lemmons, is likewise made use of in trying the true Dye of the Effaye Colour. For this Nation being very cunning in their way of dealing, they make use of a Dye call'd Soracco instead of the Effaye, and of the Bark of a certain Tree growing in Orissa, but may easily be distinguish'd by the colour, being somewhat darker than the true Effaye, and if rub'd with Water, will tinge it. They have a nice way of refining and trying the Gold here, and the Dutch Company coin abundance of Golden Pagodes here, with the King's Stamp upon them. Abundance of Nely, Rice, Gingely-seeds, Oil, Butter, coarse Cloths, Iron, Honey and yellow Wax, is brought hither from Orissa and Majulipatan, the whole Voyage thither and back again being commonly perform'd in four Months. From hence to Aracan, Pegu and Tanassery you pay 8 or 10 per Cent. for Freight of Pepper, Sandalwood, Stuff and Iron, and make your returns in Gold, Rubies of Ava, Gummi-Lacca, long white Pepper, Lead, &c. Betwixt Tanassery and Orinda towards Malacca are the Harbours of Tanangar, Sencaza, and Peraib, opposite to Achem, whither they trade with vast Profit, and bring back abundance of Tin, a Commodity much in request with the Moors, wherewith they tin their Copper Vessels.

Petapoutis is situate at 16 deg. of North Latitude: As you sail East and East to the North towards this Road, you see an Isle at a League and a half distance made by the North Branch of the River cover'd with Coco-Trees, an infallible Guide to the Road, where at a League's distance from the Shoar, there is good Anchorage at 6 fathoms Water in a Sandy Bottom. This is the securest Harbour on all this Coast, during the North Mousson, by reason of a Point of Land jetting out for three Leagues in the Sea to the North of the Isle, and enclosing as it were the Road by a Demi-Circle, whereas in the South Mousson the Sea is very boisterous, and the Waves very turbulent here. the River, which is pretty large, and runs up into the Country till it joins its Waters with the River Meca.

Petapouli is of no great extent, inhabited by some Moors and Persians of Note, but for the most part by Gentives, Subjects of the King of Golgonda. As hereabouts grows a kind of Essaye Colour, exceeding all the rest, call'd Tambrevelle, so the painted and dy'd Stuffs of Petapouli exceed even those of Masulipatan. The Root grows like a small sprig of a foot long, the Colour whereof is so deep that they are oblig'd to mix it with the Essaye of Avrical and Ortaour, to make it the more lively. This Essaye Root grows in the Isle made by the River over against the City, whereof the Governour has the Monopoly, and pays a certain yearly Sum for it to the King, which as it is paid most commonly in dy'd Stuffs and Cloths, so he employs the Weavers himself, and for that reason will not easily permit them to be sold to the Merchants (at least not without his Consent) who transport them from thence into Persia. Here good Indigo is to be bought, but much dearer than at Masulipatan: From hence we also transport Cotton-Yarn, white Stuffs, and several other Commodities to Holland.

Masulipatan is a City seated near a large River, where the English and Dutch have their Factories: It is very populous, and the Residence of a Governour, who pays a certain yearly Tribute to the King of Golgonda, which he squeezes out of the Inhabitants, especially the Gentives, who are sorely oppress'd by the Persians and Moors here, who farm all the Weaving Trade from the Great Persons; wherefore there is scarce any trafficking here without Profit, unless you have a Patent from the King, which is not easy to be obtain'd, because the Governours (who pay 140000 Pagodes of annual Tribute to the King) constantly oppose it: and it is no difficult matter to approach the King (who keeps his Court at a great distance thence) without purchasing their Favour, or some other Great Mens at Court. For the rest, this City is a Place of great Traffick, where most of our Commodities, as also those transported hither from the Moliques, China, &c. are sold at a very good rate. Here is also a great Concourse of Merchants from Cambaja, Suratte, and other Places under the Jurisdiction of the Great Mogul, as also from Goa, Orisa, Bengale and Pegu. Here is likewise a considerable Traffick in Diamonds and Rubies: The first are digged in the Kingdoms of Golgonda and Decan, near the City of Bysilaga beyond Suratte: Each Stone weighing above 25 Mangely's, or Carats, belonging to the King of Bysilaga, the rest to those that have farm'd the Mines. There is a certain Mountain call'd Cotja Puyithia, in the Country of Decan, which affords the choicest Diamonds. Borneo, but especially the City of Succadana, are likewise very famous for Diamonds.

C H A P. XXIV.

An Account of most sorts of precious Stones, as Diamonds, Rubies, Smaragds, Saphirs, Amethysts, Jaspers, Sardonicks, Achats, Granates, &c.

THE most noble of all precious Stones is the Diamond, call'd Adamas by the Greeks, from ἀδύνατος, i. e. impregnable. Pliny, and others of the ancient Naturalists being of opinion, that it is neither to be broken by the force of the Hammer, nor penetrable by the violence of the Fire; which however has since been sufficiently contradicted by Experience; tho the same is several times used in the same sense in the Scripture*. It is likewise call'd Adamas by the Latins, Deamant by the Germans, Adamanto by the Spaniards, Almaes by the Arabians, Jutan by the Malajars, and Hiera and Jua by the Indothians. The Beauty of a Diamond consists in its Hardness, Transparency and Lustre; tho to speak the truth, there are but few Diamonds without some Defects, which however pass current among those who are no nice Judges of it. Lead is reckon'd to be exactly three times as heavy as a polish'd Diamond.

There is a certain kind of Diamonds call'd Boschiers, which are not by a third part so valuable as the rest, tho sometimes they exceed for Brightness all the other sorts; but if they incline to a reddish or yellow Colour, they are not worth half so much, they being only valued according to the weight of the Carats without any Multiplication. To try the goodnes of a Diamond you must cut one Diamond with another, and if the Powder thereof be of an Ash-colour, it is right, but if white, otherwise; for all other precious Stones except the Diamond afford a white Powder, and the more the Powder of the Diamond approaches to a Grey, the more precious it is. They have another way of trying the Diamonds, by making them red hot, and afterwards quenching them in cold fresh Water, and if they don't crack they are true and good. The true Value of the best Diamonds (provided they are clean and of a just thickness) is computed thus: The just Value of a good Diamond weighing a Carat (each whereof is equivalent to four Grains) is 80 Gilders, or 32 Rix-dollars. Now to know the just Value of one or two Carats, you must multiply two with two, the Product whereof being four, this must be multiplied with the value of a Diamond of one Carat, viz. 80 Gilders, the Product whereof amounts to 320 Gilders; so that according to this Computation, a Diamond of 20 Carats is worth 32000 Gilders, and according to the same proportion, one of 100 Carats no less than 800000 Gilders.

The Ruby, call'd Rubinus or Carbunculus by the Latins, Mamwikam by the Malayans, Battamora by the Siameses, and Laal by the Indosthans; it will endure the Fire for a considerable time. There are three several sorts of Rubies, some are of a high red and brilliant colour; those of a dark red colour, tho they carry a very fine Lustre, yet are not so much valued as the former. The Oriental Rubies are call'd Espinelles, those of Germany are very hard, but inclining to a dark brown, and therefore of less Value; notwithstanding which they are true Rubies: they seldom exceed the bigness of a good Pea, and are very thin, and the Stone-Polishers make them thinner, still to increase their Lustre. The Espinelles are of much brighter Colour, but not so hard, and consequently of less or more Value in proportion to their Hardness, some being as hard as a Sapphire.

The Carbuncles are adulterated with Sandaracha, but these false Colours are soon discovered in the Corners of the polished Stones, which don't receive these Colours. The Oriental Carbuncles are likewise of two different kinds, some are of a dark brown Colour, the others are bright and carry Lustre like Fire, and these are the most precious. The Rubies are apprais'd like the Diamonds by Carats, one, two, three, or more, with this difference, that the Rubies tho of the same Weight, are somewhat bigger in proportion than the Diamonds, and without the least Clouds or other Defects.

The Smaragd or Emerault, called Tamarul by the Arabians, and Jasche by the Indians, is one of the precious Stones called Σμαράγδος by the Greeks, and Emeraude by the French. They are of three different kinds. Scythia and Egypt produce these Stones, as well as the East-Indies. They endeavour to imitate them at Paliacatta and Bisnagar in Glas. Those of Scythia are accounted the best, those of Peru are the next in Goodness, or a dark green Colour, very hard, and more transparent than those of the East-Indies. These last are harder than those of Peru, but much less regarded. Those of Peru are of a pale Colour and brittle. The general Opinion is, that in case an Emerault should be found excellent in all its Parts, viz. in Colour, Shape and Transparency, it would be comparable to a Diamond of the same bigness, nay this would even surpass it in value, by reason of its rarity.

The Saphir is called Mila by the Arabians, and Millam by the Malayans. They are of two sorts, those of a dark blue Colour are the best, those of a pale Colour resembling the Diamonds, the worst. They are found in Malabar, Calecut, Cannanor, in the Kingdom of Bisnagar, in the Isle of Ceylon, but Siam and Pegu produce the best.

The Hyacinth called Υάκινθος by the Greeks, is a red Stone, not unlike the Carbuncle, but does not endure the Fire. It is found in Spain: the Jewellers sell sometimes the Stone called Ethiopsis, for a Hyacinth: they are of two kinds, one red, the other inclining to a yellow.

The Ametist, called Ἀμέτιςτος by the Greeks, is of a purple Colour; those that are found in the East-Indies are preferred before the rest.

The Jaspir so called by the Latins, and Υάσπρις by the Greeks, is of two different kinds, some being of a lovely green Colour, like the Emeraults, and of such a bigness, as to serve for Materials for Drinking-cups; some have the green mix'd with white; some are of purple, others of a rose Colour with variety of Flowers in them; others are dark brown and blew, with white Veins; some are Marble on one, and Jasper on the other side.

kinds, goodness
and value.

The Sardis has got its Name from Sardinia, where it is frequently found, as well as in Epirus. There are three several kinds, and were by the Antients distinguished into the Male and Female. That the Sardis is different from the Sardonick, is evident out of the Holy Scripture*.

The Sardonick, called Σαρδόνιξ by the Greeks, has got its Name from Sarda and Onyx, or its resemblance to a human Navel.

The Achat is found about Suratte, but is of no great value, unless it be curiously chequered with Figures.

Amber called Succinum by the Latins, ἡλεκτρον by the Greeks, and Alambre by the Portuguese, is a kind of a Gum or resinous Substance, found near Koningsberg, and some other Places in Prussia; in great esteem among the Japoneses and the Indians in general. It is often chequered with various Figures, and has the virtue of attracting Straw, Paper, and such like light Matters.

The Granate resembles in Colour to the Coral. There are two sorts, the Indian and Spanish, the last are very red and bright; those found in Ethiopia are scarce to be distinguished from the Hyacinth, except that their Lustre is somewhat less than that of the Hyacinth.

The Stone called Olbos de Gatos, i. e. Cats eyes, by the Portuguese, is in much greater esteem among the Indians than the Portuguese; who are of Opinion, that if you rub Linen-Cloth with them, it will be fire-proof: but this I have found contrary to Truth by my own experience.

The Hematites or Bloodstone (ἡματιτὴς by the Greeks) has got its Name from its dark red Colour, and its virtue in quenching of Blood. It is found in New-Spain, and reputed by them a kind of Jasper; the Indians make Beads of them, and wear them about their Necks: They also lay them in Water, and afterwards hold them close in their Hands, and look upon this as an excellent Remedy to stop the superfluous Monthly times of the Women, or any other Flux of Blood. This Stone is also found in Ceylon and Cambaja, where it is called Silakenea.

The Nephritis or Kidneystone, has got its Name from the word νεφρός, i. e. a Kidney, because it is worn by the Indians against the Pain of the Kidneys, and therefore in great esteem among them. It is found in New-Spain, and the greener it is, the better it is.

The Naturalists tell us, that the Stag, when tormented in his Bowels by certain poisonous Worms, runs up to the Neck in Water, at which time the slimy Tears which adhere to the Corners of his Eyes are coagulated to the bigness of a Wall-nut, which thence have got the Name of Hurtstones; which taken in Wine, are look'd upon as a Sovereign Antidote against all manner of Poisons and Infections.

The Serpentstone is found in the Indies, of a dark brown Colour, with a white Spot like an Eye in the middle. Some will have them to grow in the Heads of the Serpents; others are of opinion, that the Water-Serpent hung up by the Tail, with her Head hanging downwards, so near to a Vessel full of Water, that she may lick it, does spew out this Stone, which tied to the Belly, is accounted an excellent Remedy against the Dropsy. The Spaniards call this Stone Piedro della Cobra, and the Portuguese Pedra de Cobra, being commonly of the bigness of a Shilling, less or more. The true Serpentstone is found in that kind of Serpents, call'd Cobra de Cabelo by the Portuguese, and Serpens Pilosus by the Latinists, being the most virulent of all Serpents. They try the Goodness of this Stone, by putting it into fair Water, which if it bubbles, it is accounted true; another Trial is, when it sticks close to the Lips, or to the Wound, unto which it will adhere till it has drawn out all the Poison, when it falls off like a Leech, and is thrown into Milk: Of this I saw the effect my self with good Success in a Negro Slave stung by a Serpent, belonging to our Head Factor at Jafnapatnam, Sir Jorephas Vofch. The Brahmans make a certain Composition (which they keep very secret) in imitation of the natural Serpentstone, the chief Ingredients whereof are suppos'd to be the Head, Heart, Liver and Teeth mix'd with the Terra sigillata. Concerning the true Virtues of the Serpentstones, you may consult Michael Boimus*, and Athanafius Kircher†.

The Stone called Pedra de Porco, i. e. Hogs-stone, by the Portuguese, grows in the Vesica Bilearea of the Hogs about Malacca. It is of a ruddy Colour, and sometimes grey, greasy or oily at the touch like Venice-soap, and of a bitterish Taste. When they will use this Stone, they put it in Water, till it acquires a bitterish Taste, and so give the Water to the Patient, for the cure of Pestilential and other Fevers. They are highly esteemed in the Indies.

Hogs-stone.

 The Toad-stone is found in the Head of Baldaw, a certain kind of Toads of the bigness of a good Bean, of various Colours, but most inclining to a green, smooth and shining on the outside, which is bony, but the inside of a stony Substance: They are reputed an excellent Remedy against the Stone in the Kidneys, Poison and Infirmary of the Stomach. To get this Stone, they take a very old Toad, put it in a Vessel full of Holes, and so bury it in a Dunghil near a Pismires Nest, till the Pismires have consumed the whole Substance of the Toad, except the Stone. They try the Goodness of this Stone, by laying it before a Tortoise, which if it is ready to swallow it, it is accounted a true Stone.

 Of the Bezoar-stone something has been said before in the Description of Cananor, being accounted a great Antidote, but esteemed much more in former times than of late Years. The Bezoar-Stone is found in the Stomach of certain Goats in Persia, and the Isle of Borneo called Pazan. It is of a very solid ruddy Substance, growing in different Partitions, like our Onions, which are easily discernable when the Stone is broken: They are of divers Colours, some inclining to an Olive-Colour, others to a dark green, some round, some of an oval Figure; the smoothest and largest are accounted the best. They are also found in the Isle, called Illa de Vacas, i. e. Cow-Island, about 6 Leagues from Jafnapatnam, but in no great Quantities; for I remember that Mr. Anthony Pavilion told me, that out of 70 or 80 Goats, which he ordered to be killed, he had but a few Stones, and these but indifferent ones and very brittle. The Malayans try this Stone thus; they rub it five or six times with Mortar, and if it changes the Mortar into a yellow Colour, it is accounted true. Those of Banda tell us, that they find the Bezoar-stone in the Heads of certain Apes. The Indians and Chineses mix it with Rose-water, and use it against Poison, melancholy Humours, and Quartan Agues. They also make use of it as a Preservative; for they purge twice a year, viz. in March and September, and for five days after take from 10 to 30 Grains of Bezoar in Rose-water. They sell this Stone by weight; one of 300, 250, 150, or 140 Carats, is accounted equivalent to three times the weight in Gold; each Carat reckon'd at 8 Dutch Stivers. One of 100, 90 or 80 Carats, to 1; the quantity of Gold, or at 6 Stivers the Carat. One of 70, 60, 50, or 40 Carats, to 1  $\frac{1}{2}$ of Gold, or at 4 Stivers the Carat. The lesser ones in proportion of  $\frac{1}{2}$  of Gold, or 2  $\frac{1}{2}$  Stivers the Carats.

There are Oriental and Occidental Bezoar-stones; those of the East, especially of Persia, much exceed those of the West-Indies. Arabia, Malabar, Japan, and China produce these Stones, and the Mountains of Peru in the West-Indies. The Persians call this Stone Belzoar, i. e. the Lord of Poison; and the Arabians, Higiar Corrahone. Formerly it us'd to be sold in Holland at the rate of 8 Guilders per Ounce. If the outward Rind or Skin be taken off, the next appears smoother and brighter than the first. The Bezoar-stone has no Pit, but a Concavity containing a certain mealy Substance, the Virtue whereof is said to excel the Stone itself. Those taken out of the Goats living in the Mountains, are accounted better than of those feeding in the Valleys. These Stones are found in certain Bags of a hairy Substance, growing within the Concavity of the Stomach, of a Span in length, wherein the Stones lie in a row like Buttons on a Waistcoat, as a certain Portuguese tells us. They have also another way of trying the goodness of this Stone: They take a Needle with a Thred, and having dip'd the same in the Juice of a venomous Herb call'd Ballestra, they draw the Needle and Thred thro the Leg of a Dog or some other living Creature, leaving the Thred in the Wound till the Dog faints away. This done, they give him a certain quantity of Bezoar Powder, which if it recovers him, the Bezoar is good; if not, it is look'd upon as adulterated. Of several other Trials we have spoken in the Description of Cananor.

Among those Commodities which are transported from Masulipatan, the Indigo being none of the least, it will be requisite we should say something also of this precious Merchandize. The Indigo is of different kinds, and grows in divers Places: The broad Indigo grows about two Leagues from Amadabath the Capital City of Gusuratte, especially in the Village of Circhees, from whence that kind of Indigo has got its Name. The Indigo is a Shrub growing up to a Man's height, with small hard Twigs like the Blackberry-Trees: Its Blossom resembles that of the Briars, and the Seed that of the Fennon Gracum, call'd Dusenegre by the French. They sow it in June and July, and cut it in November and December.

The Indigo of Circhees grows three years successively after its first Sowing. The first Year they cut the Leaves about a Foot above the Ground; which being dry'd in the Sun for 24 Hours, they are put into Barrels full of Salt-water, of a Man's height, and kept down to the bottom, by laying great Stones upon them, the better to squeeze out the Tincture. The Water being stir'd often for 4 or 5 days, it is let out into great Casks, where it is stir'd and trod continually by certain Persons, till the Water thickens, and the Indigo settles to the bottom, in the same manner as they manage the Butter in Holland. The Sediment being separated from the Water, and strain'd thro thin Cloths, is spread upon the Ground (first cover'd with white Ashes) to dry. The Country People adulterate the Indigo with a certain Earth of the same colour, or with Oil, to make it seem the better upon the Water. The second Year the Indigo grows again on the Stalks that were left in the Fields, which is accounted better than the Gingy or wild Indigo. If you intend to preserve the Seed, you must let the Stalks dry the second time, and afterwards gather the Seed. The Indigo of the third Year's growth is of little value, and consumed for the most part by the Inhabitants of Gujurate in dyeing their Linen and Woollen Cloths.

The chief Signs of the goodness of the Indigo are, its Lightness and feeling dry betwixt the Fingers, its swimming upon the Water, and, if thrown upon burning Coals, its emitting a Violet-colour'd Smoke, and leaving but little Ashes behind. The Ground which has born the Indigo must lie fallow the fourth Year, unless you would sow it with some Kitchen Herbs.

Hereabouts also grows the Indigo call'd Aniel de Biant, by those of Gujurate. They sow it in June in light and sandy Grounds, and it grows chiefly in June, July, August and September, the ordinary rainy Months here; which together with the Heat of the Sun-beams brings it to Maturity, it being certain, that too much Rain is pernicious to this Shrub. Great care is to be taken that the Grounds be well cleared from Thorns and Thistles. The Buyers of Indigo ought to be cautious how they buy it; for if it happen to be not very dry, they may lose three Pound weight in ten in 8 days time.

The Indigo Laura, or Indigo de Bayana, is of three different sorts: The first Crop is call'd Pouthy by those of Gujurate, the second Gerry, and the third Cateel. The first is cut in October, the second about the middle of November, and the third in January. The first is of a light blue Colour, and held against the Sun, and squeez'd with the Nail of the Thumb, shews a Violet Colour. The second, call'd Gerry, the nearer it approaches to a Violet Colour, the more valuable it is. The third, call'd Cateel, is the worst of all, of a ruddy colour, and so hard, as scarce to be broken to pieces.

The goodness of the Indigo is try'd in the following manner: About 9 or 10 a Clock in a clear Sun-shiny Morning they take a Piece or two, and after they have broken it in pieces, hold it against the Sun, to see whether they can discover any Sand in it: They also squeeze with their Nails some of the Colour out, which the nearer it comes to a Violet, the better it is. They also try it with Water and Fire: They throw a Piece of Indigo 40 or 50 times successively into a Cask fill'd with Water, and the longer it swims upon the Surface, the better it is deem'd. They also cast a Piece of Indigo upon burning Coals, and if the Smoke or Flame appear of a high Violet Colour, the Indigo is good.

It is sowed in several Places: The Indigo Laura about Agra; in Fettapour, 12 Cos from Agra; near the City of Byana, 30 Cos from Agra (where is the best); near the City of Bassaune, 38 Cos from Agra; near the City of Kindowen, 40 Cos from Agra. The Country People are oblig'd to carry their Indigo into the next adjacent City.

Next to Majulipatan we must also say something of Bimilipatan, where the Dutch have had a Factory a considerable time ago, and from thence, as well as most other Parts of Oyixa, transport abundance of Rice, Pease, and other Provisions, into other Parts. The whole Country hereabouts enjoys a wholesome Air, tho in one Place more than in the other: For tho the Heats are excessive, nay almost intolerable, yet are the same in a great measure qualified by the cool Sea-Winds; so that the reason of the many Distempers and pale Countenances, which often attend the Europeans in those Parts, is not so much to be attributed to the Unhappiness of the Climate, as to their own Intemperance and Debaucheries.

The Manner of Living of the Hollanders in the East-Indies. Their use of Tea and Chocolate: Their ordinary Drink; Manner of Sleeping. A Description of the two Rivers, the Ganges and the Nile.

the Dutch.*

AS the manner of Living of the vulgar sort among the Dutch in the East-Indies, is none of the best, so we will be satisfy'd with giving an account of those of the better sort. They commonly rise with the Sun, Sleep after Sun-rising being accounted very unwholsom here in the Morning. Some have a Custom of washing their Heads, nay the whole Body with cold Water, immediately after their coming out of bed; others do it with luke-warm Water three or four times a week; the last of which I have found the best by experience. They commonly shift their Linen every day. Brandy or any other strong Liquors are not much used by the wiser sort in the Morning, unless it be a Spoonful just before Dinner, and a little at night before they go to bed.

Tea.*

The Tea (always used fasting by the Chinese) has got a mighty Ascendant over the Hollanders of late Years. The best grows in China, being a Shrub rising not very high above-ground, especially in the Province of Kiangnan, near the City of Hocien. The Leaves are dry'd, roll'd up and preserv'd for use. Father Martinus Martini, in his Chinese Atlas, gives us the following account of the Tea. The Leaves are very like those of the Rhus Coriaria, call'd Sumach by the Arabians, and Σύμαχ by the Greeks, of which it seems to be a Species; tho it does not grow wild, but is planted, being a Shrub with small Twigs. In the beginning of the Summer it buds out a light-colour'd Blossom of an agreeable Scent, after which come green Buds that turn black at last. They take a Leaf, and after they have warm'd it in an Iron Pot with a gentle Heat, they lay it upon a clean Mat, and having well roll'd it, put it again over the Fire, till it be thoroughly dry'd, and twist'd together; when they put it up in Tin or Leaden Vessels, to preserve it from the moist Air, which would soon corrupt it. The Tea being of different sorts, consequently bears a lower or higher Price, according to its goodness. Its chief Virtues are to disperse the gross Vapours of the Head and Stomach, and consequently to exhilarate our Spirits. The Chinese, as they are never troubled with the Gout,

so they attribute the same to the Tea, and Kircher ascribes to it a Diuretick Quality. Its Taste is somewhat bitterish, and not very agreeable at first, but well enough afterwards. The Turks tell us Wonders of their Cawwa or Coffee, and the Spaniards of their Chocolate; but it has been found by experience, that the first encreases the Gall, and the last enflames the Blood, and nourishes too fast; whereas the Tea is much more moderate in its Nature, notwithstanding which its immoderate use hinders the Concoction of the Stomach (especially if taken after Dinner) and too much dries up the Moistures of the Body, which is the reason the Chinese never take it after Meals. The Chinese Tea is both in Goodness and Price much superior to the Japanese. I have found by experience that four or five Cups of the Extraction of the fresh Leaves of the Tea makes one light-headed; and I remember, when the best Tea was sold at the rate of 24 Gilders per Pound in Holland.

The ordinary Drink of the Hollanders is a Mixture of Water and Sugar boil'd together. Some fill certain Earthen Vessels over night with Water, and add to it 3 or 4 Glasses of Spanish Wine, which expos'd together all night in the Dew, turns white, and affords a pleasant Liquor; but is a little too cool, for which reason some put a certain quantity of Mum in the Vessel. The Brunswick Mum is both more pleasant and wholsom here than in Europe; the worst is, that it is excessive dear, a Cask being sometimes sold from 40 to 100 Rixdollars. Among the Wines, those of Spain are most in request: It's true they sometimes inflame the Gall; but against that they make use of Rhubarb and Cremor of Tartar. The French and Rhenish Wines are not strong enough in these hot Countrys, where the Stomach requires more lively Cordials, as a little Brandy, or a moderate share of Canary. Their ordinary Food is Goats, Sheep, Fowl, Hares, Peacocks, and such like.

The Hollanders most generally take their Afternoons Sleep here, as the Italians and some other Europeans do in hot Countries; a thing sufficiently commendable in in the Indies, where the Heat of the Sun beams invites the Inhabitants to pass away the middle of the Day (when they are unfit for Business) at their ease. They have also a constant Custom of washing their Mouths after Dinner. About three or four a Clock in the Afternoon they take their Tea, and after that a Walk; the Evenings and Nights being pretty cool and very pleasant here, especially when the Moon shines. They sup commonly about 7 or 8 a Clock, but very moderately, and go to sleep about 10 or 11 upon Quilts, Feather-beds being not us'd in the Indies: But care must be taken to cover well your Belly, Hips and Legs, for fear of the Cramp, especially if you lie expos'd to the open Air in Moon-shiny Nights, the neglect of which often proves fatal to the Soldiers and Seamen, after they have heated themselves with Arak, or other strong Liquors.

Thus much of the manner of Living of the Hollanders in the East-Indies. Concerning the different Clans or Families of the Indians, the manner of Living, Austerity and Prerogatives of the Brahmans, their Vedam Fasts, Marriages, Feasts, Burials, Mr. Abraham Rogerius has given so exact an account, that it would be needless to repeat them here. The Foundation, Strength and Magnificence of their Pagodas, especially of those dedicated to Wijnou and Eswara, with their Revenues and Idols, are likewise most exactly describ'd by the same Author; and among other things, that their Pagodas have no other Light but what they receive thro a Hole on the top; that they are divided into three several Vaults, supported by Stone Pillars: The first whereof stands open to all Goers and Comers: The second has two strong Doors, which are kept open in the day time, and guarded by a certain number of Brahmans: The third part is always kept close, being the Residence of the Idol, before which hang Lamps, which never cease to burn. But of the religious Worship of the Inhabitants of Coromandel, Malabar and Ceylon, we shall treat more at large in the third Part of this Treatise.

And since we have had occasion to speak so much of the Places between the Rivers Indus and Ganget, commonly known by the Name of India on this side the Ganges, we must also say something concerning these two Rivers. The Ganges exonerates it self into the Sea of Bengale, call'd otherwise Sinus Gangeticus and Sinus Argavicus by Ptolomey, dividing the most Easterly Part of the Indies from the Western Parts; the first whereof comprehend Bengai, Aracan, Pegu, Malacca, Sumatra, &c. According to the opinion of St. Austin, St. Jerom, Ambrose, and many others of the ancient Fathers, the Ganges is the same which is in the Holy Scripture call'd Pison; but Cornelius a Lapide has sufficiently demonstrated that Pison cannot be the River Ganges, no more than Gihon the Nilus. The general Opinion is that the Source of the Ganges is in the Mount Caucasus, as those of the Euphrates and Tigris are in the Armenian Mountains, and that of the Nile among the Mountains of the Moos, near the Cape of Good Hope on the African Coast; tho Father Kircher puts the original Rise of the Nile in the Country of Agiis near Sagela bordering upon the Kingdom of Goyam. The Source arises in a Plain on the very top of the Mountain, surrounded with delightful Trees; but does not gather into a Rivulet till at the Foot of the said Mountain; and being augmented by the accession of divers other Brooks, gathers into a Lake of 30 Leagues in length, and 14 in breadth. From hence it pursues its Course, and by various Turnings and Windings returns near the Place of its Source, whence passing thro the Rocks and Precipices, it continues its Course into the middle of Ethiopia. * Isaac Vossius derives the Rise of the Nile out of Goyome, a Province of the Abyssines, and says, that among other Titles that King makes use of this: King of Goyome, where the Nile has its Rise. The ancient Egyptians had so great a Veneration for the Nile, that they bestow'd the Title of the Arm of Osiris upon it: For as the Pagans numbred the rest of the Elements among the Gods, so they had no less opinion of the Waters, especially in the Great Rivers. Hence it is that the Inhabitants near the Ganges call it the Heavenly River, and are of opinion, that the Waters of that River cleanse them from their Sins; nay those of Bengale are so superstitious in this Point, as to carry their sick and dying Friends to this River, where they lay them up to the middle in Water: And for such as have no Opportunity or Strength to be carry'd thither, they are persuaded, that if they wash themselves with any other Water, and at the same time think upon the said River, saying, Ganges, purify me, they shall be cleansed from their Sins. † Servius observes, that it was the general Opinion of the Heathens, that the Water would cleanse them from their Sins: Which seems to agree with what is related of Pilate, Baldæus, Pilate *, and of the Pharisees and Jews in general. The Mahometans are to this day not free from that Superstition, the Water of the Ganges being sold among them in Bottles at a very good Price, as we do our Spaw-Waters; and they pay a considerable Custom for it.

* Mat. 27.

Hence it is, that the Persians look upon it as a Crime to do ones need into the River, or to throw Carrion into it, nay even to spit into it; and that they have attributed such surprizing Qualities to the Waters of many Rivers. When the Water of the Nile is carried in order to be sacrific'd upon the Altar, the People pay their Reverence to the Vessel that contains it, by prostrating themselves upon the Ground in the same manner as the Malabars do to the Water of Rameswara, near the Pagode call'd Ramanakool, to which they attribute likewise a peculiar Virtue of purging them from their Sins.

Kircher puts the Source of the River Ganges in the Mount Thebeth, where he says is a large Sea, whence arise the four Capital Rivers of India, viz. the Indus, Ganges, Kavi, and Athac. The Indian Pagans deduce its Origin from Dewendre, or the Heavens, from whence it descends into the Dewendre Locon, or sublunary World; and thence into the Earth, as may be seen in the before-said Abraham Rogerius. They farther believe, that if they cast the Bones of their deceas'd Friends into the Ganges, their Souls will enjoy the Bliss of Dewendre for as many thousand Years as the Bones remain single Years in that River; it being their Opinion, that tho this Water has not the Power to introduce them to future Bliss, yet it is a Guide to Heaven thro the seven sublunary Worlds, which they believe every one must pass thro before he can enter the Heavens. They have each its proper Name, but are comprehended under one general Name, viz. Dewendre Locon; and among them that of Bramma Locon, or the Place where Bramma governs, is next to Heaven; and none are suffer'd to enter there, except such as are pass'd from Heaven to the Earth, and thence again thro the before-mention'd sublunary Worlds. It is beyond all doubt that many both among the Jews and Gentiles have assign'd certain Places for the Souls to dwell in, besides Heaven and Hell; in which they are imitated by the Purgatory-mongers, and such as believe a separate Place for the Antient Fathers and Innocent Children.

Before the River Ganges puts a stop to our Voyage, and the Description of the Places mention'd in this Treatise, we must add something concerning the Malabar Language. *

A short Introduction to the Malabar Language.

THE Malabars write upon the Leaves of the wild Palm-Trees with Iron Pencils; their Letters are very antient, and distinguish'd into (1.) Short or running Letters, (2.) Long ones, (3.) Vowels, (4.) Consonants, (5.) Diphthongs, (6.) Letters us'd only in the beginning of a Word, (7.) Such as are us'd only in the Middle, and (8.) Such as are us'd only in the End, as will more clearly appear out of the annexed Cuts. And seeing that the Malabar Letters have hitherto not appeared in publick Print, either in Holland or Germany, it will not be amiss to alledg the Reasons thereof, and to shew that this Language is no less worth our care now-a-days, than the Hebrew, Chaldean, Arabian, Persian, Samaritan and other Languages.

The main reason why the Malabar Language has remained so long unknown to us, is, because that Country was not conquered by the Dutch Company till in the Years 1661, 1662, 1663. from the Portuguese; and it is not their Custom to send any Ministers into those Places, where they are not Sovereign Masters. 'Tis true, I assisted at the Sieges of Coulang, Cranganor, Cochim, &c. and 1658. at the Sieges of Tutecoryn, Manaar, Jafnapatnam and Negapatnam; but was immediately after order'd to Psephima in the Kingdom of Jafnapatnam, where I had the oversight over 24 Churches. During the space of near four Years that I staid here alone, I was sensible what Obstacle the Ignorance of the Native Language was to my good Intentions: For tho many of the Christians here were well enough versed in the Dutch and Portuguese Languages, yet some belonging to the more remote Churches, who had been but slenderly instructed in the Principles of the Christian Religion by the Roman Missionaries, were strangely at a loss till I got a good Interpreter, who being well skill'd both in his Mother Tongue the Malabar, and the Portuguese Languages, did me great Services for eight Years together. His Name was Francis, and it was chiefly with his Assistance, that the fundamental Points of our Religion, being comprehended in a small Treatise, were translated out of the Portuguese into the Malabar Language, which has been since printed, 1671. at Rotterdam, by John Berstius. The multiplicity of Business in so weighty a concern as the Salvation of Souls, having been no small hindrance in encompassing so difficult a Language as the Malabar; I was forced to be contented with what part thereof I could attain, and those few Intervals of time I had left, whereof I have given some Specimen in the following Pages and Cuts. I can't upon this Occasion pass by in Silence the Considerations which might induce us to propagate the Malabar Language with more care, than has been done hitherto; it being certain, that if our Religious Worship could be firmly established in those Parts (whereof the Knowledge of the Language is one of the chief means) it would be very instrumental to reconcile not only many of the Inhabitants, but also even of the Indian Princes themselves to our Interest; a piece of Policy well understood by Emanuel King of Portugal, when he introduced the Roman Catholic Religion by the help of the Jesuits in the Indies.

I rest your Servant and Friend in Jesus Christ,

Geervliet, 21 Jul.

Some Rules for the attaining the knowledge of the Malabar Language.

THE first Declension among the Malabars comprehends the Nouns only of the Masculine Gender, which terminate in the Singular Number in n, and in the Plural in r. They have their Singular and Plural Numbers like us, and name their Cases as follows.

It is to be observ'd that they have four sorts of Ablative Cases.

Whence it is evident that the Malabar Language is very difficult to be learn'd; especially by reason of the vast number of words whereof it consists, one and the same thing being frequently express'd by divers Words or Names. Thus not only every Day in the Week, but also throughout the Year, has its peculiar Name. It is further manifest from hence, that the Indians are not so unpolish'd as some Europeans represent them, and that they treat one another (especially Persons of Quality) with singular Civility and Respect.

The Imperfect Tense.

Vichuvadicrane apo Vichuvadieren, I believed.
Vichuvadicreye apo Vichuvadicrom, we did believe it.

The Perfect Tense.

Vichuvadien, I have believed.
Vichuvadison, we have believed.

The Preterperfect Tense.

Aducu mune vichuvadisay, I had believed.
Aducu mune vichuvadison, we had believed.

The Future Tense.

DESCRIPTION

Of the Great and most Famous Isle of

CEYLON.

CHAP. I.

The Situation, Extent and Discovery of Ceylon

THE Isle of Ceylon (the Ta-probana of the Antients according to John de Barros) has got its Name among the Portuguese, as well as the other Europeans, from its Capital City call'd Ceylon, known among the Natives by the Name of Lankawon.

This Isle extends from the 6th to the 10th degree of Northern Latitude. Formerly its Circumference was reckon'd to be about 400 Leagues, tho since that time the Sea has wash'd away about 40 Leagues on the North-side of it. In ancient times it was questionless (as we shall see anon in the Description of Manaar) annexed to the Continent. The Figure of this Isle represents (according to Maffius) an Egg, but in my opinion resembles rather a Westphalia Ham, whence without doubt the Dutch Fort near Jafnapatnam has got the Name of Hams-beel.

The beforementioned Maffius affirms, that its Circumference is at this time not above 240 Leagues, its Length 78, and the Breadth 44. But the Dutch, since they have been Masters of it, after the taking of Columbo 1656. and of Manaar and Jafnapatnam 1658. have more exactly computed its Compass to be 360 Leagues. It has many excellent Harbours, Cities and Fortresses, and is divided into several Provinces, as may be seen by the Title of the King of that Island, who styles himself, Raja Singa, Emperor of Ceylon, King of Candea, Cota, Ceytawaca, Dambadan, Amorayapore, Jafnapat-

All which Places, Cities, and Fortresses we shall have occasion to treat of hereafter.

The Isle of Ceylon abounds also in excellent Rivers, such as Chilau, Matual, Alican, Mature, Batecalo, Trinquenemale, and others. It produces various sorts of precious Stones, and is extremely fertile, especially in Cinnamon: Here are also found the best Elephants of the whole Indies.

This Isle was first discover'd by the Chinese in the following manner: Certain Chinese having suffer'd Shipwreck, were forc'd ashore on that Island, where they profess'd their King to be the Son of the Sun. The Inhabitants of Ceylon adoring at that time the Sun, as the Malabars do to this day their Eswara, i. e. the Sun, they were so well pleas'd with their new Guests, that they elected the Captain of the Chinese Jonke, or Vessel, their King; whence the present Kings of Ceylon trace their Origin, and have taken upon them the Title of Lord of the Golden Sun, this first Chinese King having still'd himself, The much beloved Baldans, Son of the always moving Sun. From this King Lankaw Patti Mahadafsyn deduced his Origin, who took upon him the Name of Well-beloved Lord of the whole Isle. His Son was Lankaw Singe Madabafsyn, i. e. The well-beloved Lion of the Isle, and after him his Son, Marafinge Mahadafsyn, i. e. The well-beloved Conqueror of the Lion. This King left behind him two Sons, the first named Lankaw Patti Mahastane, or, The Eye-apple of the Country; the second Radgora Adafsyn, or, The well-beloved King. These two quarrelling about the Succession, at last divided Kingdoms, that of Candy falling to the share of Radgora Adafsyn, and all the rest to the eldest. The Posterity of these two Kings rul'd for a considerable time after, the eldest Son always succeeding before the others. Among these Lankaw Patti Mahastane dying in the 70th year of his Age, left a Son named Marandonna Mad- gora, i. e. The Conqueror of the Eye-apple, who came no sooner to the Crown, but he engag'd in a heavy War against his Uncle by the Father's side, which was ended at last by a Marriage betwixt Marandonna Mahastane, the Son of Madgora, and Malabande Wandige. They left a numerous Issue of Sons and Daughters, and among the rest one named Fimala Darma Soria Adafsyn, i. e. The Conqueror of the whole Kingdom, (born after his Father's Death) who no sooner came to Age of maturity, but he attack'd all the Neighbouring Princes that refused to submit to his Jurisdiction; and having by degrees subdu'd them all, and establish'd himself in the Throne, by the Death of all such as had oppos'd him, he married at last Rokech Wandige, i. e. The Beautiful Queen, his Sister's Daughter, by whom he had a numerous Issue of Sons and Daughters, from whom the present Kings are descended.

CHAP. II.

Arrival of the Portugueses in Ceylon.

WHILE these intestine Wars were carrying on in Ceylon, Laurence d'Almeida by the Command of his Father was employ'd in cruising upon the Malabometans, who were then transporting their Effects from Malacca and Sumatra over the Maldivie Islands into Arabia. The Portugueses being inform'd of the Condition of the Island, and knowing that it was best fishing in troubled Waters, did turn their Arms against it, and after many bloody Engagements, made themselves Masters of all the Places which produce the best Cinnamon, which they used to transport in vast quantities into Europe.

Raja Singa Adafsyn an Enemy of the Portugueses.

At that time Raja Singa Adafsyn reign'd in Ceylon. The general opinion is, that he was a King's Son, and Nephew to the King of Cora, tho' I have often heard the Portugueses and some of the Hollanders say that he was no more than a Barber, who being well skill'd in divers Languages, and of a Warlike Inclination, aim'd at the Crown, and at last was so fortunate as to reduce the whole Island (after he had kill'd all the Great Men) to his Obedience. This King being a declar'd Enemy of the Portugueses, he besieg'd Columbo with a powerful Army, and reduc'd them in a short time to such extremity for want of Provisions, that the Garrison knowing the Governour to be averse to come to a Capitulation, they at first broke out into injurious words, and at last resolv'd (unless they receiv'd Relief from Goa in a week's time) to kill their Officers, and to surrender at Discretion. But the Governour being advertis'd of their Design by one of his Pages, did all that lay in his power to keep the Soldiers in Obedience with fair Promises, till the arrival of the so long wish'd for Succours from Goa, which having defeated the Indian Fleet, they forced them to raise the Siege.

This Raja Singa Adafsyn having made himself Master of the whole Kingdom, except Gale and Columbo, forced the Emperor Mahadafsyn to fly the Country, who in his pursuit scattered his Treasure of Gold and Jewels upon the Road, thereby to stop the pursuit of his Enemies. Raja Singa being thus become Master of the Empire, constituted Vinne Lamantia one of the late Emperor's Favourites, Governor over the Highland Countries, whose Son, named Don Jon, afterwards obtain'd the Sovereignty. Ti Vinne Lamantia finding himself in a condition to cope with his new Master, took up Arms against him, and having brought over the greateſt part of the Country (grown weary of the Tyrant) to his ſide, was proclaimed Emperor, under the Title of Vinne Ladarma Soria, i. e. The Deliverer of the Empire.

This War being carried on with various Succeſs for a conſiderable time, the Portugueſes got time to breath, and induced Raja Singa to come to a Compoſition with Vinne Ladarma Soria, offering him the whole Treafure he had taken of Mahadajyn the late Emperor, provided he would reſign the whole Sovereignty into his Hands.

Whilſt they were treating of the Peace, Vinne Ladarma had a Son born him (who bearing his Father's Name, ſucceeded him in the Empire) but he was ſcarce a Year old, when Raja Singa, not thinking himſelf ſecure in the late Treaty concluded with Vinne Ladarma, he at laſt found means to cajole him to his Court (notwithſtanding thoſe of Candy ſtrongly oppoſed it) where he was no ſooner arrived, but being ſeized upon with all his Attendance, Raja Singa order'd him to be buried in the Ground up to his Breſt, and ſo to be kill'd by the means of certain Wooden Balls, which were thrown at his Head, till his Brains were daſh'd out, the chiefſt of his Attendants being likewiſe put to death by the Tyrant's Orders.

This done, he bent all his Force againſt Candy, and having made himſelf Maſter of the whole Country, ſold many of the Inhabitants for Slaves, and diſarm'd the reſt, making the Empreſs his Priſoner. The Zingaleſes being much oppreſs'd by the Tyrant, who forc'd them to carry Earth and other Materials upon their Heads for the building of Fortifications all the way betwixt Candy and Settavaca, ſought for Relief by the Portugueſes, who glad of ſo favourable an opportunity of ſtrengthening their Intereſt in that Iſland, ſent Andrew Furtado a great Warrior with a conſiderable Force to Yapampnam, which he ſurprized, and having got the King of that Place in his power, requir'd his Content and Aſſiſtance to paſs through his Country for the Relief of Candy. The Inhabitants of that Kingdom being not yet enter'd into any Treaty with the Portugueſes, were not a little surpriz'd at the sudden arrival of the Parangys (so they call Foreigners) fearing (which prov'd true afterwards) that instead of their pretended Delivery they should only change their Slavery; which the cunning Portuguese Generals having well foreseen, had brought Don John and Don Philip, the last Uncle of Donna Catharina, and both educated in the Romish Religion, to Candy, the last of which he constituted King, and Don John Generalissimo; leaving Donna Catharina the Daughter of the late Emperor Mahadajyn, and the sole Heiress of the Empire, at Manaar. He also took care to give notice of his coming to those of Candy, with full Assurances that he was come for no other end than to deliver them from the Usurper's Yoke, which had so good an effect upon them, that they enter'd with him into an Offensive and Defensive Alliance against Raja Singa Adajyn.

Enter on to an Alliance with them.

The Usurper got soon scent of this Treaty, which made him advance with a Potent Army towards Jafnapatnam, to prevent the Portuguese from marching to Candy; but these were too nimble for him, and coming to Candy before he was arriv'd in that Kingdom, immediately crown'd Don Philip King, and declar'd Don John Generalissimo, under condition that both should marry Portuguese Ladies, and the Inhabitants take an Oath of Allegiance to the King of Portugal.

Don John in the mean time seeing Don Philip prefer'd before him by the Portuguese, conceiv'd a mortal hatred against them, but thought fit to dissemble it, till he should meet with a favourable opportunity of shewing his Resentment. With this intention he took care to have Candy fortified so, as not to fear any thing from Raja Singa, and the Royal Palace (lately demolish'd by that Usurper) to be rebuilt with more Splendor than before, for the Reception of the new King, tho at the same time he consulted with a certain famous Sorcerer how to remove the said King by Poison, which he effected afterwards.

CHAP. III.

Don Philip poison'd. Don John succeeds him. He routs Raja Singa, who dies soon after. His Secretary Janiere takes up Arms against Don John.

THE Portuguese fearing not without reason the approach of Raja Singa, had fortified Gommoor, and sent John de Melo in Company of certain Religious Men to Manaar, to bring them fresh supplies of Men, Arms, and Ammunition to Candy, the Inhabitants whereof were all disarm'd by the Usurper, having first introduc'd Don Philip in great Pomp, and plac'd him in the Royal Palace with the general Applause of the Inhabitants.

Don Philip

Candy.

But he scarce tasted the first Fruits of his Greatness, when Don John (taking the opportunity of the absence of the chief of the Portuguese) got some Poison administred to him, which not having the desir'd effect, he gave him another Dose, which put an end to his Life; and by promises of great Rewards and other Enticements, brought most of the Inhabitants of Candy over to his side, who declar'd him their Emperor, and gave him the Title of Vinne Ladarma Soria, after his Father, mention'd before to have been murder'd by the Command of Raja Singa.

The Portuguese fore-boding themselves no good from Don John, whom they knew to be their Enemy, sent Messengers after Messengers to John de Melo at Manaar, to represent to him their dangerous State, wherein they found themselves not mistaken: For no sooner was Don John seated in the Throne, but he sent a Herald to the Portuguese in Garison at Gommoor, who upbraiding them with Perjury and perfidious Designs, order'd them in the Emperor's Name to quit their Posts within five or six days, which if they refused, they must expect no Quarter. The Portuguese finding themselves unable to resist his Power, and despairing of the desir'd Relief, thought it their safest way to come to a Capitulation with Don John, who granted them a free Passage with their Swords only, being forc'd not only to leave all their Booty, but also their Bag and Baggage behind them.

The very next day John de Melo arriv'd with the Succours from Manaar, but too late, whilst Raja Singa was advancing towards Candy, threatening a most severe Revenge to the Inhabitants of that Country. Don John finding himself now destitute of the assistance of the Portugueses, and understanding that his Enemy had pitched his Tents near Walane, was forely put to it how to cope with so great a Force; but being oblig'd either to fight or quit his Advantage, he resolv'd to engage the Enemy, cost what it would: for which reason having afresh taken the Oath of Allegiance from the Inhabitants, and furnish'd them with Arms (such as they could get in haste) he advanced towards them in order of Battel. Raja Singa being not a little surprized at his Boldness, sent him word, that He had best take warning by his Father Vinne Ladarma Soria's Death, and that in case he refused to submit to his Mercy before it was too late, he must expect no other Treatment than to be cut in pieces. Unto whom Don John smiling, sent for answer, That he would take care to put it out of his Power, and if his Father had been as cautious of him as he was resolv'd to be, he need not have come to so lamentable an end, to revenge which he was come to this Place; exhorting him at the same time to implore his Mercy before it was too late. Raja Singa was so exasperated at this Message, and the Aversion he found in the Inhabitants of the Country, that he declar'd, He would punish with Death all that should oppose him; and so order'd his whole Army to march to Donlan, with an Intention to surprize that Place, before Don John could come to its Relief. Don John, tho he knew himself much inferior in number, yet resolv'd to follow him close at the Heels; and to put the better Countenance on the matter, march'd in great Pomp, with most splendid Umbrellos born before him, and such other Royal Ensigns, as the Kings in those Countries use in their Wars. Raja Singa seeing Don John thus bravely advancing towards him, resolv'd either to vanquish or to die gloriously in the Enterprize, could not forbear to break out into these Words, Verily Don John is a courageous Warrior, and I presage that one day or other he will ascend the Throne. O Raja Singa! Where is thy noble Boldness, where are all thy great and ambitious Designs, where thy Fortune which no body could resist! I am afraid of a sudden Change; O changeable Fortune, why hast thou turn'd thy Back towards Raja Singa, who was once thy Favourite!

Thus the Signal being given, the Battel began, wherein Don John and his Forces gave way at first, the better to bear the first Assault of the Enemy; but afterwards Don John at the Head of his Guards, charg'd them so furiously, that (notwithstanding Raja Singa did all that could be expected from a Great Captain) Baldau. they were forc'd to give way, and at last to seek for their Safety in their Heels: And so he return'd victorious to Candy, having lost no more than 700 Men in the whole Engagement; whereas the loss of Raja Singa amounted to above 3000, who was so dejected at this Defeat, that he struck voluntarily a Thorn into his Foot, and refusing to have his Wound dress'd, it gangren'd, and put an end to his days at Settevaoca. Dies.

He shew'd not the least remorse upon his death-bed for his Cruelties, except those committed against the Priests of Daldowanse, whom he caus'd to be burnt alive; for being ask'd by the Tyrant, whether the Murder he had committed upon his Uncle, Mother-in-law and Brothers, could not be forgiven, they answered, No; Well then (said the Usurper) I am now at Liberty to do what I please, and so committed them all to the Fury of the Flames, except the High Priest, called Tireanco, i. e. God's Vicegerent, by the Cingaleses. The Priests of Paraneydeyo, being ask'd the same question, forewarn'd by the Disaster of the others, gave for Answer, That a Person guilty of such a Sin could not enter into Heaven, but if truly repenting, he might by their Intercession be brought to remain betwixt Heaven and Earth, without being sensible of the Torments of Hell. This Answer was so pleasing to Raja, that he dismissed them unmolested, telling them, That he had order'd the Priests of Daldowanse to be burnt, because they would make God delight in Evil; but you who make him a merciful God, I will always look upon as my Friends. Just before his Death, he sent for the before-mentioned Tireanco or High Priest, desiring him to forgive the Death of his Brethren, offering him considerable Presents at the same time; he refused the last, but pardon'd the Crime, and so return'd to Candy, where he died in the 120th Year of his Age.

Don John had no sooner received Intelligence of Raja's Death, but he put himself at the Head of his Army, to take possession of the whole Kingdom. But the Chief Secretary of Raja Singa having got all his Master's Treasure into his Hands, and thinking himself in a capacity to cope with Don John, got himself proclaimed King, under the Name of Janiere Wandaar, and at the same time solicited for Succours by the Portugueses. Neither was it long before Pedro Lopes de Sousa arriv'd from Goa, at the Head

Head of 12500 Portugueses, besides a good number of Assijees and Indians, which occasion'd no small Conternation in Don John's Army, who had been lately Spectators of the Ravages committed by those of Gale and Columbo (with the assistance of the new King) in the Low-Lands, and therefore had all the reason to fear so strong a Force of the Portugueses ready to join with his Enemies. However Pedro Lopes finding the Low-Lands laid desolate (the best of the Country) and consequently promising himself but small Advantages by his Stay, was for returning to Cota, had he not been opposed by the rest of the Officers, who alledged, that the best part of the late King's Treasure remain'd as yet entire at Candy; and that in order to make themselves Masters of the whole Isle, they must take this Opportunity of conquering the Petty Princes one after another, which they put in execution accordingly. For having partly by Force, partly by Promises, brought the Kings of the Low-Lands over to their Party, it was agreed to assemble a strong Army against Don John. The Quota's of the several Princes to be furnish'd for this Expedition was regulated in the following manner.

The King of Cota 6800 Men, four War-Elephants, 50 other Elephants, 1800

Oxen for Carriage, and 1000 Cols or Pioneers. King Janiere Wandaar Ragora 28980 Men, 24 War-Elephants, 200 others, 5000 Oxen for Carriage, 3000 Pioneers. The Kingdom of Jafnapatnam 19900 Men, 10 War-Elephants, 40 of the common sort, 3000 Oxen, and 2000 Pioneers. The King of Cotiar 7980 Men, 600 Pioneers, 1000 Oxen, 30 War-Elephants, 25 others. The K. of Palagan, 5890 Men, 1000 Pioneers, 3 War-Elephants, and 25 others. The King of Bateklo 9800 Men, 2000 Pioneers, 2500 Oxen, 4 War-Elephants, and 30 others. The King of Pannu in conjunction with some other Princes, 59896 Men, 2140 Pioneers, 630 Elephants, and 16000 Oxen. So that the whole Number of these Forces amounted to 151086 Heads, among whom were 139246 fighting Men, and 11740 Pioneers, 75 War-Elephants, 1000 other Elephants, and 20500 Oxen for Carriage. The Quota of the Portugueses under Pedro Lopes amounted to 1474 Portugueses, 1200 Mistees, and 1224 Indians, 47 War-Elephants, 945 others, and 19900 Oxen.

The first thing they took care of was to secure their Retreat, by erecting 3 Forts, call'd Manikeroweri, Mapati and Gannatari; which done, they directed their March with their joint Forces towards Candy.

CHAP. IV.

Don John draws out his Forces against Janiere and the Portugueses, attacks them with Success, but is routed at last. Donna Catherina declared Empress, Janiere murdered.

DON John having received Intelligence of their March, was put to a great Nonplus what course to take in this Exigency of his Affairs, his whole Army consisting of no more than betwixt 30 and 40000 Men: but knowing them to be resolute and entirely devoted to his Interest, he kept as close to the Enemy as possibly he could, and in several Engagements got the better of them, till at last being attack'd with incredible fury by the Portugueses, they put him to the rout, and took the City of Malone, with the Loss of 49 Men only on their side, killing above 1500 of the Inhabitants, which struck such a Terror into the rest, that the whole Country submitted without the least Opposition, except Dallejagge, which they were not able to take.

Don John not being able to rally his scattered Forces, retired with his Em- press into the Woods and Deserts, where they were forced to feed upon Herbage for some time; and the Portugueses being now Masters of the Country, required the Cingaleses to own the King of Portugal for their Sovereign Lord. These on the other hand desired that Donna Catherina, the Daughter of Mahadsajyn their Legal Emperor, might be brought from Mansar, and declar'd their Empress: Don Pedro Lopes being well enough pleas'd with this Proposition, yet willing to consult with Janiere about the matter, he found him not averse to it, his Intention being to marry her with the consent of the Portugueses, who had underhand promised the same as a Reward of his Services done to them.

Accordingly a numerous Train and splendid Equipage was sent to bring the new Empreſs to Candy; but one of the Ships foundring at Sea in a Storm, 150 Soldiers, a great Number of Slaves, and two Cheſts with Money were loſt with her: one Portuguese and two Negroes only had the good Fortune to eſcape of the whole Ship's Crew, who heard the Captain of the Ship, whoſe Name was Perere, take his laſt Farewel in theſe Words, O brave Perere, Is it thus thy Fate to be ſwallow'd up by the Sea! but ſince it is God's Will, Patience; Chriſt receive my Soul.

In the mean while all imaginable Preparations being made for the Reception of Donna Caterina, ſhe was preparing for her Departure from Manaar: As ſhe was carry'd along in her Litter or Chair, one of the Poles of Cane happen'd to break, which the new Empreſs looking upon as an ill Omen, ſhe cry'd out aloud, Stop, ſtop, don't carry me any further, for this portends ſome great Miſfortune. Un- to which the Governor of Manaar, who attended her Perſon, reply'd, May it pleaſe your Maieſty, we ought to conſider that we are no Heathens but Chriſtians, and muſt therefore deſpiſe ſuch Superſtitions; God will be the Supporter of you and your Cauſe. Then the Empreſs bid them take another Pole, and ſoon after embark'd with a fair Wind, which carry'd her in 8 days to Candy.

Here ſhe was met by Pedro Lopes the Portuguese General, and ſeveral of the Cingaleſe Kings and Princes, attended by a great Number of Nobles, who paid their Reverence (according to the Cuſtom of the Country) by lying their Faces flat upon the Ground, this they call Sambaja. The Empreſs ariſing out of her Litter, return'd them hearty Thanks, and returning to her Litter was accompanied into the City by Lopes and the before-mention'd Princes with incredible Pomp, and under the general Acclamations of the People, who were infinitely pleas'd with the Gold and Silver that was thrown among them, as the Cavalcade march'd along, which was ſo ſplendid, that the whole Charge thereof amount- ed to 1900000 Livres, the Remnants of the Treafure of the late deceaſed Ufurper, Raja Singa Adaſeyn. Candy.

Catherina after having rested herself from the Fatigues of the Voyage for three days, was crown'd with the usual Solemnities, and put into possession of the Empire.

About that time Don John came in the disguise of a Beggar into Candy, where he set several Houses on fire, in hopes of firing the whole City, but was frustrated in his Design, the Fire being always quenched in good time, tho it often broke out in divers Places at once.

The Portugueses suspecting the Matter, offer'd a Reward of 10000 Pagodes (20000 Crowns) to any that could take him dead or alive, which made Don John desert from his Enterprize, and to return to his Desert.

The Portugueses finding themselves now in the quiet possession of the Country, were no longer able to disguise their natural Vices, their Pride, Avarice and Insolence, which occasion'd frequent Complaints to the Empress, but without Redress; which oblig'd the Inhabitants to enter into an Association to deprive 'em of all Subsistence, by cutting off their Supplies of Provisions: This oblig'd the Portuguese General to send in conjunction with King Janiere Wandaar, 2000 Cingalese and 1000 Portugueses, to the Dukedom of Ouree, and 2000 Indians and 200 Portugueses to Halalmia beyond Candy, to fetch in Rice and other Provisions.

The Portuguese Soldiers, tho they were very well received by the Inhabitants, yet did they commit all manner of Insolences in their Quarters, even to the ravishing of their Wives, killing their Children, and setting their Houses on fire; so that the Cingalese finding themselves in a worse condition now than they were under their tyrannical Emperors, entered into a Conjuraton to kill the Portugueses at a certain appointed time.

In the mean while Janiere solicited the Portuguese General Lopes, for leave to marry the Empress Catherina; which he handsomely deny'd, alledging, that he could not consent to it, without special Order from the King of Portugal, but that he would write to the King about it. Janiere looking upon this only as an Excuse, desir'd to let him marry his Sister's Daughter; which being likewise refused by the General, Janiere conceived from that Moment a mortal Hatred against the Portugueses, and could not forbear to tell the General, that He did not expect to have met with such a Reward for the Services he had done them, swearing that they should have occasion to repent it. The Portuguese being somewhat exasperated at this unexpected Reply, told him that he ought not to take it amiss, if he denied him what was not in his Power to give, viz. Donna Catherina the legal Heiress of the Empire, to him who had usurped the Title of a King, merely by being got into the possession of the Treasure of Raja Singa Adajeyn, but that he should be very ready to serve him upon any other occasion. Janiere being put out of all Patience by these insulting Words, replied smartly, I am sensible of your Design; you that came here as Strangers, now you have got your Ends thro my means, are the first who would tyrannize over me. Then recollecting himself, he began to turn the Discourse, dissembling his Resentment; but the same Night dispatched a Letter to Don John in the Desert, wherein he advertis'd him of what had pass'd betwixt him and the Portuguese General, offering him the Empire, provided he would receive him as King of the Low Lands; which Don John approving of, they enter'd into a confederacy to rid their hands of the Portugueses.

Things being thus settled, Don John began to appear among the Cingalese (already much exasperated against the Portugueses) representing to them the Danger they were in, and how he was resolv'd in conjunction with Janiere to drive 'em out of the Island; which they readily accepted of, promising all the assistance they were able to give. But as Janiere sent frequent Letters to Don John, it happened that some of them fell into the hands of the Portugueses, who being thereby fully convinc'd of the Design carried on against them, begun, not without great reason, to fear, that unless they consented to the Marriage of Janiere with Donna Catherina, they would scarce be able to maintain themselves in the Isle.

A Council being called for this purpose, they were much divided in their Opinions, some being for consenting to the Marriage to prevent farther Mischief, and to have Don John murder'd; whilst others were for hazarding all, rather than to consent to the Match, and to have Janiere murdered, under pretence that he had laid a Design to murder the Empress and the General; for which purpose some forged Letters were to be produced, to justify their Conduct.

To encompass this Design, they took the Opportunity, when Janiere was one day in conference with the Portuguese General and some other Officers: The General seeing him have a Scymeter on his

CHAP. V.

Don John improves the Fall to his advantage.

DON John was not wanting to turn the Hatred of the People (which muſt needs enſue upon ſo barbarous a Fact) to his advantage, and to repreſent the perfidious Deſigns of the Portugueſes in the worſt colours, offering them his Aſſiſtance againſt theſe Foreigners, as he had done before againſt Raja Singa; which ſucceeded ſo well, that they reſolv'd unaniſmouſly to ſide with him, in order to drive them out of the Country.

The Portugueſes leave Candy.

The Portugueſes having receiv'd intelligence of the great Preparations made againſt them, and that Don John was advancing with his Army towards Candy, began now, but too late, to repent of the Murder of Janiere; and ſeeing their Ruin at hand, unleſs they took timely care of their Safety, they retreated from Candy to the Fort of Gannoor, whence they ſent to Columbo for Relief. The Cingaleſes having got notice of their Flight, purſu'd them ſo cloſely, that many of them fell into their hands, eſpecially of thoſe Detachments ſent to Goa and Halalmia for Proviſions, ſo whereof they ſent back with their Ears, Noſes and Privy Parts cut off, in revenge of the Ravifhments committed upon their Wives and Daughters.

Are mercifully treated by the Cingaleſes.

The Portugueſes were ſo terrify'd thereat, that finding themſelves deſtitute of all hopes of Relief, they reſolv'd likewiſe to leave Cannoor, and to retire to Walane, which they put in execution 1509. on a Sunday; and the better to cover their Flight, or at leaſt to divert the Cingaleſes from purſuing them, ſet the circumjacent Country on fire. But theſe preferring their Revenge before all other Conſiderations, follow'd them at the heels, and attack'd them moſt furioſly in four ſeveral Parts at once. The Portugueſes defended themſelves moſt courageouſly; but being over-power'd in Number, were forc'd to give way with the loſs of many of their beſt Soldiers, either kill'd or taken Priſoners, among whom was the Portugueſe General Lopes and Donna Catherine. The General dy'd within three days after of his Wounds, after he had recommended his Son to Don John's care, who was afterwards by him (pursuant to his Promise) ſent to Columbo.

Pedro Lopes and Donna Catherine taken Priſoners.

The Indians got a conſiderable Booty, beſides a vaſt Quantity of Arms, Cannon and Ammunition, in this Engagement; and Don John purſuing his Victory with the utmoſt vigor, made himſelf Maſter of all the Forts belonging to the Portugueſes; ſome by Aſſault, the Garriſons whereof he put to the Sword; ſome by Compoſition, which was punctually obſerv'd. All which ſtruck ſuch an Amaze-ment into the circumjacent Kings and Princes, that they appear'd in Perſon before him, and asking Pardon for their having been engag'd with the Portugueſes, brought him conſiderable Preſents, and did him Homage with the uſual Solemnity of proſtrating themſelves with their Faces to the Ground.

Don John reſtores the dom.

Being thus ſettled a ſecond time in the Throne, he thought it the ſafeſt way to ſecure himſelf of the Fidelity of his Subjects by marrying Donna Catherine (the being then but 12 years old) which was celebrated with great Solemnity for 110 days ſucceſſively; notwithstanding which the Charges thereof did not amount to above 5000 Pagodes: But the Preſents beſtow'd upon many of the Nobility (to reconcile them to his Intereſt) to no leſs than 968754 Pagodes, or 4859538 Dutch Guilders, making the Sum of 194381 Rixdollars. His next Care was to ſtrengthen his Frontiers by three ſtrong Forts; and he built himſelf a Palace, ſurrounded with ſeveral Bulwarks, wherein he employ'd the Captive Portugueſes, who, to their great grief, were forc'd to ſee their Enſigns diſplay'd upon the Towers of their Enemies.

Mari D. Catherine.

Don John having for ſome time enjoy'd the quiet Poſſeſſion of the Throne, Don Jeronimo d' Oriedo was ſent in the quality of Portugueſe General to Ceylon, with a conſiderable number of Land Forces, compos'd of Spaniards and Portugueſes, brought thither from Goa and other Places on the Indian Coaſt. Having by great Preſents brought over to his ſide moſt of the Princes of the Low-Lands, he order'd ſeveral Forts to be erected to ſerve him for a Retreat upon occaſion. Don John was ſo far from annoying his Men in perſecting theſe Fortifications, that he ſeem'd to deſpiſe it, ſaying, Let them go on, I will find on their side. Among their Wounded was Oriedo the General, who was oblig'd to King Cota for his Liberty, he having conceal'd him in some retir'd Place, with-at which he had infallibly fallen into the hands of the Indians. These, tho not a little tir'd with so long and troublesome a Pursuit, yet in their return made themselves Masters of the new Portuguese Forts, and cutting the Garisons in pieces, laid them level with the Ground. This Victory prov'd so considerable to Don John, that during his Life Oriedo either durst or could not attempt any thing further against him.

Dominico Corré goes over to Don John: Besieges Gale, but is repuls'd. Simon Corré returns to Columbo. The Portugueses miserably massacred. Joris van Spilbergen comes to Ceylon.

ABout that time Dominico Corré, a renowned Soldier (known by the name of Goliath) being disoblig'd by the Portugueses, came over to Don John, having first cut off the Noses and Ears of several Monks who had offended him. He also entic'd Corke Bandaar, a revolted Prince, into Don John's Camp, who caus'd him to be tormented to death, and bestow'd his Principality upon Dominico Corré, to whom they gave the Name of Idel Soria Bandaar. Whilst he was doing Homage to the Emperor, a very large Tree that stood hard by, split in two pieces, without being touch'd; which the Inhabitants (a superstitious Generation) interpreted as an ill Oomen.

Not long after the Emperor sent a considerable Army under the Command of Dominico Corré, and his Brother Simon Corré, to besiege Gale: But the Portugueses defended themselves so well, that the greatest part of this Army was ruin'd, and Dominico himself taken Prisoner, whom the Portugueses (contrary to their Promise) carry'd to Columbo, where he was privately murder'd. This barbarous Action so highly exasperated Don John, that he order'd some Portugueses to be kill'd by the Elephants, others he cut off their Noses and Ears, and sent them to Columbo to tell the General, that in case they did not set all the Prisoners at liberty, the Portugueses in his hand should receive the same Treatment.

The Soldiers in Garison at Columbo seeing this miserable Spectacle in their Companions, broke out into a Mutiny against the General, who by murdering Corré against his Parole, had given occasion to this Disaster. There was nothing to be heard among them but, Kill the Dog, kill him; whilst Jerónimo d'Oriedo cry'd for Mercy. Notwithstanding which, a whole Troop of them were advancing with their drawn Swords against him, and had certainly kill'd him upon the spot, had not some Monks thrown themselves (to their no small danger) betwixt him and them, and speaking to the Soldiers, calling them Gentlemen, and begging them for the Love of Christ, not to act against the Crown of Portugal in the Person of their General, appeas'd their Wrath; tho even then the General was forc'd to hide himself in a Convent, till the Tumults could be entirely appeas'd, which was not till 16 days after.

Notwithstanding the barbarous Usage Simon Corré had met with from the Portugueses, his Brother Simon Corré went over to them, pretending to the Emperor that he intended to advance towards Columbo to revenge his Brother's Death. He was very honourably receiv'd by the Portugueses, who not only bestow'd the Government of a Province upon him, but also marry'd him to a Portuguese Lady, whom together with his Son (begotten in this Marriage) they kept as Pledges of his Fidelity, whilst he was employ'd in carrying on the War against Don John.
How-

Baldens. However having got intelligence that the Portuguese had form'd a Design against the Life of the said Don John, he gave notice thereof to him, desiring him to be upon his guard.

Emanuel Dias pre- tends to come over to the Portu- gueses.

The Emperor being willing to be fully satisfy'd in a Matter of such moment, apply'd himself to one Emanuel Dias, who being formerly a Foot-boy to the Portuguese General Lopez, was advanc'd by the said Don John to the Dignity of one of his Gentlemen of the first rank, and had receiv'd many other Favours at his hands. Emanuel Dias, willing to contribute what lay in his power to his Master's satisfaction, propos'd to go to Colombo, under pretence of having deserted his Service, but in truth to dive into the real Design of the Portuguese. Accordingly he arriv'd at Colombo on Easter-day 1602. where he propos'd to Don Jeronimo Oriedo several ways of murdering Don John, and that with so much assurance and seeming probability, that he was highly careis'd by that General, who agreed with him concerning the Method how the Design should be put in execution. For this purpose five Portuguese were pitch'd upon to share the Danger and Glory of so brave an Action (as they stil'd it) among whom were three Captains, viz. Christian Jacobo, Alberto Primero, and Gaspar Perere. Emanuel Dias being promis'd no less a Reward than the Crown of Candy, play'd the Hypocrite so artificially, that he took a solemn Oath upon the Crucifix to be true to his Trust, and so he was dismiss'd to Walane with a good Sum of Money, from whence he return'd to Candy.

There he gave an account to the Emperor how Measures had been concerted betwixt Don Jeronimo and him, that a certain Body of Troops should be posted near the Fort of Walane, to be ready at hand to surprize that Place as soon as they should receive the Signal of the Murder of the Emperor being put in execution; for which purpose those who had undertaken that Task were within a limited time to appear near Candy. Hereupon the Emperor advanc'd secretly in the night time at the head of a good Body of Troops to Walane, where the before-mention'd Accomplices appearing accord- ing ing to agreement, well arm'd with Japaneſe Scymeters, call'd Trassados, they were kindly receiv'd by Emanuel Dias, and introduc'd into the Emperor's Preſence; but ſoon after were ſeiz'd by his Guard, and the Signal given at the ſame time from the Fort of Walane. So that the Portugueſes believing every thing to have ſucceeded according to expectation, advanced with all poſſible ſpeed towards the Fort, where they queſtionleſs would have met with ſo warm a reception, that few of them would have return'd home, had not a certain Servant, who had deſerted from the Enemy, diſcover'd the whole matter to them, which made them retreat with all ſpeed towards Columbo, leaving all their Baggage and ſome Arms a Prey to the Enemy. Emanuel Dias got a vaſt Reputation by this bold Enterprize, and was rewarded with vaſt Preſents by the Emperor; but the five Portugueſes were after a long Captivity put to a moſt painful Death.

About this time the Dutch General Joris Spilbergen coming with two Ships on the Coaſt of Ceylon, went to Candy on purpoſe to ſalute the Emperor in the Name of the States of the United Provinces, and his Excellency Prince Maurice of Naſſau; and was favourably receiv'd by Don John, and diſmiſs'd with conſiderable Preſents. Having left Eraſmus Martens and Mr. Hans Pempel, two very good Muſicians, there, he return'd highly ſatisfy'd, 3 Sept. 1603. by the way of Matecola to Acben. But the Portugueſes were not a little diſſatisfy'd at his arrival there, as fearing that in caſe the Dutch ſhould enter into a Confederacy with the Emperor, their Stay would not be long in that Iſland, which proved true afterwards, they being quite chafed thence in the Year 1658.

Sebald de Weert comes to Ceylon. Great Diſſatisfaction betwixt the Emperor and him. Is murdered. Don John falls ſick, and dies. His Qualifications.

Sebald de Weert and Vibraads van Warwick came ſoon after into Ceylon, where they entred into agreement with the Emperor. Afterwards they ſail'd to Acben to aſſemble more Forces, and landing at Matecola with 7 Ships, 26 Apr. 1603. De Weert gave notice thereof to the Emperor, who deſir'd him to come and put an end to the Conferences begun before, for the conſummation of the Treaty. De Weert coming into the Emperor's Preſence, was ask'd by him why he had ſet the Portugueſe Priſoners at liberty; which, as it had been done unadviſedly, ſo he made the beſt Excuse he could upon that ſcore, which being not ſatisfactory to the Emperor, cauſ'd in him no ſmall ſuſpicion; the ſame was much augmented by what his Ambaſſador (who had been with the Vice Admiral De Weert at Acben) related to him, that during his ſtay with the Dutch he could not obſerve but that they were Friends of the Portugueſes, whereof they had given ſufficient Proofs, when they ſet the Portugueſe Officers that were their Priſoners, above him at the Table. He further added, that he had received information from credible hands, that the Vice-Admiral intended to invite the Emperor and the chiefſt men of his Court, aboard his Veſſel to a Banquet; but in effect, to detain them Priſoners, and make themſelves Maſters of the Country: That he had thought it his Duty to give this Caution to his Majeſty, that he might not truſt the Dutch, and thereby with the reſt of his Princes be drawn into the Snare, to the irreparable ruin of the whole Country.

Don John finding the Ambaſſador's Reaſons not to be ill grounded, and having conceiv'd no ſmall jealousy at the Vice-Admiral's diſcharging the Portugueſe Priſoners contrary to his Promise, it was debated in Council, whether they ought to treat with him any further, or break off the Treaty already begun. After various Deliberations, it was agreed to endeavour to perſuade the Vice-Admiral to ſail with his Fleet to Gale, in order (according to mutual Agreement) to beſiege that Place, whereby they would not want opportunity to judg of his Conduct in reference to the Portugueſes.

Sebald de Weert ſoon after invited the Emperor aboard his Veſſel, which he refuſ'd, alledging that the chief Men of the Empire did not approve of a thing never known before. De Weert ſeeing the Emperor reſolute in his reſuſal, defir'd him to do him the honour of coming only to the Sea-shore to view his Ships, and that he had order'd a Tent to be pitch'd there for his Reception. The Emperor not only refused also this Offer, but his Suspicion was increased, the before-mentioned Ambassador whispering him in the Ear, Are you now sensible, my most gracious Lord, that I was in the right, and that they intend to catch you in the Snare? And the Dutch Vice-Admiral De Weert being not a little disturb'd at so flat a Denial, told him frankly, that since His Majesty did not think fit to come either aboard him, or at least to the Shore, he was resolv'd not to fight for him against the Portugueses. Don John, tho not a little exasperated at so bold a Reply, yet dissimbl'd his Anger, telling him only, that he should pursuant to his Promise, sail to Gale with his Fleet, whilst he would take a turn to Candy to visit the Empress, who was alone there, his Brother-in-law having taken a Journey to the Frontiers; and that from thence they would hasten with all their Forces to the Siege. Sebald de Weert being somewhat heated with strong Liquor, reply'd indiscreetly, That certainly the Empress could not be in distress for a Man, and that he was resolv'd not to sail to Gale, or to fight against the Portugueses, before the Emperor had done him the honour of viewing his Ships.

Don John, who was naturally a choleric Person, was so incens'd at this Answer, that he left the Room, and in going out said, Bind the Dog; whereupon four of his Gentlemen advanced to lay hold of him, but he endeavouring to draw his Sword, and making a noise to call his Attendants to his Assistance (who were left near the Sea side by the Emperor's order) they laid hold of him from behind, and one of them splitting his Head with a Scymeter, laid him dead upon the ground.

The Prince of Ouwe being the only Person who durst give an account to the Emperor of what had happen'd, he appear'd somewhat disturb'd thereat, asking him, why they did not make him a and let his Attendants follow their Master; which was put in Execution immediately, scarce any one of those that came ashore with him escaping the fury of these Barbarians, except a Boy named Isaac Plevier, a Native of Flissingen, who was still alive, and in the then Emperor's Service, 22 Nov. 1614. Some few also had the good fortune of escaping by swimming to the Ships.

The Emperor soon after went to Candy, from whence he writ these few Lines in Portuguese to the Commanders of the Dutch Vessels; Que bebem vinho, nao he bon. Deos fes justitia; se quizeres paz, pas; sequires guerra; guerra: i. e. Who drinks Wine is not good; God shews his Justice; If you desire Peace, you shall have Peace; if War, War.

However Don John did not survive long this barbarous Action, being seiz'd with so violent a burning Fever, that to cool himself he was kept in cold Water without any Relief: He also drunk frequently of the Water of the Brook call'd Hal gradoje, betwixt Ouve and Mataveste; which being so cold, as not to be held in the Mouth without shivering, yet could not in the least quench his Thirst. He often bewail'd the barbarous Murder of the Dutch, but said that De Weert had no more than what he deserv'd. Thus languishing for some time in continual Agonies, he was in no condition to dispose of his Affairs, but ended his Life in Misery 1604. He left behind him one Son, named Mabastenne Adascyn, and two Daughters, one named Soria Mahadascyn, i. e. Beloved Sunlight, the other Cathan Adascyn, i. e. Beloved Peace; all three born from Donna Catherina, call'd by the Cingaleses Ma- habandige Adascyn, i. e. Beloved Empress.

Don John was a valiant and great Captain, as his whole Life sufficiently testifies; he was tall of Stature, and well limb'd, black, and rustical in his Speech: He had gather'd a vast Treasure of Gold and Jewels, and had founded many Forts, Palaces, and publick Inns, call'd by the Cingaleses Ambolan, i. e. Resting Places. He kept a strict Hand in the Government; and as he never pardon'd Crimes, so he was very liberal to all such as behav'd themselves well in their Civil or Military Stations, on whom he confer'd Honours and Riches. He was a compleat Statesman, and stood firm to his Engagements with all Foreign Princes except the Portugueses, upon whom looking with a jealous Eye, he had conceiv'd a mortal hatred. As he despised all Religions, so he allow'd the free exercise thereof to all without distinction.

The Corps of the deceased Emperor was no sooner interr'd with extraordinary Magnificence, but the Great Men of the Kingdom began to divide into several Factions, every one aiming at the Crown: The most potent among them was the Prince of Ouve, who publickly set up for the Empire, but was opposed by Cenuwieraat, Brother-in-law to the late Emperor, who pretended to be Regent for his Nephew (his Brother's Son) till he should come to Age of Maturity. Donna Catherina well foreseeing the ill Consequences that might ensue upon those Pretensions, declar'd her self Regent of her young Son, and by taking off the Heads of some of the most suspected Lords, remov'd the present Danger, and appeased the Troubles that threatned her Ruin for some time.

C H A P. VIII.

Divisions among the Great Men in Ceylon. The Prince of Ouve murder'd by Cenuwieraat, who marries Donna Catherina the Empress.

THE Portugueses rejoic'd at the Death of Don John, sent Messengers after Messengers to Goa, to advertise the Viceroy of this welcome News, and to desire his Advice in this juncture. The said Viceroy being of opinion, that they ought to engage in an Alliance with Donna Catherina (as a means to make themselves masters by degrees of the whole Isle) the same was proposed accordingly, but rejected by Donna Catherina.

However the Princes of the Lowlands being sorely oppress'd by the Incursions and Ravages committed in their Territories both by the Prince of Ouve and the Emperor's Brother-in-law, hearkened to the Enticements of the Portugueses, and enter'd into a Confederacy with them.

Baldern. The Empress being not a little disturbed at these intestine Commotions, fearing she should be sacrificed to the prevailing Party, call'd a General Assembly of all the Lords of the Empire, who all appear'd accordingly in Person, except the Prince of Ouwe and Cenuwieraat Adasjyn, who thereupon were by Proclamation declar'd Rebels by the Empress, and their Estates confiscated. However Cenuwieraat having given sufficient Reasons for his Absence, and the Prince of Ouwe having at the Intercession of his Friends obtain'd his Pardon, they afterwards appear'd at Court, but well guarded, neither Party trusting one another.

Things thus passing on for some time, the Prince of Ouwe resolv'd, after the Conclusion of the Assembly of the States, to rid his hands of Cenuwieraat, and afterwards to secure to himself the Crown by marrying Donna Catherina: but Cenuwieraat having got scent of this Design, resolv'd to be before-hand with him; to accomplish which, he disturb'd his thoughts, shewing to the Prince of Ouwe upon all occasions most singular marks of his Respect and Friendship. But having in the mean while strengthened his Interest by ingaging most of the Great Men to his side, he took his opportunity when they were both going to take their leave of the Empress: For coming at the outward Gate, the Prince of Ouwe would have given the Precedency to Prince Cenuwieraat, as descended from the Imperial Blood; which he refusing to accept of, told him that it was his due, by reason of his Age: so that, after some time spent in Compliments, Prince Ouwe went in first, and was instantly run through the Back, and laid dead upon the ground by Cenuwieraat, who said no more than, Traitor, thou hast thy Reward; and so retiring to his People, left the City immediately.

Those belonging to the Prince of Ouwe hearing of the Murder of their Master, run thro the Streets, crying out, Treason, Treason, which put the City into such an Alarm, that the People (believing the Empress was kill'd) cut all to pieces they met with, so that the Streets were every where fill'd with Horror and Slaughter, which would have continued longer, had not Donna Catherina by shewing her self to the People, somewhat appeas'd their Fury. However, they not ceasing to exclaim, and uttering most horrid Threats against the Prince of Cenuwieraat, for the Murder of Prince Ouwe, the Empress, to prevent further Mischief, thought it her safest way to prohibit under pain of Death, that any Injury should be done to Prince Cenuwieraat, declaring that what had been done was done by her own Orders; which somewhat settled the Minds of the People.

But her thoughts were very different from what she shewed to the People, having conceived such a Horror at the Fact, that she resolv'd not to let it go unrevenge'd upon the Prince Cenuwieraat. He being advertised hereof by his Friends, kept constantly upon his guard, not neglecting in the mean while to have it represented to the Empress (not without good reasons) that he had been forced to undertake this Fact for his Self-preservation and the Welfare of the Kingdom, her Majesty and his Brother's Children: which had so good an effect upon the Empress, that by the Mediation of certain Great Men a Match was concluded betwixt the Empress and him, as the most proper means to restore Tranquillity to the Empire. At his Coronation he took upon him the Name Camapati Mahadajsyn.

He no sooner saw himself establish'd in the Throne, but he apply'd himself to the Hollanders, in order to enter into an Alliance with them against the Portugueses, as will appear out of the Sequel of this History.

For their High and Mightinesses the States-General of the United Provinces having 1609. made a Truce for twelve years with Arch-Duke Albert and Isabella Clara Eugenia Infanta of Spain, by virtue whereof it was among other matters agreed, that the same should take place also in the East-Indies: The then Directors of that Company being willing to improve this Interval for the better settling their Commerce in these parts, did petition their High and Mightinesses, and his Highness the Prince, to send their Letters to all the Indian Kings and Princes to enter into a Confederacy with them; which being granted accordingly, the said Letters, with certain Articles and Instructions, were by the Directors of the said Dutch East-India Company dispatch'd immediately to the Indies aboard the Greyhound Yacht, Capt. Wemmer van Berchem Commander: which done, they equipp'd a Squadron of Ships, which set sail out of Holland the 30th of January under the Command of Peter Both, Governor-General of the Indies, and arriv'd safely the 18th of November following at Batam, with full power from their High and Mightinesses, and his Highness the Prince, to enter into such Alliances with all the Indian Kings and Princes, as they thought most expedient for the settling of their Commerce, and

C H A P. IX.

Letters from the States-General of the United Provinces, and Prince Maurice, sent by Marcellus de Boschhouwer to the Emperor of Ceylon.

THE Letters from their High and Mightinesses, and his Highness the Prince of Orange, to the Emperor of Ceylon, were as followeth.

Most Potent King !

IT has pleased the Almighty God through his Mercy so to bless our Arms, taken up for the maintaining of the Rights and Privileges of our Native Country against the King of Spain and Portugal, that after a bloody War carried on 42 years successively both by Sea and Land, the said King being convinc'd of our Unanimity, Power and Constancy, supported by the Strength of our Friends and Neighbouring Allies, has thought fit to make us the same Offers, for which we had been oblig'd to commence a War, viz. to declare us a free People, independent from his Power; and that he was inclin'd to enter upon a Treaty of Peace or Truce with us for a considerable number of years. Which Offers (after mature deliberation) having been accepted by us, a Treaty was set on foot accordingly with the said King of Spain and Portugal, which being brought to a Conclusion the 9th of April last past, a Truce was agreed upon for 12 years next ensuing, by virtue whereof all the Subjects of this State are not only at liberty to carry on their Traffick, Commerce or Navigation in all the Kingdoms and Countries where they used to enjoy the same before the War, but also in all other Countries, Kingdoms or Princes, and with all other Nations or Provinces without exception; and with this Proviso, that neither the King of Spain and Portugal, nor his Officers and Subjects, shall in respect of this Traffick hitherto carried on, or to be carried on for the future, molest or be troublesome (either directly or indirectly) to our Subjects, or those belonging to any King, Prince, or other Superior Power, with whom we have any Commerce; and that your Majesty, as well as all other Kings, Princes, States and Nations, as well in the Indies as in other parts, shall be comprehended in the said twelve years Truce, and not be molested or attack'd on account of their Friendship and Commerce with us. But if (contrary to our Expectation, and the solemn Promise made by the King of Spain and Portugal, confirm'd by his Hand and Seal) it should happen that your Majesty's Subjects and Countries should be involved in any Troubles with the said King, either by Sea or Land, by reason of their Friendship, Alliance or Commerce with us, your Majesty may rest assur'd, that we shall want neither Will nor Power, neither Ships, Ammunition nor Forces, as well of our own, as of such other Kings and Princes our Allies, as are Guarantees of the said Treaty, and have engag'd to see the same executed in all its particulars, and consequently in respect of your Majesty's Dominions, as well as of all other Countries and Dominions both in the Indies, and elsewhere, to protect and defend your Majesty's Dominions and Subjects against all Aggressors, who upon that account shall molest them. We don't doubt but that some of the King of Spain and Portugal his Creatures and Officers will be apt to insinuate into your Majesty, his Subjects, and other Kings, Princes, Nations and Republicks, a quite different Sentiment of the said Treaty. But we assure your Majesty by these Presents upon our Faith, without any tergiversation, unto which your Majesty and Subjects, and all other Kings, Princes, Nations and States may give entire Credit, and desire that your Majesty will be pleas'd to rely upon it accordingly, to the firm Settlement of a mutual and good Correspondency, Navigation and Traffick betwixt our Subjects; we on our

Trrt z      " side

Dated in the Hague, Sept. 15. 1609.

Your Highnesses most hearty Friends

Most Potent King,

Pr. Maurice's Letter to the Emperor.

"GOD protect your Majesty, and give you all the Blessings upon Earth. We have for a considerable time been engaged in a War against the King of Portugal, in order to oppose his ambitious Designs, the same Motive having induced your Majesty to defend your Dominions against his Attempts; the Almighty God has been pleas'd to bless our Arms with such Success, as to oblige our Enemy to a twelve Years Truce, which by the Mediation of several neighbouring Kings has been brought at last to a happy Conclusion: But, finding that the said King did continue his Warlike Preparations, and imagining that the same was intended chiefly, in order to attack your Majesty and some other Princes in the Indies, our Allies (after being bereaved of our Assistance) we thought it absolutely requisite, not to agree to the said Truce, unless your Majesty were included therein, together with the rest of our Friends and Allies. Whereupon the same was concluded at last, under condition, that we and all our Friends and Allies should enjoy full Liberty, to send our Ships into what Countries we pleas'd without any Molestation from the Por-

"tugueses; and that in case your Majesty, or any other of our Confederates, should be attack'd by him, we should deem the same as done to our selves: to accomplish which we shall be ready upon all Occasions to be assistant in revenging any Damages done upon that Score to your Majesty, or any other of our Allies. We have some reason to suppose, that the Intention of the said King is, to separate by this Artifice your Majesty from our Interest, which ought to be a mutual caution to us, to be upon our Guard for the future; for since the occasion of dividing us by Force of Arms is removed, they will not be sparing to attain to their end by Fraud and other Sinister Means. It is therefore, that we have order'd our Governour-General, to treat with your Majesty, and to find out such means, as may be most proper to prevent their Intrigues, and to unite us against those, whose Word and Faith we dare not altogether rely upon. We did not think fit to stipulate in the said Treaty, that his Subjects should be excluded from the Traffick of Ceylon, but left the same to your Majesty's Discretion, not questioning, but that according to your Wisdom and Understanding, you will act in that respect, so as that nothing may be transacted that may tend towards the Dissolution of our Alliance, which we hope the Almighty will maintain by his Blessing, to the Honour of his Holy Name, and the Welfare of your Majesty, and our Beloved Subjects.

"Emperour of Ceylon, King of Candy, Trinqueemale, Jafnapatnam, Sette-Corles, Manaar, Chilaw, Coia, Battecalo, Punte-Gale, our Beloved Brother in the Wars.

These Letters were no sooner brought in the Greyhound Yacht to Coromandel, but the Director of our East-India Company there, named John van Wesick, ordered immediately Marcellus de Boschhouwer our Under-Factor, aboard the Ship called the Black Lyon, to Ceylon along with Peter Both, a Native of Amersfort, Commodore, bound likewise for that Island.

Council were not willing to consent to his Dismission, alledging, that since according to one of the before-mention'd Articles, they were oblig'd not to transact any thing in Warlike Affairs, without the Knowledge and Consent of the Dutch, it was require he should stay with them for that purpose. These Reasons prevail'd so far with Mr. Boschbouwer, that he resolv'd to stay; and the Emperor heap'd Favours after Favours upon him, having created him Prince of Migonne, Koc-kelcorle, Ananagepora, and Alumitigai, Knight of the Order of the Golden Sun, President of the Council of War, the second Person in his Privy Council, and Lord High Admiral: and he knew so well how to improve the Emperor's good Opinion of his Person, that scarce any thing of Moment was undertaken without his Advice.

In the Year 1611. Jun. 20. the Portuguese took the Field, with a Body of 1000 Portuguese, and 3000 Indians their Allies, under the Command of Simon Carré; and having got a certain Candinese for their Guide, they march'd thro' unknown ways to Cotiarum, where they surpriz'd the Dutch belonging to Mr. Boschbouwer, put them all to the Sword, and plunder'd the Place, and then retir'd with all Speed to Sette Corle, for fear of being overtaken by the Emperor's Forces.

For the Emperor had no sooner notice of their March, but he sent a Body of 5000 men, commanded by Marafinge Attile, an old experienc'd Captain, and under him Mayyndappo and Vire Segre, two brave Noblemen, to Cotiarum; but coming too late, they pursu'd the Portuguese Day and Night, till they overtook them near Sette Corle, kill'd 23 Portuguese, 600 Indians, set several Villages on fire, and return'd with many Prisoners and a good Booty to Candy.

About the same time an Envoy of the King of Palugam came to Court, representing that John Sangati his Master's Brother, and King of Podere, was enter'd into an Alliance with the Portuguese, in order to deliver all his Harbours into their Hands, and afterwards to carry on a War against his Imperial Majesty with their Assistance. Hereupon the King of Podere being summon'd to appear at Court at a prefix'd time, he sent an Envoy to clear his Innocence with the Emperor, unto whom he represent'd the Perfidiousness of the King of Palugam, who had kill'd his own Brother at Table, for no other reason, but that he might be sole Master of the whole Kingdom, offering besides to remain there as a Hostage for his Master's Fidelity. The Emperor, tho' not very well satisfy'd with the King of Podere, by reason of his not appearing in Person; yet considering, that what had been alledg'd by his Envoy, concerning the Murder of his Elder Brother, was no more than Truth, and that certain Differences were arisen lately betwixt them about the Customs of the River of Palugam, one half whereof was allotted by the Estates to the King of Podere, he dismiss'd the Envoy well satisfied, resolving to suspend his Judgment, till time should unfold the matter.

The Emperor having bent his Thoughts upon a War, he convened the Estates of the Empire, viz. Idole King of Cotiarum, Gelle Wandaar King of Palugam, Comaro Wandaar King of Batecalo, Corre Wit-tiy Raelhamy Prince of Ouwe, Marcellus de Boschbouwer Prince of Migonne, Alster Raelhamy Prince of Vellene, Jalagode Rale Prince of Cotomale, Mewater Rale Prince of Mewater, Wik Ponessinge Earl of Quatre Corle, John Sangati Prince and Lord of Podere, Cole Rale Duke of Ode, Jatte-nore Brother of the Prince Jalagode, Gael Heberad Governour of the County of Har-cipate, Europe Governour of the County of Odogo d' Askeri, Wanategere Governour of the Province of Matere. In the same Assembly appear'd also the Governours and Commanders in chief of the lesser Provinces, and the Ambassador of the King of Tasnapanam, the King of Patania being the only one, who tho' summoned by a peculiar Letter, dated July 16. 1611. made several frivolous Excuses for his not appearing there.

Among other matters of the greatest Moment, it was resolv'd in this Assembly to raise an Army of 50000 Men, one half whereof was to be employed in the Siege of Puntagale, under the Conduct of the Prince of Ouwe; the other against Walane, under the Command of the Prince of Migonne: And in case they met with good Success, both Armies were to join and attack Columbo. For the carrying on of this Enterprize, 4 Millions and 500000 Livers were to be rais'd. Concerning the Differences betwixt the King of Palugam, and his Brother John Sangati, they were both enjoin'd under pain of Death, not to hurt one another, till the matter could be further enquir'd into.

A High Court of Judicature was also settled, to examine and decide all such Matters, as before that time us'd to be de-determined by the Emperor and his Privy Council. The Judges of this Court were, the Prince of Migonne President, the Prince of Ouve, the Prince of Velaren, and the Prince of Cottomale. None of the inferior Courts were to take cognizance of criminal Matters, without the approbation of this High Court, from whence no Appeal was to be allowed. The Prince of Ouve, the Prince of Migonne, the Prince of Velaren, the Prince of Cottomale, and the Earl of Quatre Corle, were appointed Members of his Majesty's Privy Council.

It was also further decreed, that not only Liberty should be granted, but also Houses and Lands allotted to such Seamen as would settle in his Majesty's Dominions; by which means they proposed to get in time a sufficient number of able Seamen to man their Gallies, of which three were order'd to be built immediately, with some other Vessels, to cruize upon the Portugueses on the Coast of Orixia and Bengale, &c. It was also agreed, that no Quarter should be given to the Portugueses and their Confederates, unless they were Women or Children; and that a Pardon should be published for all Deserters that would return within 60 Days into his Majesty's Service, which was done accordingly at Candy, 23 July, 1612.

Portugueses march to Jafnapatnam.

Whilst these things were transacting, Advice was brought that the Portugueses were on their march towards Jafnapatnam; whereupon the Emperor having sent part of his Forces design'd for the Expedition against Walane and Gale, to observe their Motions, they attack'd the Reer of the Portugueses, who imagining no otherwise than that the whole Force of the Emperor was on their back, were soon brought into confusion; but finding their Mistake, rallied again, and retreated towards Columbo, making themselves Masters in their March thither of the Dukedom of Migonne, where they committed all manner of Cruelties. The Modeliar or Governor being accus'd of having betray'd his Trust, sent a Letter to the Prince of Migonne, wherein he declared, that after having sustained three Assaults, he was forced to surrender; adding, that they were ready to shake off the Portuguese Yoke with the first opportunity that offered, tho the Portugueses had taken most of their Wives and Children, (and among the rest the Governor's Wife) along with them, as Hostages and Pledges of their Fidelity, to Columbo. They sent also a Present to their Prince, as a Token of their Obedience. The Letter was dated 30 Aug. 1612. by the Command of the chief Viseo Modeliar.

The Prince, after having consulted about this Letter with the Emperor, sent answer, that he was extremely concerned at the loss of his Country and Subjects, exhorting them to persist in their Fidelity, and that as soon as possible he would appear among them at the Head of the Imperial Army.

CHAP. XII.

The Death of the Hereditary Imperial Prince. His Funeral. The King of Panua rebels, is taken Prisoner, and kill'd, with all his Adherents.

Death of the Imperial Prince.

ABOUT the same time the Hereditary Imperial Prince Mabaftanne, Son of the late Emperor Don John, died after a Sickness of six days. The occasion of his Death was variously reported; but the general Opinion was that he had been poisoned by Cenawierat his Father-in-law, to make way for his eldest Son Comara Singaftanne to succeed him in the Empire. Certain it is that his Death was generally lamented, the Guards were doubled all round the Imperial Palace, and great Preparations made for his Funeral, which was perform'd the 23d of August in the Afternoon. The Empress especially gave most evident Marks of her Grief, calling him at parting, Her own precious Flesh and Blood, her only Hopes, Life and Satisfaction, vowing to revenge his Death, and not to take any Nourishment, that she might follow her Son. She did afterwards fall into a Swoon, and was fain to be remov'd out of the Room by her two Daughters, who also were melted in Tears.

The Corps of the deceased Prince being expos'd to the view of the People, they broke out into most lamentable Exclamations, crying, Where is the Traitor that murder'd our Prince? We will tear him to pieces. So that the Emperor fearing a general Insurrection, got the Prince of Migonne and the Prince of Ouve to tell them, them, that the Prince was not poison'd, but died of a Fever, which somewhat appeas'd the Tumult. The Corps being put into a Mourning Herse adorn'd with Gold and precious Stones, was carried to the place of Burial in the following manner :

val.*

First of all went the Prince's Musicians, clad in black Gingam or Linen; then the Musketeers and Pikemen, three in a Rank: These were follow'd by the Shield-bearers and Halberdiers with their Halberds downwards: After these came 40 War-Elephants guided by as many Gentlemen, and 8 Persian Horses led by eight Knights of the Golden Sun; and after these the Grooms of the Bed-chamber all richly attir'd. Then came the Scepter and Crown, carried each upon a black Velvet Cushion, and the Prince's Arms. These were followed by the Corps attended by eight of the greatest Lords of the Country; then the Empress's Palankin or Litter attended by 16 with Fans, four Umbrello's, and eight Betel Boxes, as also a Nofegay of Gold to be worn by the Emperor only. After these came the Emperor supported by the Princes of Migonne and Mewater, follow'd by the chief Lords of the Empire and the Governours of the Provinces. They pass'd along the Streets under several Arches made of fine Stuffs and Plaster-work. The Corps being deposited on the Place of Burial with a deal of Solemnity, the Priests mutter'd out certain Prayers, and the common People express'd their Sorrow by frequent mournful Outcries.

The Place of Burial.

The Place of Burial (called Hona by the Cingalese) was a four-Square raised from the Ground seven Steps high; It was level on the top, and adorned with several Rows of Trees. In the midst of it was the Grave, into which the Lords who had carried the Corps threw a great quantity of Sandal-wood, and sweet-scented Spices; and having put the Corps upon it cover'd with the same Spices, as high as a Man could reach, they also poured in amongst it three large Vessels full of Oil of Cinnamon, and another with Butter. Over the Grave was erected a large Canopy rising up like a Pyramid of seven Foot high, under which stood the Lords whilst the Ceremony lasted: which being over, the Prince of Migonne took a Bundle of Straw, which was given him by the Prince of Arume, and a golden Chafindish with Fire, and two lighted Torches, and being attended by the said Prince of Arume and two Gentlemen of the Bedchamber, set fire to the Spices and Corps in the Grave, under the most dreadful Ejaculations and Outcries of the People, which lasted till the Corps was quite burnt to Ashes; which done, the whole Train return'd to Court to condole the Empress and her Daughters.

In September Advice being brought to Court that the King of Panua had join'd the Portugueses against the Emperor, and that the King of Cotiarum intended to follow his Footsteps, the Emperor with the Advice of his Privy Council sent his Letters dated the 23 Sept. to both these Kings, to make their personal Appearance at Court within 16 days, under the forfeiture of all their Estates, and Banishment. The King of Cotiarum happening to be ill at that time, he sent his Uncle to know the reason of his being summoned to Court, and thereupon appeared in Person on the 9th Oct. following, giving such Proofs of his Innocence, that he was soon clear'd by the Emperor. But the King of Panua knowing himself guilty, did not think fit to appear; so that it was resolv'd to reduce him by Force, his Defection having put a stop to the Expedition against Walane and Gale. Accordingly the Princes of Migonne and Ouwe, at the head of an Army of 35000 men, march'd 1 Jan. 1613. directly towards Panua, with a resolution to destroy all with Fire and Sword: But the Inhabitants finding themselves not in a condition to oppose so formidable a Force, sent Deputies with Presents to the Princes, desiring they might be spared, as having no hand in this Defection; which being granted, they were amerced in 45000 Larynen (besides their yearly Tribute) amounting just to two Months Pay of the whole Army, and to give Hostages for the King's Appearance at Court in 5 or 6 days after.

Accordingly he was no sooner come there, but being brought before the Privy Council, his Accusation was read to him in Writing, viz. "That he had entred in to an Engagement with the Portugueses against the Emperor, and was to have marry'd the young Princess Hantan Adascyn, and with her as a Dowry the Kingdoms of Batecalo and Palugam: "That he had despised the Emperor's Order in not coming to Court; and hired a certain Russian for 5000 Larynen to murder the Emperor, with a Promise of 20000 more, and certain Possessions, after the same was accomplished, as appeared both by his own Hand-writing, and the Confession of the Russian. against him, that he had scarce any thing to reply, he acknowledged himself guilty, craving the Emperor's Mercy, in regard of his being descended from the Imperial Blood, and of the many Services done to the Crown by his Ancestors.

He was by Order from the Council ordered to be committed Prisoner in the Castle of Meddema Honore, from whence he sent a most submissive Letter to the Emperor, imploring his Mercy to save his Life, and to condemn him to a perpetual Imprisonment. About 62 Persons found to have been his Accomplices in this Conspiracy were sent to other Prisons, and afterwards punish'd with Death.

The 20th of March being the Day appointed for the Trial of the King and his Accomplices, 50 Lords of the Empire appointed for that purpose, after a full Hearing found them all guilty of High Treason, and accordingly pronounc'd the following Sentence: That the King of Pannua should be beheaded, and the rest be thrown before the Elephants, and all their Goods and Estates be confiscated. This Sentence being signed by his Imperial Majesty, was put in execution accordingly the 24th of March following in the Forenoon.

Accordingly a Scaffold cover'd with White (the Royal Colour here) being erected in the Castle of Meddema Honore, the King was brought thither, and seated himself upon a gilt Chair. He at first appear'd undaunted; but being depriv'd of all his Dignities, in the view of the People, and the Sentence read to him, he began to bewail his unfortunate Condition, asking frequently whether there were no hopes of a Pardon? Being told no, he suffer'd himself to be undress'd by some of his Gentlemen of the Bedchamber (who were all in Tears) unto whom he made rich Presents of Jewels, and order'd his Chancellor (who had not had the least Knowledge of this Design) to bind up his Eyes. In the mean while the King took some Betel and Arek, and then said, Why do we stay? Unfortunate I, what am I reduc'd to! Then taking three turns round the Scaffold, he sat down, and taking a little Betel told the Spectators, I am a King descended from the Imperial Blood; but since I must die, this is my only Request, that my dead Corps may not be left to the management of vile Persons, but be honoured with a Royal Sepulture. Which being promis'd by some of the Lords there present, he seem'd to be well satisfy'd, and having ask'd their Pardon for what had pass'd, he had his Eyes ty'd up, and laying his Head upon a Block, it was sever'd from the Body, which (at the Intercession of the said Lords) had a Royal Sepulture allowed it by the Emperor.

After his Death Samatway the King's Uncle being with a general approbation declared his Successor, march'd at the head of an Army of 50000 men, the 8th of April, to Pannua, to take possession of that Kingdom, which he found involved in no small Troubles, there being a strong Party who oppos'd his Succession: But 125 of the Ringleaders being cut to pieces by the new King's Forces, the rest rest thought fit to submit. So soon as he found himself in the quiet Possession of the Kingdom, he sent back the Forces, as also the Arrears of the annual Tribute, besides considerable Presents. The Portugueses not long after sent their Deputies to entice those of Pannua with vast Promises to engage with them afresh; but these were sent back without being heard.

C H A P. XIII.

The Emperor sits down before Walane. The Prince of Migonne equips a Squadron of Ships. The Empress falls sick, disposes of her Affairs, and dies.

IT was not long after that the Emperor with a good Army form'd the Siege of Walane, and took the Castle by Assault; but his Souldiers being too intent upon the Plunder, the Portugueses recovered themselves, and beat them from thence. The Emperor being highly exasperated at this Miscalriage, caus'd 105 Cingalese to be hang'd, which prov'd of the worse consequence, because the Por- tugueses receiving fresh Succours soon after, he was forc'd to raise the Siege.

In the mean time the Prince of Migonne had not been idle to equip some Gallies and Fustes (small Vessels) to cruize upon the Portugueses between the Cape of Cormoryn and the Isle of Ceylon. The same set sail the 16th of May out of the Harbour of Cotiarum, under the Command of a Nephew of the Prince of Ouwe, as Admiral,

Not far from Calecut and the Cape of Comoryn they took another Ship, whereof they threw (according to Order) the Portugueses over-board, forced another ahoar, and took a Moorish Vessel richly laden coming from Ormuz, and bound for Cochin, and another Portuguese Ship coming from Bengal. In July 1613. the Empreſs Donna Catherine being with child, fell dangerously ill of a Fever: She ſent for the Prince of Mignon and the Prince of Ouve, unto whom (after having taken an Oath of Secrecy from them) ſhe diſcovered the whole Sentiments of her Heart, and (with the Emperor's Conſent) conſtituted them Governours of her Children. She had conceived ſuch an immoderate Grief at the Death of her eldeſt Son, the Prince of Mahaſanne, that ſhe would ſcarce take any Suſtenance. She declared, that nothing troubled her more, than that before her Death ſhe ſhould not ſee the Downfall of the Portugueſes in Ceylon; and would often, with a great deal of eagernels enquire, whether the expected Succours were not arrived out of Holland. Such was her Grief, as I told you before, about the loſs of her Son, that ſhe would ſcarce reſt day or night; which had queſtionleſs prov'd the occaſion of this Diſtemper: and ſhe was no leſs troubled how to diſpoſe of her Children after her Death; ſhe bequeathed to them all her Jewels and Treafure ſhe had been gathering for a conſiderable time; as alſo certain Legacies to all her Servants, and reſtored all her Slaves of both Sexes to their Liberty.

Her Sickness increasing daily, she was carried from Welmantotte (her ordinary Residence) to Modeni, where in the Presence of the Emperor, she charged her eldest Son to revenge the late deceased Prince's Death upon the Physician, who she said was the Author thereof: But as she was sometimes not well in her Senses, so this was not much regarded. In the mean while the Emperor took care to prevent all Disorders which might be occasioned by the Empress's Death, by reinforcing the Frontier Garisons, and doubling the Guards in other Places. The Empress having pretty well recover'd her Senses, sent for her five Children, Comara Singasanne Hereditary Prince of the Crown, and his two Brothers Janiere Afsanne and Lamait, and the two Princesses Mahadsfyn and Hanian Aadsyn: She clasp'd them one after another with Tears in her Eyes, in her Arms, and kissing them, said, See here, you dearest part of my own Flesh and Blood, your Mother that has brought you into the World, but must leave you in a little time. Then she call'd to her the two before-mentioned Princes, unto whom she deliver'd her Children in these Words: I now deliver to you the dearest Pledges I have, take care of them as of your own Eyes, and retaliate upon them the many Obligations you have received at our hands. Then turning towards the Emperor, she told him, You are the occasion of my Death. Which so sensibly touch'd him (he loving the Empress extremely) that soon after it threw him into a violent Distemper. After that she scarce spoke to any body, except to the Prince of Ouve, unto whom she declared her Sorrow for having adored and sacrificed to the Pagan Idols, contrary to her better Knowledge, having been educated a Christian, telling him, that she saw the Devils ready to strangle her. The Prince of Migonne (upon whom she fix'd her Eyes all the while) answered her, That the infernal Spirits had no Power over a Christian, provided they heartily repented of their Sins; that therefore he ought to rest satisfy'd, and to implore God's Mercy for his Soul, for Jesus Christ's sake. She returned for answer, I am a Christian, and would willingly pray, I desire you to pray with me. The Prince of Migonne pray'd aloud, Our Father, and the 12 Articles of the Christian Creed: Unto which the Empress reply'd in Portuguese, O Christi Ajuda mi! O Christ help me! Soon after being carried back to Welmantotte, she spoke her last Words: O my dear Princes and Princesses, said she, where must I leave you? My Lords, (pointing to the Prince of Migonne)

THE Emperor finding himself worse and worse, would needs be carried to a small City call'd Dilege, where he appointed the States of the Empire to meet Aug. 18. in order to settle the Succession of the Crown. The Members of this Great Assembly (according to the Schedule read to the King) were, Idele, King of Cotiarum; Celle Wandaar, King of Palugam; Comaro Wandaar, King of Batecalo; Samarway, King of Panua; Namacar the King of Jasnapatnam's Ambassador; Coriwitte Prince of Ouve; Marcellus Prince of Migonne; Materael Hani, Prince of Velaren; Jalagode Rale, Prince of Castemale; Mewater Rale Prince of Mewater; Jane Sengati, Prince and Lord of Podere; Wick Venesings, Earl of Quatrecoire; Gael Henaraed, Governour of the Earldom of Harispate; Corope, Governour of the Earldom of Odogodas; Kery Wanasegre, Governour of the Province of Matele; Attapatte Governour of Wluat Gamme, and Pasgrame Halvenwale Governour of Atapeli and Wilwele; besides a great number of other Noblemen, unto whom his Imperial Majesty made the following Speech.

"My Lords; This present Assembly being occasion'd by my Sickness (perhaps the fore-runner of my approaching End) I first of all desire you to forgive me all Miscarriages I may have committed, the same having been done without my knowledg; and feeling my self very feeble, and decaying in Strength! I thought fit to take effectual care about the Succession, to avoid all Contentts that might likely arise after my Decease. You can't be forgetful what Disturbance arose in the Empire after the Death of my Brother Vinne Ladarma Soria, which ought to serve us as a Caution to prevent the same at this juncture, by committing the Tuition of Comara Singastanne, the eldest Hereditary Prince of the Crown, to such as you shall judg best qualified for so high a Trust, with a full Authority to manage the Administration of all publick Affairs during the Prince's Minority, the Choice whereof I recommend to your present Care. The Lords being not a little surpriz'd at this Proposition, gave in their Opinions in writing, wherein they pitch'd upon the Prince of Migonne and the Prince of Ouve, who both excused themselves, pleading their Inability, and desiring his Majesty to chuse some more able Persons in their steads. The Emperor reply'd sighing, And are you then so backward in doing me this piece of Service? Can you be so forgetful of all the Obligations I have beap'd upon you? They answer'd, that they were ready to sacrifice their Lives and Estates for his Majesty, but that they were afraid their Shoulders were too weak for so great a Burden. Well then, reply'd the Emperor, we will leave the Choice to my Son the Prince, where-with the whole Assembly was satisfy'd. The Emperor then order'd the King of Cotiarum to bring in the Prince, which being done accordingly, he told him, Son, make your Choice from among all these Kings and Princes of two Persons, such as you love best, who shall be Administrators of the Empire after my Death. The Prince answer'd all in Tears, Good Father! and will you die dear Father, pray don't leave me! Which words drew Tears both from the Emperor and the whole Assembly. The Emperor answer'd, I don't know how soon my time may come to leave you; wherefore I would have you pitch upon two Persons, such as you love best next to my self. Well then, reply'd the Prince, I love the Prince of Migonne, and likewise the Prince of Ouve, and next to him the Prince of Velaren. I am satisfy'd, said the Emperor, bring them to me, that I may surrender you to their Care. Accordingly the Prince having led the two before-mentioned Princes to the Emperor, he told him, These shall be my Governors now, and when come to Maturity my chief Counsellors. The Emperor return'd for Answer, not without without some Emotion, My dear Son, Bildens, see here your Father, whose Life perhaps will not be long; you are but young, therefore be always advis'd by these two Princes. A Torrent of Tears which trickled down his Cheeks having stop't his Voice, he order'd himself to be carried out of the Assembly, enjoying only in a few words all the Lords there present, to persist in their Fidelity, which they unanimously promised to do, and in token of their entire Submission, saluted the Emperor with the usual Sambaje, or Reverence, according to the Custom of that Country.

The next day the Royal Patent to invest the before-mentioned two Princes with the Administration of the Empire was read in the Assembly. Cenuwieraat by the Grace of God Emperor of Ceylon, King of Candy, Settevaca, Trinquenemala, Jajnapainam, Settecorles, Manaar, Chilaon, Panua, Batencalo, Palugam and Jaele; Prince of Ouvva, Dennevaque, Passadon-Corle, Velaren, Coromale, Mewatre and Ventane; Duke of Willegamme, Cale, Ody and Jartenore; Earl of Quatre Corle, Harkepatte, Odegodascary, Craivitty and Batagedre. Peace to all those that read these Presents.

"Being much indisposed, and consequently in no small danger of Life, we thought fit to convene all the Great Men of the Empire to consult the Welfare of the Publick, and of our dearly beloved Son Comara Singastan (whom God preserve) It is for this reason that we have appointed two Princes Administrators (after our decease) not only of the Empire, but also of our Hereditary Prince during his Minority, with full Authority to govern the Realm; the two Princes chosen for so great a Trust, being the Prince of Migonme and the Prince of Ouvve, declar'd such by the unanimous Consent of the Assembly. We do by these Presents surrender to the said Princes all our Kingdoms, Provinces and Dominions, to be govern'd by them, during the Minority of our dearly beloved Sons; and as we are very glad to have been able (in our life-time) to prevent all Intestine Commotions by this Settlement, so we require and desire the two before-mentioned Princes to take upon them the Government of all our Dominions till our Recovery, or, in case of my Decease, till the Hereditary Prince comes to an Age of Maturity, or his Brothers, in case he should happen to "die before that time: We therefore command by these Presents expressly, that no body else shall presume to take upon him the Administration and Tuition of the before-mentioned Princes and Princesses, but shall obey the said two Princes without the least opposition, under forfeiture of their Lives. These two Princes shall take effectual care of the Education of the young Princes and Princesses under proper Tutors, and to see the eldest Prince, when come to Age, quietly settled in the Throne; and in case of his Decease Janiere Astan to succeed, as after him Lamostanne, the third is to be the next Heir to the Crown; but in case all the said Princes should die without Issue, our dearly beloved Daughter, the Princess Mahadascyn, and after her her Sister, the Princess Hama Madascyn, shall succeed them in their due turns. But in case these also should leave no Children behind them, the Empire shall devolve into your hands, and you shall be at full liberty to chuse with the unanimous Consent of the Great Men of the Empire, such a Person of the Imperial Blood as you think the best qualified for the Welfare of the Empire, which I leave to the Wisdom of this Assembly. In the mean while, every one (after my Decease) shall be oblig'd to be accountable to the two Administrators for all the Revenues of their respective Lands without failure, upon pain of Death and loss of their Estates. The two Administrators shall have a due regard for all such Counsellors as were in our life-time, and not turn them out, unless they should not behave themselves as they ought to do, when they shall have power to put others in their places.

"All Mandats shall be issued by the two Administrators in the Name of the whole Empire, and the Hereditary Prince; according to which all the Great Men and Nobility, without exception, shall appear at Court when requir'd, and obey them in all other respects: They shall also be oblig'd to take the usual Oath of Allegiance to the Hereditary Prince, and his two Administrators, and to promise to persist in their Fidelity, and not to suffer any Alliance or Engagement to be made with our Enemies the Portugueses, or any Rebels, under what pretence soever. They shall be oblig'd to assist in the reducing of all such

" (tho of the next Kindred) as pretend to disturb the publick Peace: And lastly, all the Kings and Lords shall take an Oath, that after our Decease they will raise no Disturbance in the Empire, but will submit quietly to the present Disposition, under forfeiture of their Lives. For which reason our Grant written in Golden Letters, is to be deliver'd to the Princes of Migonne and Ouwe, pursuant to which they shall have full Authority to govern and protect in our and the Hereditary Prince's Name our Dominions, and to administer Justice both in Civil and Criminal Causes. We therefore order and command all Kings, Princes, Dukes, Earls, Clergymen, Nobles, Governours, and Heads of Provinces and Cities, Captains, Presidents, Counsellors, Admirals, Chancellors, and all other Persons in our Service, as Deputies, Administrators, Farmers, Inhabitants, Souldiers, Citizens, and others inhabiting the Cities, Villages, or any places whatever, all and every one in particular, to receive " and acknowledg the before-mentioned two Princes, Administrators and Governours of the Realm, till the Hereditary Prince came of Age, and to take the Oath of Fidelity to them, and shew them the same respect as to our own Person, and, as becomes faithful and true Subjects, to behave themselves in all respects according to the true intent of this Patent. We also annul by these Presents all Laws or Constitutions which may seem contrary to the true meaning thereof; and to give it all the Authority and Weight that can be, have in Conjunction with the Hereditary Prince, and the Princes, Dukes and Lords of this Assembly, sign'd it with our own Hand, and order'd the Great Seal to be affix'd to it. For the same reason we have also commanded the same to be registr'd in all the Courts, Councils and Treasuries of our Empire, that no body may plead Ignorance of this our last Will. Dated at the Imperial Court at Digelege, 19 Aug. 1613.

CHAP. XV.

The Hereditary Princes are carried to Cockelecorle. Gale Heneraed is routed, and being summoned to Court, is made Prisoner, and executed.

THE said Patent being publish'd by his Imperial Majesty's order, the Administrators as well as the rest of the Estates took the Oath of Allegiance to the Hereditary Prince; which done, the Administrators upon their Knees return'd his Majesty thanks for the Honour he had bestow'd upon them, wishing him a long and happy Life. His Majesty lifting them up, order'd them to sit down by him, and disclosed to them some of his Treasures which were buried under ground, besides several other matters relating to the Administration of the State.

Then the three Princes and two Princesses being call'd in, he exhorted them to follow the Directions of their Governours; and taking the eldest Prince in his Arms, My dearest Son, said he, I wish you and your Brothers and Sisters all imaginable Prosperity: and then turning to the Princes of Migonne and Ouwe; Receive, says he, from my hands these my dearest Treasures, which I commit to your care; and thus deliver'd them up to the two Administrators, who took care to have them convey'd in the night-time to the Dukedom of Cockelecorle for their better security, charging those who conducted them, upon their Lives not to divulge whither they were carried: which done, the Assembly was dissolv'd the 20th.

The Portugueses had no sooner notice of the Death of the Empress, and the Sickness of the Emperor, but they left no Stone unturn'd (notwithstanding the miscarriage of their Design upon Pannua) to raise new Troubles. For this purpose they had found means to bring over to their side the Son of Gael Heneraed Governor of Harcipate, President in the Dukedom of Cockelecorle, who all along had supply'd them with Provisions at Walane, and had engag'd several of the Nobility to raise Divisions, thereby to give opportunity to the Portugueses to make themselves Masters of the Kingdom. The two Princes Administrators having got some notice of the matter, they resolv'd to find out the bottom of this Design. For this purpose the Prince of of Mignonne march'd the 15th of September at the head of a good Body, under pretence of changing the Garisons on the Frontiers, but near Ode and Jatteno met Heneraed's Forces, who being not a little surpriz'd at the sight of the Prince, pretended they were order'd for Cottamale upon some particular business. The Prince being now more than ever confirm'd in the matter, order'd their chief Commander to be brought before him immediately, who being search'd, a Letter of Gael Heneraed was found about him, viz. That all things look'd with a good face towards the accomplishment of the Design concerted betwixt them. That he had consulted with his Son Abecque, President of Cockelecorle, and that they had agreed with many of the Nobility to murder the Princes and Princesses, and likewise the Princes of Mignonne and Ouve, the Issue whereof they should know as soon as it was put in Execution. He sent them in the mean time a certain quantity of Powder, Ball and Provisions, advising them to be upon their Guard, because the Garison of Candy had been re-inforc'd considerably of late, which seem'd as if some Design were in hand against them.

The Prince gave immediate Orders to seize the Commander, who standing upon his Defence, was cut to pieces: his Soldiers and Pioneers attempted to save themselves by flight, but being pursued were most slain, except a few that sav'd themselves in the Woods. The Prince dispatch'd a Messenger immediately to the Governour with orders to come immediately to Court, having particular occasion to concert some Matters of moment with him.

He who knew nothing of what was pass'd, appear'd accordingly the 17th of September at the Court in Candy, where being well receiv'd by the Prince, they talk'd of several matters relating to the Government; upon which occasion he gave him repeated assurances of his Fidelity, telling him, that he was ready to venture his Life for the Welfare of the Empire. The Prince of Mignonne had much ado to dissemble his Anger, only told him, We have nevertheless received certain Advice that you hatch Treason against the Crown, and are enter'd into a Confederacy with the Portugueses our Enemies, contrary to the Oath you have so lately taken. He declar'd his Innocence with many Assurances, desiring that he might be confronted with his Accusers: Whereupon the Prince of Ouve told him, We could wish you innocent, but are too well inform'd of your Treachery, and so order'd him to withdraw (after some further Excuse) to be disarm'd, and his Person to be secur'd.

The Captain of the Guard coming to seize him, he said, Friend, you are wrong, and so made the best of his way towards the Gate, in hopes of making his escape; but the Captain asking him, Are you not the Governour Gael Heneraed? he answer'd, Yes. The Captain reply'd, Then I am not wrong, I beg your Pardon, being oblig'd to execute his Majesty's Orders: So that seeing there was no hopes of escaping, he desir'd to be brought before his Majesty, or before the Princes Administrators. The Captain told him, that he had no such Orders; whereupon some of the Governour's Soldiers put themselves in a posture of Defence, but were all made Prisoners, and put to death the next day, being 32 in number. Another Party attempted to escape by night, but 50 of them were taken and committed to Prison, which made his case worse.

In the mean time the two Administrators took care to have the Emperor's Children transported to another Castle, and sent Orders to all the Governours to stop all the Soldiers of Heneraed, unless they were provided with a Passport from his Majesty.

The 22d Heneraed was examin'd in the Council, where at first he boldly deny'd every thing alledg'd against him, but soon after confess'd the whole, and beg'd Mercy, alledging, that what he had done was out of Discontent, because he had not been promoted to a higher Station. He did not deny that 26 Noblemen had been concern'd in this Conspiracy, yet refus'd to name them; but seeing the Brahman, who had made the first discovery, appear, he said, No question but you will soon know their Names now, however I will not discover them. The Brahman's declar'd, that Gael Heneraed had caused two Gentlemen to be murder'd, because they refused to have a hand in this Conspiracy. The 26 Noblemen being apprehended confess'd the Fact, and the 25th being appointed for their Trial, they were all condemn'd to Death. The 27th they were executed in the following manner: The 50 Soldiers who had endeavour'd to make their escape, had their Heads cut off. The 26 Noblemen, who had sign'd the Confederacy, had the Heads cut off first, and then their Bodies thrown before the Dogs. Four of his chief Counsellours were drawn with hot Pinchers, had afterwards their Hands cut off, and their Bodies

A Battel betwixt the Emperor and the Rebels. The Portugueses propose a Treaty of Peace, which is refused. They march towards Candy, but are routed.

SOON after the Princes of Migonne and Ouve, together with the Earl of Quatrecoile, took a Progress to Cockelecoile, being followed by 2000 Men, and honourably received by the Inhabitants; they settled Matters upon the old Foot, and made some Alteration in the Coin, giving strict Orders not to raise the Money above the prefix'd Value.

In the Year 1614, there happened a bloody Engagement betwixt the Imperial Forces and the Rebels, wherein 4000 Men being kill'd on both sides, and the last finding themselves too weak, retreated in the Night time, and solicited the Portugueses for Help. The Emperor remaining thus Master of the Field, order'd his Camp to be strongly fortify'd; and keeping only 2000 Men, and 1000 Pioneers for his Guard, he sent his General with the whole Army to cut off the Retreat of the Enemy. The Portugueses having got notice thereof, gathered secretly a Body of 100 Portugueses, and 5000 Natives; and marching thro unpasable ways, surpriz'd the Outguards, and entered the Camp without much Opposition, every one seeking how to save themselves by a timely flight. In this Action the Prince of Migonne was wounded with a Lance in his Right Leg, and the Prince of Ouve in the Right Arm, and 500 were slain upon the Spot on the Emperor's side.

Anno 1614. March 14. Don Munno de Feriera, Brother of the Earl of Fere, arriv'd at Columbo, in the Quality of Viceroy of Goa, to relieve Don Jeronimo d'Oviedo. He brought along with him about 132 Portugueses, besides a good number of Mislices, to reinforce the Garisons, with positive Orders to endeavour, if possible, to procure a Peace with the Emperor of Ceylon.

Pursuant to these Orders he sent the 3d of June, Don Francisco de Menezes his Envoy to Candy, with full Power to treat with the said Emperor upon the best Terms he could. Accordingly the said Envoy delivered to the Emperor a Letter from the General, and another from the Viceroy of Goa, written in the King of Spain's Name, the chief Contents whereof (besides some Compliments) were, "That his Catholick Majesty being averse to the Effusion of human Blood, was inclined to enter into a Treaty with his Majesty, in order to settle a firm and lasting Peace; for which purpose he had granted full Power to certain Persons of Note to treat upon that Head, desiring that his Majesty would be pleased to accept of them as such, and give them a favourable Reception. Goa, Feb. 22. 1614. The General's Letter was much to the same purpose.

The Emperor having propos'd the matter the 13th following in Council, it was resolv'd they should bring in their Propositions in Writing, which being done the 18th of the same Month, were as follows.

1. The King of Spain is willing to enter into an amicable Treaty with the Emperor.
2. The Peace to be concluded either for ever, or for a certain space of Years, to be kept inviolably, and all Hostilities to cease both by Water and Land immediately.
3. Each Party to keep what they are in possession of at present.
4. His Imperial Majesty shall renounce his Alliance with the Dutch, and engage himself never to enter into any other with them for the future, or any other State at Enmity with Spain and Portugal, and to permit no other European Nation to traffick there.

X x x x

§. Both

Baldew. 5. Both Parties to be at Liberty to traffick in what Commodities they please, without entering into any Articles upon that Head.

6. His Majesty shall grant Liberty for the free Exercise of the Roman Catholick Religion in Candy, and the building a Church and Convent, with convenient Habitations for two or three hundred Persons, both of the Clergy and Laity.

7. His Majesty shall send one of his Hereditary Princes to keep his Court at Columbo, in lieu whereof they will send a Person of Quality to stay always near his Majesty.

8. His Imperial Majesty shall restore all the Jewels, Money, Prisoners, Slaves of both Sexes, Cannon, &c. taken in the last War.

Are rejected.

These Propositions being read and debated in the Council, it was resolved not to enter into any further Treaty with the Portuguese, as fearing not without reason, that some treacherous Design (as often had happened before) lay concealed under this pretended Treaty. An Answer was therefore return'd to the Portuguese Envoy, Jun. 20. That his Imperial Majesty was not inclined to treat with the King of Spain, before all the Lands and Lordships taken from him were restor'd: That however the Spaniards should remain in possession of Gale and Columbo, with the Territories thereunto belonging; but that his Imperial Majesty would by no means renounce his Alliance made with the Dutch, but keep the same inviolably. Furthermore his Majesty requir'd a full Compensation of all the Damages he had sustain'd in this War, and was resolved to have Custom paid him of all Goods exported or imported.

The Portuguese propose a Truce.

The Portuguese finding them so resolute, would fain have made a considerable Abatement in their Pretensions; for which purpose they propos'd a Cessation of Arms, which being likewise rejected, the Envoy return'd the 8th of June without effecting any thing, with a Letter from the Emperour, directed to the Portuguese General, containing in Substance, That he was resolved not to violate his Oath with the Dutch, and that being sensible no Faith ought to be given to the Portuguese, he intended to pursue them by Force of Arms, and that they might make their account accordingly.

The Portuguese march towards Candy.

The Portuguese not a little exasperated at so resolute an Answer, march'd with an Army of 25000 Men towards Candy.

The Emperor's Army consisted of 29000 Men, and meeting just near Walane, Aug. 6. a smart Engagement ensu'd, in which the Portuguese were worsted, 2100 Indians and 40 Portuguese being slain on their side, with the Loss of 700 Men on the Emperor's side. The Portuguese saved themselves from a total Defeat, by the favour of the adjacent Woods.

This Victory occasion'd no small Joy at Candy, where the Prince of Migonne and the Prince of Onwe who had led the Van, were receiv'd with more than ordinary respect. Soon after a Deserter came to Candy, who gave them an account of the whole condition of the Portuguese Camp, which might have been entirely ruin'd, had the Cingaleses pursu'd their Victory: He told them that before the Battel, they had not left above 300 Men at Columbo, which had occasion'd such Fears and Tumults in that City, that the same might have been easily surpriz'd with a moderate Force; and that upon the return of the General from the Army, he had order'd several to be hang'd upon that account.

The 29th of Aug. The Emperor declar'd, that he would marry the Daughter of the late Empre's by her first Husband, alledging, that he had debauch'd her before, which made most of the Great Men consent to the Match; but the Prince of Migonne oppos'd the same, telling the Emperor with a great deal of Freedom, That to commit Incest was directly contrary to the Word of God; and that for that reason he could never approve of it, but was oblig'd to put his Imperial Majesty in mind of his Salvation. These Words having drawn Tears from the Emperor's Eyes, he promised to lay aside all Thoughts of that nature for the future, and to converse with her no otherwise than a Father might do with his Daughter.

The 31st of Octob. those of Candy defeated a Convoy of 900 Portuguese, that were marching with Provisions and Ammunition to Candy, but had not the same Success in another Enterprize; for having laid an Ambush of 500 Men, to intercept the Portuguese General, as he was coming from Columbo to Walane, the Portuguese having got Intelligence thereof, sent a stronger Body, which surrounded them, and cut them all to pieces, except two Cingaleses, who hid themselves among the Dead, till the Night gave them an Opportunity to make their Escape.

der'd the Ambassadors of the King of Palugam upon the Road, a furious War ensu'd betwixt them, in which the last worsted (with the assistance of the Prince

C H A P. XVII.

Mr. Boschhouwer sent as an Ambassador to the United Provinces, enters into an Engagement with the Crown of Denmark, dies in his Return to the Indies. Gule Gedde the Danish Commodore arrives in Ceylon, returns without effecting any thing. The Portugueses erect divers Fortifications by Fraud. The Emperor's Enterprize upon Columbo. The Portugueses beaten.

Marcellus de Boschhouwer, who had (as we have understood) attained to the highest Dignities in the Empire of Ceylon, being desirous to make himself known by some great Enterprize, obtained leave from the Emperor 1615. to go to Masulipatam, to solicit the so long promis'd Succours against the Portugueses, with full Power to enter into Alliances with all such Kings, Princes and States as he thought might contribute any thing towards clearing his Majesty's Dominions from the Portugueses.

Having for this purpose obtain'd divers Letters and Credentials, wherein his Majesty promis'd to ratify every thing the said Mr. Boschhouwer should treat of, with any Prince upon that Subject; he set out in Quality of Ambassador and Plenipotentiary from Ceylon, the 9th of May 1615. and arrived Jun. 2. at Masulipatam, where at that time one Hans van Hase, Director and Visitor General of the Indies, commanded in chief, who went along with Marcellus de Boschhouwer to Bantam, in order to concert measures with Gerard Reynst, the Dutch General there, concerning the intended Succours against the Portugueses.

But the said General being dead sometime before, and the War carried on at that time by the Dutch Company in the Molucque Islands and those of Banda, as also against Poulo Ay, hindring the Dutch at that juncture from sending the promis'd Succours to the Emperor of Ceylon (it being absolutely requisite to secure the Molucques, before they cou'd think of any New Conquests) it was resolved by the Council of Bantam to permit Mr. Boschhouwer (at his earnest request) to go to Holland, in order to represent the true State of matters in the Empire of Ceylon to their High and Mightinesses the States-General, his Highness the Prince of Orange, and the Directors of the East-India Company.

Vol. III.

But upon his Arrival in Holland, he found things not in any wise to answer his Expectation: for in regard of his Quality and high Station in Ceylon, pretending to much more Respect and Honour than the Company was willing to grant him; this occasion'd such Contestes among them, that he resolv'd (notwithstanding his Allegiance due to the States) to go into Denmark, where he arriv'd June 16. O. S. 1617. and not long after entr'd into an Engagement with the Danes at Copenhagen, which was ratify'd by their King Christian IV. 1618. March 30. Accordingly he set sail from Denmark with his Lady (who challenged the Title of Princess of Migonne) and a Retinue of some Servants and Soldiers, but died before he came to the end of his Voyage, after which most of the Soldiers deserted on the Coast of Coromandel (where his Lady died also afterwards) whereby tho all his Designs vanished into Smoke, yet will it perhaps not be beyond our purpose, to give a more circumstantial account of this unfortunate Voyage.

Mr. Boschhouwer having (as we told you) obtain'd a Man of War and a Yacht from the King of Denmark, on account of the Emperour of Ceylon, and the Danish East-India Company (lately erected) having join'd five Ships with them, under Gule Gedde a Danish Nobleman, they set sail out of the Sound, and after many Tempests and other Difficulties, having pass'd the English Channel, they did not arrive in Ceylon till twenty two Months after, viz. 1620. not without the Loss of a considerable Number of their Men (among whom was Mr. Boschhouwer himself) that perished for want of Provisions, and the Fatigues of so tedious a Voyage.

Some of these Ships arriving in the Harbour of Batccalo, others at Coutjare, Gule Gedde gave notice of his Arrival.

A particular account of his Voyage.

The Danes arrive in Ceylon.

and of the Occasion thereof, as also of the Death of Boschbouwer, to the Emperor, who no sooner understood his Death, and that the Danes pretended to put the Equipment of this Squadron to his account, but he appeared much surpriz'd thereat, declaring that he had given no Authority to Boschbouwer to enter into such an Engagement; so that the Danes had nothing but bare Words, in recompence of the vast Charge they had been at upon this account.

The Emperor rejects their Offer.

The Danish Commodore seizes Boschbouwer's Effects.

The Danish Commodore Gule Gedde, finding himself thus disappointed in all his hopes, apply'd all his Thoughts, how to reimburse the King his Master part of the Charge he had been at in the Equipment of this Squadron; for which reason he seiz'd upon all Boschbouwer's Effects aboard his Vessels, after having taken care of his Burial, which was perform'd with little Pomp; but that of his Son of three Years of Age (who being born at Copenhagen, was Godson of K. Christian IV. and died likewise in this Voyage) was done with more Solemnity. The seizing of Boschbouwer's Effects being perform'd in the Harbour of Trinquemale by Gule Gedde, he sent his Widow at her request to Candy, stript of every thing, except what she had saved privately by the assistance of some Friends, from whence after a Stay of seven Years, she was by the Emperor Zenarat (at the request of General Roland Crape) sent with some Servants to Tranquebare.

After the Departure of Boschbouwer's Widow for Candy, the Commodore Gule Gedde set Sail with part of his Squadron from Coutjare, in order to join the rest of his Ships at Batecalo, and to sollicite once more Satisfaction from the Emperor; but in the mean while, one of his Ships that was left at Trinquemale being seized upon by the Ships Crew, and afterwards split upon the Rocks, the Seamen and Soldiers got with their Boats to the Coast of Coromandel, where some of them took Service among the Portugueses at St. Thomas, the rest among the Dutch at Malaccate. Gule Gedde having but small hopes of Success, and fearing that some of the other Ships might follow their Example, thought fit to weigh Anchor, and take his next course for Denmark.

Returns to Denmark.

The Portugueses being infinitely glad at the Departure of these unwelcome Guests out of Ceylon, now bent all their Thoughts to exclude all other Nations from the traffick of that Country: To encompass which, they judged it the most proper means to erect a Fort near that Harbour, the Place whereof (after a narrow View taken of the Ground, and various Debates) was pitch'd upon at the North-West Point of the Bay, upon a Neck of Land jetting out into the Sea, on the back-side of the Pagode of Trinquemale, the Walls whereof would be of considerable Advantage to them.

Accordingly the said Fort being begun 1622. was carried on with all imaginable Vigour, to bring it to perfection, before the Emperor of Candy (with whom they were at Peace then) could have any notice of it. For no sooner was that Prince advertis'd of this treacherous Design, but he protested against it, and sent a considerable Force to demolish it; but being repuls'd by the Portugueses, these continu'd the Fortifications, being an irregular Triangular Fortrefs, which they furnish'd with great Cannon taken out of the Sea, belonging formerly to the Danish Ship that was cast away near that Place.

Whilst the Portugueses were embroil'd with the Cingalese upon that account, a certain Radye of the Malabars entred the Kingdom of Jasnapatnam with a considerable Force, in hopes to recover the same from the Portugueses, who had lately conquer'd the same: But Philippo d'Olivero their General, an old experienc'd Captain, receiv'd them so bravely, that few of them return'd into their Native Country.

Root the Malabars

The Portugueses having thus once more rid their Hands of their Enemies, yet not thinking themselves secure, unless they strengthen'd their Conquests by some additional Fortifications, order'd certain new Works to be made, which afterwards were chang'd into a Royal Fortrefs with four Bastions. The Foundation whereof was laid 1624, but not brought to perfection till the Year 1632, being lin'd with white Stone.

Build more Forts

But to establish themselves the better in this Island, they concluded a Peace (by the Mediation of certain Clergymen) with the Emperor, who was willing to embrace it, till he could find a more convenient Opportunity of revenging himself for the many Affronts they had put upon him; one of the main Conditions of this Peace was, that the Portugueses should not build any other Forts or Fortifications in any Place of the Empire, but might remain in possession of what they had at present.

Make Peace with the Emperor.

Notwithstanding this Agreement, which was so advantageous to the Portugueses, finding that the European Nations had still a free access into the Kingdom of Candy by the River Palligamme (otherwise call'd Batecal) they were contriving all possible means to secure that Passage to themselves.

To accomplish their end with all imaginable Secrecy, they pitch'd upon a Misice, an experienc'd Engineer, who being of a dark Colour, was sent in the disguise of a Gufuratte Jogy, or Mendicant Friar, from Columbo to Batecal, who settled himself in the Village of Saman-ture; from whence having taken a full view of all the circumjacent Country for two years together, he pitch'd upon a sandy Place about 2 Leagues from the Village, for the erecting of the desired Fort; but finding upon strict enquiry, that the Channel leading that way from the Mouth of the River, was the greatest part of the Year chok'd up with Sand, and that consequently there would be no conveniency of getting fresh Water there, he was forc'd to go about 6 Leagues lower down the River, where meeting with a small Isle of a League in circuit, and not above a Mile distant from the main Channel, convey'd thither directly from the Mouth of the River, he returned to Columbo; and having given a full account to the Government there of the advantageous Situation of this Isle for their intended Project, the Portuguese sent him back in 1627. with 13 Companies of Soldiers, in order to put it in execution. There, at their arrival, having secured themselves by throwing up some Intrenchments inclos'd with Palisadoes, to work they went with all expedition to perfect the intended Fortress, which was of a Quinquangular Figure, with three Bastions.

The King of Candy had no sooner intelligence thereof, but he sent a good Body of Troops thither to prevent their Design: They made shift to land in the Island, but were forc'd to retreat without effecting any thing, and leave the Portuguese to perfect their Fortifications, which they did soon after, being well provided with all sorts of Materials for such a Purpose.

The Emperor finding himself thus by no means than seven Capital Forts, built on all the best Avenues of the Isle, reduc'd to such Straits by the Portuguese, that without their Consent he was not in a condition to keep the least Correspondence with any foreign Nation, resolv'd to try his utmost to draw these Thorns out of his Flesh. For this purpose he thought fit to try the Inclinations of the Cingalese inhabiting at Columbo; and finding them ready to revolt by reason of the many Indignities received from the Portuguese, he engag'd them to his Party. Things being thus settled, the only thing remaining was how to entice their General Constantine de Saa to take the Field, by which means they might find an opportunity of going over to the Emperor. Knowing, therefore that Don Michael de Noronha, Conde de Linbaros, the then Viceroy of Goa, had lately wrote an affronting Letter to the said General, wherein he told him, that he was more fit for a Merchant than a Soldier, and that he regarded more his own Profit than the King's Glory, and his Conquest; they insinuated into him, that since both his Expeditions against Candy had prov'd unsuccessful, it would not be amiss (to retrieve his Honour) to try his Fortune against Ouwe, promising to appear in the Field with all their Power, which they did accordingly.

Constantin de Saa the Portuguese General was so highly pleas'd at this Proposition, that he not only gladly embraced it, but also sent a Challenge to Comar Singh Haffanne, Prince of Ouwe, eldest Son of the Emperor Zenat Adajjyn, who sent him word, that he would expect his coming like a Man of Honour. Accordingly the Portuguese General took the Field the 30th of August, with 1300 of his own Countrymen, 1700 Misices, and 8000 Cingalese; and the Prince of Ouwe being join'd by his two Brothers, Vysiapalla and Raja Singa, made up an Army of 23000 men, who (according to the Advice of the Emperor their Father) kept at a distance, seeming to avoid an Engagement. The Portuguese being much surprized at their being suffer'd to pass the Mountains of Ouwe without the least Opposition, march'd directly to Badule the Capital City of that Dukedom, which they took and plunder'd with all the circumjacent Country, and so retired again towards the Mountains, the Princes being all the while Spectators of their Ravages, with a resolution to watch their opportunity of taking a severe Revenge, so soon as the Cingalese (according to their Promise) should desert the Portuguese.

These things were not so secretly carried on, but that Constantin de Saa got some scent of the matter. This made him summon before him all their chief Officers, unto whom he represented the Reasons of his Suspicion, but in very obliging Terms, thinking it his best way to dissemble, yet to use all imaginable Precautions against them. They positively denying what was alledged against them, he continu'd his March till Night, when finding the Enemy to keep clofer to him than they us'd to do, and being confirmed in his former Suspicion by fresh Intelligence, he order'd the Cingalefes (contrary to what they us'd to do) to pitch their Tents in the Center of the Camp, and the next morning with break of day for the whole Army to set fire to all their Baggage (except wearing Apparel) the better to further their March. They had scarce march'd a few hours, when the Princes coming up pretty close with the Portuguese Army, the 8000 Cingalefes joined with their Countrymen, and with their joint Forces attack'd them in the Flank at the Descent of a Mountain, firing upon them very furiously thro an adjacent Wood, whereabouts a great number of the Portugueses were slain, the Cingalefes falling in Pell mell among them with their Scyimeters and Pikes, especially after a sudden Storm had rendred the Portugueses Firelocks almost usefess, without which they might probably have made a tolerable good Retreat. Constantin de Saa their General had his Head cut off by one of the rebellious Cin- galefes, which he presented to Raja Singa upon a Drum, whilst he was washing himself in a neighbouring Brook. To confess the Truth, de Saa deserv'd a much better Treatment, both in respect of his Valour, and the many good Offices he had done to the same Cingalefes at Columbo, who now so basely betray'd him and his whole Army.

It is not easy to be imagin'd what a consternation this general Defeat occasion'd among the Portugueses in the Isle of Ceylon, and especially at Columbo, for the defence whereof there were scarce any Troops left behind, except a few of the most antient among the Inhabitants. This encouraged the Emperor to send his youngest Son Mabaftanne (afterwards named Raja Singa) to form the Siege of that Place, which he did accordingly; but was so bravely received by Lancerotte de Sefies their Governour, that after a whole Month's Siege, he was forced to retreat without effecting any thing. The Besieged being afterwards reinforced from Goa with 400 men (among whom were 300 Cassers) with a considerable quantity of Provisions, Ammunition, and other Necessaries, began to hold up their heads again, and bid defiance to the Cingalefes.

The Emperor dies. Intestine Divisions betwixt his two Sons. The Portugueses at War with the new Emperor; make Peace with him. The Hollanders invited by his Majesty's Letter to the Governour of Paliacatta, to come into the Isle of Ceylon.

The old Emperor dies.

The youngest Son seizes upon the Imperial Title.

SOON after, viz. 1632. the old Emperor happening to die, left the Empire betwixt his three Sons, viz. Ouwe to Commarra Singa Haffanne his eldest Son, Matele to Visia Palla Haffanne his second, and Candy to Mabaftanne the youngest, who besides this assum'd the Imperial Title under the Name of Raja Singa Adafym, to the no small dissatisfaction of his eldest Brother Commarra Singa Haffanne, whom he knew so well how to amuse under different Pretensions, that the matter remained undecided as long as he lived; and immediately after his Death seized upon the Province of Ouwe, which Visia Palla the second Brother (who claimed one half for his Share) took so heinously, that Matters came betwixt them to an open Rupture.

The Portugueses having by this time received divers Supplies from Goa, and pretty well recover'd of their late Disgrace, resolv'd to improve this Opportunity to their advantage. For which purpose entring the Low-Lands, they forced most of the Princes there to side with them, but durst not venture to attempt the Passage of the Mountains. They pitch'd their Tents therefore near Allago, as the most proper Place to keep the adjacent Country in awe: But Raja Singa the new Emperor surpriz'd them in their Camp, and forc'd them to retreat with all haste to Columbo.

The Portugueses now finding themselves unable to cope with the Emperor, thought it requisite to come to an agreement; for which purpose having sent their Envoys to Candy, a Peace was concluded accordingly, but soon broken again on the the Portuguese side, who let slip no opportunity to improve their advantage, notwithstanding the said Peace.

Raja Singa being thus fully convinc'd, that no firm Peace was likely to be settl'd with the Portuguese in Ceylon, dissembled his Repentment, but in the mean time resolv'd to invite the Hollanders to force them out of the Isle; and accordingly sent the following Letter dated Sept. 9. 1636. to the Governour of Paliacatta.

"I Raja Singa, Emperor of the Isle of Ceylon; King of Candy, Settevaca, Danbadany, Anorayapore, Jafnapatnam; Prince of Ouve, Mature, Dinavaca, Quavrecorle; Great Duke of Settecortle, Matalte; Earl of Canajar, Trinquenemale, Batecalo, Valsebutena, Dumbra, Panoa, Patoveta, Putelaon, Vassare, Gale, Billigaon; Marquess of Duramira, Ratenura, Tinipane, Axcepaoon; Lord of the Ports of Alicoon, Caleture, Columbo, Negombo, Chilao, Madampe, Calpentyn, Aripature, Manaar, and of the Pearl-Fishery.

"THO I don't question but that Fame has already made known to you the good Success of our Arms against the Portuguese, yet did judg it absolutely requisite to give a more particular account thereof to the Governour of the Fortress of Paliacatta. First of all the Emperor did regain from the Portuguese the two Fortresses of Walane and Forago, as likewise the City of Marua Goma, with 500 Portuguese Inhabitants, and a good number of Monks of divers Orders. Don Nuno Alvares Pereira being then their General, thought thereupon fit to make Peace in order to recover the Prisoners taken by the Emperor's Forces. About eleven Years after the Conclusion of the said Peace Constantine de Saa being made their General, did treacherously surprize Jafnapatnam, and built the Forts of Batecalo and Trinquenemale, giving no other reason for their so doing to the Emperor, than that having certain Intelligence, that some of their European Enemies were coming to settle there, they were forc'd to erect these Fortifications for their own defence. About a year after the Frier they had lett their Hostage at Candy, being releas'd by the Emperor (according to his Parole) they made a powerful Irruption into the Empire: and after their Retreat the Emperor "happening to die, I had scarce ascended the Throne, but within eleven Months after they made another Incursion; but encountering them near Ambatana, we forced them to retreat with considerable Loss. Seven Months after they invaded the Dukedom of Ouve, where we routed them in a smart Engagement; and the rebellious Natives having deserted them, and joined with us (according to their Duty) compleated our Victory: Their General, a Major General, and the Governour of Dinavaca, being slain upon the spot, with 400 Soldiers; and their Colonel of the Artillery, their Governour of the seven Corles, and Matura, with 300 Soldiers, many Captains and Ensigns, taken Prisoners. Since that time we took the Fort of Mantea Ravane with 100 Portuguese Soldiers with their Captains, and another Fort in Sofragaan, with three Companies, besides that two other Fortifications of theirs were demolished. It was much about the same time that I kept the City of Columbo invested for 30 days; but finding my self ill, I returned to Candy, leaving the Command of my Forces to Mava Tana Wandaar, who within 15 days after my departure retreating thence, thereby gave an opportunity to the Enemy to protract the War for a Year and half, and afterwards deserted in Person to the Enemy. I did also fall into the Enemies Dominions, and having entrench'd my self near Ganetona in the four Corles, I did considerable Mischief, so that the new Governour of Columbo Diego de Melo de Castro (formerly Governour of St. Thomas) sent thither from Goa, was forc'd to sue for Peace, which I granted to prevent the Miseries and Calamities of a long War; the said General having sworn by the Name of his God, and in his King's stead, to deliver up the Forts of Trinquenemale and Batecalo, and to release all Prisoners on both sides. Thirteen Months after the conclusion of this Peace, the Governour of Batecalo did side with certain Rebels, in order to assassinate one of my Governours, aiding and assisting them also in robbing a Bark belonging to me, and committing divers treacherous Acts in many Parts, as well of our own Kingdoms, as those of other Indian Princes; therefore I have taken a resolution to rid my hands of these Enemies, and to declare my self a Brother in War with the King of the Hollanders, as long as the

Charles Reyniers the Governor of Paliacatta (afterwards General of the Indies) had no sooner receiv'd this Letter, but he sent the same to Batavia to the General and Great Council of the Indies, who after mature deliberation resolv'd to send a Person fitly qualified for such a Trust aboard the Falcon Yacht in order to enter into a strict Amity and Commerce with the Emperor, and to procure a considerable Cargo of Cinnamon; whereof immediate notice was also to be given to the Dutch Fleet before Goa.

It is to be observ'd, that sometime before this Letter was brought to Batavia, the General Anthony van Diemen, and the Council of the Indies, had already taken the Affairs of Ceylon into their Consideration, having order'd the before-said Mr. Reyniers to make all possible Enquiry, whether it were not feasible to get some share as well as the Portugueses in of the Council of the Indies) who had bin a Prisoner in Ceylon, having also lately given the said Council an exact account of the Condition of the Isle, it was resolv'd 1637. to send him forthwith with three V.chts, the Falcon, the Voorburgh, and the Lesser Hollandia, and the Ruttem Frigot, to the Coast of Coromandel; where coming to an Anchor before Paliacatta

the last day of August, and their Commissions being open'd, he was, in conjunction with the Factor Andrew Helmont, constituted Envoy to the Emperor of Ceylon.

Accordingly the 21st of October they took their way towards Tegnapatnam, where having furnish'd themselves with two Negroes (acquainted with that Country) they set sail for Ceylon, where they arriv'd within five or six days after, and cast Anchor near the Village of Cal- mony or Calarme, about seven Leagues from the Cabo de Frades, i. e. the Monks Cape. They sent immediately one of the two before-mentioned Negroes ashore, to get intelligence what part of the Country they were in; which being done by a certain Signal (a Fire made upon an adjacent Hill) they sent him after his return, in Company of the other Negro, with a Letter of Recommendation from the Factor Cbrinna to the Emperor of Ceylon, under promise that they were to return in 16 days, which they did accordingly, bringing along with them not only certain Hostages, and among them a certain Hollander, who living at the Emperor's Court, was willing to accompany them, and gave them very good Intelligence, but also the Lord High-Treasurer of his Majesty, and John Alberts another Dutch-man, a Native of Embden (who having deserted from Mr. Anthony Cams Ship, had since serv'd the Empeorder to conduct our Envoys to the Imperial Court.

Accordingly they set out on their Journey from the Village of Samanture, and in four days arriv'd at Pangergame, in the Country of Vintane, where they were introduc'd the same night by the Light of Torches into the Emperor's Presence, who then kept his Residence at one of his Pleasure-houses on the other side of the River Mavilgange. Their Reception was very magnificent, as will appear anon by the Entertainment given to Mr. Gerard

the Envoys to his Imperial Majesty, were as follows.

To the most Potent Emperor Raja

Most Potent Emperor!

"GOD protect your Imperial Ma-

"on (by the Blessing of God) with good "success both in Europe and the Indies
"against the King of Spain and Portugal, "and how at this time we keep Goa, their "chief City in the Indies, block'd up "with so numerous a Squadron of Men
"of War, that they are not in a Con"dition to relieve any of their Subjects "from thence. We have understood by "your Majesty's Letter the many Out"rages, Insolencies, Treasons and Wars "carried on by the Portugueses against "your Majesty since their Settlement in "your Territories, contrary to the En"gagements, Treaties and Confedera-
"cies made betwixt you and them; all
"which they have treacherously broken,
"in order to make themselves Masters of "your Empire, and to impose the most "miserable Slavery upon your Sub"jects. Our General of Jacatra being "inform'd of these Designs, and your "Majesty, and to declare to you the "sincerity of our Intentions towards "your Majesty and your Subjects, in

"Nations. If your Majesty will be "pleased to allow us the Exportation of "some Cinnamon, we oblige our selves

“next, we either will pay ready Money for it, or exchange the same for Ammunition or other Merchandizes, as your Majesty shall think fit. So soon as our Envoys are assur'd of your Majesty's Resolutions upon this Head, and of your Intentions to enter into a further Treaty with us, they shall (according to orders) set sail immediately to our Fleet before Goa, to confer with the Admiral how soon and how many Ships may be detach'd out of his Fleet, either for the Transportation of the Cinnamon, or your Majesty's Aid, according to the present Exigency of Affairs. We desire therefore your Majesty to give these Envoys, sent with a most sincere Intention to your Majesty, a suitable Reception, and a favourable Audience; and afterwards to dispatch them with all convenient speed, to further their arrival at our Fleet before Goa, before the Mousson be pass'd, which otherwise might prove no small Obstacle to our Design. We acknowledg we ought to have presented your Majesty with some Foreign Rarities (according to Custom) but being ignorant of the Condition of your Country, and in no small fear that these Envoys might perhaps be detain'd by the Portugueses, we hope your Majesty will excuse the same for this time. We pray, most Potent Emperor, that God may grant your Majesty Health, Prosperity, and Victory over your Enemies.

Geldria, the 20th of Octob. 1637.

devoted Servant,

Translations of the Envoys.

The Emperor, whilst the Envoys were making their Propositions, stood with the Crown on his Head, and a Scymeter in his Hand, his Head, Arms and Legs adorn'd with Jewels, Rings and Chains of Gold. He enquired after the State of Affairs in Holland, the Health of the Prince of Orange, and whether the Envoys had a full Power to treat with him; unto which they answer'd, No, but that the Admiral of the Dutch Squadron before Goa had: So they were conducted to the Apartments prepar'd for their Reception, to rest themselves after so fatiguing a Journey.

The next day being again admitted into the Emperor's Presence, he ask'd them several Matters concerning the present state of Affairs in Europe: The Portugueses having made it their business to represent the Dutch as an inconsiderable Mob, and the Emperor nevertheless having by the great Naval Strength that appear'd of late years in the East-Indies conceived a quite different opinion of their Strength than what had been whisper'd about by the Portugueses, was very glad to find the Truth to prove agreeable to his former Sentiments concerning the Power of a Nation, with whom he was going to enter into a strict Confederacy against the Portugueses. The next following day they began to enter upon a Treaty about the Cinnamon, and the Fort of Batucalo. Whilst his Majesty held frequent Conferences (twice a day for a whole Week) with our Deputies, a Letter was sent to the King or Prince of Mateli (the Emperor's Brother) by Diogo de Melo de Castro, Governour of Columbo; wherein he complain'd of the intended Breach of the Peace, styling the Hollanders rebellious Subjects of the King of Portugal, who had incur'd the Hatred of all the other Indian Princes. He added, That the Emperor was guilty of this Rupture whereof he had given notice in a Letter to the Viceroy of Goa. His Majesty desir'd that the said Letter should be translated into the Dutch, and be deliver'd by the Envoys to the Admiral before Goa; and told them for the rest, that he was too well acquainted with their ways, to give Ear to these Calumnies: That he would endeavour to amuse them with Compliments, till he could find an opportunity of surprizing the Fort of Mankewar in the Low-Countries near the South Shore of the Isle. He writ also a Letter to the Admiral Westermold, and order'd three Deputies to go along with our Envoys to take a view of the Fleet before Goa, and to give an account thereof to him.

The 27th of the same Month his Majesty thought fit to dispatch the Envoys: Palankyns or Litters were order'd for their Journey, with some Elephants for their Baggage, and a Convey of 20 Lascaryns, under the Command of a Colonel to conduct them, with orders to defray their Charges in all places through which they pass'd. It was further remarkable, that whilst the Governour of Palacatta's Letter was deliver'd to his Majesty, and the Envoys made their Propositions, he arose from his Chair, and remain'd standing all the while, an Honour never done to the Portugueses. The Dutch Envoys set sail the 4th of the next following Month of December, with the three before-mentioned Deputies aboard the Falcon Yacht, and coming up the 19th following with the Dutch Squadron before Goa, they deliver'd to Adam Westervold their Admiral, the following Letter from his Imperial Majesty.

HAVING sent a Letter in September to the Governour of Paliacatta, I receiv'd an Answer thereupon the 19th of Novemb. 1637. but the Envoys not being instructed sufficiently to treat with me, but the same being refer'd by the General of Jacatra to the Admiral of the Fleet, I thought fit to send certain Deputies to treat with your Excellency. The before-mentioned Governour having made mention also of the Transportation of a certain quantity of Cinnamon, your Excellency if you please may send five Men of War to attack the Fort of Batecalo, and some other Vessels to other Harbours, in order to take in all the Cinnamon that is to be had there. I am inform'd that you intend to stay before Goa till April next, and then are to return to Jacatra, in order to return afterwards with all possible speed to the Harbour of Columbo, and from thence to detach three Ships to the Harbour of Batecalo, in order to make themselves Masters of that place. I will at the same time advance with my Forces to Columbo; and in case God be pleas'd to bless our Arms with Victory against our Enemies, I dare assure you upon my Royal Word, that the City shall be preserv'd for our mutual use, and that we will enter into a Contract with you concerning all the Pepper and Cinnamon in the Isle. It is therefore that I judge it advisable to come with your whole Strength, in order to accelerate our Confederacy, which may be as durable as the Sun and Moon: But if this should not be convenient, pray send a trusty Person whom we may treat with, there being little time to be lost, since things being already come to a Rupture with the Portugueses, we shall stand in present need of your Assistance. I expect the return of the three Deputies with the arrival of your Fleet.

From Vintane
23 Nov. 1637.

Signed,

Imperador, Raja Singa.

Sealed with the Pummel of his Majesty's Scymeter, printed in Red Wax.

Sea Engagement before Goa, betwixt the Dutch and Portuguese Fleets.

WHILE the Envoys were honourably entertain'd aboard the Fleet by Adam van Westervold the Dutch Admiral, a Sea Engagement happen'd the 4th of January 1638. betwixt us and the Portugueses. The Dutch Squadron was composed of the following Ships.

The little Enchuyfen Yacht commanded by Captain Reynier, carrying 2 Brafts and 6 Iron Guns, and 20 Men.

The Fa'lon Yacht, John Thysen Captain, Adrian Helmont Factor, carrying 16 Iron Guns, 40 Men, and among them six Soldiers.

The Dolphin Frigate, commanded by Peter van der Kamer, carrying 6 Iron Guns, and 20 Men.

A List of the Portuguese Ships. The Portuguese Squadron consisted of these following Ships.

The Bon Jesus, Don Antonio Telles de Menezes Admiral, carrying 76 Brafts Guns, and 400 Men, among whom were 300 Portuguese, the rest Negroes.

The S. Sebastian Vice-Admiral, commanded by Capt. Antonio Menezes Bouterette, carrying 50 Brafts Guns, 150 Portuguese, and 200 Negroes.

Madre de Deus Reer-Admiral, commanded by Lewis Gonsalves, carrying 35 Iron and Brafts Guns, 130 Portuguese and 120 Negroes.

The S. Bartholomew, Lewis de Castelbranco Commander, carrying 26 Iron and Brafts Guns, 140 Portuguese, and 160 Negroes.

The S. Francis, Captain Domingo Ferreira Commander, carrying 26 Guns, 100 Portuguese, and as many Negroes.

The S. Philip, commanded by Don Diego de Paes, carrying 24 Guns, 100 Portuguese, and 100 Negroes.

With these 6 Galeons, and 20 small Frigats, the Portuguese set sail out of the Road of Goa, Jan. 4. 1638. in sight of the Dutch, who no sooner got sight of them, but they weighed their Anchors, and in form of a Crescent sail'd with a Land-wind and low Water out into the Main. The Portuguese divided into two Squadrons follow'd them with all the Sails they could make, their

Admiral making up towards the Dutch Admiral, as their Vice-Admiral (tho not so good a Sailor as the rest) did to the Ships the Rotterdam, the Vere, and the Falcon Yacht. In the Morning about Nine a Clock both Fleets began to come within Cannon-shot, about three Leagues from the Road of Goa, where the Engagement began betwixt the two Admirals, who plentifully exchange'd their Broad-sides for three hours successively, as did three others of the Portuguese Ships with the Dutch Fleet, the rest of their Gallies not being able to come up immediately for want of a Wind. The Portuguese Vice-Admiral coming at last up with the rest, was briskly saluted by our Ships the Rotterdam and the Vere, whilst the rest of the Dutch Vessels did what they could to advance closer to the Enemy; and at last having got the advantage of the Sea-wind, they were for boarding the Portuguese Ships, having sent the Texel and Dolphin Frigats, two Fire-ships, to get in among them; but these setting it before the Wind, avoided that danger. The Dutch Admiral Westervold did his utmost in his Ship the Vtrecht to board the Portuguese Admiral; which he perceiving, retreated towards his Squadron, which made the Dutch Admiral set it with all the sail he could make upon their Vice-Admiral, which he did with such success, that the Portuguese was forced to cut his Sails and Cables to get rid of his Enemy, whilst the whole Portuguese Squadron ply'd the Dutch Admiral with their Cannon, who thereby receiv'd considerable damage, especially in his Rigging. Our Ship the Vere would have boarded the S. Bartholomew, but they got clear of one another, yet not without receiving a good Broad-side from the Ship the Hague; and the Flissingen finding the Portuguese Admiral engag'd with these two Ships, she laid the Bartholomew aboard, and with the assistance of the Hague ply'd her so warmly, that she was set on fire, the rest of the Portuguese Ships retreating in the mean while towards the Shore. Such was the violence of the Flames, that notwithstanding all the Endeavours that were used, the Hague was also set on fire, and soon after the Flissingen, and were all three consum'd by the Flames.

The Portuguese in the mean while taking the advantage of the Confusion, made the best of their way towards the Road of Goa, being pursued for one League and a half by the Rotterdam, Vere, and Texel, close under their Forts; the rest of our Ships being busied in saving the Men from the danger of the Fire, and in repairing their Masts and Rigging, so that the Victory remain'd on our side, which would have been very considerable had the same been not allay'd by the burning of the two before-mentioned Ships.

The Loss of the Dutch amounted to 35 Men, among whom were Capt. Herman Wouters Baak, besides 50 wounded, among whom was the Factor James Nolpe: The loss on the Portuguese side amounted to 78 Portuguese, and 150 Miskies and Negroes. Don Lewis de Castelbranco, and Father Laurence de Merinda a Jesuit, were taken Prisoners, with 90 Portuguese, and 49 Miskies and Negroes, being sav'd by the same Boats that came to save their own Men, and exchange'd afterwards for a Captain, a Factor, and eight other Dutch-men belonging to the Wieringen Yacht (burnt near Malacca) besides a Sum of 2000 Crowns paid to Don Pedro de Silva Viceroy of the Indies. The first of March a Portuguese Caraque, half laden with Pepper and Cinnamon, and bound for Portugal, immediately after the departure of the Dutch Fleet was burnt by accident; and the Galcon the Madre de Deus underwent the same fate in April following, to the great detriment of the Portuguese, whose Naval Force in the Indies was not a little impair'd by the loss of these three great Ships.

The Emperor of Ceylon's Deputies who were present in the Engagement, were surpriz'd at the Bravery of the Hollanders, who with their small Ships durst board the Portuguese so much stronger both in Men and Cannon. After the Engagement the Dutch Fleet came to an Anchor near the Islands on the South-side of Goa, to refit their Ships, and to venture a second Engagement. Soon after the Hertogenbosch a brave Vessel commanded by William Jacob Koster, join'd our Fleet, coming lately from Suratte with a rich Cargo of the best Indian Stuffs, Indigo, Saltpeter, and other Indian Commodities, valued at 412000 Gilders at the first hand, which for meer safety sake were dispersed among the other Vessels. The 12th of January arriv'd likewise the Ship Henrietta Louisa from Batavia, having on board 76000 Crowns, besides other Merchandizes for our Factory of Suratte, and was sent thither in company of the Breda and Enchuyfen Yachts.

William Jacob Koster sent to Ceylon by Admiral Westerwold. The Portugueses march to Candy, are totally routed by the Emperor. The Dutch besiege Batecalo.

A Dutch Squadron sent to Ceylon.

THE 23d of Jan. 1638. the Falcon Yacht being likewise dispatch'd to Batavia, with Advice of the late Engagement, and some Merchandizes, as also the Sick and Wounded to be dispos'd in the Hospital there, our Squadron consisted only of 7 Capital Ships and 2 Yachts. But the Dutch Admiral perceiving the Portugueses to make not the least Preparations of attacking them a second time, it was resolv'd in a Council of War to send Mr. William Jacob Koster Commodore, with the Texel, the Amsterdam, and Dolphin, mann'd with 180 Men and 70 Souldiers, to the Isle of Ceylon, to give notice to the Emperor of the intended Succours against May, and in the mean while to offer his Assistance in the Siege of some Fort or other belonging to the Portugueses; for which purpose the Admiral writ the following Letter to his Imperial Majesty.

The Dutch Admiral's Letter to the Emperor of Ceylon.

“Adam van Westerwold, Counsellor Extraordinary of the Indies, and Admiral of the Dutch Fleet, wishes the most Potent Emperor of Ceylon, King of Candy, &c. all Happiness and Prosperity, with the utmost Offer of his Service, for the throwing off the intolerable Yoke of the Portugueses.

Most Potent Emperor,

“W Hilst the Illustrious General and Council of the Indies, under the Jurisdiction of the United Provinces, were employ'd in equipping a Squadron of 16 Ships, to be sent from Batavia before Goa, in order to annoy our common Enemies the Portugueses, and to prevent their sending any Carragues or Galeons during the late Northern Mousson to Portugal, the Ship the Husduynen arriv'd at Batavia from the Coast of Coromandel, with Letters from the Governour of that Coast, wherein was enclos'd your Majesty's Letter, dated at Candy, Sept. 9. 1636. The said General and Council of the Indies, having understood by these Letters, the many Treacheries and Outrages committed by the “Portugueses in your Majesty's Dominions, and that you were pleas'd to crave their Assistance for the defence of your Country, and rooting out our common Enemies, offering for that purpose to have either Batecalo or Cotiar (which of the two we should pitch upon) fortify'd at your own Charge for our use, as likewise to give Satisfaction for all the Charge we should be at in the Equipment of such Ships as should be sent to your assistance: These Propositions having been well weigh'd by the General and Council of the Indies, it was resolv'd by them, pursuant to the good Inclinations they have to your Majesty, to comply with your Desires. And it appearing by your Majesty's Letter, dated Novemb. 21. 1637. and sent to me by the Falcon Yacht, that you still persist in the same laudable Sentiments, I took immediate care to send a Vessel and two Yachts, to advertise your Majesty of our Coming, under the Commodore William Jacob Koster, the second Member of my Council, who is to treat with your Majesty concerning our intended Design, and to concert measures which of the Portuguese Forts may be most conveniently attack'd at our Arrival, and where your Majesty's Forces are to rendezvous, in order to assist in the taking of the said Forts; for which purpose a certain quantity of Ladders of Bamboes, besides some other Materials, must be got ready. Your Majesty's Deputies who come with these Ships, will be able to give you a more compleat account by word of Mouth, concerning our Intentions. If the Blockade of Goa be rais'd by the end of April, I intend (pursuant to the Orders receiv'd from the General and Council of the Indies) to set sail in Person with three of my biggest Ships, well provided with Men and Ammunition, for Ceylon, to confer and treat more amply with your Majesty concerning our projected Design. I hope your Majesty will according to your Promise, order two Ships Cargos of Cinamon to be got ready against our Arrival. I wish your Majesty a long "Life, and Victory against your Enemies."

The before-mentioned Commodore Koffer, having set Sail accordingly, March 17. from Goa, with the 3 Ships the Texel, little Amsterdam and Dolphin, came to an Anchor the 2d of April following near Trinquenaile, a Harbour on the Northside of the Isle of Ceylon; where the Emperor's Deputys being set ashore, in order to deliver the Admiral's Letter at Candy, and give notice of the Arrival of the Dutch Ships, they understood, that the Emperor immediately after the Departure of the Falcon Yacht, had caused a good Quantity of Cinnamon, Wax and Pepper, to be laid up for our use. The Portugueses had no sooner notice thereof, but they sent a Letter to his Majesty, asking the Reason why he had ordered such a Quantity of Merchandizes to be laid up, which, pursuant to the Contract stipulated betwixt them, belonged only to them. The Emperor return'd them no other Answer than that, He having promised the same to his Friends the Hollanders, he would try who should dare to oppose it.

This resolute Answer so nettled the Portugueses at Columbo, that being now fully convinc'd of the Confederacy betwixt the Emperor and the Dutch, and that they must soon expect to be attack'd at Batecalo, they were put to the greatest Nonplus, what Resolution to take in this present Exigency of Affairs. Some considering that having scarce been able to cope with the Emperor alone, they would not be able to resist his Efforts, when sustain'd by the Dutch, were of Opinion to embark all their Treasure, Men and Artillery, to demolish the Fort, and set Sail for Goa.

But the braver sort rejecting this Proposition as base, and inconsistent with their King's Honour, resolv'd, rather than thus to quit an Isle, which they had fix'd themselves in with the Loss of so much Blood and Treasure, to venture the utmost and die in the Attempt. Damijao Bottado, who had laid the first Foundation of the Fortress of Batecalo, propos'd among the rest, that they ought to gather all their Forces, and march up to Candy, before Raja Singa could be join'd by the Dutch.

This Advice being approved of, they marched in March 1638, under the Command of their General Diego de Melo, the before-mention'd Damijao Bottado, and the Major-General Sorde, towards Candy.

The Emperor having got notice of their March, retir'd from thence with all his People, leaving the City to their Mercy, which they took without any Opposition; and having plunder'd and burnt the same, directed their March to the Mountains of Gannor or Gannero, where they pitch'd their Tents, their whole Force consisting of 2300 Portugueses and Miscies, and 6000 Negroes.

This it was that the Emperor had so long look'd for, who immediately order'd the Road to Walane, and all other Places thro which they were to pass, to be stopp'd, by laying great Trees cross the Roads. The Enemies finding themselves reduc'd to these Straits, the Cingalese unanimously revolted to the Emperor; so that the Portugueses seeing not the least hopes of escaping by Force of Arms, had recourse to two Friars, one a Franciscan, and the other an Augustin Monk, who were sent to endeavour to obtain them a free Passage from the Emperor to Columbo: But the Emperor gave them such an Answer, that the Friars thought it their safest way not to return to their Camp; so that the Portugueses finding themselves past all Reprieve, the General de Melo ask'd Bottado what was to be done, and which way they should escape the Danger into which they were drawn by his rash Advice, who gave him no other Answer, than that they must die together. The Emperor Raja Singa in the mean while kept close in his Camp, watching all the Opportunities of attacking them, with the utmost Advantage, which soon happen'd; for a violent Storm of Rain (which he knew would render the Portuguese Firelocks in some manner useless) made him draw out his Troops against the Enemy; and putting the Musqueteers in Front, he order'd them after the first Discharge to retire, and give way to 5000 Bowmen of Mangelcorle, who being sustain'd by as many Pikes, did break in with such Fury among the Portugueses, that they soon put them into Disorder, and immediately after to the Rout, with the Slaughter of all the Portugueses, except a very few who obtain'd Mercy at their Conqueror's Hands, amounting in all not to above 70 Persons.

The Emperor was a Spectator of this Engagement from a Tree near the Bank of a River, which ran betwixt him and the Mountain of Gannor, whither they brought the Heads of the Portugueses slain in the Battel, which were heap'd up in form of a Pyramid before him. their Lives near the Mountain of Gannor, and among them their General de Melo, whose Sword was afterwards presented by the Emperor to the Admiral Westervold.

Batecalo.

In the mean while matters having been concerted with the Modeliar, or Governor of Mattaclape, concerning the Portuguese Fortress of Batecalo, they set sail thither; and having landed 100 Soldiers, and as many Seamen in two Troops, they soon rais'd two Batteries, with the assistance of the Natives, one on the East, the other on the South-side of the Fort, upon each of which were mounted four brass Demi-Culverins; and the Emperor having left the Gros of his Army under the Command of his Brother the Prince of Mateli to invest Columbo, join'd our Forces before Batecalo, April 14. in Person, with a Detachment of 2000 Men. Commodore Koster being receiv'd by his Imperial Majesty with all possible Marks of Honour, they immediately enter'd upon a Debate, how to attack the Fortress with the utmost Vigour upon the Arrival of the rest of our Ships.

accordingly the 18th, and 500 Men brought over under favour of the Cannon, which play'd incessantly for four Hours upon the Portugueses, they put out the white Flag immediately, and sent two Deputies to capitulate with the Dutch Admiral, which was soon done upon the following Conditions: That they should surrender the Fort immediately, and be permitted to march out without Arms or Baggage. The Portugueses and Miskies to the Number of 108, with their Wives and Children, to be transported in a Dutch Vessel to Negapatan, but the Natives to be delivered up to the Emperor, which was executed accordingly, fifty of them (who had murder'd one of his Majesty's Gentlemen) being empal'd alive, and the rest sold for Slaves with their Wives and Children.

The Fort of Batecalo is seated in an Isle of about two Dutch Leagues in compass, three Leagues within the Mouth of the River of Batecalo, which has given it its Name. It was fortified with high Stone Walls and three passable Bastions, upon which were mounted 11 Iron and Brass Cannons, besides some lesser Ones, with a suitable Proportion of Ammunition. We found in it Rice sufficient for two Months, but their Fresh-Water being about a Musquet-shot without the Fortrefs, the Dutch had made themselves Masters of that Spring. Commodore Koster was made Governor of the Fort, with a Garison of one hundred Dutch Soldiers.

After the taking of this Fortrefs, the Admiral Westermold made an Alliance with the Emperor of Ceylon, in the Name of their High and Mightinesses the States-General of the United-Provinces, his Highness Frederick Prince of Orange, and of the Honourable East-India Company, with the Approbation of the General and Council of the Indies, upon the following Conditions:

I. A Firm and stedfast Amity shall be maintain'd betwixt his Majesty and his Subjects, and the Dutch Nation, and their East-India Company, who shall assist his Majesty upon all Occasions against the Portugueses.

II. As often as any Place or Fort is taken by the Dutch, with the Assistance of his Majesty, from the common Enemy, the Booty to be divided share and share alike.

III. After the taking of any Forts, the Dutch shall provide the same with necessary Garisons and Ammunition; and if any thing be wanting to compleat the Fortifications, the same shall be done at the Charge of his Majesty, as it shall be thought requisite by the Dutch.

IV. His Majesty obliges himself to pay punctually every Month their Soldiers and Officers.

V. As also to build in the conquered Places or Forts (where no Houses are before) a House of Stone (as the Dutch shall think fit) to be us'd for a Warehouse, as also a Magazine for their Arms and Naval Stores.

VI. In case his Majesty designs any thing against the common Enemy, the same is to be consulted with our Chief Officers.

VII. For the Security of the Rivers, his Majesty is to furnish a certain Number of Gallies and Gally-Slaves, which are to be provided with Soldiers and Ammunition by the Dutch.

VIII. His Majesty and his Subjects oblige themselves to make full Reparation of the Charges the Dutch have been at in equipping the present Fleet, Yachts, Vessels, &c. and furnishing them with Men, Soldiers, Officers, Ammunition, Provisions, &c. or of such other Ships as the General and Council shall for the future send to his Majesty's Assistance into Ceylon, with their necessary Men, Ammunition, Provisions, &c. the Charges whereof shall be reimbursed in Cinnamon, Pepper, Cardamom, Indigo, Wax, Rice, and such other Commodities as are of the Product of his Majesty's Dominions, except the Mato or Wild-Cinnamon.

IX. His Majesty in respect of his Friendship and good Inclinations to the Dutch Nation, allows them free Passage and Traffick in all his Dominions, in the Isle of Ceylon, in all his Cities, Towns, Villages, Seaports, Roads, Bays, Rivers, &c. with their Vessels, Yachts, Boats, &c. to buy, sell or exchange, import or export without the least Molestation, or paying any Customs under any pretence whatever. His Majesty's Subjects shall not be permitted to sell the Dutch any Cinnamon, Pepper, Wax and Elephants Teeth, except what is sold by the Emperor's Order; who engages himself, that in case he should have occasion to sell 4, 10, 20, or more Elephants, he will procure them the like Number at the same rate: they were sold.

X. His Majesty, and all the Great Men of the Empire promise, not to allow their Subjects to traffick, either with any European or Eastern Nation, either by Sale or Exchange, in such Commodities as are of the Product of Ceylon; much

Baldew. less to permit the Ships of these Nations to tarry in the Harbours of Ceylon, but to oblige them to depart forthwith. However the Neighbouring Nations of Daucy and Tanjouwer may pass and repass freely with their Vessels, to and from Ceylon.

XI. His Majesty obliges himself to send yearly to Batavia, one or two Shiploads of Cinnamon, Pepper, Cardamom, 'ndigo, Wax, &c. as a Reimbursement of the Charge bestowed in the Equipement of the Vessels sent to his Assistance; and in case the said Cargo should amount to more than the Charges, the Surplus to be paid to his Majesty, either in ready Money or such Commodities, as his Majesty shall think fit.

XII. His Majesty having granted full Liberty for the Dutch Merchants, to travel, traffick, buy and sell, the Inhabitants shall be obliged to furnish them with Beasts fit for Carriage, for the carrying of such Goods as they have bought, either to their Warehouses, or aboard their Vessels. Furthermore, the said Merchants or other Hollanders shall remain under the Jurisdiction of the respective Commanders or Heads of their own Nation, as the Natives of Ceylon stand under the Subjection of the Emperor.

XIII. No body, without exception, that trades with the Dutch here, shall have Freedom to sell any such Commodities bought from them to others, before the Dutch have fully received their Quota; and in case of Contravention, the Dutch shall have a Power to seize his Person, and to compel him to produce the said Goods. Furthermore, in case any of the Natives stand indebted to the Dutch for a considerable Sum, they shall be subject to the same Treatment, with this Proviso nevertheless, that in case any of his Majesty's Subjects be taken into Custody by the Dutch, notice shall be given thereof to the Emperor or his Governor.

XIV. No body of what Quality whatever shall pretend to raise or diminish the Coin, otherwise than has been agreed betwixt his Majesty and the Dutch; and such as contravene this Article on either side, shall without Mercy be punish'd with Death, and Confiscation of their Estates to his Majesty's use.

XV. In case a Hollander should fly into his Majesty's Dominions, the same shall be deliver'd up; as on the other hand the same shall be done on our side, in case any of his Majesty's Subjects shelter themselves in our Dominions.

XVI. After the Conclusion of this Treaty, neither his Majesty nor any of his Subjects shall maintain any secret or public Commerce or Correspondence with the Portugueses, our common Enemies, much less to traffick with them under any pretence whatever, but look upon them as their constant declar'd Enemies: And in case any of his Majesty's Subjects shall be discover'd to have sold them any Commodities, the Transgressors shall be punish'd with Death.

XVII. His Majesty shall not suffer any Priests, Friars or Clergymen to dwell in his Dominions, but oblige them to depart as the Authors of all Rebellions, and the Ruin of Governments.

XVIII. In case any Dutch Ships employed in his Majesty's Service, shall take any Prizes from the Enemies, the same shall belong to the East-India Company, with this Proviso however, that the said Company shall alone bear all the Damages sustained by the said Ships, in any of these Engagements.

XIX. In case the Dutch furnish any great Cannon for the Fortresses, or otherwise for his Majesty's Service, the same may freely be taken back, if Occasion requires, without any Hindrance, and be brought aboard of Ship or otherwise, where it shall be thought most convenient.

XX. Transacted and concluded thus, in the Presence of his Imperial Majesty of Ceylon, and of Adam Westermold Member of the Council of the Indies, and Commodore of the Squadron of Ships on the Coast of Ceylon; as also of William Jacob Koster, Vice-Commodore of the said Squadron, at the Royal Palace, in the Country of Batecalo, May 23. 1638.

Additional Article,

The Dutch oblige themselves to shew all possible Favour and Assistance to such Vessels, as shall go from hence with his Majesty's, or any of his Governors Passports to other Harbours.

Signed,

Raja Singa Imperador,
Adam Westermold,
William Jacob Koster.

Sealed with his Majesty's and Mr. Westermold's Seals.

Pursuant to this Agreement, his Majesty order'd 400 Balls of Cinnamon, 87 Quintals of Wax, and 3059 Pounds of Pepper to be deliver'd to Mr. Westermold.

wold, in part of the Reimbursement of Charges they had been at, promising to deliver the rest, as soon as it could be brought together at the Seaport of Siamature, and to hasten the Ratification of the said Alliance; his Majesty sent two Ambassadors to Batavia, in Company of Mr. Westermold, with some Presents to the General and Council of the Indies, who being honourably received and treated there, were afterwards sent back with Letters and Presents for his Majesty, with the Yachts the Grijpskerk, Faulcon and Venlo, bound for the Coast of Coromandel.

The Emperor's Army in the mean while being about 20000 strong, continued before Columbo; and the Portugueses having been very unsuccessful in divers Sallies, it was more than probable that this Place (tho the Capital City of the Portugueses in this Isle) would be forc'd to surrender upon the Arrival of the expected Dutch Fleet, under the Admiral Anthony de Caan.

Puntegale played. THE 8th of March, Commodore Koster being come to an Anchor about noon in the Bay of Puntegale, under the Enemies Cannon, he landed his Men before Night on the North-side without any Resistance. Intelligence was brought by some Negroes, that they expected a Reinforcement in the City of 250 Portugueses from Columbo; notwithstanding which the Dutch divided their Forces into three Bodies, and advanced close under the Fort: The 9th early in the Morning, they were attack'd by the said Portugueses, whom they repuls'd, tho not without some loss. Nevertheless they kept our Forces in constant Alarm, those of Can-

Puntegale taken by Storm.

Baldern. dy being by the 11th of March advanced no further than Billigamme, 6 Leagues from Gak; but (thro God's singular Mercy) three of our Ships, viz. the Harlem, Middleburgh and Breda, coming on the same day to anchor in the Bay, and landing 400 men, as well Soldiers as Seamen, we were soon exempted from all Fear.

The 12th finding they had made a sufficient Breach in the Bastion of St. Jago, they began to make all necessary Preparations for the storming of the Place, which was done accordingly the 13th with such undaunted Bravery, that after an hour and half's stout resistance it was taken by Assault. This City was afterwards, viz. 1663, and 64. render'd almost impregnable by the Dutch by several additional Fortifications; and this Day is ever since celebrated yearly by a solemn Thanksgiving.

Mr. Konink who was treacherously murder'd by the Malagafes, as Sebald de Weert was by his own Imprudence) was succeeded by John Thyssen, who is yet living, and has render'd himself famous for his many Services done the Company in those Parts. In his stead came John

Maatzuyker, since Governour of the Indies, who has served in that Station 15 Years. He was succeeded by Jacob van Kittenstein in the Presidentship of Gale (the Affairs of the Company hitherto not admitting of the Quality of a Governour here) who died afterwards at Batavia, and was succeeded by Adrian van der Meyden, in whose time Caleture, Columbo, Manaar and Jafnapatnam were taken. He was succeeded by Ryklof van Goens and Jacob Hufart; by which time the Company having considerably enlarged their Limits in this Isle, a Governour was constituted at Columbo, the City of Gale being left to the management of a Commander in chief, the first in that Station being one Tybrand Gotsken, a Native of the Hague, a brave Soldier, sufficiently known for his signal Services done at the Sieges of Columbo, Manaar, Jafnapatnam and Cochin, whereof he was Governour afterwards, and since chief Director in Persia, Adrian Rootbaas his Successor is a Person who has render'd his Name famous by Sea, especially in the Levant and before Goa, as the former had done by Land.

Gale has a commodious Bay, fit for Anchorage, except that with a South-West Wind the Sea runs very hollow there. At the very Entrance of the Harbour lies a dangerous Rock, near to which all Ships must pass, and against which the Hercules, one of our Ships, was staved to pieces. There is no coming into the Bay, unless you pass by the Water-Fort, which is well provided with Cannon for the Security of the Harbour. The Fortifications of the City itself consist only in three Bastions, the rest being so inclosed with the Sea and Rocks, that there is no approaching to it even with the smallest Boats. On the top of a Rock which jets out into the Sea is a Lanthorn, and an Iron Cannon, wherewith they give warning to the Ships, and near it you see the Company's Flag display'd. The City is well built of Stone, very high, with goodly Houses, a stately Church, pleasant Gardens, and most delicious Springs; the Mountains which surround it affording a pleasant Prospect, over which you pass thro Roads cut out of the Rocks, call'd by them Gravettes.

About a days Journey from Gale stands the Fort of Calcutre, in a most delightful Country, near the Entrance of a large and broad River, on the Sea-shore, surrounded by a double strong Wall of Earth. It was reduced by the Director General Gerard Hulst, 15 Oct. 1655. in the following manner.

Having rendezvoused his Forces, consisting of 593 men, near Bentotte, and being join'd the 28th of September by some more Troops under Christopher Egger, Leonard Wiltscut, and Melchior van Schoonbeek, they directed their March towards Calcutre. But being informed that the Enemy were resolv'd to make a vigorous Defence, and our Artillery being not yet come up, it was thought advisable to detach Capt. Abraham Cous and Jurian Gevels with five Companys, to secure the Pass of Oucatte over the River, thereby to prevent the Enemy from receiving any Supplies, till the arrival of our Ships, that were expected every day with more Forces.

The 29th we took a view of all the Avenues leading to the Place; and Guards being plac'd in all convenient Posts, the Factor Renier Serooskerken and Mr. Tsbrand Godken were dispatch'd to our Ships, to send us the necessary Artillery and Ammunition.

The 5th of October Advice was brought by two of the Natives, that the Garrison, consisting of 300 men, was but slenderly provided with Provisions, their whole Store consisting only in 50 * Parras, and two small Packs of dry'd Fish, and that they were forc'd to live upon Cassies, or Water and Rice.

The 6th of October after we had mounted some Great Guns upon our Batteries, a certain † Topas, who had been Secretary to Captain Marcello Fialbo, came over to us, who discovered to the General Hulst the whole Strength of the Enemy, and the Names of their Officers; adding, that 4 or 5 days before his departure there were about 210 Parras of Rice in the Store-house, whereof they distributed a certain quantity to each Soldier every day, and to the King's Negroes call'd || Cassers, a Quart a piece: That they had no Lascaryns in the Place, and as he believ'd could not hold it above 10 days, tho they seem'd resolv'd to defend it to the last extremity, in hopes of being relieved the next week by Caspar Figero.

The same day Major John van der Laan brought word that all was well secured on his Attack; and Captain James Swart, and the Factor Abraham Hartman brought up with 60 Seamen the two great Cannon that were left behind. Capt. Dian-teiro was also detach'd with 40 Dutch Soldiers, and a good number of Lascaryns, to the Pass of Wellikande; and the General Gerard Hulst with Mr. Adrian van der Meyden having taken a view of our Batteries, did go to take a view of the Pass near Palletotte, where, as well as on the other side, they found every thing to their satisfaction, 756 men being employ'd on that side.

The 7th of October they went up the River as far as Wellikande, to see whether the Enemy could receive any Supplies of Provisions by the Brook, or from above by the way of Anguratotte and Tiboene; but found it not feasible by reason of the shallowness of the Water. However five Ferry-boats were shew'd them in the narrowest Places of the River, where having placed some Lascaryns, they committed the management thereof to Mr. John van der Laan. The 11th of October a Mortar of a large size and a 12 Pounder were mounted on the Battery, and Mr. John van der Laan came to tell the General that the second Battery would be ready to play on his side the same night.

The 14th in the Morning we saw a Portuguese Lieutenant and Drummer with a white Flag, coming out of the Fort, sent by Antonio Mendes d' Aranha their Commander in chief, with the following Letter.

Having

" Having for several days past discharged our Trust as a Captain ought to do, and finding you not so furiously employed to day, I thought fit to take this opportunity to try whether you would treat with me according to the Custom of War; for which purpose I have sent you a trusty Person. In the mean while all Hostilities shall cease on our side, hoping the same from you. We recommend you to God's Protection. Calcutre, Oct. 14. 1655.

A Cessation of Arms being agreed upon, Martin Scholtes an Ensign was sent back with the Portuguese Officer to treat about the Conditions, whilst a Messenger was dispatch'd with a Letter to the Dissave (or Deputy-Governour) of Saffra Gamme, to desire him to have it rumor'd abroad, that the Portuguese in Calcutre had lately been supply'd with Provisions; in hopes thereby to amuse Caspar Figueiro (who stood with his Forces near Moutapelle) not to hasten to their Relief.

The Capitulation was soon after concluded upon the following Terms:

Articles of the Capitulation.

" The Soldiers to march out with their Matches not lighted, Balls in the Mouth, and Ensigns display'd; the Officers with their Scarfs, which they shall lay down roll'd up before the Standard of the Company. All the Great Officers, to the Captains inclusive, to be transported during this Mousson to Goa; the rest of the Officers and Soldiers to Batavia, and from thence to Portugal at the charge of the Company. All the Officers and Soldiers shall be allowed to carry their Baggage along with them; but their Servants shall be left to the Discretion of the Dutch General. All Church Ornaments shall be removed. All such as have married Portuguese Women, and the Mistices, shall be conducted to Columbo, or wherever else they think fit. But the Lascarys and Negros, whether married or unmarried, shall remain Prisoners of War. The Fathers and Clergymen shall enjoy the same Liberty as the highest Officers, and shall be transported from Calcutre on the same day. These Articles are to be ratify'd to morrow morning by Sun-rising. All

The 15th early in the Morning the Portuguese Officer returned with the Articles; towards Noon the Garrison, consisting in nine Companys making in all 255 men, marched out of the Fort, and having paid their Reverence with their Ensigns as usual, the Soldiers were disarmed. The Companys were the following: The Royal Company commanded by the Captain Major Marcello Fialbo, consisted of 31 Portuguese: That of John Antonio Felbaon of 27. That of Pedro de Barros of 28. That of Manuel Rodrigues of 28. That of Diego Frois of 36. That of Jacomo Padraon of 28. That of Manuel Mendes of 27. That of Lewis Alvares Periero of 24. And that of Leonardo de Silva of 26. In all 255.

Besides the Persons of Note living in the Place, with their Families, that were conducted to Callamoende, and 50 more that were with the Governour Antonio Mendes d' Aranba (afterwards our Prisoners at Jasnapatnam) that were carry'd to Gale, the other Superior Officers were sent to Macoené, and the rest kept under a good Guard in the Fort.

Immediately notice of this Victory having been given to the Emperor Raja Singa, General Hulst and Mr. Adrian van der Meyden took a view of the Fortifications of the Place, whereat they were not a little surprized, and found therein 10 Ensigns, 3 great Guns, 4 Brass ones, 10 8 and 5 Pounders, and one Iron 8 Pounder, 40 Barrels of Gun-powder, 204 Bamboe Canes fill'd, 710 Bullets, 180 Musquets, 62 Pikes, 7 Chests with Musquet Balls, another Barrel with larger Bullets fit for Musquetoons, 116 Ammunition Pouches, 5 Musquetoons, some fire Bullets, 60 Spades and 8 Hatchets.

In the dusk of the Evening we came up with the Portugueſes, whom we ſaluted ſo briskly with our Firelocks, that they thought fit to retreat, leaving 17 dead, and all their Ammunition, with their Standard, behind them. On our ſide we had 15 wounded, beſides Arent Janſz van Norden an Enlign. According to the report of one of their Captains, who was taken Priſoner, they conſiſted of ſix Companys commanded by Dominges Sermeto Captain Major of Montual, detached towards Caleture to ſecure this Paſs till to morrow, for Caſpar Figeiro, who was on his march at the head of 600 men, to attempt the Relief of that Place. Whereupon it was thought convenient to make a Halt betwixt Pancture and Galkiſſe, near a good Spring, and there to expect the coming up of the reſt of their Forces.

The ſame night, the Moon ſhining very bright, a Priſoner was brought into our Camp, who being a Native of Aniorſ, and well verſ'd in the Dutch Tongue, told the General, that he had ſerved the King of Portugal 11 Years, and that Figeiro would doubtleſs be with them by day-light.

The 17th, being Sunday, word being brought that the Portugueſes were at hand, Major John van der Laan and Capt. Kous were poſted with five Companies and two Field-Pieces, on a convenient Place, to receive the firſt Shock of the Enemy, whom, after a general Diſcharge of their Fire-Arms and Cannon, they received ſo warmly with Sword in hand, that they were ſoon brought into confuſion, and purſu'd as far as to the Church call'd Noſſa Senhora de Milagres, i. e. That of our Lady of Miracles, with a Slaughter of 150 on the Enemies ſide. Among our Troops Major van der Laan was wounded in the Cheek, and a Gunner, two common Soldiers and a Serjeant, kill'd.

The 18th of October happen'd another Engagement betwixt us and the Portugueſes near Montual. Our Forces attack'd them in their Entrenchments, from whence they fired furiously upon them; but no ſooner had they broke thro their Works, but they threw down their Arms, and made the beſt of their way to Columbo, leaving all their Ammunition behind them, and 22 kill'd upon the Spot; whereas we had not ſo much as one wounded on our ſide. We left two Companys as a Guard of the Church of St. Sebaſtian; and advancing nearer towards Columbo, a Body of Portugueſes retreated in Boats from Montual to Columbo, leaving the Paſs open to us, where we found 3 Iron Guns and ſome Cinnamon, and put a Guard of 16 Soldiers in it under a Serjeant.

Here we received intelligence, that of the whole Body commanded by Caſpar Figeiro, conſiſting of 600 Portugueſes, and ſent from Columbo to the Relief of Caleture, not above 160 were returned to that City.

The 19th before Noon ſome Portugueſes being got into a Coco-Garden, ſome of our Soldiers forced them to retire; but thoſe of the City firing upon them, kill'd one of our Serjeants, and wounded Hans Chriſtophers a Lieutenant, and two common Soldiers. The ſame day the General was certifi'd by Letters from Capt. Kous and Lieut. Wiſſebur, that they had already told above 300 ſlain of the Portugueſes upon the Roads, and that daily more Heads and Priſoners were brought in. They ſent at the ſame time a Waſt-coat of Caſpar Figeiro, wherein was the following Letter.

“ YOU are not ignorant of the Reſolution taken the 12th of October <sup>Inſtr. ſent to Caſp. Figeiro</sup> concerning your Endeavours to relieve the Fort of Caleture. All the Forces <sup>we</sup> we have been able to gather for this Expedition conſiſt in <sup>men</sup> men, which we hope will prove ſufficient thro the Bleſſing of God and your good Fortune and Conduct, to make you return victorious. We leave the Management of that Affair to your approved Experience, it being impoſſible for us to foreſee all the Circumſtances and Accidents that may attend a Buſineſs of this nature. It muſt be your care

" to get frequent intelligence of the Posture of the Enemy, and how to bring the Provisions laid up for the Relief of the Place at Belantotte, into the Fort; the Success whereof you shall notify to us with the first opportunity, that we may send fresh Supplies of Rice both for your use, and of the Garrison in the Fort. If you can meet with any Provisions in the Country, you will not fail to seize them for your Convenience.

" In case you should prove successful in the relief of Caleture, you must join your Forces, and the Captain Major of the Place must submit to your Command. We don't question but you will not be wanting in your Duty in a Business of such vast moment, whereon depends the Preservation and Welfare, not only of this City, but also of the whole Isle.

" If after the Relief of Caleture you find, that for want of Provisions, or for other weighty reasons, the Fort is not to be maintain'd, you shall agree among your selves what is fittest to be done for his Majesty's Interest, whether it be not the best way to bring " the Fortifications into a narrower Compass, and leaving only 150 Men for the defence thereof, to join the rest with your Body.

" If you find it impracticable to bring any Supplies into the Fort, you shall entrench your self at a convenient distance, and from thence give notice to Antonio Mendes d' Aranha, the Governor, that he shall nail up all the Cannon, destroy all the Ammunition, and make the best of his way to your Camp, thereby to preserve such brave Troops, on whom in some measure depends the Defence of this City.

In return of which another Letter was sent to his Majesty, to notify our Victory over the Enemy.

The same day Advice was brought that the famous Highway-man Francisco Antunes was fallen into the hands of some of our Lascaryns, wherefore a Detachment was order'd to bring him into the Camp; but either thro the Cold and Inconveniences of the Journey, or rather out of fear, he dy'd by the way, and was bury'd.

About the same day a Thanksgiving-day was also appointed to be held the 28th of October, to return thanks to God for having blessed our Arms with Success, and begging his Mercy for the future.

The 21st the General with some other Officers of Note having taken a view of the Situation of the City of Columbo at Quia de Lobo, order'd all sorts of Materials to be brought thither from Montual, for the raising of a Battery, and hired 50 Pioneers for that purpose.

The 22<sup>d</sup> the Dislave of Saffragamme appear'd in Person in a House formerly belonging to Diego Melo de Castro Governor of Columbo, offering certain Supplies of Men from his Majesty, which was thankfully received by the General.

The 23<sup>d</sup> another Battery was erected near the Church of St. Sebastian.

Two days after came into the Camp the Emperor's Dislave of the Four Corles at the head of 700 men; and the same Evening the General received a Letter writ with his Majesty's own Hand, and brought by one of his own Post-men: It was curiously perfumed with all sorts of Spices, and on each side you saw the

The King seem'd not well satisfied, that the said Letter had not been wrapp'd in white Linen as usual, and that some of his Titles had not been insert'd; yet he testify'd his Satisfaction about the arrival of the Dutch Fleet, alledging for the rest, that pursuant to the Promise made him by Mr. Jacob Kittenstein, and the Agreement with him and Adrian van der Meyden, the City was to be delivered into his Hands: But that as he made no great account thereof, he was satisfy'd, provided they would allow him the Honour of the Conquest, which he would acknowledg upon all Occasions. In the Conclusion of the Letter he told them, that he had ordered Lodgings to be prepar'd for them in all the Places thro which they were to pass.

The 26th we were busy in mounting the Cannon upon a Battery, and had four Men wounded and one kill'd. The same Day we receiv'd a Supply of Ammunition and Provision, brought aboard the Lyon Yacht to Puntagale. Sunday the 28th after Sermon, a Defenter with a Negro came into the Camp from the City, who having made his Escape thro the Fens, told the General, that Caspar Figeiro was by the Governor of Columbo, welcom'd with these Words, You deserve to be hanged, and that he had alledged many Falshoods in his Defence, and among the rest that he could not attack us, because we were so deeply entrench'd near the Sea-shoar.

The same Day the Emperor's Disgrace of the seven Corles arriv'd in the Camp with 500 Men, who together with the other Lascarins were employed in carrying Ammunition. The 29th a Defenter came over to us from the City, his Name was Herman Lucas, a Native of Hertogenburgh; who having formerly deserted our Service at Gale, in company of one named Walraven, had obtain'd the Name of John de Rosa among the Portugueses; but having had the Misfortune of killing another at Columbo, was fled to Candy, where he pretended to have been sent by the Governor, to view the Outworks of the Place: He gave the General an account of divers remarkable Passages, and among the rest, that he had been present in the Engagement, which happen'd the 17th, and that of that whole Body, not above 150 Portugueses return'd to Columbo, where there were as yet nine Companies, amounting in all with the Citizens able to bear Arms to 800 Men: That the Governor was highly concerned at the loss of these Troops, and the ensuing Siege, especially since some of the Citizens shew'd no great Inclination to fight. We play'd the same day very furiously upon the City, and the Battery rais'd against S. Sebastian was likewise brought to perfection.

The next following Day a certain Portuguese Prisoner was brought into the Camp; he was sent from Milagre, and had lived 14 days upon Grass and Herbs in the Woods. The 3d of Novemb. a Carpenter and Cannoneer were kill'd by a Cannon-shot upon the Battery rais'd at Quia de Lobo, and the same Afternoon the Sloop call'd the Delft arriv'd from Caleture with Poudrer. About the sametime a Defenter came to us out of the City, but being lately come from Goa, he could tell no great matter. The same Evening the Ship call'd the Brown-fish arriv'd with Letters from Laurence Pitt, Governor of the Coast of Coromandel, having on board 44544 Pounds of Gun-powder; he brought also Advice, that the Yacht the Popkensburg was safely arriv'd at Gale, but that they had no News of the Ship call'd the Haddock. The same Night we were busy in raising a Battery near the Sea-shoar.

The 4th of Novemb. early in the Morning, News was brought to the General from Negumbo, that according to the Report of certain Inhabitants of Annarolundane, 12 Sail of Ships were discover'd off of Chilaon; whereupon immediate Orders were given to the Commodore Edward Haue, to use all possible Endeavours to get Intelligence thereof: the same was also recommended to the Head Factor of Gale, John Kroon, and to be upon his Guard. The same Afternoon, a Cannon-Bullet from the Bastion of St. Stephen, passing thro a Gallery of the Church of Quia de Lobo, whilst the Surgeons were dressing some wounded Soldiers, a Soldier was kill'd, two others had their Arms shot off, and three more were dangerously wounded.

About the sametime Tenecon Apubamy, came in the Quality of the Emperor's Messenger, with a Breast-shield of Gold, beset with precious Stones, and fasten'd to a Gold Chain, and brought the following Letter from his Majesty to the General.

The News of your Success in the Engagement betwixt Caleture and Columbo, without any considerable Loss on the side of our faithful Hollanders, being likewise receiv'd by me with singular Satisfaction, I sent immediate Orders to all my Disjaves (Governors) and chief Commanders, to bring into the Field all the Forces of our Empire. I have sent with this Letter one of the Officers of our Court, to enquire after your Excellency's Health, and to bring you a Present from me, which I hope your Excellency will value, not so much in regard of its Value, as in respect of the Love and good Inclination of the Giver.

Resolutions and Instructions concerning the intended General Assault upon the City of Columbo.

THE 9th of Nov. a new Battery with four great brass Cannon, having began to play against St. Stephen's Bastion; a General Council of War was call'd of all the Chief Officers, in order to consult (after having implor'd the Divine Assistance) whether it were convenient to venture a General Assault upon Columbo: The General having openly declar'd, that every one there present should be at his full Liberty to discover his real Sentiments concerning this great Undertaking; it was agreed by unanimous Consent, that seeing the Alacrity of the Soldiers, it was convenient to attempt a General Assault.

Soon after the General dispatch'd a Trumpeter, bearing a Flag of Truce in his Hand, to the Portuguese Governor, Anthony de Souza Continbo, with the following Letter.

"The Success that has attended our Arms in the taking of Caleture, and the "Defeat of the Troops under Caspar Figeiro, near the Shoar of Parature, together with the Advantages obtained already in the Siege of Columbo, may as I suppose sufficiently entitle me to demand, without Vanity, the delivering up of the City, in the Name of his Imperial Majesty Raja Singa, and the most Noble Dutch-East-India Company. I hope your Excellency will not put a wrong Interpretation upon this Demand, when you consider that, pursuant to the Tenor of your own Letters sent to Don Antonio Mendes d'Aranda, and Caspar Figeiro, the first dated Septemb. 30. and the second the 13th and 15th of Octob. (both which are fallen into our Hands) you were then sufficiently sensible, that the Defence of Columbo depended on the Preservation of the Forces in Caleture, and those under the Command of Caspar Figeiro. It is upon this score that I am of Opinion, I don't put the least

A general Assault is agreed upon by general Consent.

"Blemish upon your Courage, since being bereav'd of these means, you have nevertheless given such ample Proofs of your Zeal and Bravery in the Defence of this Place. My Request is only founded upon this, to avoid the Effusion of Innocent Blood, the almost necessary Consequence and unavoidable Fate of all Places taken by Assault, it being sufficiently known, that the Fury of the conquering Soldiers is not easily stopp'd upon those Occasions.

Nov. 9.

Gerard Hulst.

The Trumpeter returning a little while after, told, that coming near to S. John's Bastion, the Letter was taken from him by a Portuguese Officer, who assur'd him, that the Governor should return an Answer the next Day: Hereupon the Cannon being ordered to play as before, three Companies under the Lieutenants William de Wit, Henry Gerritse, and Christopher Egger, were sent to Montual, in order to be put on board the two Yachts, the Ter Goes and the Erasmus.

The 10th of Novemb. an Answer was sent to the General upon his Letter.

"As God Almighty disposes the Chances of War according to his Pleasure, so he may as well declare now for our side, as he has done for you before: The Place you require, belongs to the King of Portugal my Master, who having entrusted me with the same, I must be accountable to him for it. The Reasons alledged by your Excellency, are not sufficient to move me to lay aside the Defence of this City; not questioning, but that Time and Experience will convince you, that our Condition at present is much beyond what you imagine. I recommend you to God's Protection.

Nov. 9.

Antonio de Souza Coutinho.

After the Receipt of this resolute Answer, the General thought fit to give the following Instructions for the intended General Assault.

"The Yachts, viz. the Maid of Enchuyfen, commanded by Volkert Adrian Shram (who afterwards rendred himself so famous in the North, during the English War) and the Workum, Avent Groenfield Commander, shall approach into the Bay, as near to the Water-Fort as possibly they can; for which purpose they shall be provided

Vol. III.

"with 110 chosen Seamen, 5000 Pounds of Gunpowder, and with Shot in proportion.

"The Yachts shall anchor in any part of the Bay, where they can best annoy the Water-Fort, and under favour of their Cannon land their Men. For this purpose the Yachts the Ter Goes and Erasmus, shall keep within Cannon-shot of the other two Yachts, and have aboard, besides their Ships Crew, 100 Landmen each, viz. the Companies of William de Wit, Henry Gerritse, and Christopher Egger, in order to land, in conjunction with the Men of the other Yachts. The Boats, Tenders and other small Vessels shall keep near the before-mention'd Ships, viz. the Tender the Amsterdam with her Sloop, near the Ter Goes, and the Sloop the Wejel, the Boat of the Mary-goldflower, with her Sloop the Delft, and the Tender the Naarden with the rest. The Tenders the Hair and Brownfish shall keep near the Shoar, to be ready upon all Occasions to carry Advice where it shall be thought necessary. In short, all the Boats shall attend the Vessels that are engag'd against the Fort, in order to save their Men, in case any of them should be sunk or disabled. When the Companies Standard is fix'd above the red Flag, this shall be the Signal of landing: If the said Standard is set up on the Main-mast yards Arm, it shall be the Signal for the Boats to come to succour the Ship, she being in danger of sinking.

"When the Prince's Standard is set up on the Ramparts, it is a Sign that we are Masters of that part of the Fortifications, when the Attack either upon the Castle or Fort may cease, till the said Standard be set up in Captain Kuylenburg's Quarters, near the Sea-shoar; this being intended for a Signal, that we are also Masters of the Town on the Land-side, when the Officers in their respective Attacks may either stop or go forward, according as it shall be thought convenient by the Majority of Voices.

"Whilst the Ships the Maid of Enchuyfen and Workum, are under Sail to enter the Bay, all the rest of the Ships shall weigh their Anchors, and put up the red Flag, as if they would enter the Bay, but keep without Cannon-shot. So soon as the Forces are landed, all the Officers, Soldiers and Seamen, shall obey Mr. Adrian Roobaw, as their Supreme Commander.

" Whilst the Ships and Men are engaged against the Water-Fort, the City is to be assaulted at the same time, near the Sea-shoar, at the Bastion of St. John, and on the Land-side near the Gate of Rajuba: The Attack upon the Bastion of S. John shall be commanded by Captain Kous, and the other by Captain Kuylenburgh, either of them to be seconded, as Occasion requires, by Mr. John van der Laan, the Companies of Kuylenburgh, Gouvert Quartel, Jurian Gevel, Andrew Steekens, Lambert Steenbagen, Hans Christoffer, Joachim Block, Melchior van Schoonenbeck and John Moll, with 36 Javaneses, and half a Company of Bandanefes, to be employ'd in the Assault of the first Bastion: The scaling Ladders shall be carried and fixed by the Bandanefes, Javaneses and Mardykens, mix'd with some Dutch Seamen, arm'd with Hand-Granadoes, Pikes and Hangers. The Bastions of Clergos and S. Philippo, near that of Saint Sebastian (at the Gate of Rajuba) shall be attack'd by the Companies of Captain Westrenen, Lieutenant Wildtschut, John Hartman, John Cooper, Hardenbergh, Roggenkamp, James Alenbier, Diedelof

" van der Beck, Henry Broekhuysen, John Coertsen, with the Javaneses, half a Company of Bandanefes, and the Company commanded by Captain Ruysch. Captain Westrenen shall command the Attack against the Bastion of Clergos, and Captain Ruysch that of S. Philippo, to be seconded by fresh Forces as Occasion requires. The Bandanefes, Javaneses and Mardykens, in conjunction with the Dutch Seamen, shall fix the scaling Ladders, and the Lascaryns of Ceylon be employ'd in carrying off the Slain.

About the same time we received Intelligence, that the Portuguese Succours were arriv'd at Goa, and that they intended to come to the Relief of Columbo: Word whereof was sent immediately to Gale to be upon their Guard, for fear of a Surprize. The 11th of Novemb. (the Day appointed for the General Assault) it being calm, so that the Ships could not enter the Bay, the same was defer'd till the next Day, tho we did not cease in the mean time to play more furiously with our Cannon than ever before, and we observ'd that the Enemy had taken in their red Flag upon the Bastion of S. Crus.

C H A P. XXVII.

A General Assault both by Sea and Land made upon Columbo, but without Success. Letters from Raja Singa to the General. Dutch Prisoners come out of Columbo.

The Water-Fort battered by the Ships.

THE 12th by break of Day, the Maid of Enchuysen, and soon after the Workum, being followed by the Ter Goes and the Erasmus, thunder'd most furiously against the Water-Fort, from whence they answer'd them very briskly. Immediately after the Assault was begun on the Land-side in three several places: The General in Person with ten Companies attack'd the Gate of Rajuba, and the Bastions of S. Philippo and Clergos; and Major John van der Laan with nine Companies, those of St. John and Couras; whilst James Lippens with two Companies of Soldiers and some Seamen, pass'd the Fens in seven Chinese Champanes or Boats, in order to attack the City where it was least fortify'd.

Columbo assaulted by Sea and Land.

But the Besieg'd fir'd so furiously upon our Men, especially with their Firelocks, that the Seamen could not be brought forward to fix the scaling Ladders; which the General perceiving, he advanc'd in Person with some of the bravest Officers, and fix'd the scaling Ladders to the Corrin: but having receiv'd a Wound in his Left Thigh, he was forc'd to be carried off. In the mean while News being brought that they had enter'd the Breach on Major van der Laan's Attack, he return'd to his Station (before his Wound was dress'd) but found things in such a Confusion, that he was forc'd to retreat, the Major and his Forces not being able to maintain themselves in the Breach, retreating at the same time, after they had in vain attempted three times to recover it. Lieutenant Melchior van Schoonenbeck, a High-German by Birth, and of a Noble Family, was the only Person who got upon the Bastion of S. John, but for want of being seconded, lost his Life there like a brave Soldier, his Head being afterwards stuck upon a Pike by the Portuguese, upon the same Bastion.

The Forces under Captain Lippens, having not without some Resistance from four Manchous or Boats, passed the Fens, got into the City; but the Captain being sorely wounded, made shift to retreat with some few, the rest for want of timely Succours being all made Prisoners of War. The Yacht the Maid of Enchusen, was so sorely batter'd from the Fort, that being ready to sink, her Crew was carried off by the Sloop the Langerack; but the Workum cut her Cables, and got out of the Bay without any considerable Loss. The Number of the Slain on our side amounted to 200, and 350 wounded, not including the two Companies of John van Hardenburg and Roggenkamp, and the Seamen commanded by John Lippens, that were made Prisoners in the City. The Ships the Ter Goes and Erasmus, who had aboard the Soldiers that were to assault the Water-Fort, not being able to get near enough by reason of the Wind, soon got out of the Bay.

ON this unfortunate Day the General received a Letter from his Imperial Majesty, testifying his good Opinion of his Excellency, not questioning but that after the taking of Columbo he would deliver the said City into his Hands, pursuant to the Agreement made with Mr. Westerwold. That he desir'd to have such of his Rebellious Subjects, as should fall into our Hands, deliver'd up to his Disposes, either alive or dead, in order to punish them with the same Severity, as he had done those at Batecalo; and that he had order'd his Governors to ravage and destroy all the Villages in the Low-Lands. He sent at the same time enclos'd a Letter from the Portuguese Governor, Antonio de Souza Continho, dated Octob. 27. at Columbo, to the Emperor, the chief Contents whereof were, "That he could not forbear to put his Majesty in mind of the antient Friendship betwixt him and the Portugueses, which he was sorry to have been interrupted, by the Dutch making themselves Masters of Caleture, and having routed their Forces near Paneture, by laying so close and vigorous a Siege to the City of Columbo, that they were in great Danger of being forc'd to surrender. Wherefore they craved his Majesty's Assistance against the Hollanders, who after they were Masters of the City, would certainly not deliver up the same to his Majesty, but lord it over his Subjects; which his Majesty, according to his Willom, might easily see, how much it would tend to his Dishonour; whereas if he join'd with the Portugueses against them, he might promise himself all the Advantages due to so great a Monarch.

The 13th of Novemb. was spent in carrying the wounded Soldiers to Negumbo, Gale, and Montual: The same Day the Enemy in a Bravado, put two of our Ensigns upon the Bastions of S. John and S. Philippo. At the same time Advice was brought, that the Ships the Avenborn and Campen richly laden from Perfia, were arrived at Gale in their Voyage to Batavia. For which Reason the Yacht the Brownfijh was dispatch'd to Gale, to carry some Letters thither, to be sent further to Batavia, as likewise a Letter to be sent by Land to the Emperor Raja Singa. The Yacht the Popkensburg arriv'd also with Gunpowder and other Necessaries for our Camp.

The 19th, a Letter from the Emperor Raja Singa was deliver'd by his Disposes to the General, wherein he condol'd him about his Wound, and the ill Success of the late Assault, telling him, that he was employ'd Day and Night in making Preparations to join him with his Forces, and desiring not to venture a second Assault before his Arrival. A Letter of Thanks being order'd to be written to his Majesty, the Yachts the Workum and Popkensburg, with a Frigate, were dispatch'd to Negumbo, to cruise to the North of that Harbour, to get timely Intelligence of the Enemies Approach.

The 26th some Cannon-shot being heard at a good distance, it was generally believed to be the Signal from the Fortrels of Negumbo, to advertise the Arrival of the Portuguese Fleet. Whereupon Mr. Adrian van der Meyden took two Companies of Soldiers and as many Seamen, out of the Church of Quia de Lobo (where they had their Post) and marched directly to Montual, in order to embark them there, to prevent the Enemies Landing. The General, notwithstanding his Wound, follow'd thither in Person, and found them ready to embark, which was however defer'd for that time, till they should receive more certain Intelligence. Only the Yachts the Mars and the Flisfingen, with some Officers aboard them, were commanded to cruise off the Northern Point of Montual.

Much about the same time arriv'd the Roman Yacht from Suratte with 16 Loads of Wheat. The Officers reported that

Baldac. a Portuguese Fleet consisting of 30 Frigates, was entirely destroy'd by a Tempest near Wingula, but that no body knew from whence they came, or whether they were bound; and that the Cannon we heard some Days before, was discharg'd by them as a Signal of their Distress, to the Workum and Popkensburg.

The 29th Captain Kuylenburgh, who died of the Wounds he received in the late Assault, being honourably interr'd; the 1st of Decemb. two Serjeants came in to our Camp, who being formerly taken Prisoners at Anguratotte by the Portuguese, had taken the Opportunity, as these were flying from Manaar to Tutecorvyn, to defert and hide themselves among the Mosses of Kilicare, from whence they were brought in one of our Vessels hither. On the other hand a certain Seaman, named Claas Claasz, did swim cross part of the Bay into the City.

The same Night a new Trench was open'd against the Bastion of S. John, and carried on with all imaginable Diligence. The Yacht the Roman was sent a cruising to get Intelligence, whether any of the Enemies Ships could be discover'd at Sea, as the Flushing Yacht was dispatch'd to the Coast of Malabar, and the Erasmus sent out in her stead a cruising.

Want in Columbo.

THE 7th of Decemb. we got Intelligence, that most of the Inhabitants of Columbo, for want of Rice and other Provisions, had been forc'd to lift themselves among the regular Forces; that in the late Assault they had taken 70 or 80 of ours Prisoners, whereas their whole Loss did not amount to above 20 or 25 Portuguese, among whom were however two Persons of Note, viz. Antonio Barbosa, and Felicio Leesio, Lord of Macoene. That they had mounted the Cannon taken out of the Maid of Enchuyssen upon their Bastions, and were busy in making divers Retrenchments, in hopes of being soon succour'd from Goa, and that their whole Force consisted in 700 Portuguese.

The 10th of Decemb. Antonio Amiral de Menezes (then Governor of Jafnapatnam, and afterwards 1658. kill'd at the taking of Manaar) was taken Prisoner at Montual, as he was going from Manaar to Columbo with some Letters, one whereof being written in Characters, was unciphered by the General's Order, and was as follows.

To the General Antonio de Souza Coutinho.

"Before I had the least Intelligence of the Approach of the Enemies Ships, I writ to your Excellency by Land, tho I have not heard since what is become of the Messenger. The three Pados are well arriv'd at Goa, and the five Messengers sent thither; the sixth sent by Anthony d'Abreu, did not stay in the least in this Fort, but arriv'd two Days at Negapatan, and brings along with him full Instructions concerning the Relief of Columbo. I have not been idle in my Station, both in advising how to raise Men for our Service in the Indies, and in contributing all that lay in my Power of my own accord, which by some others has not been done without reluctance, especially in giving my Assistance in equipping some Vessels of Bulk, and Gallies well mann'd for the Relief of the City. I have hitherto heard no News from the Fleet at Cape Comorvyn, sent for that purpose. I wish they may reach the Isle of Manaar, when we shall have Opportunity to debate the whole matter with the Commander in Chief, how to contrive matters for the Defence of the Place: You may rest assur'd, that nothing shall be wanting on my part, that may tend towards the Accomplishment of its Relief, which I heartily wish may take effect; it being my Opinion, that a good Fleet is the very means now to preserve that Place, till we receive our Supplies from Goa. Perhaps it may please God to destroy the Hereticks in this Siege, and to abate their Haughtiness, occasion'd by their late Success, caus'd by our Neglect; it being certain, that the same might have been foreseen a considerable time ago. 11 Novemb. 1655.

The rest of the Letters were very near the same, with this addition only, that the Portugueses set sail in October with 15 Frigots, but were forc'd back near the Cape Comorin, so near that they had landed some Soldiers, who were march'd by Land to Jafnapatnam, with an intention to come to Columbo, to give notice there of the Equipment of six Galeons at Goa intended for the Succours of the City; and that in case the Dutch should block up that Harbour, they would fight their way through them. All these Letters were sent to his Imperial Majesty.

The 12 Decemb. 200 Negroes being seen to fall'y out of the Gate of Mapane, keeping along the Sea-shore, three Companies were order'd to attack them; but they no sooner espied our People advancing towards them, than they retreated in haste to the City: However three of them deserted to us, and gave an account that the reason of their coming out was only to fetch and cut some Faggot-Wood for the repairing of the Bastions of S. John, S. Stephen and S. Philip; and that they had made betwixt the two former a Retrenchment, in case they should be forced to quit the Bastions.

Baldew.

The same day we finish'd our second Report of Redoubt, and the next two Portuguese some Deferrers confirm'd the Report of the Negroes, adding that they much dreaded our Mines, that the Bastion of S. John was guarded by two Companies (of 25 or 30 Men each) under Caspar Figueiro, the Gate of Magapane with three, and the rest in proportion. At the same time we saw a whole Troop of halfstarv'd Wretches forc'd out of the Town, but were made to return from whence they came, except a few Portugueses, who could give good intelligence about the Condition of the Place.

The 14th in the morning 10 or 12
Boats came out of the Town to fetch Faggot-wood; but finding us prepare to attack them, they retir'd with Precipitation, after they had wounded three of our Men.

The 15th the General agreed with 20 Pioneers to work continually (six at a time) in the Trenches, at the rate of 20 Pence per diem, besides a good Reward after they had finish'd the Work. In the Afternoon a Battery of 6 Guns was or-der'd to be erected.

The 18th a Gunner having out of carelessness double charg'd a Gun upon a Battery, kill'd three of our own Pioneers, and wounded 7 Negroes; and in the Evening four great Cannon were not without some loss planted upon the before-mentioned Battery.

*An unfortunate Ab-
cident.*

The 19th we play'd thence most furiously upon the Bastions of S. John and Stephen, and two more Cannons were mounted upon it the same Evening.

The 20th a new Redoubt was begun, the Trenches being then carried on within two Rods of the Counterscarp. In the Evening we miss'd Simon Lopes, who was again gone over to the Enemy.

The 26th three Negro Carpenters coming over to us, reported that the Portugueses had undermin'd the Bastion of S. John, and laid 5 large Barrels with Gunpowder in five divers places underneath it,

it, having laid the Train by the means of certain Bambocanes, which were to be lighted on the top whilst we were assaulting the said Bastion, which was the reason that they had not discharg'd their Cannon from thence these two days past. They added, that the Son of Antonio de Souza Coutinho the Governor of Columbo, being busy in encouraging the Workmen by his own Example, receiv'd a Wound by a Musquet-shot in the Head, of which he died soon after. A Council of War was also call'd, in which it was resolv'd to carry on the Trenches with all imaginable vigor, to prevent the Enemy in perfecting his Retrenchments before the Breach of the Bastion of S. John, and to fix our Miners there.

The 27th the General gave notice to the Dissaves of Saffragam and the four Corles, that he intended to send an Envoy to his Majesty, to know his Inclinations, whether he intended to appear in Person in our Camp or not: he desir'd them to write to him upon the same Subject, the time for attempting a second general Assault drawing near; and that in case his Majesty had the least doubt left of our sincere Intentions, he would give him full Satisfaction upon that Head.

The Portugueses throw Stones out of a Mortar. We make a third Redoubt: Endeavour to lay the Gallery over the Ditch. A Spy hang'd. Letters from Coromandel.

THE 28th of December in the Evening the Portugueses began to throw several Stones out of a Mortar into our Works, which something surpriz'd us at first, but afterwards we guess'd that it was Simon Lopes who lately deserted our Service that had put them in the way of it. The next day Capt. John Hartman was sent with Letters to the Emperor at Candy, and we were hard at work to bring the third Redoubt near the Sea-shore to perfection, where we planted a Mortar, and continued our approaches to the Counter-carp.

Another
erected.

A Chinese Defenter, a Native of Macao, reported that they were indifferently well provided with Provisions in the City, and that it was true that the Governor's Son was dead. Letters were at the same dispatch'd to Mr. Laurence Pit, Governor of Coromandel, to send us some Ammunition, and to order the Ships which upon the arrival of the Vessels from Tajouan sail from thence to Batavia, to touch at Gale, to be employ'd in thwarting the intended Succours of the Portugueses, or to take aboard part of the Portuguese Prisoners among us.

Portu-

the Ditch.

The 8th of January, finding the Enemy busy in planting Palisado's in the Ditch, some Seamen arm'd with Hand-granado's made them soon quit that Enterprize. But the next following day finding the Enemy to have made some Entrenchments there, a Hole was order'd to be made in the Wall; and Captain Henry Gerard, the head Gunner and Engineer, and Carpenter, being order'd to view the Work, they reported that the Enemy had planted a row of Palisado's close to one another, extending to the Sea-shore, which made them imagine that they expected the most fierce Assault on that side.

Six expert Carpenters having offer'd their Service for perfecting the Gallery, 100 Crowns were promised them as a Reward; and it being resolv'd to fix the said Gallery the next day under favour of our great Cannon and Fire-locks, a certain number of Musqueteers were order'd to the extremities of the Trenches: but the Wall being thicker at the bottom than at the top, it was almost Evening before they could make a Breach in it, when attacking the Enemy with their Hand-granado's, they forced them from the Ditch, where they posted 12 Fire-locks; but these receiv'd so warm a Salute from the Enemy's Cannon and Fire-locks both of the Bastions of S. John and S. Stephen, and the Palisado-work, that they were forced to retreat, and the fixing of the Gallery was thought fit to be delay'd till a more convenient time, having lost only one Carpenter and two Negroes in this Enterprize. John Roetha the Dutch Reer-Admiral sent 12 Jan. three Negro Prisoners from the Fleet into the Camp, who were taken coming with Letters from Manaar, in order to carry them into Columbo; but they were of little moment, except what was contain'd tain'd in the following Passage taken out of Lorenzo Barboza's Letter directed to Don Francisco de Souza.

"Your Fleet could, not make the Cape Comorin, because they came too late, and were overtaken by a violent Tempest; the Soldiers aboard were sent by Land to Tuticorin, and from thence by Sea to Manaar. That they understood that great Endeavours were used to equip a Squadron of great Ships and Frigots, to be joyn'd by 8 Galeons for the relief of Columbo, and that they had certain Advice that the Galeons were getting ready for that purpose: That the rest they would be inform'd of by the Captain-Major's Letter to the Governor, &c.

The said Prisoners reported that Antonio Amiral had brought a Reinforcement of six Companies from Tafnapatnam to Manaar; and that it was reported there, that 5 Galeons and 28 Frigots were to come from Goa, and being joyn'd with some other Vessels and Forces at Manaar were to sail to the relief of Columbo: whereupon the General sent his Instructions to our Squadron to watch the coming of the Enemy, but especially to our Cruisers, the Workum, Pokensburgh, Mars and Erasmus Yachts; 30 Bandanese Soldiers, and as many Mardykers were also order'd aboard these Vessels, and a Negro Deserter reported that those come from Manaar to Columbo were half naked, and had brought no Letters, one of them being wounded, but knew nothing further.

The 15th of January some of our Lascarys brought in a Spy, whom they had taken under pretence of going into the City to sell Tobacco; but upon the Evidence of two Cingalese Carpenters that he was a Spy, he was hang'd on a Gibbet near the place where he intended to have got into the place.

The 19th Letters were brought to the Camp, sent by Lawrence Pit, then Governor of Coromandel, intimating that we might expect a Supply of 35000 Pounds weight of Gunpowder with the Yachts the Codfish, Rabbit, and Patience; that for the rest the Company had lost 50 loads of Rice, and 250 Ammanams * of Areek † by an accidental Fire. That several private Merchants having lately sent certain Ships laden with all sorts of Provisions, we need not fear any thing upon that account. The Rabbit alone had a Cargo of 26822 Pounds weight of Gunpowder, 50 Packs of Guinea Linen Cloth, and 10 Loads of Rice, valued altogether at 23860 Gilders.

Vol. III.

It was further advic'd, that in all probability the King of Golconda was likely to be embroil'd in a War with Mirza Mula his General, who had put strong Garisons in the Fortresses of Gendecalte, Gronconde and Goetti. That the General Chan Channe was lately retir'd with the Forces of Visiapour, consisting of 8000 Horse, and 40000 Foot, from Velour to Visiapour, but for what reason was not known. A Copy was also sent of a Letter written by Leonard Johnson Factor, Decemb. 8. from Wingurla to Batavia, whence it appear'd that they were making great Preparations at Goa for the relief of Columbo. "But, added he, the Portuguese Viceroy having sufficient Intelligence of our Strength before Columbo, it seems to me to be rather a Bravado than a real Design, unless it were (as some affirm) that the Relief of that City was so positively commanded by the King of Portugal, that the Viceroy would be forced to attempt it, unless he were prevented by the Dutch blocking up the Harbour of Goa before that time. That it was rumour'd there that the Portuguese Soldiers should be oblig'd by Oath, confirm'd by the Blessed Sacrament, that in case they were not able to worst the Dutch Fleet, they should set fire to their own Ships; but he hoped that the City would fall into our hands before they could put their Design in Execution. But, as it were not safe to despise ones Enemy, so he would take care to give from time to time Intelligence of what he could learn to the Director-General Gerard Hulst with all imaginable speed, for which purpose he hoped to purchase the Diligence of some of the Natives by Money. The following List was annex'd of such Ships as were to be employ'd in the said Expedition, 2 Caraques, 2 large Galeons, one lesser one, 2 Cavavals, 6 Patacho's or Yachts, 20 light Frigots, 24 more from the Coast of Sipaveneick, with some Galeons, and other Boats call'd Singazeels. His further opinion was, that the said Squadron might be ready towards the end of January, and that the same was to be reinforce'd by some Yachts from Chaul; that besides the Garison to be left at Goa, 2000 Europeans, not reckoning the Mistices and Negroes, were to be embark'd aboard the said Fleet. He advised further, that two English Ships being some days before come to an Anchor before Goa, the Viceroy had offer'd the Captains a considerable Sum of Money, provided they would sail along with the Fleet to Ceylon; but that they refused to accept of the same, and were sail'd to the Northward.

The 21st of January, two hours before break of day, the General being got aboard the Ter Goes, call'd a Council of War there, wherein it was resolv'd to send forthwith the Ship the Cod-fish to Negombo, in order to unlade her Cargo (intended for Gale) there in company of the Amsterdam and Marygold-flower; and the Hare Yacht was order'd to keep as close to the Bay as possibly she could, to observe the small Vessels that might pass and repass in and out of the City.

The 24th of January the Flushing Yacht coming from Winguria, brought Letters from our Factor Leonard Johnson, dated the 6th of January, intimating, that the Viceroy of Goa, instead of sending the pretended Succours to Ceylon, had now resolv'd to send two Caracks to Portugal, and three Yachts to Mosambique; and that the Design of the Relief of Columbo seem'd to be laid aside: in confirmation whereof he sent the following Translation of a Letter written by one of our Spies there.

To the Commodore of the Dutch Squadron near Winguria.

Letter of a Spy from Goa.

TWO Ships (both arrived this Year) viz. Bon Jesus carrying 65 Guns, and the Nossa Senhora da Graçia of 60 Guns, are intended to be sent to Portugal, being now busy in unloading, and expecting only the return of our Fleet from Cochin and the Cape. It is supposed they will be ready to sail by the end of the first Month of the Year. Three Yachts more are order'd from Mosambique, being now taking in their Cargo, besides another Yacht, design'd for Macassar. The Caravel intended for China is not ready to sail, and it remains uncertain whether she will go thither. But, if she does, it will not be till next Spring. Hitherto we see no Preparations either of Men or Ships for Ceylon; and they seem unresolv'd, whether they had best send any Relief thither, for fear they should fall into the hands of the Dutch. But if any be sent, it will certainly not be till after the departure of the Ships for Portugal, for which the Viceroy shews a great concern, being afraid they will be intercepted by the Dutch before they can reach Portugal.

Dated January 6.

Your Excellency's constant Slave,

Tragami Sinay.

Hereupon it was agreed in a Council of War, to order the Ships the Ter Goes, Mars, the Arms of Holland, Amsterdam, Flushing, Erasmus, Naarden, Zierik-see, Marygold-flower, and the Hare, forthwith towards Goa, there to expect the coming of the Ships from Trajanou, in company of those from Persia and Suratte. And that the Yachts the Workum, Popkenburgh, Codfish and Rabbit, with some light Frigates and Sloops, should be kept for the Blockade of the Harbour of Columbo.

Mr. Hartman presented by the Emperor. Some Spies hang'd. The Arrival of several Ships. Letters from the Emperor and Dutch General.

ABOUT that time the Emperor sent his Letter to the Dutch General Mr. Hulst, in answer to his sent by Mr. Hartman, the chief Contents of which were, "That he intended to come into our Camp in the night-time, having been detained hitherto by the Advice of the Great Men of his Court (these Pagans being very superstitious in chusing their time) but that now he was resolv'd to speak with the General in spite of all the pretended Obstacles. That he was glad to understand, that notwithstanding ing our Loss in the last general Assault we kept our Posts, and that he intended to dispatch Mr. Hartman the next Thursday. It was dated at Balané, January 20, 1656. and subscribed, Emperor of Ceylon.

Mr. Hartman returned, being presented with a Golden Chain and a Ring, and reported, that some of the Emperor's Disjaves having brought him the news, that that we had lost a considerable number of men by the springing of a Mine, he was very glad to hear the contrary afterwards. The 26th of January early in the Morning a Letter was delivered from our Head Factor at Gale, John Kroon, that the Ships the Patience, the Bengale, the Black Bull and the Grey-bowd from Tajouan by the way of Masulipatan, loaden with Merchandizes from Persia, and the Vlieland belonging to those of Suratte, were arrived there, and that he had ordered them to sail for Columbo. Two Spies came lately out of the City, to view the Condition of our Attacks and Batteries, were hang'd two days after.

At the same time Letters were brought into the Camp, dated the last of Novemb. at Malacca, intimating, that the 14th, 15th and 19th of November 1655. the Ships the Vlieland, Black Bull, Arnemuyden and the Sweet-briar, were arrived there from Tajouan, their Loading being valued at 1349436 Guilders at the first hand: and that the Sweet-briar, the Domburg and Lion were with a good quantity of Tin of Malacca sent to Bengale. The Cargo of these Ships consists commonly of Japonefe Silver, Bars of Copper, Alum, Gold, China Tea, and Sugar of Formosa, besides a considerable quantity of Tin of Malacca. Upon the Coast of Malabar, and in Ceylon (where they commonly arrive at the same time) they load with Cinnamon, Pepper and Cardamom. They generally make a long Voyage: For they set sail from Batavia to Japan and Tajouan in May, and come to Malacca in December: From thence they steer their Course by the Nicebards to Ceylon, or Bengale, or Coromandel (but never from these Places to Ceylon, but sometimes return from Bengale or Ceylon to Malacca or Batavia) and from thence by Malabar to Suratte and Persia, and return in May to Ceylon (and sometimes straight-ways to Batavia) and so further with their Cargo (they have taken in at Suratte or in Persia) to the Coast of Coromandel, where being loaden with Linen Cloth, painted Callicoos and other Merchandizes, they return to Batavia in June or July. By Letters from John Thysen Governour of Malacca, advice was given that the Tin Trade (the chiefest of that Country) had been but very indifferent that Year.

But it is time to return to the Siege of Columbo. The last day of January two Portuguese Deferters, who had made shift to let themselves down by Ropes from St. Stephens Bastion, reported, that many of their Comrades were willing to desert for want of Pay, but that they were strictly guarded; that the Garrison consisted still of 650 Europeans, and they had Rice for two Months longer; that they still rely'd upon the promised Succours of 6 Galeons. Soon after we saw a whole Troop of half-starv'd Wretches coming out of the Town; but 120 were forced to return without Relief. The 12th of February about 500 of them, Men, Women and Children, being forced by extremity of Hunger, came to the General's Quarter imploring his Mercy; but they were forced back into the Town along the Sea-shore near the Bastion of St. John. In the mean while the Emperor sent the following Letter to the General.

Raja Singa Rajou.

“OUR Imperial Majesty has formerly (thro God's Mercy) been victorious over our Enemies in Malvance, where I routed their whole Army commanded by Don Constantino; after which laying Siege to Columbo, I had my Head Quarters in the Garden of Lewis Gomes Pinto. It then pleased God to afflict me with a Distemper, which the Viceroy having got notice of, he desired me to return to Candy; which I did accordingly, leaving my Brother Carnana Singa King of Ouve, with the Prince of Vijisapalla, to command the Siege, who put no small Blame upon our Imperial Family. Whilst they were employed in that Siege, the treacherous Portuguese having at that time forced a Multitude of starv'd Wretches out of the City, they had mix'd with them certain Villains, who set all our Works on fire. Wherefore I hope your Excellency will keep a strict Guard; for I can't forbear, for the Love and good Inclinations I bear to your Excellency, to put you in mind, that the Portuguese are a most perfidious Nation, and that even my Forces are composed of divers sorts of People: So that your Excellency ought to have a particular regard for your own Person, which will be a singular Satisfaction to me. For you must know, that there being variety of People in the Isle of Ceylon, who have served divers Princes, and are us'd to Ravages and Rapines, these are generally treacherous, and not to be trusted by your Excellency, tho perhaps they will endeavour to obtain your Favour by

The 17th of February the Yacht the Saphir came into the Road from Coremandel, and brought a Letter from the Governor Laurence Pit, dated January 29. at Paliacatta: Her Cargo consisted in Rice and Gun-powder, tho not so much as was expected, the full quantity of Brimstone not being brought from Taiouvan.

But notwithstanding the before said Warning given to the Negro Citizens, many of them coming every day into our Camp, one of them was ordered to be hanged to deter others from doing the like; so that afterwards 15 and more died every day in the City of Famine, and a Scorbutick Dropsy began also to reign among the Europeans there. The 19th a Misfice Defeter brought advice, that they had equipp'd a Boat, which lay ready to sail against the next Night for Manaar; whereupon Orders were sent to Commodore Roorhau to intercept her, if possibly he could. The 20th Mr. Johns Harvman came with the following Letter from the Emperor to the General.

Your Excellency did also give notice that you had sent away 9 Ships the 5th of this Month. God Almighty I hope will bless your Excellency's Designs with Success, according to the utmost of my Wishes, there being nothing that can more rejoice our Imperial Majesty than the Welfare and Prosperity of the Hollanders: And I hope, that after my arrival in the Camp, such Measures may be taken betwixt us, as may soon reduce the City. The refractory Party among my Troops you have mentioned, shall be branded with Infamy, not only for themselves, but also their Generation; so that their Names shall be despised hereafter for ever. Whenever I shall see your Person, I shall imagine to have the whole State of Holland before me; and since according to our Constitutions Matters of this nature are not to transact but on fortunate Days and Hours, your Excellency shall be advertised thereof by some Person of note. The said Mr. Hartman was presented by the Emperor with a tame Elephant, and told the General, that the Emperor had given him some private hints, that the Prince his Son would take it as a peculiar Obligation, if the General would honour him with a small Present. The Emperor's Disposes coming the 21st of February to the General, in order to fetch the Answer to the Emperor's Letter, they were told, that the Letter was not finished, by reason of many things of moment to be inserted therein: But the General took this opportunity to advise with them what Present might be most acceptable to the Prince. They answered, they could not tell, but would consider of the matter. In the Afternoon they received the desired Letter sealed up under the Discharge of the Cannon, as is usual upon such occasions, when each of the Captains is presented with a piece of Sattin, and two of the Disposes with a red Roan Cap, a thing highly valued by them (called Toppay Honday in their Language) with a Japanese Buckler for one of the Prince's Attendants.

CHAP. XXXI.

The Besieged fire furiously upon the Besiegers. The Emperor's Envoys. Negro Deserters forced back. Letters intercepted. The Emperor presents the General with an Elk. A new Battery erected.

THE 22d of February the Enemy play'd most furiously with their Cannon from the Baftions of St. Stephen and St. John, and kill'd us several Men. His Majesty being that day come to his Camp at Reygammatte, to take a view of the Quarters prepared for his reception, perceiving a more than ordinary Smoke, sent a Messenger to know the truth of the matter. In the Evening about Supper-time, word was brought that certain Deputies from his Majesty were arrived at a Farm about two Miles from the Camp, and that they had sent a Messenger to signify, that they were desirous to speak with the General that Evening; which being readily granted, an Ensign was sent thither with some Soldiers to conduct them to the Camp, and to make an Excuse, that the time of the Night had hindered their Reception to be suitable to their Quality. They told the General; that his Majesty had received his Letter with a great deal of Satisfaction, and that they were sent to tell his Excellency, that his Majesty was at present at Walewitty, and that as soon as his Quarters were fitted up, he should be sent for; for which reason they were commanded by his Majesty to order the Dispose of Saffragamne to have the Roads leading to Reygammatte repaired. They would willingly have returned the same night; but it being excessive dark, their Quarters were assigned them in the Camp till next morning.

The same day Edmund Ruyfch sent word, that a great number of poor Wretches were coming out of the City: The Men, to the number of 50, were secured at Afilagre;

Deputies sent into the Camp from the Emperor.

Baldau. Afilagve; but the Women and Children being brought before the General, he order'd them (pursuant to their former Resolution) to be whip'd back into the Town near the Bastion of St. John, this being look'd upon as the most proper means to straiten the Enemy, and to bring them to our Terms. Towards the Evening the Men, with 20 more, who since had join'd them, being also brought into the Camp, the General took two of them aside, and told them, that they must look upon it as a particular Favour, to be sent back once more; but if they return'd they must expect nothing but the Gallows, unless they would engage with some of the Aratches that had deserted our Camp, to surprize some Bastion or other for our Service. They were likewise forced back with a good Whipping, and the 24th 150 more had the same Entertainment.

Deferters
whip'd back into the City.

The 26th of February the Dislave of the four Corles came to tell the General, that those of Saffragamme were still busy in repairing the Roads and Bridges, and produced a Letter from certain Great Men of the Court, enjoining him to demand to certain Persons, that had made shift to get out of the City with the Enemies Troops, and sheltered themselves in the adjacent Villages, having deserted the King's Service before. The General was not unwilling to grant his Request; but withal told him, that if these Persons of Quality had been as forward in furthering their King's Service as we, there would not have been so many Deferters. The same day a Letter was deliver'd to the General written by one of our Aratches to the Vidane of Pasdun-Corle, as follows:

An intercepted
Letter.

" H Angedera Lionayde, Son-in-law to Ranatonge Aratchie, wishes Health to Vidane, and the three Chieftains of the three Pattos of Pasdun-Corle. Immediately upon the receipt of these, you shall without fail or delay gather, in the time of 8 days, out of all the circumjacent Villages, 50 Pingues of Pullets, Butter, Pepper, Atchiar, and Earthen Vessels; and with them, in company of all the Heads or Majors of the Villages of Anguratotte, come towards Horne, and from thence into the Imperial Camp, there to pay your Obedience to his Majesty. Such as fail in their Duty must expect to receive condign Punishment. You must not publish my Name, what I do in this respect not being by my own Authority; but when you come to " Court, you may then declare, that it was Hangedera Lionayde, Ranatonge Rale's Son-in-law, who gave you this Invitation.

The Aratche who had been the Author of this Letter, being seized and examin'd the same Evening by Mr. Adrian van der Meyden and Major van der Laan, did not disown his Hand, but refused to discover (tho he was threaten'd with present Death) by whose Command he had writ it. The General being of opinion that there was some Mystery hid under this pretence, especially since this Cingalese liv'd under the Company's Jurisdiction, and had receiv'd signal Obligations from them, commanded his Head to be cut off, and deliver'd him up for that purpose to the Provost, in hopes of extorting a Confession from him by this means; but under-hand order'd him to be secur'd only aboard the Ship the Arms of Amsterdam, for fear, that, in case he should be executed on a sudden, they might be bereaved of the Opportunity of discovering the Truth.

February 27th being Sunday, the General sent a Letter to Raja Singa, to advertise his Majesty what had pass'd with the Aratche, and at the same time enclosed the Original of the intercepted Letter. The same day the Dislave of Saffragamme coming to the General to tell him, that the Roads and Bridges were now repaired according to his Majesty's Orders; he was commanded by him to employ the same People in perfecting the Pallisadoes intended for the new Redoubt near the Gate of Rajuba, which he promised to do. The General also told him what had happen'd with the Aratche; which he approving of, the General further desired him to provide some Buffers for the use of the Seamen, who were sorely afflicted with the Scurvy, which he likewise agreed to.

Word being brought that four Fishermen were coming over to us in a Tony or Fish-boat, they were forewarn'd not to come into the Camp, under the pain of being hang'd, unless they could engage all the Fish to come at once. About the same time a certain Moor Vessel came into the Road from Puntegale with a Passport from John Kroon our Head Factor there. They brought advice that the Lands and Villages under the Jurisdiction of Gale were farm'd out at 15849 Rixdollars, for the next Year, to be paid by four quarterly Payments, and that the Areck, which the Company had taken at the

The last day of this month, finding that the Enemy work'd against us near the Gate of Rajuba, Lieutenant Alenbier was sent with 6 Firelocks to secure their Workmen; but these saved themselves by an early Flight, and our People return'd without receiving any Damage. About the same time Letters were brought by the Yacht the Armenyden, dated the 17th of February, on the Coast of Coromandel, others being also expected, dated the 11th, with the Yacht the Codfish, not arriv'd as yet, having aboard 100 Loads of Rice of Bengale, a good Quantity of Gunpowder and 60 Soldiers: The other Vessels Cargo consisted in 18877 Pound-weight of Gunpowder, 2781 Bullets of divers Sizes, viz. 231 of 24 Pounds, 750 of 18, 1800 of 12, 1500 Stone-Bullets, and 10000 Pound Weight of Lead, besides some other Merchandizes, and 16 Loads of Rice, amounting to the Value of 6098 Guilders, on account of those of Ceylon only. At the same time the Rabbit sail'd out of the Road, being order'd to cruise on the South Point of Negumbo, and to be relieved every eight Days by another Ship.

Pretty late in the Evening, three Deputies from the Emperor presented the General with an Elk, which his Majesty himself had hunted the same Morning in an adjacent Wood, which was received with great Reverence by his Excellency.

The General and Mr. van der Meyden, hearing the Beat of Drum in the new Redoubt, near the Gate of Rajuba, they went thither in Person; and in their way met with 17 Lascaryns, and 2 Aratches, who being posted in an Outwork near the said Gate, had quitted the same; they being order'd to be secured in the Head Quarter, they went forward, and found that the Alarm had been occasion'd by the coming over of the Lascaryns, whom they mistook for Enemies. They reported that the City was provided with Provisions till May, their Allowance, viz. 25 Mididos to a Head, being given them for the Month of April: They added, that it was whisper'd about, that the Governor had embark'd all his Moveables, Money and Jewels in a Boat, and sent them in the Night-time to Manaar; which News was very unpleasing to us, because they had escaped the Sight of our Ships.

The 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of March, we advanced bravely towards the Gate of Rajuba: two Portuguese Deserters, with some Lascaryns well armed, being examined apart, deposed, that the City could not hold out longer than towards the end of May, the Remnants of the Rice being very stony and unclean, nay wet and corrupted. Hereupon the General ordered that a Battery of two Guns should be erected opposite to the utmost Point of the Bastion of St. Jo. the better to batter and lay level the Flank of that of St. Stephens, and under favour thereof to open again the Trench leading to our Mine, and so working along the Wall, to take Poss upon the Counterfarp.

Baldew.

Deserters give an account of the Condition of Columbo.

C H A P. XXII.

Many Deserters give account of the Condition of Columbo. Ysbrand Gotskens sent Envoy to the Emperor. His Letter to the General, and that of the Besieged to the Emperor.

About that time divers Lascaryns Deserters, and among them a Portuguese, made heavy Complaints that they were forced to feed upon corrupted Rice: The last told us, that there were no more than 40 left of our Prisoners, and that such of our Officers as were not slain in the Assault, died afterwards of their Wounds, except a Serjeant. He also discover'd to us, that the Besieged had carried all their Guns from the Bastions of St. Stephen, St. Philip and Clerigos into their Outwork, before the Gate of Rajuba, in order to discharge the same the next following Night upon our Pioneers. Paul Aano, who was then upon the Guard here, was thereupon order'd to let the Labourers cease, till they had spent their Powder and Ball in vain, and then to let them return to their Work. In effect, they shot very furiously the next Night both with their Cannon and Firelocks upon our Works; and by break of Day the General went on Horseback to Milagre, to view the Works of the Disfaves on that Side, which he found

Baldous. to be well secured by a strong Set of Palisadoes, reaching from the Sea-shore to the Fens; and being guarded by four Companies, these were thought sufficient to oppose any Sally of the Enemy on that side.

One of our Soldiers being some days before missing, we understood that he had sought for shelter with his Majesty for a Crime he had committed, which at his Majesty's Request was remitted him, yet not without being discharg'd from our Service. The Disgrace who made this Request, told the General, that the Grapes sent to the Emperor had been very well accepted.

A Boy Deserter brings certain Advice.

The 13th of March a Boy, who had deserted the Portugueses, came to the General, and told him in private, that having been let down from the Bastion Clergys with a Rope, by some Lascaryns who kept Guard there, they intended the next Night with the rising of the Moon, to come all over to us, or else to deliver up the Bastion. The Boy according to his own Desire being soundly whipp'd, was sent back into the City, to take away all suspicion of a private Correspondence with us.

To second his Endeavours a Company of the Guards was posted in a convenient Place; but the Belieged fir'd so briskly from the Bastions of St. Stephen and St. Philip that Night, that there was no Opportunity of putting it in execution at that time. A Toupas Deserter reported the next Day, that the Bastion of St. Stephen was guarded only by 16 Men, having questionless disposed the rest in other Places, as being sensible that the gaining of that Bastion would stand us in no great stead. Six Lascaryn Deserters confirmed the same soon after, and two among them assured the General, that the Governor of Columbo had sent a Letter to the Emperor Raja Singa.

Dutch Soldiers go over to the Enemy.

The 14th Edmund Ruysch, whose Quarters were at Milagre, sent word, that Henry William Boogare a Corporal, and Peter van Bruysingen a common Soldier, were gone over to the Enemy. The same day ten Lascaryns well arm'd came over to us, and the same Evening with the rising of the Moon, two Cannon for Battery were planted upon the Battery against St. John's Bastion. His Majesty having desir'd, that some Person of Note might be sent to him, to confer with him in private, our Factor Tybrand Gotskens, a Native of the Hague, a Person equally dextrous with his Pen as the Sword, was sent with all Expedition thither. About the same time some Lascaryns with their Wives and Children coming out of the City, were turn'd back again; a Letter being at the same time deliver'd to a certain Boy for Simon Lopes, lately gone over to the Enemy, intimating, that, if he would endeavour to make the Negroes in the City rise, he should not only deserve his Pardon, but also a good Reward.

At Midnight we made a false Attack, which put the whole City into such an Alarm, that there was nothing to be heard but ringing of Bells, and the noise of Drums, but in half an Hour all was quiet again. The next Day his Majesty sent three Deputies, to know the reason of such fierce firing; which being told them, they inform'd the General that Tybrand Gotskens had not as yet had Audience of the Emperor, but would questionless be admitted the next Day. A Letter was also sent to the General from the Emperor Raja Singa, wherein were enclosed 20 others, one from Antonio de Souza Coutinho Governour of Columbo, the other from the chief Citizens of that City, both dated the 10th of March, in which they implore his Majesty's Assistance.

RAJA SINGA RAJOU.

THE present Opportunity has invited our Imperial Majesty, to dispatch these few Lines to your Excellency: Two Days ago, being Wednesday the 15th of March, I broke up from Guirambula, and marching along the other side of the River by the way of Walemitty, have fix'd my Tents in this Place, from whence I have dispatch'd immediately some of my Great Courtiers, to notify my Arrival in the Camp at Reygammatte, and to enquire after your Excellency's Health. I commanded them at the same time (having not as yet an Answer to some of your Excellency's Letters directed to me) to desire you to send a Person of Note, unto whom I might by word of mouth give an Answer to the said Letters. It being Night when I arriv'd in the Camp at Reygammatte, I could not order the Disposition of my Forces till next Morning, when the two enclosed Letters were delivered to me, one from the Governor, the other from the Citizens of Columbo, the Contents where-

Most Potent Emperor Raja Singa, &c.

I Immediately after our Enemies did engage into this unjust War, which continues to this Day, I let your Majesty know the Reasons which induced me to sollicite some Supplies from your Majesty; not questioning, but that you would not leave me in such an Extremity, it being always the Ambition of great Monarchs, to take the less powerful under their Protection; tho thro God's Mercy, we have hitherto not only defended this City, but also at several times given the Enemy sufficient Proofs of our Bravery, in destroying and dispersing his Forces, of which we have sent an account to your Majesty. But perhaps these Letters never came to your Majesty's Hands, being intercepted by the Enemy; which seems the less surprizing to me, since they have treated the Natives of this Island (without any just Cause) that went out of this City like Slaves, forcing many of them to retire back without the least Mercy. The City of Columbo is an ancient Inheritance of the Portugueses, bestowed upon 'em by the Kings and Emperors, your Predecessors, who always were ready to honour them with their Protection; neither do we want Opportunity to make your Majesty (if you please) sensible of the manifold Services done by the Portugueses in this Isle, in case we did not believe the same to be still in the Memory of your Majesty, and many of your Great Ones. We don't know to have given the least reason of Displeasure to your Majesty, which makes us imagine, that you will be pleased not to leave us in this Extremity, in regard it seems much more reasonable, to assist the Portugueses your ancient Friends, than the Hollanders your new Guests. Time has already discovered the Intentions of the Dutch, and Experience will soon convince you, that all their Aim is founded upon Lucre and Interest, which they dissemble for the present; but so soon as they are Masters of this Place, your Majesty will too late be convinc'd of the Truth

Most High and most Potent Emperor and Lord, Raja Singa, &c.

I Immediately after the Hollanders had laid Siege to this Place, our Magistrates and Governors did give notice thereof to your Majesty, as likewise of the ensuing General Assault made by the Enemy both by Sea and Land; which being done in the Day-time, we let them advance into the City, but afterwards made them glad to ask for Quarter, which was granted them.
According to the Confession of the Dutch themselves, they were 240 strong when they passed the Fens, the greatest part whereof with their Boats fell into our Hands, besides a Ship of 30 Guns taken by us, and another much damaged, which they had enough to do to carry off, not to mention those that were slain in the Ships, and in the Assault. Being afterwards advanc'd to the Ditch, they fix'd their Miners, and were busy in bringing over their Gallery; but we forc'd them to retire with considerable Loss, and took the Gallery with the Loss of one Man only. There remains nothing now but for your Majesty to vouchsafe us your Favour, which we heartily wish for and desire. From what has been said, we hope your Majesty is sufficiently convinc'd of our good Will and Zeal, in defending a Place, bestow'd upon us by your Imperial Majesty's Ancestors, and that, if supported by your Favour, we shall never cease to persist in the same Resolution, in hopes that your Majesty will rather assist the Portu-gueses your ancient Friends, than the Hollanders. God protect your Majesty, and your Dominions.

zens Let-

The 20th of March a Negro Pioneer came over to us, who having worked in the Ditch, discover'd the Place to us, and that four Portugueses being taken as they were coming to our Camp, had been hanged. That our new Battery had killed two Canaryns and a Gunner, and wounded several others upon the Bastion of St. Stephen. Concerning their Provisions, they confirmed what had been told us before. The General went with the said Negro in Person to the Ditch, to see the Place where the Negro had been at work, and perceiving three Portugueses close together in the Ditch, he got upon the Wall, and discharged his Fusée twice at them; but soon got down again, without which he had been in great Danger, three Bullets passing immediately after that way.

The General in danger of being killed.

C H A P. XXXIII.

Ysbrand Gotskens returns from the Emperor's Court, gives an account of his Transactions. Letters sent to Columbo. A Battery raised. A circumstantial account from Goa, and its Condition.

A Boy taken at a Spy.

ABOUT noon a Boy was taken in our Works, where Paul Meno then kept guard, inquiring after our Strength; and being ask'd why, he answer'd that the Governor of Columbo had sent him to enquire after it: In consideration of his Youth and Simplicity, he came off with a good whipping, and so was sent back into the City. Major van der Laan sent word, that the Enemy having made a Hole thro the Wall, played from thence directly upon his Works, and had kill'd a Negro; and the same Night they play'd with a Cannon upon the same Works, but without hurting any Body.

Ysbrand Gotskens gives an account of his Negotiations.

The 23d of March towards Evening, the Factor Ysbrand Gotskens having taken his Leave the same day of the Emperor, return'd to our Camp, where he gave the following account in Writing of his Negotiation: "That in answer to five several Letters written by General Hulst to his Majesty, he had commanded him to tell the General, that having received a Letter dated the 16th at Columbo, he would let him know the Contents thereof. That his Majesty was well satisfied with the Proceedings against such as were fled out of the City; which tho it might seem somewhat cruel, yet was he contented to have the Blame thereof himself, as tending to his Service, and the speedy reducing of the City. That because his Majesty was sensible that whatever Presents he could make to the General of rich Apparel, and such like Ornaments, he was sufficiently provided with before, he had thought fit to bestow upon him the Title and Dignity of his Director-General, and that for the future he should be acknowledged as such throughout his Dominions. That he further desired the General not to take it amiss, that after the Disjaves had notified his Arrival in the Camp of Reygammawatte, a Guide had been denied to the Captain of the Guard, it being contrary to the Custom of his Country for any one to be introduced at Court, without notice being given of his Arrival to the Emperor.

"What the General had alledged concerning the Mousson, and the Soldiers being fatigued by so tedious a Siege, his Majesty was very sensible thereof, and that when the General should come into his Presence (which he hoped would be within three or four days) they would confer upon that Point, and settle the matter to his Satisfaction: But his Majesty being inform'd that his Excellency frequently expos'd his Person, and regarding him with the same tenderness as his own Eyes, had desir'd his Excellency for the future to take more care of his Person, commanding all his Officers of what Quality soever, to be careful of him to the last degree.

"What his Excellency had alledged, concerning his Majesty's being constantly employed in Weighty Affairs, and that therefore he was unwilling to disturb him with frequent Letters, his Majesty replied, that the Subject of his Excellency's Letters being such, as most nearly concerned his Service, nothing could be more acceptable to him, than to bestow his time in perusing the Letters of the most truly Servant

"that ever he had in his Life, desiring therefore, that his Excellency might supersede these Excuses. That what his Excellency had alledged in his behalf, concerning the mistake in commanding his Forces at Reigamcorle, as it was intended for his Majesty's Service, so it was very acceptable to him, and needed no farther Excuse; as was likewise the Punishment inflicted upon the Author of the Letter writ from Paj-dun-Corle, to deter others from the like Undertakings. Concerning the Treaty made with Mr. Westerwold, his Majesty declar'd, he would keep the same inviolably, notwithstanding that several Generals of the Indies, and Dutch Governours of the Ile in Ceylon, had done many things which had given occasion to no small Disturbances: but that as he call'd God to witness of his Innocence, so he was extremely glad to have met with a Person of Honour in his Excellency's Person, who having done already considerable Services to his Crown, he intended to enter with him into a strict Confederacy, which should stand firm as long as the Sun and Moon should furnish the World with Light.

"It was therefore that his Majesty was very desirous to know his Excellency's Intentions, whether, after the taking of Columbo, they should attack the Kingdom of Tajnapatnam or the Ile of Manaoar, and whether it were not convenient to send some of his Forces under certain Disjaves thither immediately: That he had received two Letters from the before-mentioned Places, which should be communicated to his Excellency. His Majesty also declared, that either next Sunday or Thursday (which of these two his Excellency should pitch upon) he would expect him at Court, and that he would send some of his Courtiers to conduct him thither.

At the same time certain Deputies from his Majesty brought along with them two Letters pen'd by Mr. Hulst our General, in answer to those sent from Columbo to the Emperor, and dispatch'd to his Majesty; which being well approv'd of by him, and signed by his Excellency in his Majesty's Name, were carried the next day into the City.

Soon after news was brought from Montual, that 400 Portugueses, commanded by four Officers, had been seen near the Sea-shore on the other side of the River, but hitherto had not made the least attempt of passing the same. Abundance of the Inhabitants of the Inland Countries, who perhaps had never had a sight of a Man of War, or any well disciplin'd Forces, flock'd thither (with his Majesty's Permission) to see them. About the same time we received a Reinforcement of 50 men from Puntegale, being all they could spare.

The before-mentioned Letters sent in his Majesty's Name, and carried by some of his Aratches and Lascaryns into Columbo, were at first received with a general Salute of the Cannon and Small Arms; but being open'd, the Inhabitants sufficiently testify'd their Repentment, telling the Messengers, that in case their Condition was not so desperate, they would play them another Game before they return'd; of which usage the Messengers desired the General to make his Complaint to the Emperor.

The same day arose a violent Tempest, with Rain, Thunder and Lightning, which kill'd one of our Sentinels, and struck three Muskets, in the Church of Quia de Lobo, all to pieces. The Emperor was so complaisant, as to enquire the next day by one of his Messengers, whether we had suffer'd any damage in our Tents or Works, and was answer'd, that God had preserv'd us from all the Danger. The same day, being the 25th of March, two Europeans came over to us; one of them, a Native of Marseilles, was over-taken by the way, and received 9 Wounds, so that he narrowly escap'd to our Works, but died the next Morning.

The 26th a Serjeant, a Mislice, came over to us, and reported, that two more of the same Company watched only an Opportunity to desert: That they had already distributed to each Soldier his Quota of Provisions, viz. a Parra of Rice per diem, for the Month of April: That they were much afflicted with the Dropsy and the Beribery, a Swelling in the Knees, which takes away the use of their Legs.

Soon after Commodore Roothaus sent in three Fishermen taken by our Boats within Muskets-shot of the Water-Fort. The Seamen had 50 Crowns given them (the usual Reward for every Tony or Fishboat) and 25 more as an Encouragement, these Fishermen being the chief Persons who supply'd the City with Provisions. Orders were also sent to the Commodore, not to expose his Seamen without an absolute necessity.

Some of our best Workmen were also consulted about the erecting another Battery

tery against the Bastion of St. John, in order to destroy their Pallisado Work in the Ditch, and to facilitate the bringing over of the Gallery. The General told the Emperor's Disfave, that he stood in need of 4 or 500 Pioneers and Workmen; but he declined the matter, telling him, that when he came to the Emperor, he would doubtless not deny his Request.

About the same time a Portuguese Merchant came in a Boat cross the Bay into our Camp, in company of a Negro Trumpeter: They reported, that they were reduced to great extremity in the Place; that no less than 130 had been buried yesterday; and that if most of the Portuguese had not their Legs swell'd by the Dropsy, they had deferted long before this.

The 29th of March the Enemy were preparing to attack the Redoubt of Paul Meno two hours before day; but the Negro Pioneers with the Sentinel retreating in time, and giving the Alarm, they retired, after having exchanged some Musquet-balls without doing any harm. Four Deputys arriving soon after to enquire the occasion of such smart Firing, they were shewn the Works, and told, that we wanted 4 or 500 Colys or Labourers. Three other Fishermen were also brought up by the Seamen, who had the usual Reward given them.

At the same time the Popkensburgh Yacht arriving from Wingurla, brought the following Advice:

That Don Rodrigo de Lobo, Conde de Se-credo, Viceroy of Goa, and his Secretary, with three of his Domesticks, having been poisoned, died within 4 or 5 days after. His Death being concealed for some time, Manuel Mascarenhas Homem, formerly Governour of Ceylon, was (pursuant to the King's Orders) constituted two days after Viceroy in his stead: But the Fidalgos or Gentlemen not being satisfy'd with his Person, they expected daily a Revolt (just as it happen'd against him at Columbo, 1652.) However, not long after the Viceroy's Death, the Merchants of Goa began to load all the Yachts that were there, as also one Galeon and a Carack; whilst the Governour was busy in equipping of Men of War and other Vessels, intended for Ceylon, offering 20 Scrapphyns (or Dutch Guilders) to every Soldier that would lift himself. Our Resident of Wingurla further advis'd, that they had sent from Goa 160 Ships, and among them 16 Men of War, the 8th of February, to the North, to fetch Provisions and some other necessary Commodities; and that the said Fleet had carried four or five days in sight of Wingurla by reason of the contrary Winds. That three Patachos or Yachts were failed for Mofambique; but one being leaky, was forc'd to return to Bombassa: Two more to Macassar, two more to China; and one Carack and a Galeon, viz. the Bon Jesus and Nossa Senhora de Gratia, set sail the 19th of February for Portugal; aboard of which were carried the following Gentlemen, being accused of certain Crimes against the Government, viz. Don Bras de Castro, late Governour General; Don Lewis de Souza; Don Pedro de Castro; Manuel de Souza Cabraer, Master of the Artillery; Diego de Salvaar, Captain Major; Este-vaon de Melo, late Governour of Bassyn; Charles Hudjart, a rich Merchant; Dr. Caldero; and Jeronimo Lobo de Falheita. In the Bassyn (under the Jurisdiction of Goa) remained Prisoners, on account of being concern'd in the declaring Don Bras de Castro Viceroy, Don Rodrigo Monfanto, a Captain in the Bassyn; the Veador de Fazendas, or Sur-Intendant of the Merchants; and Leon Corre.

He advis'd, that the before-mention'd Carack and Galeon had aboard a very large Cargo of Stuffs and Callico's, of Cinnamon, Indigo, Pepper, Bezoar-stones, Cloves, &c. And that several of the richest Merchants of Goa having embark'd all their Effects aboard the said two Vessels, were gone privately along with them to Portugal.

Two days before the Yachts the Zie-rick-see and Naerden arrived before Goa, 4 Patamars *, with a Portuguese, came to that Place to bring advice of the desperate Condition of Columbo, and that they stood in great need of the so long expected Succours. But the Government of Goa finding a great averfion in the Portuguese Soldiers, as well as the Negro Seamen, to go to Ceylon, especially in this dangerous Season; they pretended to have receiv'd Letters from Don Antonio de Souza Coutinho, Governour of Columbo, with advice, that the Dutch had bin forc'd, with the assistance of Raja Singa, to raise the Siege; and to make this News pass for current, the new Viceroy Manuel Mascarenhas Homem got the Governour of Columbo his Hand counterfeited, and order'd for three days successively Ringing of Bells, Illuminations, Bonfires, and other Demonstrations of Joy to be made for its Relief.

By the same Letters from Winguria Advice was brought, that our Ships design'd for Perfia and Suratte, were sail'd from thence; and that according to the Intelligence received from Disfely (a Mabometan City not far from Goa) the so long expected Squadron, consisting of between 20 and 30 Ships, was to sail within three days with Men and Provisions for Ceylon; tho' this proved afterwards only a Rhodomontade.

He further added, that after the departure of the before-mentioned Vessels bound to Perfia and Suratte, frequently Yachts had been sent to the River of Goa, to get intelligence of the motion of the said Squadron. That as far as they could learn, they stay'd only for the return of the before-mentioned Fleet sent out to fetch Provisions from the North; when they intended to force all the Seamen, before they could set foot ashore, aboard the Men of War, in order to carry them, together with 7 or 800 European Soldiers, and good store of Provisions, to the Isle of Ceylon, for the Relief of Columbo. According to the Governour of Winguria's Opinion, the said Succours could not be ready before April; and that, if by that time they had no certain news at Goa of the Surrender of Columbo, they would besides the before-mentioned Squadron gather all their Naval and Land-Forces, and endeavour to penetrate, with the strong North Wind, which commonly blows in that Season, into the Harbour of Columbo, for its relief.

He further added, that there lay two Galeons and a Carack at anchor in the River of Goa, one whereof, which lay near Marmagon, would scarce be fit to go out this Season. Lastly, that the Yacht the Roman lay ready to sail upon the first News he should receive of the going out of the said Squadron for the relief of Columbo, to give us timely notice of their Coming.

Letters betwixt the Emperor and General. Several Deferters come over to us. The General invited to the Emperor's Camp.

THE 30th of March a good number of Portuguese palling the Fens in two Boats, call'd Manchous, attack'd our Forces in their Works near the Gate of Mapane, but after some firing on both sides, were forced to retire in confusion. Soon after a certain Captain of a Village was taken by our People, who was sent out to fetch in some Falcines, intended to be made use of in strengthening the Cortyn betwixt the Bastions of St. John and St. Stephen. Two Tonys or Fisher-boats were likewise brought in with 5 Fishermen, and the Seamen rewarded according to Custom.

At the same time the General writ a Letter to the Emperor, wherein he imparted to his Majesty the News he had received concerning the intended Relief of Columbo. In the Evening two Portuguese Deferters that came from the Bastion of St. Stephen (having sent the Sentinel upon an Errand) gave us a tolerable account of the Condition of the City; and the next day another Portuguese Deferters bore the Marks of their Extremity in his Countenance, which was very meager. The Seamen also brought in 4 Fishermen more, who making up the number of 15 in all, they were sold for Slaves by the Sound of Trumpet, to reimburse us the Money that was given to the Seamen for the taking of them.

The 1st of April the Dislaves of Ouve and the four Corles came at the head of a Troop of 100 Lascaryns, divided into certain Companies, into the Camp; and bringing along with them a Letter from his Majesty to the General, neatly laid together, they were received with all possible Marks of Honour. The Letter ran thus:

YOUR Excellency's Letter, dated the 24th of March, I received the same day, wherein you declare your readiness to serve our Imperial Majesty upon all occasions; which, together with the Proofs we have received thereof ever since your Landing in this Island, could not but be highly acceptable to our Imperial Majesty. Your Excellency declares, that you will reserve what you have further to propose till the time you shall be admitted into our Prefence. When they are arrived, your Excellency may order the Diffaves of the Four Corles, and of the Seven Corles, and of Saffragamme, to take care in the mean while of the Forces, and what else you shall find most requisite for our Service, and to chuse one of them (whom you please) for your Conductor, not questioning, but that (according to your Wisdom and Experience) you will provide for the Security of our Forces, and our dear Hollanders. God conduct your Excellency with his Blessing, that our Imperial Eyes may see your Person, which happy Hour and Day I expect with joyful Eyes; alluring your Excellency, that whatever you shall propose to us will be as acceptable to our Ears as the most harmonious Musick in the World.

At Reygamwatte, April 1. 1656.

Consultations about the General's going to Raja Singa.

Two more Cannon planted on a Battery.

Sixteen Delecters.

It was then consulted what Method was most convenient to be taken, and what Preparations were necessary in order to attend the Emperor with the utmost Splendour; his Diffave having (by his Majesty's Orders) appointed the next following Wednesday for the General's reception. But before his Departure he order'd two twelve Pounders to be planted upon the Battery against St. John's Bastion, where the next day a Seaman was kill'd, and a Souldier shot by the same Ball thro the Hat, without touching his Head, or any other part. The same day 16 Lascaryns well arm'd coming over to us from the Bastion of St. Stephen, were overtaken by some Portuguese Forces, with whom there happen'd a smart Skirmish before they could get clear, two of them being wounded. They were employed in our Works near the Gate of Rajuba.

In the Afternoon the Diffaves of Ouve and the Four Corles came with a numerous Retinue to attend the General, leaving it to his choice whom of the two he would pitch upon to conduct him to his Majesty. After some Discourse the Diffave of Saffragamme was named by his Excellency for that purpose, and order'd to get every thing in readiness for their departure against the next Morning. News was brought at the same time that seven Canaryns were taken by some of the Em-

The 4th of April in the Afternoon, Advice being given that his Majesty was come on Horseback to the Pass of Walcande, the General was preparing to meet him there; but as they were just ready to take Horse, certain Diffaves came Post with a Message from the Emperor, desiring the General not to come till to-morrow, because his Majesty was return'd immediately.

Accordingly the 5th of April the General set out on his Journey, in order to wait on his Majesty, attended by the two Factors Edward Ooms and Ysbrand Gotskens; the Fiscal Lucas van der Dussen, Cornelius Valkenburgh Secretary, James van der Rhee, the Interpreter George Bloom, and Don John de Costa; accompany'd by the Imperial Diffaves of Ouve and Saffragamme, and a Company of Firelocks under Capt. John Hartman; Mr. Adrian van der Meyden, Major van der Laan, the Diffave of the Four Corles, besides several Officers of Note; conducting them as far as to the Pass of Nacolegamme, his Majesty being then encamp'd upon the River of Reygamwatte.

The first Testimony of Respect shew'd to the Director General of his Majesty, was the offer of three fine and well-accounted Horses, for the Courtiers to make use of them at pleasure. These were follow'd by five tame Elephants, with their Guides, who were order'd to keep in the Van. Then came a considerable number of Noblemen and Officers, at the head of their respective Troops, paying their Respects to his Excellency, and asking after his Health. As they approached the Imperial Head Quarters, they were met by some of the chief Men of his Majesty's Court, accompany'd by a vast number of Soldiers, Umbrello-Carriers, Trumpets, Musicians, 11 Elephants, and two fine Horses, with Saddles, Bridles, and other Ornaments beset with Gold and precious Stones, to complement his Excellency in his Majesty's behalf. Thus they marched on thro a Guard of Fusiliers and Bowmen ranged on both sides, for a quarter of an hour together, till they came to a House prepared for the General's Reception, neatly furnish'd, the outward Rooms being hung with Hanging of a white Linen Cloth, and the Bed-Chambers with Gold Stuffs. Here the General entred with his Retinue under a Salvo of Fire-locks, placed on the other side of the River near the Imperial Palace. They had scarce arrived here two hours, but his Majesty's Diffaves came to enquire after the General's Health, being inform'd that his Excellency was seiz'd with an Ague, which had made him resolve to come to him in Person, had he not received nearer Advice, that his dearly beloved Director was on the mending hand, of which he expected the confirmation with the utmost impatience. These Compliments were return'd by the General with the utmost demonstrations of Respect and Duty, telling the Diffaves, that he was highly desirous to appear in the Presence of so famous and potent a Monarch so soon as possible could be, his Presence being absolutely necessary in the Camp.

Next day being the 6th, great store of Provisions of the best kind were brought in Boats from the General and his whole Retinue. In the Afternoon some Courtiers brought word to the General in private, that his Majesty being seiz'd that Morning with a sudden Illness, could (to his great Affliction) not speak with his Excellency that day. His Excellency reply'd, that he was heartily sorry, his Presence was so absolutely necessary in the Camp, that he could not without great hazard stay, since it was uncertain how soon his Majesty might recover; for which reason he desired leave to depart for this time, till a better opportunity, desiring, that four Horses might be laid by the way, which, as soon as his Majesty thought convenient, might carry him with all speed to Court. Whereupon Orders were given to John Hartman to prepare for the March, which was done accordingly the same Night.

Soon after we understood, that his Majesty had been forc'd to have been let blood in the Arm, and that he had shew'd a great deal of Sorrow for the intended departure of the General; telling his Courtiers, that being sensible how necessary his Presence was in the Camp, he would either the next morning, or at furthest in the Evening, admit him into his Presence, in case he found the least abatement of his Illness. In the mean while the General sent the following Letter to his Majesty:

Most Serene Emperor,

THREE days being already pass'd since I came hither by your Majesty's Command and Desire; but not being able hitherto to appear in your Majesty's Presence, I most humbly beg leave to return to the Camp, the whole Burden whereof rests upon my Shoulders; promising to be ready to attend your Majesty whenever you shall think fit to send for me, and living in constant hopes, that in case some Misfortune or other should happen in my Absence, the same will not be alledged against me, and put upon me as a Blemish to blot out the remembrance of my former Service. God protect the Emperor.

April 7. 1656. Your Majesty's most humble Servant,

Gerard Hulst.

This done, the General order'd Jbrand Gotskens and Don John de Costa, with some of his trusty Lascaryns, to take a view of the King's Guards upon the Road, with an intention, that in case he saw no certain Prospect of going to Court to day (as indeed there was but little appearance he should, considering the Emperor's Indisposition) he would privately go Post to the Camp. The 8th of April the following Letter was delivered to the General from the Emperor.

THE Persons sent to enquire after your Excellency's Health, deliver'd to me with a great deal of satisfaction your Excellency's Letter wrote on Friday last at 4 a Clock. I was extremely pleas'd to hear you were in health, and retain'd the same Inclinations for our Service. It was on the other hand no small Affliction to me that you had stay'd so long in my Court, without being able to see you. I assure you, that the same has happen'd far beyond my Wishes or Intention; but it seems to have been so ordain'd by God, that your Excellency should be a Witness of my Illness, and at the same time have an opportunity of receiving the Present sent to you by the Prince (born by God's Providence for the Welfare of my Subjects) and deliver'd into my hands before my Departure from Candy. Your Excellency may prepare your self against to morrow, when I will send word for your Appearance in my Presence; which done, you shall have liberty to return into the Camp, when I will also issue my Orders for the furnishing

The General's Entry.

ABOUT Noon, just as the General was at dinner, we heard a Noise of Drums, Trumpets and other Musick on the other side of the River, and soon after saw some of the chief Courtiers of the Emperor, with three of the choicest Horses of his Stable, adorn'd with most magnificent Saddles, Bridles and other Accoutrements, to advance in very good order towards us; some Persons of the first Quality marching before to invite his Excellency to Court. The General or-der'd immediately his Guards to pass the River with the Presents, with an intimation to follow them in Person with his whole Train, where his Excellency was complimented by the Disfaves of Ouwe and Matule, the Captain of his Majesty's Guard du Corps, and a great number of other Courtiers. The whole Cavalcade was order'd in the following manner: His Excellency's Guards led the Van, 15 Ensigns and Standards being by the first Ranks carried trailing upon the Ground, to shew the Spoils of their Enemies. These were follow'd by his Majesty's Horses and Musicians, and then by five tame Elephants; without the Gate of the Palace were ranged a vast number of Musqueteers, and passing over the Bridge they found the Guard in the outward Court ranged on both sides, through which they marched into the Imperial Palace.

The Doors being shut after them, all the Hollanders there present were conducted through a large Square into a spacious Hall (call'd by them Mandonoe) on the West-side whereof they found his Majesty seated in great Pomp upon a Chair of State, mounted some Steps from the ground. No sooner had they enter'd the Hall, but all the great Courtiers paid their Reverence by falling flat with their Faces upon the ground, and the Dutch upon their Knees, till his Majesty was pleased to order them to rise by a Nod. Then they began to approach the Imperial Throne, adorn'd with most precious Tapestries of Gold (call'd by them Alcavies; ) coming to the middle of the Hall, they fell upon their Knees a second time, according to the Custom of the Eastern Nations, till his Majesty was pleased to arise from his Seat, and commanded the General to come nearer, who made the following Speech to his Majesty.

"Most Potent Monarch! Your most humble Servant approaches your Imperial Throne with a most violent Passion, in confidence of your generous Inclinations, and wonted Clemency, which has encourag'd me to address my self to your Majesty (whose Name is Renown'd throughout the World) with a most sincere wish that God Almighty will be pleased to bless your most Illustrious Imperial Majesty, and the Prince, with a long and happy Life for the Welfare and Protection of your Subjects.

"I am come hither to renew and confirm the most sincere Confederacy establish'd betwixt your most Potent Majesty and the Dutch Nation; and to desire that whatever Differences or Disturbances may have happen'd hitherto betwixt your Imperial Majesty and our Nation, may be buried in eternal Oblivion, in order to establish an eternal Peace and Confederacy, which may be as durable as the Bodies of the Sun and Moon. It can't be deny'd but that several Misunderstandings have happen'd betwixt your Majesty's Officers and those of our

"Company; but these ought now to be remov'd even out of our Memory, at a time when we are so profuse of the Blood of our Countrymen, to force our common Enemies out of this Isle, and ready to give your Majesty every day new Proofs of our Sincerity and hearty Inclinations towards you.

His Majesty appear'd highly satisfied with what his Excellency had said, ordering him at the same time to rise, which he seem'd not to understand, and at the same time offer'd certain Presents, being, as he said, of little Value in themselves, but nevertheless much regarded by the most Potent Emperors and Monarchs, to wit, some Standards taken from those very Enemies who had for many years together so cruelly and barbarously oppress'd his Majesty's Subjects, especially in the Low-Lands. His Majesty then, speaking of the Presents sent to his Excellency by the Prince his Son, his Excellency acknowledg'd the same with extraordinary Reverence, pointing at the same time at a Jewel he wore upon his Breast, presented him before by his Majesty; and so approaching the Throne, he kneel'd upon a Cushion laid upon the Step of the Throne, and touching his Majesty's Hand, told him, that he thought it the greatest Honour he ever was capable of receiving, to be admitted to kiss his Majesty's Hands.

The Emperor took a Gargantinho, or Collar of Gold, which he threw about his Excellency's Neck, and drawing his own Ring from the first Finger of his Left-hand, he desir'd he should extend his Finger, and wear it in remembrance of his Majesty, who put it upon his Finger. His Excellency was so surpriz'd at this extraordinary favour, that he had scarce power to put out his middle Finger of his left-hand, telling his Majesty, that this Finger having had the misfortune to be disfigur'd by his Enemies, was now abundantly recompens'd for his pains by the Honour his Majesty had been pleased to bestow upon him. Then retiring somewhat backwards, and standing upon a Tapestry, he declar'd to his Majesty, That he was sent into this Isle with full Power by the General and Council of the Indies to propose to his Majesty, whether he would be pleas'd to continue the antient Alliance (made with Mr. Westerwold) or have the same renew'd, and some other Articles added, assuring his Majesty, that whatever should be agreed upon should be kept inviolably on their side. his Majesty reply'd, that he was highly satisfied with his Proposal.

Then the General giving a short account of their Success against the Enemy, his Majesty said, that he had heard of the same to his signal Satisfaction, and that he had a Present from the Prince his Son for his Excellency: Whereupon approaching the Throne a second time, his Majesty presented him with a Garter of Gold, which he said had been worn by the Prince himself.

Is presented with a Garter.

This done, our Presents being order'd to be brought in, Capt. Hartsman enter'd with 15 of his stoutest Soldiers, each of them trailing one of the Enemies Colours upon the ground; which being thrown carelessly down in the Hall of Audience, a white Buckler formerly belonging to the Portuguese Governor Antonio Mendes d'Arenha, was laid upon them, as also an Indian Scymeter, the Hilt whereof was of Achet and Gold curiously wrought, which his Excellency declar'd to be intended for the Prince, wherewith to defend his Subjects (when come to riper years) against all the Enemies of the Crown, not excepting the Hollanders themselves, if they deserv'd it. Wherewith his Majesty seem'd so highly satisfied, that he put the Scymeter next to his Throne.

The Presents sent by the Company to his Majesty were as follows.

Two very fine Persian Horses, one Turky Gun, two Persian Bows, with their Arrows and Quivers richly embroidered; one Japoneze Gown, very rich; two Greyhounds, two Persian Sheep, two Rock-goats of Visiapour, one piece of Sandelwood.

Those for the young Prince were:

One very fine Persian Horse, two Futes with very curious Barrels, one Silver Basin, wherein were laid two pieces of Persian Stuffs wrought with Gold, two Silver Boxes of China, one Hog Stone call'd Pedra de Porco, one piece of Sandelwood, &c.

Whilst the Presents were deliver'd, his Excellency begg'd his Majesty's Pardon for having detain'd him so long; and as the time of his stay could be but short, he told him that he had three things more to propose to his Majesty (whereof the want of the Pioneers was one) desiring that he would be pleased to hear the same from the mouth of Tsbrand Gotskens in private, he being the only Person whom he had entrusted with the Secret. The Emperor then commanded all his Courtiers to withdraw, desiring that our Officers might be order'd to do the same; which being done accordingly, his Excellency again approach'd the Throne, and having by his Interpreters George Bloem and Cottemaley, discours'd with his Majesty a quarter of an hour, he desir'd leave to depart to the Camp, which being granted, he was reconducted with the same Pomp to his Lodgings.

The Emperor leave the Emperor.

The same Evening the General sent to the Emperor by George Bloem two noted Partisans, who had done a great deal of mischief in the Country under Gaspard Figeiro, to dispose of them at pleasure. Mr. Bloem was receiv'd by the Emperor in a private Room, and presented with a Golden Chain and Ring.

The 9th of April early in the Morning the General took Horse, and came pretty early with his whole Retinue to Naccagamme, from whence he was conducted by Mr. Adrian van der Meyden and Mr. John van der Laan with two Companies to the Camp. At his arrival there he found the Gallery fix'd in the Ditch (without any considerable loss) and every thing else in a good Condition.

The General view to the Camp.

The 10th in the Afternoon the General took a view of all the Works, and among the rest commanded Capt. Henry Gerard to set up a Ladder, and take a view of the Condition of the Enemy on the other side of the Ditch; he found the Enemy had made an Entrenchment extending towards the Sea-shore, with a Ditch before it, 8 foot deep, upon which having planted two pieces of Cannon, they were likely to prevent our fixing the Miners on that side, our Trenches being carried on directly against that place; whereupon it was agreed to make a Breach in the Wall on this side of the Ditch, and to plant a Cannon there in order to ruin the said Entrenchment.

About Sun-set his Excellency returning to the same place to encourage the Workmen both by his Words and Example, the Portuguese began to use their utmost endeavours to set fire to the Gallery, throwing all sorts of combustible Matter upon it, which the General perceiving, he advanc'd with the rest to assist in extinguishing the Fire; but whilst he was busy in the midst of the Gallery in performing his Duty with his Breast open, he was heard on a sudden to cry out, Good God help me! O help me! which Capt. Joachim Block who stood hard by hearing, and finding him all over bloody, he carried him with the assistance of Major Van der Laan from thence to a Bed, where without speaking one word more he expir'd.

pir'd. His Wound being searched, they found it to be done by a Musquet-Bullet, which passed in under the right Shoulder, quite through under the right Arm.

This was the unfortunate End of this most excellent Person, in the Vigor of his Age, descended of a good Family, and of great Experience both in Civil and Military Affairs; being for the rest of a very affable Conversation, eloquent and well-vers'd in divers Languages: He was besides this of a very good Aspect, tall, and well-made, brisk and indefatigable in what he undertook; and to be short, Nature and Industry had fram'd so exact an Harmony betwixt his Soul and Body, that few Men can pretend to the same degree of Perfection.

The General's Death notified to the Emperor.

His Corps carried to Gale.

Take a view of the place where he was wounded.

THE same night George Bloem Interpreter being dispatch'd with a Letter to the Emperor, to carry the doleful News of the General's Death, his Majesty sent the 11th of April the Dissaves of the five and seven Corles to take a view of his Corps. It being also agreed in a Council of War, that the same should be conducted by the Factor Tsbrand Gotskens and Capt. John Hartman, under a Guard of 20 Fire-locks, to Punegule (5 German Leagues thence) the same was done accordingly with a great deal of Splendor. The same night his Majesty sent the Dissaves of Masule and Adigar, attended by divers other Courtiers, to condole the Death of his dearly beloved Director-General. They were very inquisitive, whether he was slain by some of his own People, or by the Enemy, or by some unexpected Accident: Being shewn the place where he receiv'd his Wound, they crawl'd thither trembling for fear upon the ground, from whence they took a handful of Earth, and desir'd that no body should set a foot in that place.

His Corps was deposited in a Vault under ground at Gale till 1657. when by order from Mr. Van der Meyden it was inter'd with great Solemnity in the Church there near the Pulpit; his Arms, Buckler, Sword and Spurs being hung against the Wall. In the year 1658. the said Corps being transported from thence to Columbo, was put into a stately Monument there, with an Inscription upon it, containing in substance, That he had purchased the Conquest of Columbo by his Death, for the honour of his Native Country.

After the Decease of the General, the Burden of the supreme Command of the Siege was laid by unanimous Consent upon the Shoulders of Mr. Adrian van der Meyden Governor of Gale, who had the good fortune to see the City reduc'd in the next following Month of May.

The 13th of April a Letter was brought to the Camp from Leonard Johnson, dated the 2d at Wingula, intimating that 22 Frigates under the Command of Francisco de Seix Cabreira, with all sorts of Provisions, and 800 Portuguese Landmen aboard, were sail'd from Goa. Whereupon the Commodore Rothaus and Peter de Bister being sent for, to consult what was best to be done, it was resolv'd (in order to prevent their bringing into the City the intended Succours) to attempt a vigorous Assault upon the Battalion of St. Stephen, for which purpose four brave Officers were chosen, who with 80 Volunteers (who had offer'd themselves for a Reward of 50 Crowns a piece) were to make the Attack.

The same Evening the Flussing Yacht coming to an Anchor in the Road, soon after Adrian van der Meer her Captain came ashore, and told the General, that about three days before meeting with the Portuguese Squadron near Conlang and the Cape Comorin, he had attack'd one of their Frigates so successfully, that he saw her sink before his Eyes, 16 Portuguese only with Capt. Simon Souza being sav'd of all that were aboard her. That soon after he had lost sight of them all, supposing they were return'd to the Cape Comorin, it being his opinion that as the Wind stood, they must before this have been near Columbo. In the night time a certain Portuguese Captain, one of the Fidalgos, or Gentlemen, who had been concern'd in declaring Don Bras de Castro Viceroy of Goa, came over to us, having been detain'd Prisoner in the Bastion of S. Stephen, and made his escape with four of his Servants through Don Francisco de Rolyn's House by means of a Boat. He entertain'd the new General for a considerable time. It was in the mean time resolv'd to delay the Assault upon the Bastion of S. Stephen's for two or three days. Our Interpreter George Bloem return'd also with the following Letter of Condolence from his Majesty.

Raja Singa Rajou, most potent Emperor of Ceylon, wishes Health to Mr. Adrian van der Meyden, Governor of the Imperial Fortrels of Gale.

“ strict Orders to keep a strict Guard

In the Camp and Court of Rey-

April 1655.

Raja Singa Rajou,
Most Potent Emperor
of Ceylon.

In the night 2 Portuguese, 3 Topasses, 11 Lafcaryn, 3 Topasses, 2 Portuguese Deferters gave a doleful account of the miserable condition of the City, and of the Sickness and Mortality that reign'd there. The 16th we play'd most furiously against the Gate of Rajou, and the General having sent Advice of the expected Succours in the City to the Emperor, gave Orders to Commodore Roothaus to keep the Flushing, Popkensburgh and Lion Yachts in readiness to pursue the Enemy's Squadron. About the same time a Portuguese Captain came over to us with 18 Lafcaryns and three Topasses; his pretence was, that having receiv'd an Affront from the Governor, he had taken this method to revenge himself. Diedelof van der Beek writ from Mapane, that the poor starv'd Wretches in the Plain betwixt our Works and the City butchered one another, two Women having lately devour'd their new-born Babes. The 19th of April a Letter was deliver'd to the General from the Emperor.

“ YOUR Excellency was deliver'd “ to me after Midnight, by which “ you declaring your readiness to serve “ me, the same was receiv'd with sin“ gular satisfaction, knowing that your “ Excellency ever since your landing in “ this Isle has shewn a more than ordi“ nary Inclination for our Service. Your “ Excellency being now through God's “ Mercy put into this high Station, it is “ expected you should give more signal “ Proofs thereof than before. You also “ mention the expected Portuguese Suc“ cours, and the Success of our faithful “ Hollanders against them. I hope in “ God that this Victory will prove the “ forerunner of others. What I writ “ in my last concerning your care in “ the Camp, was not intended as if I “ question'd your Conduct, but because “ it belong'd to me to mention it. You “ further advise, that the Enemy's Squa“ dron has orders to sail directly for “ Columbo, but considering the ill Treat“ ment Marnet Mascarenhas Homem the “ present Viceroy of Goa met with at “ Columbo (whilst Governor there) it “ seems to me most probable, that he

“ YOUR Letter dated in the Evening “ at seven a Clock on Monday the “ 10th of April, did arrive in the Impe“ deliver'd to our Imperial Majesty on “ Tuesday about Noon. The Death of “ our Director-General has caused an ex“ cessive Affliction in our Imperial Heart.

“ Whilst our beloved Director was at “ our Court, I was unwilling (accord“ ing to the singular Love I bore to his “ Person) to let him know my Illness;
“ but being now on the mending hand,
“ I am forced to hear of his Death,
“ which now we must commit to Provi“ dence, and submit to his Will. Our “ Imperial Majesty has likewise under“ stood by your Excellency's Letter that “ you are invested with the same Power
“ as our beloved Director-General was.
“ It is a general receiv'd Custom in the “ Courts of all the great Monarchs, that “ in case a Person of note, and in good “ esteem with them dies, his Successor “ appears before the said Monarch, and “ receives his Confirmation and Blessing “ at his hands. As you have always “ been serviceable to us, it is our Plea“ sure that you come to Court (in the “ same manner as the Director-General “ did) in order to receive the Honours
“ due to your Merits; being sensible that “ you have render'd us considerable Ser-“ Pleasure, that when you resolve to “ come, you give notice thereof before“ hand what day you have pitch'd upon,

“ in order to receive you with the same “ Respect as the Director-General your “ Predecessor. I doubt not in the mean “ while but you will be very careful in “ your high Station. At the closing of “ this Letter Advice is brought that

The other News has been very acceptable to me, God I hope will crown our Endeavours with Success. Your mentioning the late deceased Director-General's Name has renew'd my Grief; and as I lov'd him entirely, so I must recommend to you the Jewels which were presented to him (whilst living) from our Imperial Majesty, that the same may be sent into Holland to his next Kindred; it being our Will and Pleasure to give upon this occasion a convincing Proof to our Hollanders of the most sincere Affection we bear them. For, tho the unfortunate Death of the said Director has rob'd him of the opportunity to execute those Designs he had projected for our Services, yet his Counsels, Care and Watchfulness will remain for ever in our Memories. I am very solicitous to know what method you intend to take in reducing the City, whether by Force or Famine: If you intend to take it by Assault, let me know of it two or three days before-hand secretly. My Illness has hitherto prevented me from prosecuting my Resolution of coming into the Camp, to take a view of all the Works of the Hollanders; however I am resolv'd to come nearer to the Camp, which as soon as it is done I will give you notice thereof, and desire your Presence there, in order to concert Measures with you before you return to the Camp. THE 21st of April, 7 Lascaryn Deserters reported, that the Citizens and Soldiers beginning to murmur for want of Rice, it was resolv'd to give to each Citizen and Soldier  $\frac{1}{2}$ , and to each Topas and Lascaryn  $\frac{1}{2}$  Medide per diem, besides their former Allowance. Soon after a Portuguese Deserter related, that they had barricadoed up most of the Streets, and planted Cannon in them. About the same time the new General received the following Letter from the Emperor.

RAJA SINGA RAJOU, &c.

" OUT of your Letter dated the " 19th of April, I have (with a " great deal of Satisfaction) understood
" your good Health, and good Inclinati" ons for my Service, as well as of Ma" jor John van der Laan, and the rest of " the Chief Officers. Before the Arri" val of the late Director-General (of " Blessed Memory) I had taken a Reso" lution within my self, to come and take " a View of your Camp; but being then " prevented by my Illness, I still continue " in the same Resolution, not only to " view the Works there, but also to be " a Spectator of the brave Actions per" form'd there for my Service. My faith" ful Hollanders, who are come hither
" from far distant Countries, have for " several Months last past endured many " Miseries, not without much effusion of " Blood; and as I am stedfastly persua" ded that both I and our Imperial Fa" mily may promise our selves the same " and more for the future, so shall I think " it no Trouble to come so far into the " Camp, to be an Eye-witness (to my " great Satisfaction) of the brave Acti" ons performed there for our Imperial " Majesty's Service. That no notice has " been taken hitherto by this Court of " the Captain-Major, is to be attributed " to his being employed Day and Night

" in the Company's Service. Some foo" lish People are much deceived, if they " judg that there can be the least Sepa" ration of Interest betwixt our Majesty " and the Company, the wiser sort be" ing convinced that our Interest is the " same. The said Major John van der
" Laan has done me considerable Service
" ever since his coming into this Isle;
" and therefore I declare, that since the " late Director-General appear'd at this " Court, I did lay aside all Animosity,
" in consideration of his great Qualities
" and Services; so that now the said
" Major who has spill'd his Blood more " than once, and been wounded with Bul" lets in my Service, shall be made sen" sible of the Love and Affection I bear
" him, whenever he comes into my Pre" sence. What you mention about Maj-
" carembas, is no less than the Truth, " and an undeniable one, to convince the " World, that God will take Revenge
" of such as offend their Sovereigns, " which induces me to believe, that this " War we jointly carry on against our " Enemy, will be blessed by God with " Success. I was very glad to understand
" by your Excellencies Letter, that the " Jewels presented by me to the Direc" tor-General have been sent to Batavia, " in order to be transported from thence " by trusty Persons into Holland. The " said Director-General having done me
" such Signal Services, ever since his " Coming into this Country, I intend to
" soon as the War is brought to a Con" clusion, to send a Letter with the first
" ship to the States General of Holland,
" to give them an ample Testimony " thereof. The Resolution taken in
" the Baldew. " the Council of War is very acceptable to me: But as your Excellency in his High Station has the chief Management of such Matters, as tend to our Majesty's Service, in your Hands, so I am most inclined to follow your Advice. The Method proposed for the reducing of the City has been debated in our Imperial Council; but as the same must be expressed in a different Language (which carries along with it a considerable Alteration) I will pass it by in silence, earnestly requiring you, that whenever the said Resolution is to be put in execution, to send me Advice of it, that I may assist you therein Person. You are of Opinion that it would be more convenient for me not to come into the Camp, till after the taking of the City; but what Business have I in the Camp then, unless it be to see the Conditions performed? whereas the late Director-General had given me his Word, that the City should be delivered into my Hands. In the Letter I sent to your Excellency, I desired that the Captain who had sunk the Portuguese Ship should come along with you to our Court; and you having made no mention of him in your Answer, I am at a stand to guess the Reason thereof. The awkward Answer of the Portuguese in Colombo to your Summons, shews them to be void of Sense; and I, who am well acquainted with their Bravadoes, look upon it as an infallible Sign of their Distress; being convinced by my own Experience in divers Engagements, that when they were most at a pinch, they would brag most. I have for a considerable time considered with myself, whether I should write a Letter to those in the City, but for fear of a haughty Answer, I resolve to let it alone. No more, &c.

The 22d of April, Raja Singa Rajou, Most Potent Emperor of Ceylon.

The following Letter was enclosed, and directed to the Sabandaar of Gale, Don John de Costa.

HAVING been inform'd by several of our Messengers sent from hence with Letters, that since the Arrival of the late Director-General of Blessed Memory, you have given all imaginable Satisfaction in reference to his Person, I intended to have sent you a Present at that time, but that the said Director's Departure (which was so sudden, that my Servants did not overtake him before he came to Krabenhof) prevented it. But when the new General shall appear at Court, you as well as the rest of the Officers shall not be forgot. You have been an Eye-Witness of the Respect paid by me here to the Director-General; and whenever the new General makes his Appearance before us, the same shall (not without great Reason) be increased, our Imperial Majesty having received more Signal Services from his Excellency, whereof I would have you give notice to him at the first Opportunity. If you should happen to discover any Error in such Letters as are sent from this Court, you shall excuse them to the General. You shall also put him in mind, that we stand in need here of an Anvil, and a pair of Smiths Bellows; and as there is frequent Occasion for Writing, don't forget to let us be furnish'd with some white Paper; you may send also some China Ware. Farewell.

At the Court of Reygamwatte, April 23. 1656.

The 24th of the same Month, a To- A Topo pas Defenter, named Lazaro Henrico, who came over to us during the Siege of Calcutture, but afterwards run over again to the Enemy (notwithstanding he was well entertained by the late Director-General) brought a Letter from Manoel Fonsque de Monis, a Merchant of Colombo, directed to Major van der Laan.

Mr. van der Laan.

I Beg of you to believe what I am going to tell you, concerning the present Condition of the City. Be careful not to venture a Storm, they having provided Retrenchments in all Posts, well provided with Cannon, besides four Mines, to be discovered to my Servant. The Rice is sold still at three Seraphyms, and is very scarce. If you intend to hasten the Surrender of this City, send some body from Calcutture hither, to convince them that they are still living there; this being the Reason why they would not hitherto hearken to any Conditions. I send my Servant with this Letter to you, to shew the same to the General, tho it is rumoured abroad here that General Hulst is dead, but I don't believe it.

Your Servant and Slave,

Manoel Fonsique de Moniis.

Whereupon it was resolv'd to secure the said Topas aboard a Ship till further Order.

Soon after Tsbrand Gotskens was dispatched to his Majesty, to represent to him some matters of the greatest Consequence, and to know his Sentiments. It was not long before he return'd in Company of the Diffaves of Saffragam, and the Four Corles, and the Curupele Apobami, and gave an account of his Negotiation to the General van der Meyden; and among other things, that his Majesty was well satisfied with the Resolution taken April 21. but seem'd to be inclin'd to have the Assault delay'd till Sunday the last Day of the Month, when he intended to be an Eye-Witness of it.

The 23d of April, it being resolv'd to give the General Assault the next following Night, especially upon the Bastions of S. Stephen and Clergos, and (in case they succeeded) afterwards upon that of S. Philippo, every thing was preparing for the execution thereof, and every one order'd to his Post. The following Instructions in Writing were given to each commanding Officer in Chief, which they were strictly to obey.

"Those that are order'd to give the Assault upon the Bastions, shall be oblig'd to fix the scaling Ladders themselves, and use their utmost Endeavours to make themselves Masters thereof, and to maintain themselves there: In case the Bastion of S. Stephen be taken, the commanding Officer shall let the Trumpeter sound the Tune William of Nassau as a Signal, that God has blessed us with Victory on that side. So soon as the Assault begins from the Redoubt, betwixt St. Stephen and St. John's Bastion, the Companies of John Hartman, George Gebel, Henry Gerard, and James Baker shall be in a readiness to second them, as Occasion requires.

"During the Assault, the Javanefes,
Vol. III.

"Bandanefes, Lascaryns, Topasses, with some Europeans, shall endeavour to pass the Ditch, in order to force the Enemy from their Works at the Foot of the Bastion of St. John, and shall be commanded by Captain N. Scherf, Arent Johnson, N. de Wit, N. Chample, and James van Diehl. Whilst the Assault continues upon the Bastion of St. Stephen, Major van der Laan shall with his Forces attack the Gate of Rajuba; and in case God blefs us with Success, no Officer of what degree soever shall presume to grant leave or suffer any of his Soldiers to leave their Colours or enter the City, being forewarn'd that the Enemy have planted their Cannon there, charged with small Shot.

Dated Apr. 27. Subscribed by Command from the General,

Adrian van der Meyden,
James van Rhee Secretary.

Immediate notice of this Resolution was given to the Emperor, but there happening no small Differencers and Heats in the Council of War that was held that Evening about the Execution of this Design, the same was thought fit to be defer'd to another time. Scarce was the Council broken up, but a Lascaryn Defter coming from St. John's Bastion, reported, that this Evening they had reinforced the ordinary Guard of the Bastion of St. Stephen with 30 of their choicest Men, called Vallantons or Braves by them, besides 10 other Soldiers, which made us imagine that a Javanese Defter, who had got perhaps some scent of the matter, had discover'd our Design to them.

At the same time News was brought of the Arrival of the Yachts the Red Lion, Avenborn and Pelican, who left Batavia in March. The 28th of April, the Lieutenant Christopher Egger, James Pny, Martin Scholtes, and Enigh Brewer were sent in the Night-time to view the Assault to the Bastion of St. Stephen; they gave an account that they had found them well upon their Guard there, and the Ground being sandy would afford no firm footing. The 29th of April a Letter was brought into the Camp from Abraham van der Marr, sent by the Laan Yacht from the Isles of Tutecoryn, with the joyful News that the Portuguese Squadron being met by the Dutch the 19th, off of Tritchiansdour and Caylpamam, they were forced to retreat betwixt the Isles of Tutecoryn, where they were block'd up by our Ships, and van der Mart gave no small hopes of preventing their coming out again, provided he were reinforced in time with two or three nimble Yachts. Letters were at the same time deliver'd from the Head Factor Reynier Serooskerke, concerning the Preparations of the Portugueses, and that they intended to pass the Mousson on the Coast of Malabar. That the Traffick of the Company at Calicoulang was in a good Condition, and that he intended to buy up a good Quantity of Pepper and other Commodities against the Year 1657. News was also brought from Batavia, that a Succour of 225 Men was sent from thence to Ceylon, who within a few Days were to come by Land hither from Gale. THE Council having taken into Deliberation, the Condition of the Enemies Fleet near Tutecoryn, it was resolv'd to dispatch thither forthwith the Yachts the Mars, Rabbit, the Roman and Lyon, besides two other Vessels under Commodore Roothaus. At the same time an Answer was order'd to be sent to the Dutch Prisoners in Columbo.

YOURS we have receiv'd by the Father, and understood your miserable Condition; these are the chances of War, the best Comfort you can have in this Extremity with your Fellow-Prisoners. At your earnest Request we send you a Bottle of Spanish Wine, ten new-bak'd Loaves, and a piece of Meat and Bacon; the Effects and Money design'd for Captain Simon de Souza, who is kept among the Prisoners at Caleture, are put aboard the Ship: and because one of the Portuguese Soldiers did this Forenoon call from the Bastion of St. John to one of our Sentinels, that the Governor was willing to exchange 10 of his Men, that are our Prisoners, for your ten;

we have sent Word to the Governor Antonio de Souza Coutinho, that as soon as he will discharge you, we will send back 10 Portuguese Prisoners from Caleture.

May 1. 1656. Adrian van der Meyden.

Accordingly the 2d of May in the Forenoon, a Portuguese Captain, named Domingo Coelho, deliver'd a Letter to Ensign Peregrin in our Service, offering, that in case we would exchange eight Portuguese Prisoners at Caleture for the Serjeant and seven Soldiers, they would send them to us, which was denied, and in lieu thereof offer'd seven common Soldiers and one Officer in exchange for them. About the same time his Majesty sent back a Letter, which he seem'd highly displeas'd at, with another as follows.

YOUR Letter writ to some of my Courtiers last Monday, was deliver'd to them before Sunset; what you relate of Major van der Laan's going to Mapane, to observe what pass'd there, and that finding those that were

"come out of Columbo, to be supplied underhand with Provisions, he commanded to fire among them, and to secure the Modeliar Jazandere, who had been accessory to the matter; has been very acceptable to me, as tending to my Service. The Letter deliver'd to me by Curupule Meynde, written upon half a Sheet, I did not think fit to read, much less to answer, being fill'd with nothing but insipid Stuff: If perhaps a sudden Mutiny or Accident, or any other Misfortune had happen'd in the Camp, I could have excus'd such a Letter, in respect of the Love and Inclination I bear to the Hollanders, my most trusty Servants; but every thing being in a very good Condition, I can't sufficiently admire what could induce George to write such a Letter. Truly the General (who has the supreme Command there) ought not to have been so careless in this matter, such a Neglect being not very suitable to the Conduct that may be expected from a Person entertain'd in the Service of a Great Monarch; wherefore I send you this Letter, together with the Ola (Letter) in order to have it read in the Presence of the General, and to let him know word by word the true Contents thereof.

Thursday, May 2. 1656.

Considering the nicety of the Cingaleses and Malabars in this Point, it must be confessed, that more caution ought to have been us'd in this respect.

Towards Evening the Portugueses sent our eight Prisoners out of the City, half dead for want of Food, three of them being so weak, that they could neither go nor stand; they unanimously depose, that there had been a great Disorder among the Officers, which had prevented their marching to the Bastion of Clergor, after they had enter'd the City, as they ought to have done, the same being guarded only by 15 Men. But whilst they staid in expectation for Orders from the Sea-Captain Lippens (of whom they spoke very indifferently) they were attack'd both in Front and Rear by a great Number of Portugueses, and charg'd so furiously, that scarce 26 of them escap'd, without being either kill'd or wounded, after they had spent all their Powder and Ball. They added, that what had been related of their having fell to plundering was not true, that they were secur'd in a Warehouse belonging to Lewis Tavera, where they had the same daily Allowance of Rice with the King's Soldiers, and that they had fed as well as the rest of the Inhabitants upon the Flesh of Elephants, Bufflers Hides, nay upon Dogs, Cats and Rats. That most of the 74 Prisoners died for Want of good Food, and according to all Appearance these 8 would not live long. They further said, that as they were going out of the City, they saw a Body of 400 or 500 Men, some Europeans, some Negroes, near St. John's Gate.

Vol. III.

The 4th of May the Emperor Raja Singa sent the following Letter.

"About three Years ago Captain Joris Hervendonk, with some other Officers and Soldiers entering into our Service; and their time being expir'd since, for which they had agreed with the Company, I resolv'd with my self (since I had no great Occasion for them here) to send them to the Camp. An Account of what Services the said Captain had done me, may be seen in a Letter written by him (according to my Command) to the late Director-General, immediately after his Landing near Columbo. He had neither before nor since the same Sense he had when he writ that Letter, which then induc'd me to a Resolution to bestow certain Favours upon him before his Departure. But his insolent Behaviour having drawn upon him several Chastisements, without any hopes of Amendment, I thought fit to remove him from his Station, and to put Francis Has (who happen'd then to come as a Messenger with Letters to our Court) in his Place. This Man having lived for some time among the Portugueses our Enemies, seem'd to have laid aside all the Modesty of the Portugueses, and addict'd himself to all sorts of Villanies, which made me discharge him from my Service, and to restore the before-mention'd Joris Hervendonk to his former Place. I would not have my Hollanders entertain such an Opinion of me, that I would let any one who has serv'd so long in our Imperial Court, be dismiss'd without a Reward; for whoever gains our Imperial Favour, shall never depart unrewarded: But such as are not willing, or can't apply themselves to that Study, may be sure that they will be sent away like this Person. The reason why the said Francis Has stayed in Candy, is not unknown to your Excellency; "but

Baldew. "but as he is a Hollander, it is but just he should be dismissed at his due time. I won't say all concerning him, what I could; my Disfavours will give your Excellency a more ample account of him, or when your Excellency appears at this Court, you will be further satisfied in this matter. No more; God protect your Excellency.

At Reygamwatte,
May 4. 1656.

Raja Singa Rajou, Most Potent Emperor of Ceylon.

It is beyond all question, that the Differences arisen betwixt this Joris Hervendont and Francis Has gave occasion to many Disturbances; Hervendont being accused, of having by his Insinuations been the Occasion of Francis Has his detention in Candy, even to the Year 1656, from whence perhaps he may not be discharged whilst he lives. These and some other Accidents had put the Emperor's Mind into such a ferment, that for three Days together he show'd all the Marks of a severe Displeasure, even to the best of his Courtiers, so as to turn even his Face from them. But his Majesty's Letter deliver'd to the new General, May 6. seem'd to leave him in a much better Humour.

RAJA SINGA RAJOU, &c.

Another Letter from the Emperor.

"YOUR Excellency's Letter dated the 3d, was deliver'd to me on Thursday the 4th, wherein you express your Sorrow for the Mistake in the Letter I sent back with my last Letter: As among all other Foreign Nations, our Imperial Majesty has chosen the Hollanders, as the fittest to be employed for the increase of our Glory, Fame and Empire, by reason of their Fidelity (which renders them very dear to me, beyond my own Subjects) so when they commit any Mistake, it touches me so sensibly, in regard of the other Nations that frequent our Court, that I can't forbear to make them sensible of their Error, even upon the least Occasion, in order to their Amendment for the future. If therefore your Excellency will apply yourself to such things as tend to our Imperial Service, the same will be highly acceptable to us. Our Beloved Director-General of Happy Memory did, during that small time he continued in our Empire, follow this Rule with the greatest exactness imaginable: But being snatch'd away on a sudden by Death, we were depriv'd of the Opportunity of rewarding his Services, according to our Wish. And as the said Director-General has not been wanting, in leaving certain Marks of the Methods and Customs to be made use of in our Service, so it will be no difficult Task for your Excellency to follow his Footsteps. Your Excellency mentions the Resolution you have taken of attempting a second Assault upon the City, by reason of the approaching Season, which does not permit our Ships to tarry longer with Safety in that Road; and that the Enemy is much lessened in his Strength since the last Assault: all which as it is altogether reasonable, so I approve of it with much Satisfaction. On the other hand, our present Illness is no final Affliction to us, which bereaves us of the Opportunity of appearing there in Person, and being an Eye-Witness of this Engagement, and to be nearer at hand to second you with our Troops, in case there should be Occasion; but let come of it what will, we are resolv'd to be in the Camp by next Sunday. If your Excellency thinks fit to stay for our Coming, it is well; but if not, and that an Opportunity presents of gaining the Place, without impairing our Honour and Reputation, I am satisfy'd, living in hopes, that God Almighty will crown our Endeavours with Victory. Your Excellency mentions at the end of your Letter, that you have exchanged eight of your People that were Prisoners in the City (the Remnants of 74) for as many Portugueses your Prisoners. I am very glad you sent word of it, that it may not be alledged against the Hollanders, that they treat with the Enemy without our Knowledge. In the mean time I am desirous to know how the rest died, whether for want of Food, or being well look'd to in their Sickness; and further, what Instructions you have sent to the Portugueses by those that were sent into the City; if it be a Secret worth knowing, your Excellency will be pleas'd to reveal it to us. Ever since the Death of our Director-General, no sound of the Drum has been heard in our Camp; but in our March nearer to the Enemy and your Camp, it will be requisite to make use of our Drums and other Warlike Musick; whereof we thought fit to give notice to your

Raja Singa Rajou, most potent Emperor of Ceylon.

This Letter being read in Council, it was resolv'd to give the Assault the 7th of May about 7 or 8 a Clock in the Morning, and to make the fiercest Attack upon the Bastion of St. John; which was put in execution accordingly, Martin Scholtes Lieutenant of the Fusileers of Gale (now Captain in Gale) being the first who with undaunted Courage mounted the Breach, and being bravely seconded by his Men, they entred even into the City; but being surrounded on all sides by a great number of Portugueses, were forc'd to retreat to the Bastion of St. John, where at last they maintain'd their Post, after having three several times repuls'd the Enemy, who endeavour'd with all the Force they could bring together to dislodge them from thence, (our Men being constantly reliev'd with fresh Troops) till the Evening, when the Firing somewhat ceasing, they took that opportunity of entrenching themselves with Fascines and Earth towards the side of the City, being nevertheless still expos'd to the Enemies Shot from the Water-Fort and the Bastions of St. Stephen and Couras, which cost us many a brave Soldier.

In the beginning of the Assault the Disavoes of Saffragamme and of the Four Corles came into the Trenches with the Cingalese Forces; and soon after his Majesty sent likewise the Disavoes of Ouve and Matuke, the Adigar Amracon, and Curupele Apobamy, at the head of a great number of Lascaryns: but these brought along with them more Confusion than real Assistance, the Cingalese being always better at making a noise and plundering, than fighting.

We had no sooner fix'd our Guards upon the Bastion, but a Negro Slave (call'd Cassers) brought us advice, that in the last Assault the Enemy had the Captain Major, the City Major, and a good number of their best Men wounded, and betwixt 40 and 50 kill'd. We employed the greatest part of the Night in fortifying our selves with Pallisadoes and Earth-works on the Bastion, in discovering the Mines, and planting some Cannon; to facilitate which, it was order'd that a false Attack be made at two a Clock in the Morning, and with break of day we saw the Prince's Standard display'd there in token of our Victory; which however we had purchased at a dear rate, being even then much expos'd to the Enemies Shot from three Bastions. Upon a general Muster we found 290 Wounded, 80 Sick, and 86 Kill'd; so that we had in all not above 1287 Europeans left fit for Service. However John Maatzuyker a Lieutenant brought a Supply of 75 Men into our Camp, and 30 more from Candy; besides the Lieutenant Didelof was posted with 66 men at Milagre, and at Montual 68.

Among the Slain were the following Officers, whose Names well deserve to be transmitted to Posterity: Christopher Egger, Jurian Gebel, James Viry, James Scherf, Jurian Smith, Paul Meno, Wijnnaer vander Heyde. Among the Wounded, Major van der Laan wounded by a Splinter on his Shoulder, and near the Ear; Capt. Henry Gerard Gluwingsh mortally wounded in four Places; James de With wounded with a ten Pounder in the Thigh, of which he died afterwards; Martin Scholtes in the Arm; John Cowper in both hands; James Allenbier in the Leg; Paul Ketelaer in the Hand; John Bartels in the Belly; Herman Wynantz, &c.

THE 10th of May having planted our Cannon upon the Bastion of St. John against the City, the General and Major van der Laan came in the Afternoon to take a view of them. Soon after we saw the Enemy put out a white Flag, and

Columbo, May 15.
1655.

Antonio de Souza Coutinbo.

Major van der Laan having told him, that he would deliver it to the General, ask'd him, whether he desired a formal Passport in Writing, or would be satisfy'd with his Parole. The Portuguese Officer reply'd, that his Parole was sufficient; so they parted, and all Hostilities ceased.

Within two hours after our People were order'd to call to those in the City, and to ask them why they did not send their Deputy's; but they answering, that they would not come without a Passport, the same was sent with all possible speed; but it being then pretty late, they excused themselves, that it was not customary to stay a Night out of a Fortrefs at such a Conjunction. Whereupon we began to fire again till next Morning about 8 a Clock, being the 11th, when the Deputy's came into the Camp, viz. Laurenzo Fierri de Britto late Captain Major of Ponteale, Hieronimo de Luzena Tavares, late Visador das Fazendas, i. e. Sur-intendant of the Merchants in Columbo, and Diego Leitao de Souza Secretary of the City, who delivered to the Council the following Articles:

Philip I.
Columbo.

In the mean time no Correspondence or Commerce is to be allowed on either side, except what is done by Messengers, for the Performance whereof Hostages are to be given on both sides.

II. In case of a Surrender of the City, the Churches and Images shall not be defiled, and the Priests and Friars shall have full liberty to take along with them, without any molestation, all the Images, Relicks, sacred Vessels, Silver Lamps, and other Church Ornaments belonging to the Performance of Divine Service, not excepting the Moveables belonging to each Clergy-man in particular.

V. The Captains of Foot, Reformado's, and other Officers of what degree soever, shall march out with all the Marks of Honour, Ensigns display'd, Maces lighted, Balls in the Mouth, and with their Baggage, and shall be provided with Shipping to transport them beyond Sea to the Indian Shore. They are in the mean while to be maintain'd by the Dutch General, out of the Superplus of the Money belonging to the King of Portugal, or for want of such, at his own Charge, or of the Company, till the time of their Transportation, and they shall not be molested either by Sea or Land.

VI. The Ovidor, Judge, and other Officers of the Exchequer, the Head Factor, Alcade Major or Chief Magistrate, and the Farmers of the King's Demesns, shall enjoy the same Favour granted to the Major of the City.

VII. All Gentlemen, Cavaliers, and the chiefest Citizens and Inhabitants, shall have liberty to challenge the same Conditions granted to the City Major, and, if any of them are inclin'd to remain under the Jurisdiction of the Hollanders, they shall be left undisturb'd in the full Possession of their Houses, Estates, Villages, and every thing belonging to them, and be treated in all other respects like the Natives of Holland. For the free exercise of their Religion they shall have a Church, with a convenient number of Clergymen allow'd them; and if hereafter any of them shall think fit to go to some other part of the Indies, they shall be at liberty to sell both their real and personal Estates, or otherwise dispose of them without molestation. They shall also be provided with Shipping at the publick Charge, except such as have Ships of their own, who shall be free to traffick where they please, paying the usual Customs.

All

VIII. All Foreign Merchants, both Europeans and Negroes, that were come to Colombo to traffick, shall be free to depart with their Vessels, Goods, Gold, Silver, and other Merchandizes bought up here, especially the Cinnamon bought for the King or the City's use, whether aboard a Ship or not: Provisions shall be likewise provided them for their Money, and a safe retreat; and in case they stand in need of Seamen, they shall be supply'd with them.

IX. The Negro Inhabitants both married and unmarried, and even the Foreigners of what Condition soever, shall enjoy the same freedom granted to the Portuguese Citizens.

X. All the Modeliars, Aratches and Lafcarays that have hitherto been in the King of Portugal's Service (notwithstanding they have left the Service of the Company, or of his Majesty) shall be at liberty to depart with their Moveables whither they please.

XI, XII. Simon Lopes de Basto, a Portuguese by Birth, but since in the Service of the Dutch, shall be pardon'd for his Offence in coming over to us, and be free to depart in Company of the Governor: Likewise all Dutch Deserters that have taken Service in the City shall not be molested, but have liberty to march out along with our Forces.

XIII. All sick and wounded Soldiers or Inhabitants, shall be entertain'd there at the Charge of the Company (if the Superplus of the King's Money proves insufficient) till they recover their Health, and afterwards provided with Conveniences for their Transportation.

XIV. Upon the Surrender of the City after the Dutch are put in Possession thereof, their General shall take effectual care that no Affront or Mischief be done to the Governors, other Persons of Note, Soldiers, and Inhabitants, and their Families, but the same shall be protected by the said General, as well within as without the City, against all Violences from the King of Candy's Forces. Sign'd,

Antonio de Souza Coutinho.

After mature deliberation in the Council, the following Articles were in Answer to the former, deliver'd the 12th to the three Deputies in the Name of his Imperial Majesty of Ceylon, their High and Mightinesses the States-General of the United Provinces, the Governors of the East-India Company, and of John Matzuyker Governor-General, and the Council of the Indies.

THE City shall be surrender'd this day before Noon, without any further delay, upon the following Conditions.

What was desir'd in the second Article in relation to the Clergy is granted, and two Places shall be appointed for them to be in till their departure.

To the third Article it is answer'd, That it is not in the Power of the General to have the Governors, &c. transported at this time to Tutecoryn or Manday; but that it shall be done with the first conveniency; or else to Cochin or Wingula: But in case they have a mind to be transported to the other Shore, the same shall be perform'd by some of the Company's Ships within 15 days after the date hereof. They are allow'd to carry along with them all their Slaves of both Sexes, and those belonging to the Governor's Son Christovao de Souza, in hopes that they will not take any but their own, as likewise all their Moveables, Gold, Silver, Rings and Jewels; and they shall be protected in their Houses till the time of their departure.

The Officers mention'd in the 4th Article shall be treated according to their respective Dignities, and be protected against all harm. They may take along with them their Gold, Silver, Clothing, and what else they carry about them. But as to their Slaves of both Sexes, they shall be consider'd according to their respective Qualities. In what they carry about them shall be comprehended Beds and Bed-clothes, Hangings, Tapestry, Bolsters, Quilts, &c. The Officers and Reformades shall march out with the usual marks of Honour, and be transported to the Coast of Coromandel with as much of their Moveables as their Slaves or other Servants (allotted them by the General's favour) shall be able to carry.

The Soldiers shall march out with their Baggage, Colours display'd, Matches lighted, Ball in their Mouth, and Drums beating to the General's Quarters, where they shall surrender their Arms under the great Standard, and from thence with the first conveniency be transported into Europe. Such as are married or born in the Indies shall be transported to the Coast of Coromandel, and be maintain'd till the time of their departure at the Charge of the Company.

The Officers mention'd in the 6th Article shall partake of the same Favour granted to other Persons of Note; the City Major and Head Factor to be comprehended in the same.

Baldens.
Articles granted to the Portuguese.

Baldans. All such as intend to submit to the Jurisdiction of the Dutch shall be civilly and favourably treated, and remain in the quiet Possession of their Estates; but in case they have a mind to depart, their Goods are left to the Discretion of the General.

The chiefest of the Citizens and married Portugueses, with their Children, who are not inclinable to stay in this Isle, shall at the time of their departure receive the same Treatment as the Officers; but the Natives of the Isle shall be left to the Disposition of the General.

The Moslems, Arabes and Lascaryns, shall receive the same Treatment as the Dutch Deserters.

All sick and wounded Persons, whether Inhabitants or Soldiers, now in the Hospital, or any other place of the City, shall stay there till the recovery of their Healths, and be turnish'd with what they desire.

All the Officers, Inhabitants, Soldiers and unmarried Women, shall be protected by the General against all Violences and Oppressions.

The General does also agree, that if any Ships approach the City for its relief betwixt this and the 30th of May, notice shall be given them of its Surrender, with orders to depart, and shall be protected at least till they are out of sight of Columbo. The 11th of May 1656.

Signed,

Adrian van der Meyden, John van der Laan, Peter de Bitter, Edward Ooms, Isbrand Gotskens.

I Adrian van der Meyden, Governor-General for the Dutch East-India Company in the Isle of Ceylon, with the rest of the Members of the Council, promise and engage by these Presents, That, in case the Deputies bring back this Capitulation, approv'd as such by the Governor Antonio de Souza Coutinho, and his Council, we will punctually observe all the Articles contain'd therein without the least limitation or exception; and further grant such Favours as are in our power to allow of. In Confirmation whereof we have in Conjunction with the said Deputies signed the same, in the Dutch Camp before Columbo, the 12th of May 1656.

In the Morning about Nine a Clock the Deputies return'd with the Capitulation approv'd and sign'd as before, with a Letter of Intercession from the Governor and Deputy-Governor for Simon Lopez, who had deserted our Service. The Capitulation being sign'd once more and the Council dismiss'd, Isbrand Gotskens and James van der Rhee our Secretary of War, were immediately at Dinner sent into the City, to demand the Keys from the two Portuguese Governors, and to take account of all the Arms, Ammunition and Provisions, also to settle certain matters concerning the marching out of the Troops pursuant to the Capitulation.

Accordingly there march'd out of the place Antonio de Melo de Castro Captain-Major at the head of the King's Troops, consisting in 14 Companies, and 36 Captains (call'd Reformados by the Portugueses) with their Ensigns display'd, Drums beating, Matches lighted, and Ball in the mouth, marching throughout Forces rang'd on both sides, to the General's Quarters, where having surrender'd their Arms, they were conducted to the place prepar'd for their Lodging that night. These were follow'd by the Citizens, Sick, Wounded, and Criples. In the mean while their chief Engineer discover'd to two of our Deputies four Mines on the side of the Bastion of Rajuba, betwixt the Bastions 5. Stephen and Clery, each whereof being fill'd with four Barrels of Gunpowder, the Trains were remov'd, and Sentinels plac'd near them.

This done, our Forces march'd into the City, follow'd by the General, Major Van der Laan, and the rest of the Heel Officers. Near the Sea-shore not far from the Bastion of Couras, the Governor and Deputy-Governor (both venerable aged Portugueses) came with their Retinue to salute the General. After some Complements on both sides, Orders were given to our Forces where to take their Posts, and to disarm all the Lascaryns in the City. Towards Evening the Prince's Standard was planted in the Water.

Water-Fort, and the great Cannon discharg'd round the place as a Signal of our Victory. Thus the City of Columbo, not inferior in Strength to most of Europe, fell into the hands of our Nation, after she had been 150 years in the Possession of the Portugueses. In acknowledgment of which a Thanksgiving Day was appointed the Sunday following, being the 14th of May, which was celebrated accordingly, and the Thanksgiving-Sermon was preach'd by the Reverend Fran-<sup>baldeus</sup> cis Wyngarten in the Church of S. Francis, since call'd the Town Church. <sup>A Tract</sup>

An Account of the Siege of Columbo taken from their own Journals, and (for the publick Good) communicated to the Author by Matthæus van den Broek, formerly a Member of the Council of the Indies, now Governor of the East-India Company. Faithfully translated from the Portuguese.

A true Account of the Siege of Columbo carried on by Raja Singa King of Candy and the Hollanders, till the Surrender of that Fortrefs under Antonio de Souza Coutinho, Captain General in the Isle of Ceylon.

IN the Month of September 1653. 10 Dutch Ships came to an Anchor near Negumbo, two more being out at some distance at Sea, having landed 11 Companies of Europeans of 80 Men each; and being join'd by a good number of Negroes, they march'd to the Pass of Betal, but by reason of the violent Rains were forced to return to Negumbo. Mr. Gerard Hulst the Dutch General having re-embark'd his Forces with some others taken out of Negumbo, sail'd with the before-mentioned 12 Ships to Columbo, where much about the same time we had receiv'd a supply of Provisions in three Galliots sent from Cochin by the brave and faithful Simon Gomes de Silva, Governor of that place. Our Governor Coutinho took part of the Rice, in order to carry it to Caleture, where they stood in great need of it, but was prevented in his Design by the shallowness of the River. The 22d of Septemb. we receiv'd another Supply from Tutecoryn, consisting in 28 Sail; under the Command of Nicolas de Moura, the Fleet being chiefly laden on the account of private Merchants.

The Enemy having left six of their best Ships before Columbo, sail'd with the rest to Caleture; whereupon our Governor gave Orders to Capt. Caspar Figueira de Serpe, then encamp'd upon the Frontiers of the King of Candy, to come to Columbo, which he did accordingly October 7.

Without the City were at that time encamp'd the famous Dissave Francisco Antunes towards Mature, and Alvares Ro- drigo Borralho sent out with three Companies to get Intelligence of the Enemy, who from the 23d of September to the 15th of October laid before Caleture, and had rais'd three Batteries against it.

Our Governor being sensible of the Condition of the Place, sent thither a Convoy of Provisions commanded by Nicolas de Moura, under a good Guard of Europeans and Negroes, landed by Manoel de Gil, Dissave of Negumbo, who has so often signalized himself in our King's Service in the Isle of Ceylon. This brave Man attempting to pass the River with 12 of his choicest Men (the Boat holding no more) was so warmly receiv'd by some of the Enemies Forces, that, after they had kill'd several of his Men with their Fire-Arms, he was forc'd to retire; the Commander in chief follow'd his Footsteps contrary to the Opinion of Capt. Domingo Coelho de Alla, who would fain have perswaded him to advance as near as he could to Caleture, to incommode the Enemy in the Siege. Upon this occasion Alvares Rodrigo Borralho did considerable Service, in sending Intelligence from time to time of what pass'd, till at last this whole Body came back to the City.

It being then resolv'd to succour Caleture to the utmost of our Power, and four Galliots being at the same time arriv'd from the Viceroy of Goa, we made up a Body of 600 Portugueses, the Command whereof was committed to Caspar Figueira to attempt the Relief of the Place in conjunction with some Cingaleses.
E f f f f                      notwithstanding notwithstanding the Enemy's Force consisted of 3000 Europeans, besides a good number of Bandanjes and Cingaleses sent to their Alliance by the King of Cambaya.

Accordingly Caspar Figueira encamp'd with his Troops the 16th of October two Leagues from Caleture, having receiv'd Advice before, that the Enemy were already possess'd of the Pass on this side, and had posted three Companies there. Pursuant to this Intelligence he order'd six Companies under the Command of Domingo Sarmiento and Francisco Antunes to attack the Enemy in the Night, which they did accordingly with incredible Bravery for a considerable time, but very indifferent Success; for instead of being engag'd with three Companies of 80 Men each (as they supposed) they found the Enemy much superior in Number, to charge them so furiously both in Front and Flank, that they were put into Confusion with great Slaughter, before they could recollect themselves. Figueira being by this time come up with the rest of his Forces, unadvisedly attack'd the Enemy a second time; but these opening their Ranks on both sides, discharg'd two Cannon among our Forces, which occasion'd such a Confusion, that the Enemy improving their advantage, once more put us to flight. Figueira and his Lieut. Manoel Cabreira were for trying their Fortune once more; but finding the Flower of their Forces either slain or dispersed, and no means left to make them return to the Charge, they thought fit to retreat and bring off their wounded Men, among whom were Sebastiam Pereira and Joseph Antunes, the only two that escap'd alive of eleven Captains. Of the Reformades, John Cordeiro, Manoel Fernandes de Miranda, Manoel de Santiago Garcia, with 200 common Soldiers, came off alive.

This ill Success caus'd an unspeakable Consternation in the City of Columbo, where there was nothing to be heard but Outcries and Lamentations in the Streets; the Shops were shut up, and the Gates kept close, with strict Orders that nobody should appear arm'd without doors. The next thing to be done, was to give an account of their present ill Condition to the Viceroy of Goa; and the same being (at their earnest request) committed to the care of Damian Vieira a Jesuit, and Manoel Saraiva, an Inhabitant of Manaar, the last of these two went no further than from Columbo to Manaar, from whence he dispatch'd the Letters to Antonio Amiral de Menezes at Tajnapatnam, a Neglect that deserv'd a very severe Punishment.

By this time the Hospital was fill'd with the sick and wounded Soldiers, where Brother Gosfal an Austin Monk did both the Duty of a devout, religious and charitable Lay-man: The number of those that died here for want of good looking after, being scarce inferior to what was lost in the Engagement.

On the other hand, the Dutch had purchas'd this Victory with very little loss on their side; notwithstanding which Major Van der Laan (a mortal Enemy to the Portugueses, and a zealous Heretick) having receiv'd a Wound in the Cheek, took a most barbarous Revenge from the Portugueses he met with, who were all massacred in the Woods (some 20 and 30 together) by his Orders; cool Blood, he having often been heard to say, That if the Portugueses were at disposal, he would cut them all off at a stroke. Their General Mr. Hoff being of a more compassionate Temper, order'd Quarter to be given to the vanquish'd Forces, but this Heretick told them that they ought to be cut to pieces, in retaliation of what they did to the Dutch, whom they never gave any Quarter. However through the General's Mercy about 60 of the new list'd Men had their Lives given them. In this Engagement the brave Francisco Antunes, who had render'd his Name so famous in Ceylon by his many Victories, also lost his Life in a Wood, who deserv'd to have had a Mausoleum erected to his Memory.

Thus the Enemy by this Victory becoming Master of the Field, afterwards soon made himself Master of the whole Island of Ceylon, the City of Columbo (after the loss of Caleture) expecting no less than to be reduc'd to the utmost extremity. For after they had endur'd for some days all the Inconveniences of Hunger in Caleture, Antonio Mendes d'Albuquerque represented to his Soldiers, that they had rather try the utmost, than to perish for want of Food, exhorting them to fight their way with Sword in hand through the Enemy. He prevail'd at last so far with them, as to agree with them in his Resolutions; but the appointed time approaching, they found themselves so entangled for want of good Food, that not being able to put their Design in Execution, they were forced to surrender, upon Condition that they should march out with their Arms, &c. Thus the King of Portugal lost at once a strong Fortress, one of his most experienced riens'd Officers in the whole Isle, and 250 choice Men, through the mismanagement of some who prefer'd their own Interest before that of his Majesty.

The 17th of October the Enemy marching directly to Colombo, posted themselves in sight of the City near S. Sebastian, where Antonio de Souza Coutinho the then Governor, together with Francisco de Melo de Castro, order'd immediately some Works to be cast up to hinder their approach: But the 18th they were so vigorously attack'd in these Intrenchments, that they had enough to do to escape to the City, and to cut down the Bridges behind them.

We then apply'd our selves to the strengthening of our Batteries, whilst the Enemy kill'd all they met with without the City, and immediately fell to the raising of their Batteries, which was no difficult task for them to do, being back'd by an Army of 20 or 30000 Men under Raja Singa King of Candy, and furnish'd by him with Pioneers and other Necessaries in abundance.

Our Governor and Francisco de Melo de Castro did leave no Stone unturn'd for the defence of the City; they visited the Magazines and Armories, and furnish'd with Arms all such as were capable of bearing them, not excepting even the old Men and School-boys. The Posts on the Battions were assign'd to the following Commanders; on the Battion of S. John, Manoel Correa de Barros; on that of S. Sebastian, Francisco Gorian de Fialbo; on that of Madre de Deos, John de Pavia de Quintal; on that of S. Conception, Domingos Peixoto; on that of S. Hieronymo, Alfonso Carvalho de Souza; on that of S. Antonio, Manoel Carvalho da Maya; on that of S. Jacob, Manoel Nunes; on that of S. Austin, Luis de Parva Quintal; on that of S. Laurence, Antonio de Silva; on that of S. Cruz, Caspar d'Aranja Pereira; on that of S. Francisco Xavier, Manoel Caldeira de Brito; and on that of Galvao, Dominges Pires; who all gave sufficient Proofs of their Bravery in their respective Posts during the Siege, as did likewise Father Damaso Vieira a Jesuit, especially in the Attack upon the Garden of Antonio de Mota, and some Houses standing upon an Eminency at S. Thomas, in which tho they were repuls'd the first time, yet the next day our Forces commanded by Alvaro Rodrigo and Manoel Caldeira, being seconded by some Companies posted on the other side of the Ditch, made themselves Masters of it, being of no small Conveniency to us, to hinder the approach of the Enemy.

Notwithstanding this the Enemy advanced apace under favour of their Artillery, of which they brought great store daily from their Ships. And on our side we found the Battion of S. John most expos'd, we strengthened the same with Masts, Earth and Fascines; we made also a cover'd way from the Wall to the brink of the Ditch, the same was done near the Battions of S. Sebastian and Rajuba; both Clergy-men and Lay-men without distinction of Persons employing themselves in this Work, and furnishing Materials for so useful a Work, especially Caspar Figueira de Serpe, who having great store of Baskets, Spades, and other such like Instruments, sacrificed them all for the publick Service.

The 20th of October the Enemy began to salute us with 12 great pieces of Cannon from three Batteries, viz. 3 from that of S. Thomas, 5 from that at Agua de Luphe, and 4 from that of S. Sebastian, from whence they sent 800 Bullets, 18, 20, 24 and 28 Pounders, in one day into the City. But tho the Enemies Bullets did considerable Execution, some of the King's unfaithful Servants did more mischief by introducing adulterated Coin, and engrossing the Provisions under pretence of the King's Service for their own lucre sake.

There were at that time not above 1300 Souls, young and old, Europeans and Indians, viz. 500 that receiv'd Pay, and among them, some married, some unmarried, some Children and Topasses; 300 married People who serv'd without Pay, 400 Lascaryns, and about 60 Labourers; the whole number of the Europeans not amounting to above 500 Men. The Governor with the Consent of the whole City, pitch'd upon Antonio d'Abrun an Inhabitant of Negapatnam, to be sent to Goa, to give an account to the Viceroy of the City. He was favourably receiv'd by the Viceroy, who told him that he had already sent a Squadron under Manoel de Magalhães Coutinho, to carry a Supply of Provisions and Men thither, brought together for that purpose by Antonio Amiral de Menezes at Manaar. But this Convoy came no further than the Cape Comoryn, and could not make the Cape, tho some were of opinion it was rather for want of Will; so he return'd to Colombo, where the Viceroy being dead in the mean while, the whole face of Affairs was changed, and Colombo lost for want of timely Supply

describes

The before-mention'd three Batteries being rais'd above 200 Paces from our Walls, they erected another against the Bastion of St. John, within 400 Paces of it, from whence they batter'd us most furiously with three Demi-Cannon. Immediately after, one of our Engineers, a Hollander by Birth, named John de Rosa, deserted to the Enemy; 'tis true, he was no great Conjuror in his Art, yet did us considerable Mischief. For the Enemies Batteries play'd so furiously upon our Outworks, that in two days time they were all laid level with the Ground, and our Bastions and Walls were so sorely battered, that with much ado we could stop the Breaches, which was done by continual and indefatigable Labour; each Soldier and Officer employing the Intervals they had, when they were not upon Duty, in working like the meanest Labourer.

One of our
describes

The Governor Antonio Coutinho spent Day and Night in visiting the Works, animating his Soldiers both in Words and his Example, leaving his Habitation, and contenting himself with a small Tent near the Bastion of St. John, where the Enemies made their greatest Effort. Afterwards he took up his Quarters in a Warehouse, scarce undressing himself all the time the Siege lasted, and employ'd much of his time in keeping an exact account of the Stores, and distributing Provisions with his own Hands, without which Precaution the City could not have held out half so long. Francisco de Melo de Castro followed his Footsteps, having not been seen without his Clothes and Arms for seven Months together. The City-Major Manoel Marques Gonsalves did assist them in his Station, as did likewise Caspar Figuiera de Serpe, the Disfaves of the Cortes of Negumbo and of Mature, John Coelho de Castro, Manoel Gil, Manoel Seixas, and John Ramba, who were present in all Places, where there was the most danger to encounter. The Clergy, but especially the Capucins, were very assiduous in consoling the Soldiers, in praying and doing all manner of good Offices without Intermision; and some of them would not be backward in being upon the Guard with the Soldiery, and give the Enemies ample Proofs of their Valour.

The Enemy thunder'd so furiously against the Bastion of St. John, that it appear'd like a heap of Rubbish; then they turn'd their Fury against the Horn-work of St. Stephen and the adjacent Point; but Manoel da Veiga the Commanding Officer on the Bastion of St. Stephen, Francisco Gonsalves, John Ferraz d'Abreu, Gonzal

Martinho Piemontel, Manoel Carvalho, and others employ'd in the Defence of the Works towards St. Sebastian, were indefatigable in repairing the Breaches, and rendering the Bastions tolerably defensible.

Hieronymo Lucena shew'd the same courage in the Bastion of Madre de Deus, till he was reliev'd by Lewis Tavera de Sousa, and the Wall which extended towards St. Sebastian being found very weak, the General recommended the Defence thereof to the four Captains of the Gallies, lately come from Goa. These order'd an Entrenchment to be made there of 100 Yards long, one broad, and six foot high. Father Damian Vieira the Jesuit being employ'd in furthering this Work, a Bullet taking away a great piece of the Wall, struck him on the Head, so that he fell dead upon the Ground; but soon recovering himself, he fell to his Work again, his Servant constantly attending him with a Sword and Fusée, wherewith he did considerable Execution, being commonly one of the foremost in charging the Enemy. Finding that the Bastion of Xaverius (otherwise call'd Couras) began also to be sorely batter'd by the Enemy, the care thereof was committed to an old famous Soldier, Manoel Rodrigues Franco, who soon put it out of all Danger.

The 29th of Novemb. the Dutch General Gerard Hulst sent a Drummer with a white Flag with a Messenger into the City, to summon our Governor to a Surrender, who delaying his Answer till next day, the Enemy fir'd most furiously with his Cannon all that Night; but the next Morning we sent Diego de Souza de Castro and Thomas Freire Leite with an Answer, the last personating a Drummer, in order to get some Intelligence of the Condition of the Enemy; but they were upon their Guard, and therefore sent a Captain and a Lieutenant, attended by two Soldiers to receive our Governor's Letter, wherein he told the General, that he wanted neither Will nor Power to defend the Place to the utmost for his King's Service, being still sufficiently provided with Powder and Ball, and other Necessaries; and to add the more weight to his Words, we fir'd most furiously all that Night.

The Dutch repay'd us in the same Coin, sending us commonly a Present of Cannon-ball and 900 Granadoes every Day. The 12th of Novemb. they celebrated the Feast of St. Martin the Pope by a new Invention of Fireballs, wherewith they sent a good Number into the City.

and seconded the Game by a general Assault. For early in the Morning three of their stoutest Ships appearing in sight of the City, one of them called the Maid of Enchuyzen enter'd the Harbour, carrying the red Flag in her Stern; and coming to an Anchor within Musquet-shot of the Bastion of St. Crus, gave us several warm Salutes, under the sound of Drums and Trumpets; but Manoel d'Abreu Godinho and Antonio de Silva, the Commanding Officers on the Bastion of St. Lawrence, did ply them thick with their Cannon, that having first brought by the Board all her Masts, they made soon after so many Holes in her sides, that she was ready to sink, and a few of her Crew made hard shift to escape in the long Boat. The other two Ships seeing the other so ill treated, did not think fit to follow her Footsteps, but made the best of their way to the Road, alledging in their behalf, that they were not able to come up with the other.

At the same time they attempted the Assault on the Land side. Mr. John van der Laan assaulted with 7 Companies the Gate of Acouras, advancing boldly with sword in hand to the very Faces of our People, the foremost of which began to give way, and in all likelihood the rest would have follow'd their Example, had not Father Antonio Nunes a Jesuit, with his drawn Sword threatn'd such as were ready to fly with present Death; nay his Comrade John Cordeiro wounded one of the Soldiers as he was flying with his long Rapier. Soon after Cajpar Figueira de Serpe coming with fresh Supplies, this so animated our Soldiers, that they not only stopp'd the Enemies Fury, but also made them give way in a little while after. In this Action an Ensign and Serjeant acquired Immortal Honour, and Manoel d'Almeyda, tho a very old Soldier, yet did not leave his Post till he had received 11 Wounds. Felicio de Seixas and Contrero de Seixas lost their Lives with their Swords in their Hands; Manoel Guerreiro, i. e. the Warrior, did great Service with his Cannon from his Redoubt, he being an expert Cannoneer.

Major van der Laan seeing there was no likelihood of succeeding, sounded a Retreat, leaving the Ground covered with the dead Carcasses of the Hollanders. The Enemy receiv'd also considerable Damage from the Tower, where Diego de Souza de Castro commanded, and no question much more might have been expected had we been provided with good Gunners: for it must be confest, that we wanted not Officers of Courage and Experience, but only such as understood the Mathematicks and the Art of Gunnery; an Instance of which might be given in one of our Gunners, who having double charged a Cannon, did wound one of our Captains and two others, viz. Thomas Pereira Leite, and Pedro Goncalves Salgado, tho for the rest their Fidelity ought not to be mis'd by in silence; it having been observ'd, that not one of our Cannoneers deserted to the Enemy, but most of them lost their Lives in the Service.

The Gate of Rajuba was attack'd with 800 choice Men by General Half in Person, who endeavour'd to mount the Walls with scaling Ladders: As they pass'd the Bridge, they were sorely gall'd from the Bastions of St. Stephen, St. Sebastian, and that of Madre de Deos, the Defence whereof being committed to Rodrigo Borralho, Antonio de Mita d'Oliveira, and Manoel Cabreira de Ponte, they gave such a hot salute with their Firelocks from behind their Pallisado Works to the Hollanders, that many of them were laid dead upon the Ground. A certain Cannon of Stone did them considerable Damage, and would have done more, had it not burst in pieces. Three times they renewed the Assault with incredible Fury, and as often were they repuls'd with an unspeakable Bravery. At last General Half, to encourage his Men, cried out aloud, Soldiers, the Prince Stands in set upon the Bastion of St. John (which in effect was not so) and so with a Curse (Sante Diab!, i. e. Holy Devil) he snatch'd a Ladder out of a Fellow's Hand; but finding no body ready to follow him, whilst he was encouraging his Men, and fixing his Ladder to the very Gate, he was wounded in the Thigh, and so forc'd to retreat. On the side of the Lake or Fens (called Lagoa by the Portugueses) 240 Men were embark'd in 8 Chinese Boats brought from Batavia for that purpose. They were met by Domingos Coelho d'Alta in 5 Manchous or Birges, who fought with them courageously for some time, but was forced at last to suffer them to land, but retir'd into a Pallisado-Work near Maria Teller, from whence he with Sebastian Caldeira, and 5 or 6 more (the rest being run away) fir'd briskly upon the Hollanders; who at last finding a Hole or Gate near the House of Sebastian Caldeira, they forc'd their way, notwithstanding the brave Resistance made by Manoel Rodrigues Franco, Guardian de Viro, and Francisco Rebello de Palsares, who sent a good quantity of Hand-granadoes and Fire-balls among them,

Baldau.

Not one Portuguese Cannoneer deserted.

Baldew. them, the said Guardian having receiv'd two Wounds by Musquet-Balls. The Dutch forcing their way into a narrow Street, were there met by Manoel Fernandes de Miranda, who tho sorely wounded yet continued fighting with his Sword and Buckler, till exhausted of his Strength by the Loss of Blood, he was ready to drop, and would infallibly have died upon the Spot, had not Francisco de Lemos carried him off. In his Place succeeded Diego Leitao de Souza, who discharging a Musquetoon on the Corner of a Street among the Dutch, made them halt; the same was done by Father Damian Vieira the Jesuit, who with another Musquetoon made such a Havock among the Enemy, that these two stopped their farther Progress, till Antonio de Leao appear'd at the Head of a good Troop of Souldiers; he being provided with another Musquetoon, charged the Enemy so briskly (as they were endeavouring to break into the backside of some Gardens) that they were forc'd to retreat back into the narrow Street, where he maintain'd the Fight (tho his Musquetoon, by reason of its being too frequently charged, struck him down to the Ground) till Antonio de Melo de Castro came with his whole Company to his Relief, when after some firing Quarter being offered to the Remnants of the Dutch, they accepted of the same; so that 74, tho most of them wounded, were made Prisoners of War, whereof 8 only return'd into the Dutch Camp afterwards, the rest dying in the City, many whereof were converted to the Catholick Faith, by the indefatigable care of the Jesuits, and especially of Damian Vieira.

This was the Success of the general Assault begun early in the Morning, and not ended till two in the Afternoon, during which the Governor Antonio de Souza Coutinho, and Francisco de Melo de Castro, kept in Person the Guard with some other Officers of Note in the Market-place, from whence they dispatch'd their Orders, as Occasion requir'd. The City-Major Manoel Marques Gorian, did likewise appear in all Places where the Danger was most pressing; and Caspar Figuiera was very careful in sending what Succours he could spare from the Bastion of St. John. In short, the Streets, Breaches, the Lane and Ditch were all tainted with the Blood of the Hollanders, and the Ground cover'd with Colours, Arms, Drums, Scaling-Ladders and dead Carcasses, their Loss being computed at no less than 1000 Men, and among them many brave Officers. On our side we had not above 30 Men killed, tho the Enemy to disemble their Loss, gave us a general Salvo of at least 1000 Musquets. The next day Father Damian Vieira going without the Walls in order to bury the Dead, was saluted by three Firelocks from the Enemy, which made him retire, and defer his charitable Resolution till the next following Night. We observ'd a black Flag in one of their Works, as a Signal, that they would give Quarter to no body without exception, the same Order having been given them likewise before the Assault begun. We got no less than 30 pieces of Cannon out of the Ship that lay under the Water-Fort, which were planted on our Works. Some Refreshments were also distributed among the Soldiers, tho to confess the Truth, the Publick Stores being very low, every one provided for himself, as well as he could, without any regard to the poor Soldiers. However about 18 days after, Father Damian (by Order from the General) went with some Dutch Prisoners aboard the Vessel, where they found some Casks of Wine, and some Meat and Bacon.

In the mean time the Enemies were not idle, but daily encreased their Works; they made a Covered Way within 40 Paces of St. John's Bastion from West to the East, in form of a Redoubt, upon which they planted six great Guns, viz. three against the Bastion of St. John, and the other three against that of St. Stephen. From thence they carried on their Trenches to the Sea-side from South to North, clos'd with another Redoubt, which being provided with two pieces of Cannon, much annoyed the Wall betwixt the Bastion of Couras and St. John. This made the Governor Coutinho order some of the Citizens to raise a kind of an Entrenchment of about two Foot thick and three high behind it. From the second Redoubt the Enemy carried on their Trenches into the open Field, and at last added a third Redoubt, from whence they could batter the Wall betwixt the Bastions of St. John and St. Stephen, which being likewise forc'd to be strengthened by some Works of Earth and Fascines, no body, not even the Governor himself, were sparing in laying hand to so useful a Work, which being 400 Ells in length, each Division had its share allotted, in order to bring it the sooner to perfection.

chado, and Don Francisco Rolim, all Inhabitants of the City, did great Service with their Slaves, in the Manchous or Boats, in protecting our Workmen on that side, as well as the Disjaves; and to be short, there was no body so young, no body so old, that was exempted from continual Labour or Watching.

The Dutch on the other hand carried on the Trenches from the Redoubt with six Guns, to the Fall of Aqua de Lupe, and made another Trench from the Redoubt in the Plain, which was to meet another Redoubt thrown up on the Front of the Bastion of St. Stephen, beyond the Lake or Fens. They also raised another Battery in the Garden of Antonio de Mota, against the Bastion of St. Stephen, and another near the before-mention'd Redoubt of six Guns, in a parallel with that in the Plain, and another just at the Foot of the Bastion of St. Cruz, which being so near the Ditch, was likely to be a Thorn in our Eye, there being nothing but the Ditch betwixt us and the Enemy, so that we could throw Stones at them, and often talk'd with one another.

About the same time Caspar Figueira de Serpe desir'd leave to lay down his Commission, not to shun the Danger or Trouble of his Station, but because many of the Gentlemen and Subaltern Officers refused to obey his Command; so he was discharged, and Antonio de Melo de Castro, Nephew to the late Governor Francisco de Melo de Castro, who had behav'd himself with more than ordinary Bravery in his Post during the Siege, put in his place.

As we shrewdly suspected the Enemy to have a Design of undermining the Bastion of St. Stephen, a Cavalier was order'd to be rais'd near it, in case the same should succeed. This was done by the contrivance of a certain Indian Merchant of the Coast of Coromandel, who also order'd the Redoubt, demolish'd since the last general Assault, to be repaired: By the Design also of another certain Merchant, who was Surveyor of our Magazine) a Countermine was contriv'd, which did us great Service. It was a most deplorable thing to have in such a Fortress as this, not so much as one Portuguese Engineer, nay not so much as a good Carpenter of our Nation, the Defect whereof can be attributed to nothing else but to the Covetousness of some of the King's Officers, who put the Money design'd for that use into their Pockets, and at the same time put it to the King's Account. Neither were our Fortifications in such a Condition as they ought to have been; for whereas we had had sufficient time to enclose that part of the City near the Sea-side, call'd Galvoca (comprehending a third part of the whole) with strong Walls, and to render it impregnable, by reason of the natural Situation thereof, being accessible only in certain Places in small Boats, they had planted only some Coco and Palm-Trees there, which perish and are wash'd away by the Waves in a short time. Thus the Bastions, which ought to have been fac'd with Stone, were only made of Earth, which are not durable, and easily spoil'd by the Water-Floods; the effects whereof were then obvious enough, from the Hospital to the Gate of the Jesuits College, which comprehends a very large Tract of Ground. Besides this, the Carriages of our great Guns were so rotten, that most of them after the first Discharge broke to pieces; so that we were forc'd to take the Wood from the Houses, nay even out of the Churches (as we did in that of St. Domingo) to make new Ones.

My Pen wants Words to express the Affronts put upon the Holy Images by the Hereticks, whereof I will give you only one Instance. They took the Image of the Holy Apostle St. Thomas, and after they had cut off the Nose, Ears and Arms, set it up for a Mark to shoot at; afterwards they knock'd it full of great Nails, and so shot it out of a Mortar Nov. 16. into our Ditch, whence it was taken up and carried to the Jesuits College, by Father Damian Vieira, and two Reform'd Officers, Manoel de Seixas, and Manoel de S. Jago Garcia. But the Franciscans laying Claim to it, they carried it in Publick Procession to their Church, and placed it upon the High Altar. Father Francisco S. Matheus solemniz'd the Day with a learned Speech.

The 20th of Novemb. the holy Thomas blessed us with the Arrival of a certain Portuguese, a Native of Avenas, named Simon Lopes de Basto, who for certain Reasons being retir'd from Goa to Wingula, had served among the Dutch in a very good Station in the Camp; but finding his Countrymen in Distress, left all and came over to us, and did us most signal Service in the Siege.

The Enemy carried on their Trenches from the Foot of the Bastion of St. Cruz, to the Edg of the Ditch, with an Intention to fix their Miners under the Bastion of St. John; but we made a Countermine, and defended the Ditch on the other side with a good Breast-work, to secure our

Peo-

People against the Granadoes, which the Enemy threw in without Intermillion. This Post being recommended to the care of Domingos Coelho, he strengthen'd the same by Pallisadoes, from whence he commanded the Passage over the Ditch with his Fire-arms; and Manoel Rodrigues Franco, and Manoel de S. Jago Garcia, would often skirmish with the Enemy on their own Bridges; two whole Companies under the said Coelho, and Diego de Souza de Castro, being appointed to second them as Necellity requir'd.

The 10th and 11th of Jan. the Enemy advanc'd to the Ditch in two Places, viz. thro the before-mention'd Breast-work, and somewhat lower: From the first Place they played with a great Cannon, and on the other side having made a great Breach thro the Wall, they threw Fascines, Logs of Wood, Baskets with Earth, and such like Materials into the Ditch; and the better to cover their Workmen, and afford an easy Passage to their Souldiers, they fix'd their Gallery: but Emanuel Guerreiro at the Head of his Company, Domingos Coelho d'Alia, Emanuel de S. Jago Garcia, and Diego de Souza Castro, did receive them so courageously, that from 10 at Night till break of Day, there was nothing to be heard or seen but firing, both at the entrance of the Mine, and from the Bastion of St. John, from whence Don Diego Vasconcellos did considerable Mischief to the Dutch with his great Cannon, who meeting with sounexpected a Reception, thought fit to retire with considerable Loss, leaving most of their Materials behind them, which were brought into the City. We lost only two Men in this Action, and the Dutch for ever after were not so forward to come so near us, but ply'd us chiefly with their Cannon-balls, Stones and Bombs; whereas we had but one Mortar, which was usefess to us (for want of expert Cannoniers) till Simon Lopes de Basto came over to us, who now and then saluted the Enemy with Stones out of that Mortar, who answer'd us briskly, tho most of them broke in the Air, and did no other Mischief but to some Houses, that were miserably shatter'd. One of the Enemies Bombs happening to fall entire upon the Ground, Matthias d'Albuquerque, a Native of Goa, standing hard by, took it up, and threw it into the next Dutch Mine, with an unparallel'd Courage, with such Success, that it blew up into the Air immediately.

The 28th of Jan. four Ships arriv'd from Gale, and soon after two more, which with the 14 that were in the Bay before, made up 20 in all. The same day the Dutch planted a Cross upon the Redoubt call'd Conception, under the tripple Discharge of their Cannon and Small Arms. This Redoubt had been made by the Direction and Assistance of the Governor, the Master of the Ordnance, and several of our best Officers, and the Disfaves. That day two new lifted Men, belonging to Don Rodrigo de Castro his Company, deserted to the Enemy; and Fernaon Martinho de Souza the Governor's Son, a Gentleman who had given several Proofs of his Courage, was unfortunately shot with a Mullet-ball in the Head on the Bastion of St. John, of which Wound he died soon after. About the same time died also Antonio Barboza Pinheiro, one of our Captains of the Artillery, a Person of indefatigable Care, and who had signaliz'd himself upon many Occasions, both in the Field and the City.

The 1st of Feb. two other new lifted Soldiers of Manoel de Veigas his Company deserted to the Enemy, and the 6th nine Ships return'd from the Bay to Gale. By this time we began to be reduc'd to great Extremity for want of Provisions, a little Measure of Rice being then sold at half a Seraphyn; so that we saw the poor Wretches (as well Europeans as Negroes) drop down dead in the Streets: The Borbory, Bloody-Flux and spotted Fevers being grown so common, that few were free from them. To be short, we were in a constant Conflict with three most dreadful Enemies, the Plague, Hunger and Sword. To add to our Affliction, the Heat was so excessive for want of Rain (which usually falls in Ceylon) that many were stifled for want of Air, which made us drive about 300 of these miserable Creatures (unfit for Service) out of the City on the 8th, who were forc'd to return by the Dutch the 9th. The 12th, 500

Negroes were forc'd out of the City, but were sent back by the Hollanders the same day. The 17th, we saw divers Gibbets erected without our Walls, on which they did hang divers of the miserable Creatures that were forc'd out of the Town. We had so many dead in the City, that we wanted room to bury them. The 19th two of our Soldiers deserted, one whereof being taken, was hang'd up immediately. The 23d, 50 Negroes (the Remnants of the last 500) return'd to the City. The 27th, the Bridg made by the Enemy on this side of their Trenches, was set on fire from the Bastion of St. John, but the Fire was soon quench'd.

quench'd. The 29th the Besieged made a kind of a Cover'd Way, near the Gate of Rajuba, from the Bastion of Madre de Deos, to that of St. Sebastian.

The 2d of March, our City-Major was sent in a small Vessel to Manaar, to solicit for Succours there, in case any should have been lately arrived from Portugal; for at Goa they thought of nothing less than Ceylon, for they did not want either Men or Ships to send to Micassar or Mofambique, but could find none for Columbo; for tho the Cinnamon was upon the King's Account, the rest of their Cargo belonged to private Persons, who would not venture their Ships for the Publick, without extraordinary Rewards.

The same day an Advice-Boat arriv'd from Gale, and we made the beginning of a Cavalier on the Bastion of Madre de Deos; but finding that the Enemy were raising a Battery against it, it was not brought to Perfection. Two Portugueses and nine Lascarys deserted. The 3d, the Enemy began to open their Trenches on the side of the Mapanese Fields. The 6th one Dyke deserted, and the 7th another did the same, leaving the Boat, where were some Canaryns, who returned. The 11th another Soldier belonging to Alvaro Rodrigo Borralho's Company, went over to the Enemy, who receiv'd that day a Reinforcement of 10 Ships.

The 12th early in the Morning we found that the Enemy had posted himself upon an Eminency at the Foot of the Bastion of St. Cruz, just over against our Redoubt, and that they had carried on their Trenches a good way into the Field. A Soldier of Manoel Cabreira deserted to the Enemy. The 13th we sent away four Pachas, or Advice-boats. The 14th we discovered three Sails with some Sloops, which occasion'd great Joy in the City, thinking that it had been the so long look'd for Succours, but soon found our Mistake; the same day two Dutch Deserters and a Boy came into the Town. The Enemy having strengthen'd their Battery against the Outworks of the Bastion of St. Stephen and St. John, they laid the 16th one side of St. Stephen's Bastion level with the Ground.

The Famine encreased every day, a Fig-Tree or a Papey-Tree was now sold for 50 Pardaus: Herbage we had none, some Roots there were, but miserably dry, by reason of the Heat of the Season, which caused a great Mortality.

The 17th an Aratche and two Lascarys went over to the Enemy, and perceiving that they had rais'd an Eminency, in order to erect a Redoubt and Battery near the Gate of Rajuba, we demolished the same by planting a 28 Pounder against it. We had an Advice-Boat sent us from the Northern-Quarter, and about Midnight the Enemy alarm'd us by a false Attack. The 20th, five Soldiers being taken that were going over to the Enemy, four of them were hang'd immediately, the fifth who had discover'd the plot, escaping with his Life.

The 21st we made a Countermine, about ten Foot from the Enemies, which was carried to the Palm-Trees planted on the Fortifications; whilst Simon Lopes de Basso Master of our Ordnance, Manoel Fernandes da Miranda, Manoel de S. Jago Garcia, Father Damian Vieira, and several other Portuguese Officers, were employed in encouraging the Workmen; one of our Cannon-balls fell among some Granadoes and other Fire-works, which caused a great Alarm in the whole City, and the brave John Pereira Corte Real, a Native of Negapatnam, who had signalized himself upon a thousand Occasions in the Service of our Artillery, here lost his Life, being generally regretted by all who new his Merit. The 22d and 23d, the Enemy continued to perfect their Works near the Gate of Rajuba, against which we play'd with a Demi-Cannon from behind the Wall of St. Stephen's Bastion.

The 24th two Messengers from the King of Candy brought a Letter to the Governor, and another to the Inhabitants of Columbo, in answer to a Letter sent to that King, at the beginning of the Siege. They appear'd in Mourning-Apparel, to intimate (according to the Custom of that Court) how much concern'd his Majesty was at the many Injuries and Affronts put upon him during the late War. They contain'd in Substance, that the King summon'd them to a Surrender, promising all the Inhabitants the free possession of all their Estates, Villages, &c. for their Sustainance, as the only means to deliver them from the Miseries and Oppressions they now groan'd under, alledging that the same were the effects of God's just Vengeance for their Ingratitude, shewn upon so many Occasions to his Imperial Majesty, in return of the many Benefits they had receiv'd at his Hands, and not admitting his Ambassadors sent to them with Proposals of an Alliance. These Letters were likewise subscribed by the Dutch General Hulst, which being read publicly, the Messengers were dismissed.

miss'd with much Respect, but were scarce got out of the City, when they were overtaken by a most dreadful Storm of Rain, Thunder and Lightning.

The 25th Alvaro Rodrigo Boralbo kill'd a Soldier as he was going over to the Enemy.

*Town and an Advice-

down.*

The 26th an Advice-Boat was dispatch'd to get Intelligence whether there were any hopes of Succours for Columbo; but all the News we could learn, was that the Viceroy of Goa (the only Person we put our Confidence in next to God) was lately dead; which tho it was doleful News for us, yet was it resolv'd to hold out to the last Extremity, which was perform'd to the greatest nicety, the Dutch never being able to become Masters of the Place, till most of us were consumed either by the Sword or Famine. Advice was also brought us, that Bonfires had been made at Goa, upon certain Advice brought by some Negroes (under Protection of the Dutch) taken at Putlaon in Ceylon, that Columbo was not in so desperate a Condition as had been represented, which they had reported upon the Credit of a certain Dutch Master of a Vessel.

The 27th of March one of our Sergeants was devour'd by a Crocodile in the Fens, his Clothes and Arms being found afterwards. At this time a Parra of Rice was sold at 25 Scrapphyns, or Gilders; and all our Church-yards being fill'd with dead Corps, we were forc'd to have another consecrated for that purpose.

The 28th in the Morning the Enemy had thrown up another Redoubt near the Wall of the Gate of Rajuba. One of the Inhabitants, a Native of Cranganor, went over to the Enemy from the Bastion of S. John, being forced thereunto by Hunger, which was grown so excessive, that Dogs, Cats and Rats, and other such like things were sold at a very high rate.

The 31st two Soldiers and a Lascaryn went over to the Enemy. The next Morning we saw some small Batteries raised against the Redoubt of S. John's Bastion, where our People had made some Entrenchments raised like steps of 10 Paces high, cover'd with a Breastwork like a cover'd way, call'd Alcapaon by the Portugueses. At the same time we began to work on a Countermine, within 20 Paces of the Enemy's Mine at S. John's Bastion. The same day above 50 of our sick died in the Hospital, besides what were daily found dead in the Houses and Streets, the Ammunition-

Bread being by this time become a most precious Commodity.

The first of April one of the Enemy's Advice-Boats came into the Road. The second 7 Lascaryns deserted, and ever after 20 or 30 a day went over to the Enemy. The third two Dutch Yachts came into the Road, aboard one of which was a Chirurgeon. At the same time a Parra of Rice was sold for 59 Scrapphyns, or Gilders; but the worst was, that there was not enough of it, and could not be purchas'd but with ready Money. The Governor's Steward (tho without his knowledge) * refusing to part with any without ready Gold, to the great Disreputation of his Master, who tho a Gentleman of great Honour, yet was highly blam'd for committing a thing of such moment to the management of so arrant a ravenous Person.

The 4th of April the Enemy had raised a new Redoubt and Battery provided with two pieces of Cannon, near the Gate of Rajuba, wherewith they had so batter'd our Palisado's, and other wooden Fences, that there was no safe passing betwixt the Fortifications and the Wall on the other side of the Ditch. The Enemy receiv'd a Succour of two Ships, and the next day four more. The Enemy made their Approaches with so much Circumspection, that they advanc'd to the Ditch (where it was dry) with the loss of a few of their Men, who improvidently exposed themselves to our Fire-Arms.

The 6th we began another Countermine, and the 7th the Enemy threw abundance of Falces and Faggots into the dry Ditch, and set fire to our Palisado's, which was soon quenched by the industry of our Men; whilst the Dutch were employ'd on the other side to cut a Breach with Pickaxes in the Wall, but were soon chased from thence by our Firelocks, not without considerable loss.

The 8th of April we began another Countermine, which being fenced with a kind of Palisado Beams cover'd with Earth to resist the Enemies Fire-works, was carried on under the Conduct of the Master of the Ordnance Antonio de Melo de Castro, the Serjeant-Major Antonio de Leao, Diego de Souza, and Manoel de S. Jago Garcia. The same day at least 70 sick Persons (most Europeans) died in the Hospital; many of the Negroes lay dead in the Street for want of room to be buried in, which produced a most nauseous scent. The Hunger was increased by this time to such a degree, that they began to feed upon Mens Flesh; several Mothers murder'd their own Children to feed upon, two whereof were executed. It was a most doleful Spectacle to hear the poor miserable Wretches cry out in the Streets for Bread, some imploring Heaven for Assistance, others cursing those who were the occasion of their Misery, others expiring and breathing their last in the Houses and Streets.

several

The 9th Domingo de Ramos forced a multitude of poor Wretches out of the Town; but these being driven back by the Enemy, and expos'd to our small shot, perish'd either by them or by Famine upon the shore.

The Enemy advanc'd this day briskly with their Trenches, as we did on our side in our Retrenchments.

The 10th we set fire to the Enemy's Gallery, which however did not succeed according to expectation for want of sufficient Fuel; but Father Damian Vieira, Manoel Guerreiro, and Simon Lopes de Basto did kill many of the Enemy upon this occasion.

The 11th we planted a Cannon betwixt our Palisado's against their Gallery, but they had strengthened it so well that we could effect nothing of moment. One of our Soldiers run over to them.

The 12th we began two other Mines with incredible labour, but indifferent success, for want of skilful Engineers. Four selected Men were posted in the Redoubt of S. John's Bastion, who defended that Post, which was within a few Rods from the Enemy's Works, with a great deal of Bravery, as they did in most other places, notwithstanding we were reduced to a very inconsiderable number, there being not above five or six Men left in some Companies, as those of Diego de Souza de Castro, Manoel de S. Jago Garcia, and Don Diego de Vasconcellos, who perform'd Wonders in the Defence of the Bastion of S. John.

The 13th the Enemy having receiv'd a Reinforcement out of two Yachts, they beat'd very hard in their Mine on the Bastion of S. John under favour of their Cannon, which play'd incessantly: At that time Father Damian Vieira kill'd a stout Hollander who had the Direction of the Work, which advanced apace, tho we play'd them very warmly with our Fireworks. Two of our Soldiers deserted to the Enemy.

The 18th we began to work on our Countermine from the foot of the Bastion of S. John towards that of S. Stephen, under the Direction of Father Damian

Vieira, Simon Lopes de Basto and John Ferreira d'Abreu, whilst the Serjeant-Major Antonio de Leao, Diego de Souza de Castro, and Ruy Lopes Coutinho ply'd the Enemy with their Fireworks, and other combustible Matter.

The same day we got intelligence by an Advice-Boat that the so long expected Succours under the Command of Francisco de Seixas Cabreira was come upon our Coast; it consisted of 21 Ships, and two Galliots with Provisions, one whereof was upon the King's account, the other of Simon Souza, a Gentleman of Honour, who took Compassion of our present Condition. They set sail from Goa the 29th of March; but as they were endeavouring to make the Cape Comorin, one of the Galliots, in which was Simon de Souza, was attack'd so furiously by a Dutch Vessel coming from Caleoulang with Pepper, that after having lost her Mast she sunk, Simon de Souza being narrowly sav'd with a few Soldiers, and carried to Columbo. The Dutch Ship then falling in among the rest fought so manly, that she forced our Ships to retreat into the Harbour of Tuticorin, from whence they could not come to Columbo till August; tho if the said Fleet had arriv'd safely, they had brought scarce Rice enough to serve only for a little time.

About the same time Father Damian Vieira, John Ferreira d'Abreu, and Simon Lopes de Basto, went with some other Officers (call'd Reformado's by the Portugueses) into one of our Mines. Father Damian and Lieut. Nunes going about 6 paces before the rest, to discover whether any of the Enemys were at hand, and being mistaken by their Comrades for Hollanders, these discharged their Musketoons upon them, notwithstanding which the Jesuit escaped miraculously the danger, without receiving the least hurt. This happy escape was attributed to the Prayers of Father Frey Luys a Capucin, to whom such as were going upon some desperate Enterprize us'd to recommend themselves.

The 15th Nicholas de Moura escap'd out of Prison (where he was detain'd ever since the business of the Count d'Obidas) and with five Milices went over to the Enemy, as did much at the same time a Serjeant and a Soldier. About 80 Paces from the Gate of Rajuba the Enemy batter'd part of our Wall betwixt the Bastions of Madre de Deos and S. Sebastian, from a Battery of 5 pieces of Cannon, from whence they shot 350 Cannon-Balls against it in one day.

Now, if the defect of the Succours designed for Columbo.

A strange Escape.

Reid. The 16th we made a false Alarm to try whether every one would repair readily to his Post: two new-listed Soldiers took this opportunity to desert, and being now destitute of Men to work in our Mines, nobody was excused from that Service, from the Governor to the private Centinel.

The 17th the Enemy having fix'd another Cannon upon the Battery before the Gate of Rajuba, they laid the Wall level with the ground; our People being so weakened by Famine, that they were not in a condition to carry thither any Fascines or Earth to repair it. At the same time Manoel Frago, a Reform'd Captain who had done signal Services in the Indies, and especially in Ceylon, went over to the Enemy, because his Pay (which was given to others who much less deserv'd it) was refused him, nay he could not even get Sustainance for his Money, which put him upon this desperate Resolution; two common Soldiers Natives of India deserted at the same time. There died such a vast number every day in the Hospital for want of Necessaries, that many of the Soldiery chose rather to abide with their Companies, where they expir'd in sight of their Comrades.

The Enemy receiv'd a Succour of two Ships, a Yacht and a Galliot, whereas the poor Besieged had not the least Relief in seven Months.

The 18th Mr. Adrian van der Meyden Governor of Gale, sent us a Letter (their General being lately dead) and to terrify us the more, presented all his Forces in order of Battel betwixt his Trenches; but our Men commanded by Alfonso Correa, John Ferrao, d'Abreu, Manoel Pereira Mitofo, Ignatio Fernandes, Simon Lopes de Basto, and Father Damian Vieira, made a vigorous Sally the next following Night out of the Gate Rajuba, when Francisco Afca a Reform'd Captain took the opportunity to desert us.

The 19th Diego de Souza de Castro was sent with an Answer to the Governor's Letter; and the Son of Manoel de Souza went over to the Enemy.

The 20th a Soldier deserted from the Bastion of S. Cruz, on which side the Enemy had attack'd us with the greatest fury ever since their loss sustain'd there under the Command Caspar d'Aranja Pereira, who succeeded Manoel d'Abreu Godinho, after his Post was assign'd him, behind the Wall betwixt St. John's and S. Stephen's Bastion. The City Major having four Bufflers left which had drawn a Waggon for a considerable time, had them kill'd for the use of the Garrison, who, after the Meat was consumed, feasted also upon the Hides, which they cut into small pieces.

The 21st the Enemy had drawn a Line of Communication from the Battery near the Gate of Rajuba to the Lake: At the same time five Persons were wounded by one of their Bombs, and Capt. Manoel Guerreiro mortally, who had kill'd many a brave Dutch-man with his Fusée during this Siege.

The 22d the Enemy having set fire to our Countermine, the brave Joan Ferrao, d'Abreu and Simon Lopes de Basto, were the chiefest that gave their Assistance in quenching of it amongst a shower of Bullets and Hand-granadoes. At the same time a Tópas went over to the Enemy, the only one that deserted of that kind, tho we had a good number of them among us, who for the most part died with the Portugueses in the Defence of the City.

The 23d Father Damian Vieira, John d'Abreu, John Pereira (Inhabitants of S. Thomas) Simon Lopes de Basto, Manoel Pereira Mitofo, Sebastian Rodrigues, Ignatio Fernandes, Joseph Coelho and Manoel Ferreira Gomes, got early in the morning cross the Fens, in order to surprize one of the Enemy's Works, but were so warmly received, that they were glad to retreat, and fight their way through the Dutch, who had enclosed them on all sides.

The 24th a Tony was sent to get Intelligence, the Enemy fir'd most furiously from their Battery against S. Stephen's Bastion and the Gate of Rajuba, where the Wall being laid level with the ground, the Houses suffer'd much by their Cannon.

The 25th the Enemy planted two pieces of Cannon at the extremity of their Trenches against S. Stephen's Bastion, and Raphaël de Torres a Prisoner for Debt, escaped out of Prison.

The 26th the Dutch continued to play without intermission upon the Bastions of S. John, S. Stephen and Madre de Deus. The same day 9 Portugueses were buried in one Pit or Grave, there being no place left to bury them in. A Candil of Rice was sold at that time for 2500 Seraphylins, or Gilders, and a Candil of Wheat for 3400 Gilders, and happy was he who could purchase it; for you would see Women throw their Babies into the Streets for want of Suck and other Sustainance, and others to part with their Jewels for a slender Measure of Rice, a Commodity more precious at that time than all the precious Stones. During this general Calamity the City-Major Manoel Marques Gorian shew'd himself a true Patriot in all his Actions, but especially in distributing what Rice he had left among the Soldiers, which if he had fold must have amounted to a considerable Sum of Money at that juncture; but he was willing to part with all, in hopes to preserve the Place for his King. At the same time a false Attack was made near the Gate of Rajuba.

The 27th one of our Serjeants belonging to Capt. Santiago's Company deserted to the Enemy. At the same time we saw them carry on their Trenches from the Battery raised against the Gate of Rajuba, towards the Bastion of S. Sebastian. Their Batteries continued to play without intermission day and night. The same night Father Damian Vieira with seven more made a Sally upon the said Trenches, and carried off most of the Tools of their Workmen. Simon Lopes de Basto took this opportunity of sending two Spies into the Enemy's Camp, who being discover'd had much ado to save themselves, being forc'd to pass through a shower of the Enemy's Bullets. They return'd the 29th, and brought Advice of the Death of General Hulst, and the Commodore * of the Dutch Fleet. At the same time an Advice-Boat † carrying three Guns came into our Harbour, aboard whereof was the Fiscal. An Alarm was order'd to be given at four in the Morning with the sound of Drums, Trumpets, and other Warlike Instruments, and a general discharge of our Cannon and small Arms.

The 30th Father Damian Vieira, Simon Lopes de Basto, John Pereira, Alfonso Correa, Sebastian Rodrigues, and Joseph Coelho, went out to take a view of the Enemy's Works, and advanced within 10 paces of them, which they found defended by a kind of Breast-work made up with Hurdles; notwithstanding which they attack'd them with Sword in hand.

The 1st of May the Enemy desir'd to have their Prisoners exchange'd for some of ours, which being agreed to, the second we deliver'd up eight of their Prisoners, the only Remnants of those taken in the last general Assault, in lieu of which we had as many of ours restor'd to us. They then began a fresh to play most furiously from their Mortars and Cannon.

The 3d at seven in the Morning, Father Damian, John d' Abreu, and Simon Lopes de Basto went without the Fortifications, to gather up the Bullets near the Bastion of S. Stephen, which used to be taken up by the Enemy in the night time. Father Damian Vieira, Simon Lopes, and two more made another Sally, to level some of the Enemy's Works, but without Success. The same day two Soldiers went over to the Enemy.

The 4th Father Vieira, Simon Lopes, Francisco Valente dos Campos, Antonio Madeira, John Pereira, Manoel Pereira Matoso, Alfonso Correa, Manoel Pereira Gomes, Manoel Nogueira Freire, and Thomas Pereira Lete, made a vigorous Sally, and with Sword in hand attack'd the Enemy's Batteries raised against the Outworks of S. Stephen, S. Sebastian, and the Bastion of Madre de Deos, with such Success, that they ruin'd them entirely, and set fire to the Fascines, Hurdles and other Wood-work that sustain'd them, notwithstanding the Dutch came with a considerable Body to the relief of their Countrymen, but were repulsed not without a considerable loss, and among the rest one of their bravest Officers, who was buried under a triple Salvo of their Firelocks; so that our People remain'd Masters of the Posts, and return'd victorious into the City.

The 5th Ignatio Fernandes, Manoel de Santiago Garcia, Sebastian Rodrigues, John Pereira de Lago, and Father Damian Vieira (who never staid behind upon such like occasions) made another Sally, but not meeting with any Enemy where they expected him, return'd without effecting any thing.

The 7th about six in the Morning (it having been rainy before, which is a rarity here at this season) the Enemy made an Assault upon the Bastion of S. John, defended by Don Diego Vasconcellos, and two Youths, Don Constantino de Menezes, and Diego Jaques, both under 14 years of Age, all the Soldiers being swept away by Famine; for within these two months above 400 Men died in our Hospital, and our so long expected Succours being block'd up at Tutecoryn, we were past all hopes of Succours, whereas at Goa there was nothing to be heard of but Divertisements. To be short, the Enemy made themselves Masters * of the Bastion, after having kill'd the Captain and the two Youths, who defended themselves like Lions set upon by a multitude of Dutch Dogs. This done, they turn'd the Cannon against the City, whereby many of the Portugueses that were were hastening to its relief, were slain in the Streets. The second Bastion, assaulted at the same time by the Dutch, was bravely defended by Manoel Figueiros, who with two pieces of Cannon kill'd abundance of them; but being constantly seconded by fresh Troops, especially of the Cingalese, they sent such showers of Arrows and Bullets among our People, that they were forced to quit that Bastion also.

From thence marching into the City, they were met at the entrance of a Street by the Commander in chief Antonio de Melo de Castro, Diego de Souza de Castro, Father Anthony Nunes the Jesuit, Sebastian Rodrigues, John Pereira, Vincente de Silva, Francisco Valente dos Campos, Alfonso Correa, Sebastian Pereira, John Ferrao, d'Abreu, Antonio de Magalhães, and an Ensign under Capt. Alla. These, tho few in number, but many in Valour, charg'd the Dutch with incomparable Bravery. The Portuguese Alexander Manoel Marques Gorjaor, making the best of his way over the dead Carcasses that cover'd the ground, singl'd out a Dutch Captain of a Gigantick Bulk, who shot him with a Pistol through the Body, notwithstanding which he run him through with his Sword, and sent him immediately to the other World; then pushing on his Fortune, made the Dutch give ground, and having rallied his Men secur'd the Post for that time. The Dutch renew'd the Charge five times successively, but were as often courageously repulsi'd by Antonio de Melo de Castro, and those few that follow'd him; and being resolv'd either to conquer or to die, they broke in with Sword in hand amongst the Enemy, and again possess'd themselves of the first Bastion, and soon after also of the second: the first who enter'd the last was Antonio de Magalhães, who fought with an uncommon Zeal against the Enemy; for before they became Masters of our Cannon, he ply'd them very warmly from behind the Wall (the only defence he had left) so that it cost them many a brave Fellow before they could make themselves Masters of it; and being now posted again upon the same Bastion, he was bravely seconded by two Demi-Cannons from the new Bastion, and a smart shower of Fire-works, which set the circumambient Air into such a flame and smoak, that at a distance it appear'd like the Mouth of Hell.

At the same time the Governor Antonio de Souza Coutinho and Francisco de Melo de Castro did all that could be expected from brave Men on the Couras, or the Bastion of Xaverius, both by way of Command, and by charging the Cannon in Person, and performing the Duty of common Soldiers. The Fathers Philippo and Pedro de Castelbranco, both Austrian Friars, were not behind-hand with the rest in giving their utmost Assistance for the defence of the Place, being appointed to keep a watchful Eye upon the Enemy whenever they were going to alarm or amuse us with false Attacks.

It must certainly be confess'd, that this Engagement was one of the most remarkable that ever happen'd in the East, considering that a few, and these most wounded, sick, or weakened by Famine, did engage a much greater number, continually sustain'd by fresh Troops, from six a Clock in the Morning till eight in the Evening, during which time the Enemy was repulsi'd not only once but five several times, by a much inferior number, who having not the least relief or time to breathe, were forced all that time to endure the danger and fatigues of the Action, which cost the Enemy above 400 Men kill'd, besides those wounded and burnt by our Fire-works: On our side we lost also the flower of our Forces, some whereof were slain, others wounded and burnt to that degree, that they were disabled from bearing of Arms for a considerable time after. Among the slain were, Diego de Vasconcelhos, who had given a thousand Proofs of his Bravery in this Siege; Father Antonio Nunes the Jesuit, a Pattern of Virtue, who signaliz'd himself not only all along on the Bastion of S. John, as well as in other parts of the City, by encouraging the Soldiers, comforting the Sick, and burying the Dead: He was shot at the Gate of the Bastion with a Musquet-Ball, receiv'd afterwards a deep Cut, and at last slain by a hand-granado after he had kill'd several of the Enemy with his Musquetoon. At the same time died in the Bed of Honour (after they had given a thousand Proofs of their Bravery) Alfonso Correa, Vincente da Silva, Francisco Valente dos Campos, Sebastian Pereira, and that brave Sea-Commander Sebastian d'Abreu Godinho, besides an Ensign, a Native of Pazain, belonging to Capt. Alla's Company; Manoel de Seixas an Inhabitant of Columbo, and Antonio Caminha d'Almeida, were sorely burnt; Diego de Souza de Castro was mortally wounded with two Bullets, notwithstanding which he would not retire from the Engagement till he receiv'd a deep Cut. Manoel Caldeira de Britto

Vidave was wounded by a Musquet-ball, as were likewise John Ferrao d'Almeida, Andreas de Seixas, Manoel Nogueira Freixo, Manoel de Souza, and Manoel Segal-do. Laurence D'ays a Native of Columbo, was wounded with no less than 3 Musquet-balls; Rui Lopes Continbo, Domingos Pires, Inhabitants of Negapatan, Lieut. Abran, Captain S. Jago, Manoel Correa, Commander in Chief upon the Bastion of S. John, Francisco Pereira, Simon Lopes de Bello, and many more were miserably burnt. Most of these received their Wounds by the accidental setting on fire of a Vessel fill'd with Gunpowder, thro' the carelessness of our own People. The Reverend Father Paulo was wounded, as he was furnishing the Combatants with fireworks, as was likewise Father Manoel Peller, who was touch'd by two Bullets, without receiving the least harm by 'em; a Granado did also fall just before his Feet, without doing him the least harm, as he was busy in defending his Post with Alvaro Rodrigues Boralho at the Gate of Rajuba.

Father Damian Vieira with his Company did considerable Mischief to the Dutch from the Church of St. Domingo, being bravely seconded by Caspar Aranza Pereira, Knight of the Croix, and an old Servant of the King (who succeeded the City-Major in his Place) with 9 or 10 of his Followers; this being the Place most exposed to the Enemy: The Commander in chief Antonio de Meia de Castro, no less annoy'd them from the new Bastion, and with their Shot so scour'd the Streets, that there was no safe Passage for the Dutch and Cingalese.

The Dutch without the Town, did on the other hand exert their utmost Efforts against the old Bastion, which being almost laid level with the Ground, the Wall without serv'd for a Breastwork; and being continually supply'd with fresh Troops of the Candinefes and others, put our Men, but few in Number, most of them sick, wounded or half-starved, and besides that but ill provided with Ammunition, very hard to it on that side. For by this time we had not only but few Men, but also not above 15 days Provisions left, and scarce so much Gunpowder as would suffice for two Charges of our Artillery.

Things being come to this Pass, it was debated in the Council (consisting of 34 Persons) whether it were not best to think of a Surrender; 13 were of Opinion rather to die upon the Spot, than to treat with the Enemy: but the most being of a contrary Opinion, and nine of them positively insisting upon it, that it would be most conducing for the King's Interest, that seeing the Place was no longer tenable, to preserve the Remnants of these brave Fellows, who had behaved themselves so courageously, it was agreed to enter upon a Treaty.

Accordingly the 10th, Manoel Cabreira was sent with a Letter to Mr. John van der Laan, concerning the Conditions of the intended Treaty; an Answer to which being sent the 11th, Laurence Pereira de Britto, Diego Lotaon de Souza, and Hieronymo de Lucent were dispatch'd as Plenipotentiaries, to demand a Cessation of Arms till the 25th of May, against which time we expected the so long desir'd Succours. But the Enemy, who were not ignorant of our present Circumstances, would hearken to no other Conditions, than to surrender the City the next day by 12 a Clock at Noon, which if we refused, they threatn'd to give us no Quarter; so that we were forc'd to obtain the best Terms we could, without any longer Hesitation, the Articles whereof being drawn up in half (for want of time) I had not the Opportunity to peruse them, and therefore can only tell you upon this Head, that Columbo was forc'd to surrender, tho I can't precisely tell upon what Terms.

No sooner was the News of the Treaty divulg'd among the People, but nothing was heard but dreadful Outcries and Lamentations: The Ecclesiasticks (or at least the most cautious among them) hid the Images and Relicks, and unturnish'd the Altars, for fear they should be defiled by the Hereticks, as had frequently been done before upon such like Occasions. The Dutch having taken possession of the Bastions, our Garrison consisting of 90 Soldiers and 100 arm'd Inhabitants, including Officers, nay even the lame and maim'd, marched out, some with their Swords and Musquets in one Hand, and a Stick or a Crutch in the other.

The Hollanders seeing these poor Remnants, most of which appear'd more like Skeletons than living Men, were astonish'd at their Bravery, in the defence of a Place they had been forced to purchase with so much Blood. Ten Dutch Companies march'd into the City, at the Head of which appear'd the General, Adrian van der Meyden, and Mr. John van der Laan on Horseback, not to reckon the Cingalese sent to guard the Governor of Columbo's House; which was no sooner done, but a Messenger was sent to him to demand Si-

Baudens. mon Lopes de Basto; being not in a condition to refuse him, he order'd immediately the said Simon Lopes, with a certain Arache of Negumbo, and some Dutch Deputies, to be deliver'd to him, who were all hang'd on a Gibbet soon after in sight of the Portugueses, who were forc'd to be Eye-witnesses of the miserable Exit of this Simon Lopes, who for the signal Services he had done them in the Siege, deserv'd to have a Monument of Brass erected to his Memory. To the Shame of those he it spoken, who ought to have endeavour'd to afford him a much better Recompence for his past Services, and rather exposed him in a Boat to the chance of the Seas, than to a certain shameful Death.

The Hollanders were sufficiently sensible of the Bravery of the Portugueses during this Siege, which lasted 7 Months (without receiving the least Succours or Supplies) by the Loss they sustain'd of their bravest Soldiers and best Officers, which amounted to 3000 Men, besides the wounded and maimed; besides that the Charges of the Siege amounted to more than would have built such another Columbo.

The General and Mr. John van der Laan were no sooner settled in their Habitations, but they gave Liberty to the Soldiers to plunder the Place (contrary to their Parole) for one day, which was extended to five by Mr. van der Laan, viz. from the time of their coming into the City, till the time we march'd out, which was perform'd by the Hereticks with the utmost Rigour; nay whilst our Soldiers were embarking, and the Inhabitants within three days after, they continued their Robberies even upon the Sea-shoar. Almost all our People went aboard along with them, except a few who staid behind with the Governor and Deputy-Governor; and some, that (by great Promises) were engag'd in the King of Candy's Service, which perhaps has happen'd by a singular Providence of God, as a means to influence that King's Councils, in order to expel the Dutch one time or other out of the Isle of Ceylon.

Our People were transported to Negapatan, where they were most kindly received and provided with Medicines, Clothing and other Necessaries by the Inhabitants, till they received their Pay, after the Arrival of Antonio Amiral de Alencar Governor of Jafnapatnam, who at the same time intreated Antonio Mendes d'Araba (who after having been detained a Prisoner at Cale), was now come to Negapatan) to go along with him to Jafnapatnam, in the Quality of his Deputy-Governor, as not questioning but that he should be the next against whom the Enemy would exert their utmost Efforts, which he accepted of; tho considering the Fatigues and Miseries he had endur'd of late, he might very well have excused the same, as well as the rest of the Soldiers; who notwithstanding this, half sick and half starv'd as they were, did embark for one of the most dangerous Places in Ceylon, to give fresh Proofs of their Bravery.

This was the end of this Siege, one of the most remarkable in all its Circumstances that ever was heard of, considering that a Place of that bigness was defended by so slender a Number for the space of seven Months (without the least Supplies) against a powerful Force of the Dutch and Cingaleses, who first defeated the Portuguese Forces (composed of the Flower of their Men) in two smart Engagements; so that the whole Number of the Portugueses was at last reduc'd to 200 Souls. The Account of this Siege being spread among the Eastern Moors and Pagans by several Persons, who had been Eye-Witnesses of the great Actions perform'd there, did beget an incredible Reputation of the Bravery of the Portugueses among those Nations, tho the same proved unfortunate in the end.

Thus his Majesty of Portugal lost a Place, and with it a whole Kingdom, threetimes bigger than Portugal it self, and much richer and more plentiful, the very Center of the World, the richest Tract of Land under the Sun, and with it (probably) all that is in the possession of the Portugueses, to the South of Cape Comorin. His Majesty lost a considerable Squadron of Ships sent to the Relief of Columbo. The first Squadron intended for this Expedition, did come no higher than the Cape Comorin, the pretended Succours from Manaar came to nothing. And the second Squadron promised by the Viceroy of Goa in January, did not set sail till the 29th of March, and was forced to retreat without effecting any thing.

The want of Money was alledged as the main Reason of this delay, when it is sufficiently known that the King had both Ships and Money enough at Goa, which could not have been better employed than for the Relief of a Place of such vast Importance: We know what vast Sums Nuno Alvares Botelho consumed at Mossambique, which was nevertheless not disapproved by

by the King of Castile, and why might not the same be expected from the King of Portugal? To conclude, Columbo, and with it the whole Isle of Ceylon, being lost for want of Succours, all such as have deserved well in the Defence of that Place, ought to be rewarded for their Services, as those who have been neglectful in their Duty for the Preservation thereof, deserve condign Punishment at his Majesty's Hands. And as nothing is more common, than that Courtiers employ their Favourites in Places of Trust (without any regard to Merit) and afterwards endeavour to conceal their Miscalriages from the King; it is for this reason that we lay this account at your Majesty's Feet, taken from the Journal kept at Columbo and other authentick Records, confirm'd by the Testimony of many Persons of Credit, both Ecclesiasticks and Laymen, that were present from the beginning to the end of this Siege.

CHAP. XL.

The Origin of Columbo. Arrival of the Portugueses. Their Engagements with and Conquest of the Moors. They fortify Columbo. Raja Singa dissatisfied.

THE City of Columbo is an antient City, seated at 6  $\frac{1}{2}$  Degrees of North Latitude, in a pleasant Country, near a delightful River; which questionless induc'd the Portugueses to fix upon this Place for their chief Residence in this Island. For Emanuel King of Portugal, having been fully inform'd concerning the Condition of Ceylon, order'd a Fort to be erected there, for the better Establishment of his Affairs there, and to curb the Emperor. Lup. de Britto being sent thither with a good Number of Soldiers and Workmen, John Silva deliver'd the said Fort up to him. For Zoares who was lately sail'd with 20 Ships and 700 Landmen to Ceylon (after Laurence d'Almeida, who some Years before enter'd into a Confederacy with the King of Ceylon) had just before made an Agreement with the Governor of Columbo about a Settlement in that Place, which he look'd upon as the most proper for a Fortification, both in respect of its Situation, and the Plenty of the best Cinnamon that grows in the whole Isle, being seated in the Form of a Crescent, and affording safe Anchorage for Ships, provided they are not too bulky.

Accordingly it was agreed to erect a Fortification there, under pretence of securing the Commerce of the Portugueses, but in effect to curb the King and the Natives. He who reign'd at that time in the Isle being a Brahman, was not a little jealous of the Europeans; but being sensible to what pitch of Greatness the King of Cochin was lately arriv'd by the Assistance of the Portugueses, he gave his Consent, tho not without some Reluctancy, and consequently was of no long Continuance. For the Saracens who were chased thither from the Continent, and had settled their Traffick in this Isle, found means by the Promises of great Sums of Money, and of their Assistance, to entice the King and Court to oppose the Designs of the Portugueses, who intended to enslave them, under pretence of settling their Commerce; for which purpose they rais'd some Works, and having mounted some Iron Cannon upon them, seiz'd some Portugueses that came ashore, without suspecting any harm.

Zoares coming ashore with his Workmen, in order to raise the intended Fortifications, was surpriz'd to find some Forts erected by the Cingaleses; and having receiv'd certain Intelligence, that the same had been done at the Instigation of the Moors, he easily guess'd that nothing but Force was likely to establish the Portugueses in Ceylon. Accordingly having landed his Men, he attack'd the Enemy, who at a distance somewhat gall'd his Forces with their Arrows; but after they came to a close Engagement, the Cingaleses were quickly put to the Rout, and pursued by the Portugueses with considerable Loss: The Portugueses had many wounded but few killed, among the last was the brave Panieco, lately come from Malacca.

Zoares having allow'd one day only to his People to refresh themselves, began the next Morning an Entrenchment, reaching from the Harbour to the Seaside, without the least Opposition: within this he order'd a Fort to be erected, whereupon having mounted his Cannon, and strengthen'd it by a Wall that surrounded it, he soon made the King repent of his inconstancy, who sent his Envoys to Zoares, asking Pardon for what was pass'd, and desiring that the former Alliance might be renew'd: But Zoares refused to hearken to these Propositions, demanding Satisfaction for the Affront, and a yearly Tribute to be paid to K. Emanuel; which the King of Ceylon (who dreaded the Portugueses) not daring to refuse, it was agreed that he should pay to Portugal an annual Tribute of 124000 Pound Weight of Cinnamon, 12 Rings set with the most precious Rubies and Saphirs, and 6 Elephants, under Condition that K. Emanuel should assist the King of Ceylon and his Successors both by Sea and Land, against all his Enemies.

Force the King to pay a yearly Tribute.

The Treaty being thus concluded, Zoares continu'd his Fortifications, which being brought to perfection with the assistance of the Cingaleses, he left John de Silva with a good Garrison there, and Antonio Miranda Azevedo with four Ships to guard the Coast; which done, he return'd in December to Cochin, where he was received with all imaginable Demonstrations of Joy. Lup. de Britto (before mentioned) succeeding John de Silva, brought along with him abundance of Workmen and Bricklayers, who made a kind of Mortar of the Sea-cockles, and lin'd the Fortifications with a strong Wall, deepned the Ditches, and added what Works they thought necessary for the Accomplishment thereof.

Till discomfited by the Cingalees.

This created no small Jealousy (not without reason) in the Cingaleses, which was increased by the Insinuations of the Moorish Merchants, who told the King that their Prophecies were like to prove too true, since he was now made sensible, that these Foreigners had not only excluded all other Strangers from the Traffick of this Isle, but also had made him a Tributary of Portugal, and shortly would make him their Vassal, if he did not in time hearken to the Counsel of his Friends.

These Insinuations had the desired effect, for the King not only cut off all Supplies of Provisions and other Necessaries from the Fort; but the common People being also incensed by these Discourses, murdered several Portugueses, who ventured a little too far without the Fort. De Britto at first dissembled the matter, but finding he could no longer contain his Soldiers (burning with Revenge) he chose 150 of his best Men, and with them assailed the City of Columbo

(which lay near the Fort) just about noon, when most of the Inhabitants were asleep to avoid the Heat of the Day, and at the first Alarm betook themselves to their Heels, leaving the City to the Enemies Mercy.

De Britto seeing himself Master of the Place without the least Opposition, forbid his Soldiers to plunder, or commit any other Ontrages; but order'd the Women and Children to be tied to the Posts of the Doors, with an Intention to convince the Cingaleses, that he was not come like an Enemy to destroy, but like a Friend to preserve them. But as he had but little reason to rely upon their Generosity, he thought fit to make a Trial of their Inclinations; so he ordered some Houses that lay next to the Portuguese Fort to be set on fire: this had the desired Success; for the Cingaleses out of the Affection they bore to their Wives and Children, had gather'd all their Force in order to relieve them at any rate; but finding their Houses on fire, run first with all Speed to quench the Flame, whereby Britto got leisure to retreat in good Order into the Fort, and to provide himself against the intended Assault, which however could not be done without some Loss, above 30 of his Men having been wounded in the Retreat.

However Britto reaped no other Benefit by this Enterprize, than that the Cingaleses (exasperated to the highest Degree) besieged the Fort with 20000 Men; and tho they were often bravely repuls'd, yet did they persist in their Resolution, in hopes of reducing the Place by Famine, because the approaching Month of May (the first of the Winter-Season) did bereave them of all hopes of Succours. In the mean while the Cingaleses did not cease to carry on their Works to the very Ditch, from whence they annoy'd the Portugueses with their Arrows, their Number making up the Defect of their Force, which was not comparable to the Portuguese Artillery and Fire-arms. They also gather'd up 500 Bullets that were shot at them from the Fort, of which they made the best use they could.

But what most troubled the Portugueses was, that they were to fetch all their fresh Water without the Fort, and that they were extremely harass'd with continual watching: However they hoped to defend the Place till the next Summer, in hopes of Succours, in which they at last found themselves frustrated; Antonio de Lemos coming only with one Galley

The Cingalese in the mean time had found means to erect two Wooden Towers fill'd with Earth, which being plac'd near the Ditch, they intended to make use of to cover their Pioneers, whilst they were busy in filling it up. Britto was not a little startled at this Device, and finding himself now reduc'd to such Straits, as to be obliged to venture at all, he order'd Antonio de Lemos to draw as near to the Shore as possibly he could, and to endeavour to ruin these Towers with his great Cannon, whilst he would make a Sally with 350 Men, and attack the Enemy with the utmost Vigour; this was put in execution accordingly with such Success, that the Towers were entirely ruin'd, and the Cingalese beaten out of their Works.

Notwithstanding this Defeat, the Cingalese, encourag'd by the Moors who came to their Assistance with 150 Horse, and 25 Elephants, resolved to try their utmost against the Portuguese. These Elephants having Turrets fill'd with Men arm'd with Cutlasses on both sides, did strike no small Terror at first into the Portuguese, but afterwards turn'd to the disadvantage of the Cingalese; for these Beasts not able to bear the Wounds that were given them by the Portuguese Artillery, soon turn'd their Backs, and put their own Troops into Disorder, with a great Slaughter among the Cingalese and Moors, who now beginning to despair of Success, raised the Siege immediately, and the King sent his Ambassadors to Britto, to ask Pardon for what was past, and to desire a Reconciliation.

Thus we see how the Portuguese have been forced to settle, or at least to maintain themselves in Ceylon by the Sword; and the better to attain their end, it was their constant Practice in the Indies to sow the Seeds of Division among those Princes; an Instance whereof is given us by Maffaeus himself, in his History of the Indies.

The King of Cota had three Sisters Sons, who (according to the Custom of the Country) being his Legal Heirs, began to be very uneasy at the long Life of their Uncle, found means to remove him out of the way, and to divide the Country betwixt them: But Parca Pandar the eldest of the three, having murder'd the second, Maduyn the youngest began also soon after to conceive a Jealousy at his Brother's Proceeding, complaining that he was not rewarded according to his Deserts, as having been the Adviser and Executer of the Murder of their Uncle. Parca Pandar finding his Brother dissatisfied, thought it his securest way to fore-arm himself against him, and therefore enter'd into a Treaty with the King of Portugal, to settle the Succession of the Crown upon his Daughter's Son (with the Exclusion of Maduyn) directly contrary to the Custom of that Country. Maduyn exasperated to the highest degree at this Proceeding, denounc'd open War against his Brother, and after having ravag'd the Country thro which he pass'd, laid Siege to Cota.

The elder Brother disdaining to be attack'd in his City, march'd out against Maduyn, and pitch'd his Tent in an advantageous Post. He had a Troop of Portuguese in his Camp, one whereof (whether hir'd thereunto by Maduyn, or by chance, is uncertain) shot him thro the Head. After his Death the Portuguese set his Daughter's Son upon the Throne with the usual Solemnities: but in consideration of his Youth, and the Weakness of his Title, introduced contrary to the Custom of the Country, they much feared the Hatred of the People, back'd by the Interest of Maduyn; they sent therefore for Succours to Noronha, who soon after arriv'd with a good Squadron of Ships and 3000 Men, under pretence of assisting the young King (as Maffaeus expressly tells us) but in effect to make himself Master of the Treasure buried at Columbo, 100000 Crowns of which he carried off along with him.

In the mean while Maduyn fortified himself with all possible Diligence in the City of Ceta-Vaca, nine Leagues from Columbo (according to Maffaeus) but Noronha having with little Opposition taken and burnt the said Place, return'd victorious to Goa. What further became of Maduyn, is not mention'd by Maffaeus, or any other Historian.

Thus we have seen the beginning of Columbo under the Portuguese, and its Surrender to the Dutch 1656. They found about 6 or 7 Loads of musty Rice in the Place, some Packs of Cinnamon, good Store of Areck, some good, some not, 24 Light Frigates, 9 whereof were sunk, 1500 Guilders ready Money coin'd in the City, 33 Packs of Clothes, 25 Bells of Metal, 60 Brads, and 68 Iron pieces of Cannon, one Mortar, and six lesser Pieces, 10000 Cannon-Bullets of different Sizes and Weight, 6500 Pound Weight of good Gunpowder, and 1150

Raja Singa's Letter. "Yesterday and the Day before yesterday it was reported at our Court, that there was a Treaty on foot with the Portugueses about the Surrender of the City, since which I have receiv'd Intelligence, that the same is brought to effect. If it be true, you ought to have given notice thereof to our Imperial Majesty, which is "the reason, I can't as yet give entire Credit to it: But in case it should be so, I desire to know with all possible speed the Articles of the said Treaty. Whilst our Beloved Director-General was alive, I writ to him concerning certain matters he promised should be perform'd, which I desire you to remember.

CHAP. XLI.

Deferters severely punished. Raja Singa forbids all Commerce with the Hollanders. His Letter of Complaint. Divers Portuguese Ships taken. Raja Singa ravages and plunders the Lands and Subjects belonging to the Company.

*Deferters
with Death.*

IT was now thought high time to punish such as had deserted our Service during the Siege. Among these Simon Lopes, a Portuguese by Birth, who had 50 Guilders per Month Pay in our Service, and after we were repulsed in the general Assault was gone over to the Enemy, did lead the Van, and was, notwithstanding all the Intercessions of the Portugueses, hang'd on a Gibbet. Two other Europeans (whose Names we will pass by in silence) underwent the same Fate; and another was severely whipp'd, and forc'd to stand with a Rope about his Neck for 12 Hours under the Gallows.

The next thing to be done was to take care of the Transportation of the Portugueses, among whom the Ecclesiasticks and Inhabitants of Columbo were sent beyond Sea to Mr. Laurence Pit our Governor, who was to dispatch them further to the Isle of S. Thomas. About that time we receiv'd a Letter from Raja Singa, wherein he sufficiently testify'd his Dissatisfaction. Walraven Thomas our Book-keeper sent word from Montual, that he had sent the Corporal Hans Jacob Lambert, to Mardykers, and a Serjeant to the Pals of Nacclegamme, with Orders to oppose the Forces gather'd thereabouts by the Disfaves of Onva, of the four and of the seven Corles; which not agreeing with the Sentiments of the General and his Council, they order'd the said Corporal to send back the Mardykers to Montual, and not to stop the Passage of any of the Royal Forces, for fear of giving any occasion of Offence to the Emperor.

Notwithstanding this, we soon found the effects of the Dissatisfaction of Raja Singa, who having cut off all means of receiving Supplies by Land from the Sabandar, Don John de Costa was dispatch'd to the Disfaves of Saffragam, and those of the four and seven Corles, who told him, that their People were at their full Liberty (tho we knew to the contrary) to bring their Provisions to our Market, but that they durst not give a Visit to the General, without express Orders from Court.

The 22d of March, the Yachts the Mars and Lyon came to an anchor in the Road of Columbo, aboard one whereof was the Vice-Commodore Roothaus, who (upon the Receipt of a Letter from our Head Factor Mr. Reinier Serooskerke, intimating that a small Yacht laden with Provisions upon the King of Cochin's Account, was gone from thence to Columbo) had left the Yachts Flislingen, Popkensburg, Sea-Coney, the Haddock and the Koman, with two other Vessels on that Coast, who were supplied with fresh Provisions by the Inhabitants of Caylanam. The Inhabitants thereof being very delirious to renew their Commerce with our Company, they were then equipping two Frigats there.

About the same time notice was given us, that Cannagere Ararchie, a faithful Servant of the Company, had (to our great Dissatisfaction) submitted to the King of Candy, Candy, and that 90 of the Lascaryn Defectors had taken the way of Agretotte. These proved the Forerunners of many ensuing Misfortunes. In the mean while Raj Singa urg'd stily the Surrender of Negumbo and Columbo into his Hands, under pretence that these Places belong'd to him, by virtue of an Agreement made betwixt him, and the late Director-General Mr. Gerard Hulst; upon which account he writ the following Letter.

“OUR Imperial Majesty being very desirous to introduce the Dutch Nation into our Dominions, Adam Wejermold came on this Coast with a Squadron of Ships, just as we had made our selves Masters of Batecalo, when we thought fit to conclude a Peace with him; which being confirmed by Oath, was but slenderly observ'd by some Officers afterwards: As for instance by Captain Burchart Kocks, alias Coque (who was afterwards kill'd by a Soldier at Puntegale) and Commissary Peter Kiest, who being sent as Plenipotentiaries to our Court, did confirm the before-mentioned Peace by Oath; pursuant to which at their Departure for Gale, they took along with them one of our Disfaves, in order to deliver into his Hands the Country of Mauve. But at his coming there, they found means to render the same ineffectual, by finding out certain Difficulties, which made the said Disfave return to our Court, to our great Dissatisfaction. It was about that time that our Beloved Director-General did come into our Kingdom from Holland, with full Power to act as he should find it most suitable to our Service, and to the Establishment of a firm Peace and Friendship; pursuant to which, he deliv'd us by way of Mouth to bury all pass'd Miscarriages in Oblivion, promising at the same time in the Name of the Prince of Orange and the East-India Company, full Satisfaction for the same; as also, that the Fortresses of Negumbo and Columbo (when taken) should be deliver'd into the Hands of our Imperial Majesty, and certain Hollanders to be allotted in the said Places for our Service. It is upon this account that we sent our Auxiliaries to assist our dearly Beloved Hollanders in the taking of Columbo; which being taken since, they are become forgetful of their Promise, and do continue

“to do so to this Day. Your Excellency is left at your own Liberty to do what you think fit, till notice of this Proceeding can be given to the Prince of Orange, and the Honourable Company. But I would have you remember, that such as don't know God and keep their Word, will one time or other be sensible of the ill consequences thereof; I am sensible I have God on my side.

By way of Postscript was writ.

“Two Letters have been dispatch'd from our Imperial Court. Your Excellency has writ in Dutch to George Bloem, but without mentioning any thing relating to our Service. Your Excellency may write such frivolous Pretences to whom you please, but ought not to impose them upon our Imperial Majesty; it being in vain to alledge, that the Director-General had receiv'd his Instructions from Batavia, whereas he brought his full Power along with him out of Holland. Such sinister dealings, as they create no small Jealousy, so I can't see with what Face you can expect any further Credit from us. I have taken care to have this translated into Dutch, that you may have no reason to plead Ignorance. George Bloem shall stay here, till I receive your Answer, when I intend to send him back with a Letter. No more, &c.

From our Imperial Court at Reygammatte, May 11. 1656.

Unto which was annex'd the following Account, not thought fit to be inserted in the Imperial Letter.

“THIS Day, being the 22d of March, his Imperial Majesty having sent for me, order'd the Letter writ in Portuguese to be translated into Dutch, to be sent among others to your Excellency. When I shew'd the Translation to his Majesty, he told me, that after the Arrival of the Director-General in Ceylon, he had sent word to him, that several Rebels shelter'd themselves in and about Columbo, especially one Caspar Figeiro, who had done considerable Damage to his Majesty's Lands; as also concerning certain Presents sent to his Court by the Viceroy of Goa, some whereof were sent only by the said Director-General. His Majesty further deliv'd me to give you

"to understand, that it had been agreed, not to recede in the least from the literal Sense of the Treaty, especially in what related to that Article concerning any City or Place taken with the Assistance of his Majesty's Forces; whereas your Excellency had not as much as taken the least care (since the taking of Columbo) to send to his Majesty his rebellious Subjects, nor any of the Presents, except two Porijam Cats, a Ship, &c. deliver'd by me to his Majesty. The not sending of the Rebels has been very ill re-lish'd here.

Our General took care to send a most obliging Answer to the Emperor's Letter, which however was so far from giving any real Satisfaction to Raja Singa, that on the contrary he conceiv'd such a Hatred against the Dutch, as made him engage with the Portugueses against them. For notice having been sent to our Council by Antonio de Motte, and Manoel Fonseca de Monis, two Portugueses, that they had been solicited by Raja Singa to enter into his Service, with Promises of vast Rewards, and the full Enjoyment of the same Revenues they had been possess'd of before, in their most flourishing Estate; it was order'd that none of the Imperial Soldiers should be for the future admitted into the City, except such as should be sent in the Quality of Messengers from the King, or any of his Disjaves, to the General and Council: 32 Men were also commanded to guard the Passes near Caleture. Most of the Portugueses at Columbo, were sent under a Convoy of a whole Company to Gale; and upon a scrutiny of the Muster-roll, it was found that there were 300 Men missing from among the Lascaryns of Matule, and many more follow'd their Footsteps soon after.

The 30th of May early in the Morning, four Frigates being discover'd near the Shore, towards the side of Galkisse, we took in our Princes Flag, in order to entice them into the Road: the Commodore, who led the Van, perhaps began to suspect the matter, and therefore steer'd his course to the North; but the other three were no sooner come within the reach of our Cannon, but we sent out our small Vessels to fetch their Officers ashore. These told us, that they left the Bar of Goa the 22<sup>d</sup> with six Frigates, and that two of them being separated from the rest by a most violent Tempest near Coulang, were either lost, or perhaps had saved themselves in some Port or other; one of them having been seen without Masts. They added, that a Portuguese Caravan was come to an Anchor in the River of Goa. These six Frigates had aboard 68 Soldiers, besides good Store of Provisions, Ammunition and all other Necessaries, intended for the Relief of Columbo, in case the Squadron under *Francisco de Seix*a should miscarry. Their Cargo stood us in great stead, considering the Scarcity that was among us at that time.

The 1st of June we took another Frigate and a Yacht, the Officers whereof being likewise brought ashore, told us, that the City of Cochin had contributed a good Sum of Money towards the relief of Columbo. Their Letters being open'd, contain'd nothing material, except that they were embroil'd with the King of Cochin.

Certain Advice was brought to the Governor, that the Day before, as the before-mention'd Ships of Cochin were passing along the Shore of Galkisse, the Imperial Disjaves of Matule and Oava, had been seen to give them a Signal with a white Cloth, and had taken abundance of Pains to get aboard them, offering 400 Larynes to the Fishermen, if they would carry them aboard of one or the other; and that they had got ready two Boats, but durst not venture thro the Waves. Considering the Pains the Emperor had lately taken to entice away some of the best Officers belonging to the Company, and divers Outrages committed by the King's Lascaryns in the Park of the Company: These together, I say, seem'd to us the infallible Forerunners of the ensuing Broils.

For it was not long before Cornelius van der Duyn, Deputy-Governor of Matule, sent word from thence, that the King's Officers and Soldiers had forbid all the Inhabitants thereabouts to furnish the Hollanders with Provisions, or to obey their Orders, but to retire into the King's Dominions, where they should have full Liberty to make their Excursions into our Dominions, as they had done already at Billigam, Malimande, and Baigam.

To prevent such like Outrages for the future, three Companies of 40 Men each were sent out of Gale, two of which were order'd towards Accuras, to protect the Inhabitants against the Inroads made by the King's Soldiers, in the quiet possession of such Lands as were granted to the Company by the Emperor; for by this time we began shrewdly to suspect, that that most of the Great Ones were enter'd into a Confederacy with the King against us; this appeas'd by the Tergiversations of the Adigar, who passing by the way of Angretait to Mature, pretended he was come by Orders from our General, which was a manifest Falshood: some of their Proceedings may be seen out of the following Letter.

"Catepitty Apubamy is come to Milimanda, from whence he has sent an Ola or Letter, intimating that he was come by the King's special Order, to take possession of the Country of Mature in his Majesty's Name, and to enjoin all the Inhabitants, not to supply the Dutch with any Provisions or otherwise. He further said, that he had intended to have been with them before this; but being now come with full Authority, he exhorts them to obey the Emperor's Orders, for the Honour of his Court, and of the Disfave of Mature, which if they do, they may assure themselves of all imaginable Favour from the Court. The Disfave of Saffragam has sent the Disfave of Mature, to assist you upon all Occasions.

In Pasdumcorle and Caleture things went at the same rate, where they had taken Cotteneynde, his Mother, and Brother (besides many others) Prisoners, and carried them to the Pass of Caleture: their Intentions appear by the following Ola.

"Tadoculle Mandonnas Apobami makes known to all the Aratches, Lascaryns, and the chief Majorais and Colonels of Caleture, Maccone, and Barbaryn, that as soon as this Ola comes to their Hands, they shall not keep the least Correspondence with the Dutch, nor pay any Duties to them, from the Villages (formerly granted to them) or furnish them with Labourers to work on their Fortifications. Those that shall act contrary to the Tenor of this, must expect to be severely punish'd; wherefore come and join with me.

Manoel Andrado (who signaliz'd himself before Jasnapainam, of which anon) was likewise advertis'd by a Letter from his Brother-in-law, that the King's Forces had wounded a Woman and a Slave near the Pass of Caleture, and that therefore he should keep a watchful Eye over his Lascaryns. About Negumbo they play'd the same Game, and Raja Singa had made his Addresses to Parangatti, the Colonel of Coquille, in hopes by great Promises to bring him over to his Party. On a certain Tree near the Church of Guia de Lobo, was affixed the following Paper.

"THE City of Columbo is now taken, and was according to Agreement to be surrendred to his Majesty, but has not been perform'd; if any fatal Consequences attend this Breach of Promise, we declare our selves innocent thereof: But as we are well assured of his Majesty's good Inclinations towards the Dutch Nation, so if you intend to send any Deputies to treat with him, you shall have Liberty so to do, and a Passport for them.

Our General and Council finding themselves under an absolute Necessity of representing to Raja Singa the Injustice of his Proceedings in a Letter, they told him, that these Proceedings being directly contrary to their mutual Intentions of annoying the Portugueses, and consequently tending both to his Majesty and the Company's Prejudice, they desir'd that all Hostilities might be laid aside, and instead thereof their former good Correspondence be renew'd. They desir'd Raja Singa to send his Answer, and with it an Envoy, or one of his Disfaves, unto whom they would deliver the Fortrefs of Negumbo, after the Fortifications were demolish'd. And to leave no room for any further Pretences, the General acquainted the Emperor, that in case his Majesty would let him know what further Satisfaction he requir'd at his Hands, he would be ready to comply with his Majesty's Demands, provided the same could be done without great Prejudice to the Company's Service. But that in case his Majesty thought fit to persist in his unjust Oppressions of the Dutch and others under our Jurisdiction, he protest-ed and declar'd in the Presence of God, and to all the World, that he was innocent of all the Calamities and Effusion of Blood, that needs must be the Consequences of such Proceedings, which must oblige us (tho much against our Will) to have recourse to such means as God had put into our Hands for the Defence of our Subjects. With this Letter they sent a Falcon and a Sparrow-hawk, with a Perfian Falconer, as a Present to the Emperor.

Advice was brought at the same time from Caleture, that the King's Lascaryns were were very troublesome to our Subjects, who were forc'd to leave their Habitations for fear of being carried away, and that they had wounded some and pursued them to the River side. That the two Aratches Cannangere and Pittikeri, lay encamp'd near Alean, and had summoned the Country thereabouts to join with them within three days; that 10 of our Lascaryns, and 42 Labourers sent from Calcutre to Columbo, were carried away by a Party of Vagabonds. To prevent the like for the future, and especially to protect our Workmen employ'd in the peeling of the Cinnamon (call'd Chalias) 200 Soldiers were order'd to Bentot, under the Command of Martin Sebolter, Peter Champe and Joris Heruendonck, who for their better Security were to be join'd by the Lascaryns under the Captain of Gale-Corie.

C H A P. XLII.

A Feast appointed. Two Coffers come over to us. George Bloem escapes from Candy. A Skirmish betwixt the Dutch and Cingaletes. Robbers punish'd. News of the Portuguese Squadron. The arrival of some Dutch Ships, shewn mistake. A strange Notion among the Indians concerning Columbo's being impregnable. Negumbo taken and retaken.

IT being now a Month since the Surrender of Columbo, a Thanksgiving Day was appointed to give Thanks to God Almighty for this great Success, and to implore his Mercy to bless our Arms for the future. The said Day is kept ever since on the 12th of May.

Raja Singa did send an Answer to the General's Letter, but said scarce any thing in relation to the matter in hand, declaring only his satisfaction about the present, and desiring that the Persian Faulkoner might stay with him, which the General (to gratify the Emperor) did content to, at least till such time that the Ships should be ready to return to Gamon. However these Civilities did not answer the end for which they were intended; Raja Singa ordering soon after his Lascaryns to take all the Dutch they could light on Prisoners, and to cut off the Noes and Ears of all the Negroes, Cingalezes, Moors and Slaves that serv'd the Hollanders; but the 200 before-mentioned Soldiers struck such a Terror into the King's Forces, that they retreated back, and gave liberty at least to 1000 of the Inhabitants to return to their Houses.

Raja Singa in the mean time continued now as before his Hostilities, one of his Parties having lately carried away a Durra and two Labourers within half a League of Columbo, which oblig'd us to be continually upon our Guard. The Dutch still residing at Candy, being afraid they should be detain'd there against their will, writ to the General to hasten the departure of the Persian Faulkoner with the Hawks, in hopes that thereby the King might be brought into a good humour to let them depart.

About the same time a certain Messenger named Chetty Maley came to Columbo with some Hawks and other Presents for the Emperor; six Hawks more with their Faulkoners were also brought from the Coast of Coromandel for the same purpose.

The 20th of July two Coffers came over to us, one whereof having been the King's Trumpeter, the other a Drummer, they reported that his Majesty continued still in his Camp at Reygamwatte, but intended shortly to break up for Ruanelle, the Diffave of Matule having been sent before already to take care of the High-ways through which they were to pass. They further told us, that the Emperor having granted to divers Portugueses certain goodly Villages, this had created ill Blood among the Courtiers.

Our Interpreter George Bloem was forced to continue there till he found means to make his escape in the night-time from the Camp of Reygamwatte, by means of a Tony or Boat, wherewith he got to Montual, having deceiv'd his Guards by giving them a good dose of strong Liquors. Five other Dutch Men who had deserted our Service continued with the King at Court.

News was brought at the same time, that some of the King's Forces having got Intelligence that Mr. Rabel a brave Cingalese, a Native of Matule in our Service, Service, was absent from Hakman with a Serjeant and most of the Soldies, having left only a Guard of 10 Europeans and 15 Lascaryns in the place, they to the number of 100 Men attack'd them on a sudden, in hopes to carry the Place by surprize, but were notwithstanding so hotly receiv'd, that they were glad to retire.

Things began thus to grow worse and worse, without hopes of Amendment, because we were frequently bit by our own Dogs, I mean the perfidious Cingalese under our Jurisdiction, who gave constant Intelligence of all our Designs, so that we could not send abroad the smallest Party but the Enemy had beforehand notice thereof; whereas we could never discover the least of their Intentions, of which we were sufficiently convinc'd by divers intercepted Letters.

The King's Forces having surpriz'd a Serjeant named Peter Johnson, a Native of Dantrick, with some Inhabitants of the Country, and four Soldiers Wives, they carried them before the Disfave of the seven Corles, who told them, that they had been long enough in the Dutch Service, and must resolve now to be his Majesty's Slaves.

The 2d of August we receiv'd a Letter from Lawrence Haurwyk our Under-Factor at Caleitwe, that several Robbers had been seen about Boembocke, who had cut down the Fruits of the Earth; that Andrado being sent after them with some Lascaryns, had met only with two of them, who refusing obstinately to confess by whom they were sent out to cut down the Rice, they had cut off their Heads, and set them upon Poles near the place where they had spoiled the Rice.

The 13th of August being Sunday, the Yacht call'd the Columbo came into our Road, having left Tutecoryn the 11th: she brought Letters from the Commodore to the General, intimating that the Enemy's Squadron compos'd of 15 Frigats had escap'd his hands the 7th of July, taking the opportunity of the Night, and the advantage of the Flats betwixt the Isles; that they were pursued by our Ships as far as Pambanaar, which could not come up with them by reason of the Sands. He further told him, that suspecting the Teuver or Governor of the Country to have been corrupted with Mony, and to have given them a free Passage betwixt Manaar and Jafnapatnam (which he commands by either laying in or removing certain Stones from the entrance thereof) he had been oblig'd to return to Tutecoryn.

We had at the same time advice of the arrival of our Ships, the Amsterdam, the Avenbom, Saphir, Haddock, Workum, Pelican, Patience, and Black Bull, upon the Coast of Coromandel: But it was no small Mortification unto us, that the Sybir (contrary to the General of Ceylon's Orders) had left the Prisoners and Portuguese Soldiers (who according to the Articles of Surrender were to have been carried to Batavia) ashore near Negapatnam, and that she had not touch'd in the Southern Harbours, where there was a considerable Cargo of Clothes and other Commodities ready, which could not be dispos'd of otherwise; and by the first oversight the Enemy had been reinforced with 80 brave Soldiers contrary to the intention of the Agreement.

We had at the same time Letters from the Factor Adrian van Newland, dated in the Danish Fort call'd Tranguebare, whereby we understood that the before-mentioned Portuguese Frigats were pass'd through the Straits (by the assistance of the Governor) to Jafnapatnam, from whence Anthony Amiral de Meneses (afterwards kill'd by one of our Cannon-balls near Manaar) had sent his Forces in Boats to Negapatnam, in order to gather a Body (at the request of Raja Singa) in those parts, which, as the case then stood, might have prov'd very dangerous to us, had not God through his Mercy prevented their Designs.

During all these Troubles, our General kept a watchful Eye upon the Enemy's Motions, and order'd Mr. John van der Laan with 300 Men to scour the Country. These Differences continued for a considerable time, viz. to the year 1665. and tho some glimpses of Peace appear'd at certain Intervals, yet is it certain that Raja Singa is not reconcil'd to us to this day, and perhaps never will whilst he lives.

We have hitherto treated of Columbo; we now will pass the River at Montual, and take our course higher up to Negumbo. But before we come thither, I can't forbear to say a word or two concerning the general Opinion of the Indians, viz. That Columbo was imgreagnable. Hence it was that the Portuguese hoasted in all places, that the King of Portugal and Viceroy of Goa would never suffer so strong a Fortrefs to fall into the hands of the Hereticks, especially after we were repuls'd in the first general Assault. I happen'd to be then at Macassar, where the Portuguese Father and some Missionaries lately come from China uted to make this Siege their Sport ; and one Francisco Viero, one of the richest Merchants in the Indies, offer'd to lay vast Wagers that it was not taken by the Hollanders.

The King of Celebes and Macassar (the Capital City of that Isle) had the same opinion concerning the Strength of Columbo, he and most of his Courtiers being much inclin'd to the Portuguese side. But within three Months, just at my return to Batavia (after the Conclusion of the Peace betwixt us and the King of Macassar) we had the News of the Surrender of Columbo, brought to Batavia by Peter Bitter, to the general satisfaction of the People.

But after this Digression it is time to come to Negumbo, which lies about two Leagues and a half, or five good hours walking along the Banks of the River to the North. I am not able to tell you the exact time of its beginning, the Portuguese Historians being silent as to this Point, being no more than a Fort built for the conveniency of protecting the Country, which abounds in Cinnamon.

I told you before, how Adam Wester- wold made himself Master of Batavia. After which Anthony Caan took 1639 the Fort of Trinquemale, the most spacious Harbour on the East-side of Ceylon. Philip Lucas the Dutch Director-General in the Indies took Negumbo the first time Feb. 9. 1640. and soon after (as has been told before, viz. 13 March following) our Commodore William Jacob took Gale by Storm, but was afterwards treacherously murder'd by some of Raja's People with four of his Guards.

For the said Mr. Koster coming to Candy in Person, was detain'd there with vain Promises, without the least probability of success, till growing impatient he began to utter Threats and very harsh Words (a great piece of Imprudence) against some of the Great Ones at Court, which coming to Raja's Ears, he was dismiss'd without the usual marks of Honour, and conducted towards Batecal, but murder'd by the way by the Cingalese his Conductors. This was the Reward bestow'd by Raja upon Koster, who had reduc'd Trinquemale, Gale and Mature, with all the Countries thereunto belonging, to his Jurisdiction.

Certain it is, had Raja been sincere, we might with his Assistance easily have made our selves Masters at that Juncture of Columbo, when all their regular Forces being sent to the Relief of Gale, there were but a few old Soldiers, Priests and Citizens left for the defence of the Place. But Raja thought it better to play the Trimmer betwixt two European Nations, than to be in danger of being conquer'd by one, and so thought it his best way to give Opportunity to the Portugueses to recover a little Breath.

For the Portugueses having received a strong Reinforcement from Goa, found means to regain the Fort of Negumbo; which done, they sat down before Gale, but were bravely entertain'd by John Thyssen, who gave them many a Brush; Raja Singa sitting all this while by like a Spectator, tho the Portugueses remain'd Masters of all the Low Lands, tho we deliver'd Batecalo into his Hands, and made much greater Offers by Peter Borrel our Ambassador. Things continued in the same State till the Year 1644, at the beginning whereof Francis Caron took Negumbo from the Portugueses a second time, and having strengthen'd it with four new Bastions of Earth, surrounded with strong Palliadoes, left a Garison of 500 Men there for its Guard. After the Departure of our Fleet, and some Detachments sent to Gale, and other Places, Don Philippo Mascarenhas made an Attempt upon the Place, but being bravely repuls'd, was glad to retire in confusion to Columbo. It was about this time that Mr. John Maatzuyker (now Governor-General of the Dutch East-Indies) coming to Goa, enter'd into a Treaty with the Portuguese Viceroy, John de Silva Telles de Menezes, Earl of Alveiras, concerning the Limits betwixt both Nations in the Isle of Ceylon; which being brought to a Conclusion 1645, the said Mr. Maatzuyker remain'd in those Parts, in the Quality of Governor of Puntegale.

Raja Singa treats underhand with the Portugueses, his tame Elephants detained. Raja declares against the Portugueses. The Dutch lose Angretotte. Both the Portugueses and Dutch are reinforced. Engagement near Fiboene. Calleture deserted. Portugueses worsted both by Sea and Land. Manaar taken.

RAJA Singa at the Instigation of the Portugueses being grown very jealous of the Dutch being in possession of the 7 Corles, conniv'd at the Robberies that were committed in those Parts by his People, which at last oblig'd Mr. John Thyssen to proclaim open War against them; and accordingly Nicholas Jacobson Overseebe, Governor of Negumbo, and Overseer of the Dutch Limits (who died afterwards at Poorburgb) caus'd all the King's tame Elephants to be seiz'd, which so exasperated his Majesty, that he drew all his Forces together and enter'd the seven Corles, where our People had the worst of it, because they surrendred without being reduc'd to the utmost Extremity. However after the return of Mr. Maatzuyker, Negumbo, Gale-Corle, and Mature, with the Countries thereunto belonging, were soon secur'd against all further Attempts; the Cinnamon was gather'd and peel'd as before, the wild Elephants tam'd, and every thing else settl'd for the Advantage of our Company: nay Raja Singa himself was appeas'd, who retreated with his Forces, tho without doing any harm to the Portugueses, an infallible Sign that there was no ill Understanding betwixt them.

Matters thus continu'd till 1649, when Mr. Maatzuyker redeem'd all our Prisoners, and by a Messenger sent with some Presents, brought matters to an honourable Composition. In the beginning of the Year 1650, Mr. Rampot left Gale and Mature, to the great Dissatisfaction of Raja Singa, who however was so far from breaking with us upon that account, that when we enter'd into a War with the Portugueses, 1652. Raja declar'd against them, laying hold of the Opportunity that presented it self, by a late Mutiny among the Portuguese Soldiers and chief Inhabitants of Columbo, rais'd against Manoel Mascarenhas Flanem their Governor, whom they had taken into Custody.

 after a Siege of 11 Days, in which they lost a considerable Number of Men; 98
Germans, 24 Javaneses, and a greater Number of Lascaryns were made Prisoners of War, under condition that they should be dismiss'd for a reasonable Ransom. The same Afternoon a Body of 300 Men were sent to their Relief, who happen'd to come too late; tho as the case stood, their Endeavours would have prov'd in vain, considering the Enemy was twice as strong and advantageously posted; and we had not come off at so cheap a rate, had not Raja Singa given the Enemy a strong Diversion near Cottegore, whereabouts they attack'd the Pass near Columbo with such Vigour, that the Governor and Deputy-Governor were glad to send for their Forces from Reygam and Pasdam-Corle to oppose the Im-perialists. These were no sooner retreated, but the Portugueses attack'd our Outguards near Negumbo, and possess'd themselves of the 4 and 7 Corles: But Raja Singa rallying his Forces, march'd from Ouvva to Saffragam (the Capital City of the five Corles) the Portuguese Disjave was glad to retreat with his Forces to Gurbeville, and thereby gave us Oppor-

 Countries of Gale and Mature.

In the mean while, viz. the 10th of good number of Officers and Soldiers from Goa, under the Command of Francisco de Melo de Castro; our Cruizers being scarce two days before (to our great Misfortune) forc'd to retreat from their Stations by stress of Weather into the Harbour of Gale. Notwithstanding which, they made no considerable Attempt against us, being contented to secure only their Workmen employ'd in peeling of the Cinnamon, and other Inhabitants of the Country against our Parties.

Raja Singa finding that in 1653 in September, the Portugueses had receiv'd a fresh Supply from Tutecoryn, whereas our four Ships did not bring one single Soldier to relieve the rest; that our Governor Jacob van Kittenstein had obtain'd leave to depart; and that when Commissary Rijklos van Goens touch'd with his four ships towards the latter end of October in Ceylon, in his way to Persia and Suratte, without bringing us the least

Van Goens
into the columns.

Succours, he retreated with his half starved tatter'd Troops from Caravanella, thro the 7 and 4 Corles to Candy, to refresh themselves.

The Portugueses finding themselves secure on that side, did appear with all the Forces they could bring into the Field before Columbo, in hopes of drawing our Forces out of the Fort; but finding themselves frustrated in their hopes, they retreated in the beginning of 1654, towards Reygam and Pasdam-Corle, whence they sent frequent Parties to take away our Cattel, and to spoil the Fruits of the Earth. But Major John van der Laan was always at hand with a good Body to observe them.

The 20th of March our Governor Adrian van der Meyden, march'd from Gale to Caleture; and being join'd there the 23d by all his Forces, he follow'd the Portugueses thro Berberm, Dodangolde, and Tiboen, where he attack'd them the 26th in the Morning, in their advantageous Post: the Engagement was very fierce for a whole Hour, when our Forces feign'd a Retreat, in hopes to draw the Enemy from his Post, but they were too wise to follow us; they had more Men slain on their side than we. After our Forces had refresh'd themselves a little while at Tiboen, we march'd to Caleture, and the Enemy retreated out of our Dominions cross the River to Columbo.

Soon after 5 Galcons with 1000 Portuguese Landmen aboard them, arriving upon our Coast, engag'd three of our Yachts call'd the Greyhound, the Rhinoceros, and Dromedary, and pursu'd them to the Flats of Negumbo, but took none of them, our Vessels retiring under the Cannon
 there, and the Portugueses to Columbo, having lost their Captain-Major, and many others in this Engagement.

A Council being call'd to consult what to do in this Emergency, it was resolv'd to leave Caleture, and to employ our whole Force in the defence of Negumbo, without which we were not in a condition to maintain that Fortrefs, which was of the greatest consequence to us. Accordingly Negumbo being well provided with what Forces we were able to gather, the Enemy (whose Forces were considerably increas'd by the late Reinforcements) march'd from Galkisse to Caleture, and thence to Alicoon, where they pitch'd their Tents; to oppose which we brought into the Field about 200 Europeans, 80
Javaneses, and a good Number of Lasca-ryns, wherewith we made a shift to defend our Country as well as we could.

Van Goens

About this time Commissary van Goens in his return from Perisla and Suratte to Ceylon, had the good Fortune to beat the Galeons near the Cape du Ramus, and thereby to release 20 of our People made Prisoners at Angretotte, who were set ashore at Pantogale. This was the reason that the Portugueses could not spare many Men for the use of their Frigates, having sustain'd a considerable Loss of them in the late Engagement with Mr. van Goens, near Achiera; neither were they so active in the Field till the ensuing July, when we having receiv'd some Reinforcements, appointed our Rendezouz at Bentotte, in sight of the Enemy, having only a River betwixt us and them. We kill'd the Portugueses about 30 Europeans in divers Skirmishes, and took from them divers Boats, which made them not so eager afterwards to attack our Countries, in order to spoil our Cinnamon and Areck Harvest, and the taking of Elephants, wherein consists the chief Revenue of this Isle, belonging to our Company.

The 13th of Septemb. the Yachts the Turtle-Dove, the Red-Lyon and the Haddock, arriv'd with fresh Supplies and 50 Soldiers. The 4th of Decemb. the Yacht the Kanien brought us a Supply of 54 Soldiers more; besides which, 159 Seamen were taken out of four Ships (come with the Director Henry van Gent into Gale, to provide themselves with fresh Water) all which being join'd with our Forces encamp'd at Bentotte, we embark'd the 16th of Decemb. all our Forces, 600 strong (including Officers) composed of Seamen, Land-Soldiers, Javanese and Cingalese, in 20 Catapannels or Land-Boats, and thus pass'd the River Alican.

But as we reach'd the opposite Bank of the River, but we met with so violent a Reception from 300 chosen Portugueses, and some Topasses and Cingalese, that most of our Indian Forces betook themselves to their Heels; but being rallied again upon the Bank of the River, return'd to the Charge; and being bravely seconded by the rest, forced the Enemy to retreat, leaving one of their Cannon of 1000 Pounds Weight behind them, 60 slain, and many more wounded. They behaved themselves bravely, but were forc'd after this Defeat to retire by the Bay of Malvane to Columbo.

The

The Portugueses finding us not ready to attack Caleuvre (after they had given the usual Cry to the Soldiers) they broke up in the beginning of 1655, and surpriz'd Raja's Forces, under the Command of the

Diffave of the four Corles; and being reinforced by some other Forces from Jafnapatnam and Manar, besides a good Number of Lascaryns, they pursued the Diffave of the seven Corles, as far as to the Straits of Candy, plundering all the Country thro which they pass'd: which so exasperated the King, that he order'd all his Forces to appear in the Field; but his Van being routed in April near Attapitin by Caspar Figueiro, the King quitted the Field full of Dislatisfaction.

It happen'd to our good Fortune, that the new Governor and Portuguese Admiral, Antonio de Souza Coutinho (under whose Government Columbo was lost) coming with 8 Frigates and 500 Landmen into these Parts, was the 18th of May forc'd towards the Coast of Gale: We sent out two Yachts, viz. the Lyon and Kanien, who coming up with them, took two with all the Men and Provisions, and forc'd two more ashore; so that no more than two or three of them got safe to Columbo, and Coutinho himself was forc'd to take his Courie round the Point das Pedras to Jafnapatnam and Manar, from whence he came with a good Troop by the way of Putlaon, Calpentyn, and the seven Corles; in August to Columbo, where he was no sooner establish'd in his Dignity, but he visit'd with Antonio Mendes d' Arangie the Fort of Caleuvre, where he left a Garrison of 300 Europeans, and a good Number of Negroes, but resolv'd to keep Caspar Figueiro near his Person.

The Portu-

Sea.

By that time the Director-General Georara Hult came in Company of Mr. Johann van der Laan (a Person well vers'd in the Affairs of Ceylon) into those parts. About the middle of Septemb. three Yachts were dispatch'd from Cape Comorin, in order to observe the Frigates sent from Columbo to Tatecorin for Provisions, and either to take them or to block them up betwixt the Islands. It was also resolv'd to force the Portugueses to quit Caleuvre, whilst the Enemy were yet under apprehension of the Strength of the Forces come along with the Director-General, and lately landed at Negumbo, from whence he intended to give the Enemy a Visit on the other side of the River at Montual.

However the Portuguese Squadron, consisting of 20 Frigates and some Barks, loaden with all sorts of Necessaries at Jafnapatnam, and some other Places on the Indian Coast, made shift to pass by with full Sails within sight of Negumbo (where our Ships lay at anchor) and to our signal Regret got into Columbo. Mr. Hulst receiv'd at the same time Advice by a small Advice-boat, that a new Vice-roy was arriv'd at Goa with three Galeons, one Yacht, and a good Number of Land-men. A Council being call'd, it was thought convenient to try whether these Galeons might not be surpriz'd near Marmagon or Agooda (two Castles in the Bay of Goa). At the same time Mr. Hulst came with four Ships and a good Number of Soldiers before Berberyn, where having landed and join'd his Forces with the rest the 28th of Septemb. he soon after made himself Master of Caleture, an account whereof has been given before.

But it is time to leave Negumbo, provided with a good Garrison (first by Major John van der Laan, and afterwards by the Head Factor Edward Huw) and to go towards Manaar. In the Year 1661. I undertook a Journey over Land from Jafnapatnam to Columbo, 49 or 50 Leagues distant from one another, which I accomplish'd in seven Days.

From Negumbo you travel by the way of Capul, to the River Chilaw, and so thro the Countries of Madampe and Putehan, leaving the Isle of Calpenty to the left; then thro Aipou (where the Christians have a Church) to Manaar, thence to Wannias, the Church of Mantotte, and so to Jafnapatnam, of which more hereafter. We made this Observation in this Journey, that no Cinnamon grows, except on the other side of the River Chilaw, and beyond Jafnapatnam. For the rest, all these before-mention'd Countries have a very fruitful Soil (except Calpenty, which is somewhat barren) especially about Madampe, but are destitute of Inhabitants: The Bufflers feed here in vast Herds, which makes me believe that it would afford plenty of every thing were it well cultivated.

We will now proceed to give you some account of the Isle of Manaar, which formerly adhered to the Continent, as sufficiently appears by the Sand Bank, called Alam Bridge. Next unto this lies the Isle of Rimmakayel, where is to be seen a rich and famous Pagode, belonging to the Tuwer or Governor, who has a Fort on the Continent. At certain Seasons there is a Passage with small Boats, thro some Depths of this Alam Bridge, one whereof I had once occasion to pass myself.

The said Isle was reduced by the Hollanders, 1658. in the following manner, by Mr. R. J. van Goens. The Portuguese had made Entrenchments all along the Shore, which were defended by 1000 chosen Men and 12 Frigates, to hinder the Approach of our Boats. Our great Ships were order'd to advance as near as they could, under favour of which our Boats landed the Men. Serjeant Henry van Wel (since a Lieutenant) was the first who set foot on shore; and being bravely follow'd by the rest, were as courageously receiv'd by the Portuguese, who did all that Men could do to second their Comrades; but our Cannon from the Ships, together with our small Arms, made such a Havock among them, that they were forc'd to quit their Entrenchments. Here it was that Antonio Amiral de Azevedes, the Portuguese General, lost his Life by a Cannon-Bullet, and Antonio Mendes d'Arangie, a famous Soldier, was mortally wounded, with many other brave Officers.

On our side we lost an Ensign, and before our Landing (when the Long-boat of the Ship Naarden was taken) the brave Lieutenant Block, which we return'd 'em with full measure; all their Frigates, as they pass'd by our Squadron, being either sunk or taken, with a great Slaughter of their Men. Major John van der Laan (tho he had a heavy Fall before our Landing, being a very large and fat Person) did nevertheless behave himself upon this Occasion with incredible Bravery, breaking thro the thickest of the Ranks of the Enemy, whereby he made good the Title bestow'd upon him long before, of being the Terror of the Portuguese.

After this defeat, the Portuguese not thinking themselves secure in the Fort Manaar, retir'd over the Water to Jafnapatnam, leaving only Andrew Villosa with a very moderate Force in the Castle of S. George. They would not have escap'd our Hands at so cheap a rate, had we not been stop'd by the great Rain, and Tempests.

The 22d Andrew Villosa being deserted by most of his Men, was oblig'd to surrender the Castle of S. George upon reasonable Terms. We took about 200 Prisoners, both Europeans and Negroes, and among them a Caffer (or African Negro) who pretending to be a Captain, was so stubborn, that he would not take up his Arms or arise from the Ground (as he was commanded to do) without a good Bastinado.

The 24th of Febr. I preach'd the Thanksgiving-Sermon in the great Church upon the Text of 1 Sam. 7. 7. for the most fortunate Reduction of this Isle, whereof our General might say with Cæsar,

The taking of y<sup>e</sup> Isle of Manaar by the Dutch.

(Ar, Veni, vidi, vici, being beyond all question one of the greatest Actions that ever happen'd betwixt us and the Portugueses in the Indies, considering we were forc'd to attack the Enemies Forces, composed of Veteran European Soldiers, and to chase them from their advantageous Posts, and that only with 800 Men, and consequently with the utmost hazard; being resolv'd either to overcome or die in the Attempt, because we had quite drain'd the Garison of Columbo, leaving only a few, and those infirm Persons to guard that Place, because we expected hourly the Arrival of the Ship the Sala-mandar with some 100 Soldiers, and good Store of Ammunition and Provision, having aboard the Commodore Peter de Zinter, the Factor Edward Ooms, and Captain Peter Wasch. The same having been detained by Calms and Tempests for near six Months, and endur'd great Hardships about the Maldiva Islands, arriv'd at last safely at Columbo, but was soon after order'd by the Governor Adrian van der Meyden, to sail to Manaar, where she came to an Anchor immediately after we had made our selves Masters of that Isle, and were just then preparing to march towards Japnapatnam. But before we leave Manaar, we must add something concerning the true Condition of this Island.

The Sala-mandar brings a Supply of Men and Provisions.

A Description of Manaar. How the Christian Religion was planted, and might be further promoted there. A Description of the Country of the Wannias, Our March towards Jafnapatnam. We pass the River; rout the Portugueses, and take the Water-Fort.

Manaar
is called

Manaar derives its Name from the Malabar Language, from the word Man, i. e. Sand, and Aar a River, signifying as much as a Sand-River; it being observable, that both the Cingalese and Malabar Languages are spoken in the Isle of Ceylon. The first is used beyond Negumbo, viz. at Columbo, Caleture, Berbery, Aican, Gale, Belligamme, Mature, Dondre, &c. But in all the other parts of this Isle opposite to the Coast of Coromandel, and all along the Bay, they speak the Malabar Tongue; whence it seems very probable, that that Tract of Land (as the Inhabitants of Jafnapatnam themselves believe) was first of all peopled by those of Coromandel, who brought their Language along with them; it being certain that in the Inland Countries about Candy, Vintane, Ballaney, &c. they speak only Cingalese.

The Cingalese and Malabar Tongues both used in Ceylon.

Situation of Manaar.

The Isle of Manaar is situate at 9 deg. of Northern Latitude, its length being about two and a half German Leagues, and one broad, including the Salt-water River (as you will see in the Map) which reaches as far as the great Church call'd Carcel. The Castle is seated upon a Canal able to bear small Yachts, which draw 3, 4, or 5 foot Water, and can go from thence to Jafnapatnam. This Castle was strengthened with some additional Fortifications, and surrounded with a deep Ditch, after we had taken it from the Portugueses. The whole Isle has no more than seven Churches, unto each whereof belong divers considerable Villages: The first is the City Church, next that call'd Tottavaly, then Carcel, Erkelampatti, S. Peter's Church belonging to the Fishermen; Peixale, and the last Tellemanaar, lying at the furthestmost, and near the Sea-side.

The Churches.

Part of the City of Manaar.

This Island was formerly celebrated for the Pearl Fishery, as well as the City of Tutecorin; but no Pearls having been taken there for these 10 years last past, the Inhabitants are reduc'd to great Poverty; whereas the sumptuous Edifices, Churches and Monasteries, with their Ornaments, are sufficient Demonstrations of its former Grandure.

In the year 1666. (after my departure)

our Company order'd the first time the Pearl-fishery to be renew'd again, with no ill success; and according to several Letters I have receiv'd from thence, they took a considerable quantity of Pearls, the second time, in the year 1669.

The Inhabitants of Manaar speak (besides the Malabar) most generally Portuguese, being long ago converted to the Christian Faith, for which reason they have suffer'd most cruel Persecutions from the Kings of Jafnapatnam, who baptiz'd many of the new converted Christians with Blood, after they had receiv'd the Baptism with Water. Many of them fled for this reason to Goa by Land, being above 100 Leagues, and among them a young Gentleman of Royal Extraction, who embrac'd Christianity there.

It was Franciscus Xavierius who converted the Inhabitants here, as well as those on the Cape Comorin and the Paruas, as we have told you before in the Description of the Indian Coast, and in the account of his Life. The said Xaverius establish'd among them certain Teachers call'd Canacappels, who were to instruct the Inhabitants in the first Rudiments of the Christian Religion, as the Ten Commandments, the Creed, Our Father, &c. which they did with indefatigable Care and Industry: These were succeeded by the Jesuits (call'd Paulites here, because they were sent into the Indies by Pope Paul III.) who in their way of teaching both the old and young ones, did far exceed the Franciscans, and all other Orders among the Romanists. And I am very free to confess, that I have frequently follow'd their Footsteps in reforming the Churches and Schools in Manaar and Jafnapatnam, as far as they were consistent with our Religion, and consonant to the Genius of these Nations. It being absolutely necessary, that he who undertakes this task should be well acquainted with the method to be used among these People in the Infancy of their Conversion, intricate Questions and Mysteries being more apt to confound than to instruct them: For which reason it is most proper to teach them the naked Truth of the Gospel in as few Points as possibly can be done (the Youth being very apt to retain here what they have been told) to catechise frequently the young ones in the presence of their Parents, thereby to excite in them a laudable Emulation to follow their Footsteps. St. Paul himself leads us the way, when he says, that you must first lay the Foundation of the Doctrine of Christ, before you can raise the Edifice of the Church.

It is also absolutely requisite, that the same Catechism that has been at first introduc'd among the Native Christians should be retain'd without any alteration, which, as it would over-charge their Memory, so it would breed nothing but Confusion instead of Profit. It was for this reason, that when by order from the supreme Magistrates, the Reformation of these Churches was committed to my care, I reduc'd the chief Points of the Christian Doctrine into Questions and Answers, which were afterwards introduc'd into the Churches of Jajnapatnam, Manaar, Gale, Columbo, Negumbo and Mature, and receiv'd by the succeeding Ministers, by special Command from the General and Council of the Indies, and the Governor of these places; and were afterwards confirm'd by the General Assembly of the Clergy of Ceylon held at Columbo 1659. from the 24th of February till the 3<sup>d</sup> of March.

They had had enough of the Mistakes that ensued upon these Alterations, introduced by new Ministers into the Isle of Formosa, who instead of following the footsteps of Robert Junius and George Caninus (Ministers of the Gospel there) would introduce certain Novelties. I found it also absolutely necessary to have these Questions and Answers put, not only in the Portuguese but also in the Malabar Tongue, several Copies whereof were sent to our Brethren at Columbo, Gale and Negapatnam.

It is beyond all dispute that the Low-Dutch Tongue is not so proper to propagate our Religion here as the Malabar and Portuguese; and consequently, that the Ministers of the Gospel sent into those parts should rather apply themselves to these Languages, than to impose their own upon the new Converts, which always meets with great difficulty, and can't be introduc'd without vast Trouble and Charges: besides, that it is much more reasonable one Man should accommodate himself to many, than these to one Man. It is furthermore requisite, that as the Ministers ought to pay all due Respect to the Magistrates, so these should treat them with all imaginable Civility and Honour, to acquire them the more Authority among the Natives.

The Isle of Manaar abounds in Fish to such a degree, that the Inhabitants here (as well as at Negumbo) dry and send them into other parts in vast quantities. They have here a peculiar Fish (properly a Sea-Calf) of an amphibious nature; the Females have Breasts and give Suck, and the Flesh when well boild tastes not unlike our Sturgeon, and might easily be mistaken for Veal.

But it is time we pass the River of Manaar towards Mantotte. This River is not very deep; nay on that side where you come to it over the Canal near the Castle, it is so shallow, that you may wade through it with ease, the Water scarce coming up to your Knees, tho it is so broad that it will take up half an hour before you can pass it. The Country on the other side is call'd the Country of the Wannias, under the Jurisdiction of our Company; their Churches make up together with those of Manaar no less than 14, and are under the Inspection of the Minister who resides in the Isle of Manaar, and duly visits them once a month. This Country, tho it acknowledges the Jurisdiction of our Company, pays the usual Taxes, furnishes them with Elephants, &c. yet must they be mildly treated, it being their general Maxims to disoblige neither Raja Singa nor the Company.

In the year 1658. in the beginning of March (after the taking of Manaar, and providing it with a good Garrison) we march'd into that Country towards Jajnapatnam. Mantotte begins to the North of the Salt River near the Village of Peringaly, extending to the South along the Sea-shore, as far as the River Aripouture, where Mousilipatte begins, near the Village of Aripou, extending further Southward to the Mountains of Condemale, which face the Bay opposite to the Isle of Calpenty, and cross the Country Mantotte, stretching to Sere-coulang, 6 Villages whereof belong to Manaar, 6 to Jajnapatnam, and 5 to Mantotte.

The rest of Mantotte and Mousilipatte extends to the East to the great Forest (the Boundary of the Country on that side) Mantotte it self has 64 Villages, Mousilipatte 24, and that part of Sere-coulang 6, amounting in all to 84. All these Countries are very fertile, especial-

K k k k k

Baldca. ly in Rice, which produces a hundred-fold Crop; but the worst is, the Elephants do great Mischief in those parts that are not very populous.

It is very remarkable what John de Lucena observes in the Life of Xavicus, viz. That on the Cape Comorin, and all along that Tract of the East-Indies, whilst it is Summer and dry Season on the West-side of the Cape, the Winter and rainy Season appears on the opposite side: the same is to be observ'd in the Life of Ceylon. For whilst the Winter continues about Jafnapatnam, the Wannias and Mannar, during the Months of October, November and December, it is Summer in all the other parts: On the contrary, in the Months of April and May, whilst it is Summer about Jafnapatnam, which continues six or seven Months, it is Winter and rainy Weather at Colombo, Galle, and the Countries thereabouts. In the Low-Lands remote from the mountainous part of Ceylon, there blow only two Winds; but about Colombo, Galle, and some other places, you have duly a Day and Night-Wind, as upon the Coast of Coromandel. From April till October the Wind blows constantly a brisk Gale from the South with a clear Air and bright Sun-shine, as does the North-wind from November till April. In January, February and March it is generally very calm, with intolerable Heat; but a Dew falls in the Night, which being very unwholesome, the Inhabitants return with Sun-set into their Houses: and were it not for these Dews and the strong Winds which cool the Air, the Heat would be unsupportable here.

As we march'd through the Country of Wannias, we kept a most exact Discipline; and as we had no great plenty of Provisions, we allow'd only a small measure Rice every day to each Soldier, rather than incommode the Inhabitants: and finding our Forces to be extremely tir'd by long Marches, and consequently incapable of engaging with the same advantage with the Enemy in case they should be attack'd, it was resolv'd instead of marching up to the head of the River through the sandy ground, to pass the River in Boats, tho it would require near an hour and a half for every Boat to pass it.

The worst was, that upon our arrival on the other side of the River we expected the Enemy ready to give us a warm Reception, because we could not transport above 200 or at most 300 Men at once over the River, and that the River was very muddy; for I remember that some years after two Elephants passing over to the Jafnapatnam side, one of them stuck in the Mud, and was kill'd by the Inhabitants, nothing being more common than for the Elephants to come cross the River to feed upon the Fruits of the Palm-trees, to come at which they trample the Roots of the Trees so long with their Feet till they loosen, and afterwards throw them down with their Bodies, and so eat the Fruit.

However the first Troop of our Forces got over without any opposition, and no sooner had put themselves in order of Battel, but receiv'd Intelligence that the Enemy were retreated from thence the day before, in order to expect us at the head Spring of the River.

After we had transported all our Forces over the River, the Inhabitants treated us very civilly, and furnish'd us with plenty of Provisions and Fruits. The first place we came to was the chief Church of the Province of Tenmarache, call'd Chaoagatzari, where after we had refresh'd our selves with a good Dinner, we march'd forward the same day with two Field-pieces to Naracauli (two hours from Jafnapatnam) where we encamp'd that night.

The next day (after Morning-Prayer) we march'd on to the River, where we expected to meet with a vigorous Opposition; but finding no Resistance, we advanced by degrees towards the Castle near the Church of Sandeeculi, where in the Evening we had a smart Skirmish with the Portugueses, of whom we kill'd many upon the spot, and posted our selves that night round about the before-mentioned Church.

The next following day we advanced to the City, which being without any Fortifications, we broke through the Wall and Houses; and pursuing the Enemy from Street to Street, under the favour of our Cannon, which opened us the way, we advanced towards the Castle. The 9th of March we made our selves Masters of the Jesuits Church and College at the West-End of the City, and the 18th following of the Church and Monastery of the Dominicans on the East-side: which made us give publick Thanks to God Almighty for his Blessings, the Text being the 7th Verse of the 22d Psalm.

The Enemy being thus forced to quit their Houses, had no other way left than to

to retreat to the Castle, which they did in great disorder, many of the Inhabitants of the Country thronging in among the Portugueses, so that the Castle was so crowded with People that they had not room enough to dispose them to any advantage.

But the better to straiten the Castle of Jafnapatnam, and take away from the Garrison all hopes of relief, it was thought necessary to attack a certain Outwork or Redoubt, built upon a small Isle in the middle of the River, not far from its Entrance, which it commands. This Fort was built by Antonio Amiral de Menezes, and may justly be call'd the Key of Jafnapatnam; and if such another were made on the Point of Calmom, no Vessel could approach the Castle without leave.

Accordingly we detach'd a good Body of Men to the Isle of Ouvature, in order to attack the said Fort, in which at that time commanded one Hieronimo de Paiva with a good Garrison. But before we thought fit to venture at so desperate an Attempt, it was resolv'd to send the following Summons to the Commander of the Fort.

 Commander whereof remembering the old Verse,

sent the following Answer.

This bold Answer made us think of nothing else but Force, so that we were preparing every thing for an Assault, which would have cost us many a brave Fellow, had not the want of Fresh Water in the Fort oblig'd them to come to a Capitulation. For having no other fresh Water in the Fort, but what was preserved in a large Wooden Cistern, part whereof was taken away by the Ships, that transported some Women of Quality with their Riches from Jafnapatnam to Negapatnam, and the rest being spoil'd by our Bombs, they were glad to accept such Articles as we were willing to give them, which however were very honourable, the Soldiers being allow'd to march out with all the Marks of Honour, and to be transported into Europe. The Commander who had a Wife and Children, was permitted to go to the Indian Coast, or that of Coromandel. The 28th of April I preach'd the Thanksgiving-Sermon for this Surrender, upon the Text out of the 48th Psalm, ver. 8. Upon this Occasion Captain Cornelius Rob the younger (who died two Years after at Amsterdam) Captain Peter Wash (who was kill'd afterwards before Cochin) and Mr. Van der Rheede, gave most signal Proofs of their Courage. Since that time divers Vaults for fresh Water have been made in this Fort and in Manaar.

Continuation of the Siege of Jafnapatnam. Sea-fight before Goa. Divers Engagements betwixt the Dutch and Portugueses. Jafnapatnam surrendered. Some Portugueses living among the Hollanders there plot against them, are betrayed by a Topas. The Provinces and Churches of Jafnapatnam.

Strength of the Castle of Jafnapatnam.

BUT it is time to return to the Castle of Jafnapatnam, which being built upon a Rock, and surrounded with a strong triple Wall, seem'd to defy both our Mines and Cannon, especially since we were not so well provided with Gunpowder as we should have been; wherefore we thought it our safest way to expect that from Time, which Force was not likely to procure, resolving in the mean while to annoy the Enemy as much as possibly we could with our Bombs, which kill'd them abundance of Men.

The Portu-
gueses endeavour in vain to take the Fort.

The Enemy finding themselves in a little time reduc'd to great Straits, sent out divers Boats to fetch some fresh Provisions from the Islands, but were always forc'd to return without Success. Upon this occasion Isbrand Gotskens born at the Hague, then Director of the Company in Perfia, and Barent Clebont, then a Lieutenant, since a Captain at Jafnapatnam, behaved themselves bravely, being both wounded, one near the Mouth, the other in the Knee.

It passed to us with a Letter.

The Portugueses in the mean while living in hopes of Succours from Goa, sent a Letter by a certain Topas from Trinquemalie, named Ignatio Feras, to their Admiral; but this Negro coming over to us with the Letter, we sent a good Body of our best Forces to prevent their Landing, but we heard of none.

On the other hand we received the joyful News, that Commodore Adrian the Dutch Roothaus, had March 23. in an Engagement with the Portugueses near Goa, burnt one of their biggest Galeons call'd the St. Thomas, and had so disabled the rest, that they had but little hopes left of relieving Jafnapatnam. For which Victory we gave publick Thanks to God the 26th of May 1658. the Text was taken out of Exod. 15. 9.

The Dutch
won't the Portugueses
at Sea.

About the same time I received a Letter from the Reverend Theodoro Sas (since Minister at Malacca) then in the Dutch Fleet before Goa, intimating that the 20th of Jan. in the same Year 1658. the Portugueses attack'd us with 10 Galeons and some Frigats; the Engagements lasted till Night without any considerable Damage on our side. That on the 27th and 29th of the same Month another Combat ensued, without any great Loss on both sides. The 3d of Febr. the Enemy attack'd us once more, but were chas'd under their Castle. In all these three Engagements the Dutch had no more than 9 Men killed and a few wounded. The Letter was dated aboard the Phoenix, cruising before the Bar of Goa, Febr. 11. 1658.

Several Sea-Engagements
betwixt
them.

* In the mean while our Forces having so closely surrounded the Castle of Jafnapatnam with their Lines and Works, that they

And thus they could not stir even with the least Boat, without being taken or sunk; and being now destitute of all hopes of Relief, they hung out the white Flag, June 21. on the South East Bastion. The Capitulation was agreed upon the next following Day, under these Conditions: That the Garrison should march out with their Arms, Colours flying, Drums beating, &c. and take along with them one piece of Cannon, and to be transported to Europe; the Head Officers shall be civilly treated, and to be conducted to one or other of their Forts, and the Ecclesiasticks to the Coast of Coromandel. All Gold, Silver and other Precious Moveables, shall be left to the Disposal of the Conquerors; the Inhabitants shall likewise be transported to what part of the Indies they like best, most of whom went afterwards by the way of Malacca to Batavia.

And thus Accordingly John de Melo Leonardo d' Oliveira, Viadore de Fazendas, and Antonio Mendes d' Aranha march'd out of the Castle with the rest of the Head Officers, Rodrigo Borralho delivering the Keys at the same time to Major John van der Laan; but they were so weak, that they did not think fit to carry along with them their piece of Cannon, tho they spent two whole days in marching out. A considerable Number of Soldiers laid down their Arms and Colours before the Standard of the Company, as did many of the Inhabitants (among whom was Caspar Figueiro the Scourge of the Cingalese) with their Wives and Children, Negroes, 40 or 50 Ecclesiasticks, Franciscans, Jesuits, and Dominicans; notwithstanding that during the Siege (which lasted 3 Months) they had lost near 1600 Men by the Sword and Mortality.

Immediately after Commodore Peter de Bitter was sent to Batavia, by the way of Malacca, to bring this joyful News to Mr. John Maatsuyker our General, and the Council of the Indies. The 23<sup>d</sup> of June I preach'd a Thanksgiving-Sermon out of Exod. 17. 15. which was continued every Year on the same Day.

When we entered the Castle, we found it all battered to pieces by our Bombs; and such was the stench, that for sometime no body could abide there. We took care to have the Springs clear'd, the Dung removed, the Churches, Houses and Walls repair'd; 300 Coco-Trees were also to be planted, and many Houses, that stood too near the Ditch of the Castle, to be broken down; and to encourage the Inhabitants of the Country to settle here, the Custom upon Tobacco was taken off, and Jacob Rhee our Head Factor, a very understanding Person, constituted pro tempore Commander in Chief here.

Things being thus disposed, our Forces were soon after transported to the Coast of Coromandel, in order to reduce the City of Negapatnam: We left but a slender Garrison at Jafnapatnam, compos'd for the most part of Portuguese, who had taken Service among us; besides which there was a considerable Number of Prisoners in the Castle.

These in conjunction with some of the Atchaby Natives (not without the Consent of Raja Singa) fram'd a Plot against us: Their Design was, to murder all the Officers in the Castle, whilst I was preaching in Portuguese in the City; which done, certain Persons of their Gang should attack and kill the Guard, and thus to make themselves Masters of the Castle.

It happen'd by accident that whilst I was preaching, Don Manoel Andrade, one of our Cingalese Captains and Mollies, coming with 18 of his Followers (who generally attended him) to the Church, remain'd in the Porch, where he could hear as well as within the Church. He was not a little surpris'd (as he himself told me afterwards) to see the Portuguese remain standing likewise without the Church-door, and laying their Hands upon their Swords; yet not being able to guess the true reason thereof, this Treachery was not discover'd till some days after, when the whole Design being laid open to Mr. Jacob van der Rhee, he took care to double the Guards, to shut the Castle-gates, and to secure all such as had a hand in the Plot. The next thing was to send for me by a Letter (I being then visiting the Churches in the Country) upon the receipt whereof I return'd immediately to the Castle, where with great Astonishment I had an account given me of the whole Design, how it had been discover'd, and the Traytors secured. For which Delivery I preach'd a solemn Thanksgiving-Sermon in Low Dutch, the 15th of Septemb. 1658. out of the Book of Esther, Chap. 9. 20—24.

Not long after most of the Traitors having confest their Crimes, some were condemn'd to be hang'd, others to be beheaded, and some to be laid upon the Wheel. The three chief Heads of this Conspiracy were, a certain Inhabitant of Atanaar, one Don Louys, and another Portuguese; these three were laid upon the Wheel or a Cross, and after they had received ceiv'd a Stroke with the Ax in the Neck and on the Breast, had their Entrails taken out, and the Heart laid upon the Mouth.

A certain Jesuit nam'd Calders, a Native of Malacca, was beheaded. This unfortunate Person being prevented by Sickness from going along with the rest of the Portuguese Clergymen, had not been concern'd in this treacherous Design, much less given his Consent to it. But some of the Traytors having given notice thereof to him by Letters, wherein they Riled him the Father of their Souls; he was unwilling to betray his Countrymen, for which he paid now with his Head: eleven more were hanged, and afterwards exposed in the open Country on Trees; but the Heads of the Ringleaders were fix'd upon Poles in the Market-place.

The Castle of Jajnapatnam is of a Quadrangular Figure, and strongly fortified with very high and thick Walls; it is bigger in Circuit than the Castle of Batavia, being the Capital City of the whole Kingdom. Philippo de Oliveira, after having defeated the Cingaleses near A- chiavelli, not far from the great Pagode (the Ruins whereof are to be seen to this day) took the same from the Emperor of Ceylon. Hard by this Pagode is to be seen a most miraculous Spring, 24 Rods in Circumference, cut out of an entire Rock, or, as the Inhabitants will have it, open'd by a Thunderbolt, of which more hereafter, when we shall treat of the Isles of Jajnapatnam: we took it after it had been 40 Years in the possession of the Portugueses.

Jajnapatnam is divided into four Provinces, which are very populous; its whole Length is about 6 Gomm Leagues, and its Breadth 3, being well inhabited and adorned with Villages and Churches. The whole Number of the Villages amounts to 159, of their own Churches 34, besides the Dutch and Portuguese Churches. Jajnapatnam is on the Northside wash'd by the Gulph of Bengale, and borders to the South of a River, which makes it a kind of an Island, and exonerates it self in two different Channels into the Sea.

The Provinces of Jajnapatnam are Pooner, Belligamme, Tenmarache, Waddemara, and Uttam.

Baldau: and Patchiarapalle. The Province of Bel-
The Church ligamme has 14 Churches, the chief where-Telipole. of is Telipole a large Structure, with a double row of Pillars; the House thereunto belonging is the Work of the Jesuits, beautified with a pleasant Garden, handsome Court and most delicious Vineyards, affording most sorts of Indian Fruits, and water'd with several Springs.

In August 1658, the Reform'd Religion was the first time (as in all other Churches of Jafnapatnam and Manaar) introduced and taught here by me. The 12th of Jan. 1661. the holy Sacrament was the first time administred to 12 Communicants of the Natives. The 19th of April in the same Year their Number encreased to 15, and before my Departure to 30. In the Year 1663, we had above 1000 Schoolboys, among whom were 480 who could answer all the Questions relating to the chief Points of our Religion. I have sometimes had no less than 2000 Auditors in this Church.

A certain Indian named Michael Fonseca, ask'd me once a very odd Question, viz. When John baptized Christ, whether he baptized him in the Name of God the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost; and being answer'd Yes, he reply'd that thus Jesus Christ was baptiz'd in his own Name, which he could not well comprehend. I told him, there was not the least Absurdity in the matter, since Jesus Christ was not baptized upon his own account, or as God alone, nor as a bare Man, but as being endowed both with the Divine and Human Nature. That the Son of God could not be baptized otherwise but in the Name of God; and that under the Word God, was not only comprehended the Father, but also the Son and Holy Ghost; that Jesus Christ was the same in essence with the Father and the Holy Ghost; and that there were no degrees in the Deity, for tho the Father was the first yet were the Son as well and truly God as the Father and Holy Ghost: wherewith he was well satisfy'd. For the Indians being generally very ingenious, they will ask many acute Questions, as concerning the Creation and End of the World, the Immortality of the Soul, Hell, and such like.

Most of the Churches here have certain Scaffolds or Theaters near them, especially pecially that of Telipole, where the Jesuits used to represent certain Histories of the Bible to the People on Holidays.

The Church
Mallagam.

About half an Hour thence stands the Church Mallagam of good Brickwork, with an adjacent House built upon two Arches, and a handfom pair of Stairs leading to the top of it. The Church was begun by the Portugueses, but finish'd by the Dutch. It has 200 School-boys, but not above 600 Auditors.

The Church
Mallett.

The Church Mallett is about 5 Quarters of an Hour from Telipole. Here are 750 Schoolboys, all taught by one Master, who has more work than the two at Telipole: the Auditors of this Church amount to 1500 or 1600. The Church is a large Structure of Stone; the House belonging to it is lofty, with a Balcony on the top of it, affording a very fine Prospect into the main Sea, so that it may well deserve the Name of Belle videre. The Church is not above half a Mile from the Sea-side. They abound here in Fish, such as Crabs, Soles, Plaice, &c. as likewise in Hares and Partridges.

The Church
Achiavelli.

The Church Achiavelli lies about two Hours from Telipole, it is a large and lotty Structure built of Stone, capable of containing 2000 Persons; it was not finish'd till in our time. The Village lies extremely pleasant among the Woods, stor'd with vast Quantities of Turtle-Doves, which cue at certain Hours three times a day, and serve the Inhabitants instead of a Clock, to know the time of the Day. They have also Plenty of Hares, Stags and Wild-Boars, but are also annoyed by the Serpents.

As divers old Brahmans live in this Place, so were the Inhabitants not so forward in embracing the Christian Religion; the antient Brahman, named Philippo, does not want the Knowledge of the Fundamentals of our Religion, but is more inclin'd to the Historical, than the Doctrinal part. Among others there lived here a certain Brahman, a Learned Person, with whom I used to have frequent Conversation, whilst I liv'd at Achiavelli; he was baptized at last in the 46th Year of his Age, and afterwards writ the History of the Life and Passion of our Saviour, in a lofty Poetical Stile, in the Latin Malabar, call'd Hanscreet, which is quite different from the common Maia-

Bairaus.
Pleasantness of the Village.

Bar Characters. The School here has about 4 or 500 Boys, and the Church 7, 8 or 900 Auditors.

The Church Ondewil. About an Hour from Telipole stands the Church Ondewil, in a great Plain, with an adjacent large Stone-house, formerly the Habitation of a Franciscan Fryar. The Soil is very luscious here and fertile in Rice, Naceny, and other Eatables. The Schoolboys amount to 600, and the Auditors to 900 or 1000.

The Church Batecotte. Two hours distant from the Castle is the Church Batecotte, with a lofty adjacent House, flat on the top, and adorn'd with a pleasant Garden, well stor'd with Trees; the Fields round about it are extremely fruitful. It is seated near the Salt River, and abounds in Fish and all manner of other Provisions. Of Schoolboys they have here about 8 or 900, and of Auditors in the Church near 2000.

The Church Paneteripou. About half an hour from Batecotte is the Church Paneteripou, a neat and magnificent Edifice of Stone, with a pleasant House near it built upon Arches, with two spacious Rooms and a Gallery, fine Gardens, and a delicious Fishpond or Cistern. The School is frequented by 600 Boys, who in my time had made such considerable Progress, that they could rectify the Papish Errors concerning Purgatory, the Mass, Indulgences, Auricular Confession, &c. Mr. Andrew the Schoolmaster and his Usher, being Persons very diligent in their Stations. The Inhabitants are very devout here, and at Sermon-time seldom less than 12 or 1300 come to Church.

The Church Changane is not above a good Mile from Paneteripou, lying with this and Batecotte in a Triangle, almost at an equal distance from one another. Both the Church and adjacent House are built of Stone, as is also Paneteripou: They are very conveniently built with a Court before, surrounded by a Brick Wall; behind is an Orchard of Cocoe and Portuguese Fig-Trees, besides Potatoes, Bananaes, &c. The School is frequented by 700 Boys, who are carefully instructed by their Schoolmaster nam'd Ambrosio. The Inhabitants flock to Church with so much Zeal, that there is scarce room to contain them all.

Two hours from Jasnapatnam, and one from Changane, stands the Church Ma- nipay. About 560 Children are educated in this School. It is scarce to be imagined, that at so small a distance there should be so great a difference betwixt the People, the Inhabitants here being a malicious Generation, superstitious, and still much inclin'd to Paganism. The Church is big enough to contain 2000 Souls, but seldom above 7 or 800 come to hear the Sermons. The House is built only of Clay, and cover'd with Palm-tree-Leaves. Just before the Church is a fine Pond or Cistern with fresh Water, near which stood formerly one of their Pagodes. This Place is inhabited by several of the Family of Madapoli, who were concern'd in the Plot (lately mention'd) with Don Louys.

The Church Vanarponne stands just under the Castle of Jafnapatnam, most inhabited by Walshers; Vanar signifying as much as a Walsher in the Malabar. It is not very big, nor has a House belonging to it. The Schoolboys amount to 200, and the Auditors in the Church to about 5 or 600 Souls.

Just by Vanarponne is the Church Nalour, built only of Clay, and slenderly cover'd. Here also stood formerly a Pagode. The School is frequented by about 590 Children, who are not so well versed in the Points of the Christian Religion as most of the rest, the People here retaining still a strong Inclination to Paganism, especially since some Years ago about 100 Printers of Callicoes were transplanted hither from the Coast of Coromandel, to the no small Prejudice of the Christian Religion, tho the Company were no great Gainers by it; since it is evident, that for want of good Water at Jafnapatnam, the same can't be brought to their true Perfection, and therefore are much better bought and transported from the Coast of Coromandel.

This is certain, that this Generation is very mischievous to the Christians here, it being frequent to see them appear in publick painted with Cinza or Ashes (accounted holy among them) and to carry their Beads; besides that the Moors have their publick Schools allow'd them of late Years. I must confess that whilst Mr. Anthony Pavilioen (at the time of my being there) was Governor of Jafnapatnam, he did all in him lay to assist me (at my request) in stopping the Progress of the Pagan Superstitions, and was not well pleased to see the Callico Printers introduced here, it being (not without reason) to be fear'd that in time they may (by promiscuous Marriages) increase to such a number as may endanger both the Church and State, especially if they are allowed the burning of their Dead, and some other Pagan Ceremonies they much insist upon.

It is further to be fear'd, that in time there may be a promiscuous Copulation betwixt the Christians and Pagans, which must needs produce direful Effects in the Church. It may be objected, that severe Punishments will put a stop to that Evil (some having already been punish'd with Death upon that account) but this does not altogether remove the Danger; besides, that it ought to be consider'd whether such a Severity be consonant to the Word of God or not.

*A bet Church
couth.*

The last Church not far from the City, is call'd Sunde-couth, belonging to the Ci-vias, or Chair-men and Water-Carriers. The Church is a neat Structure, but the Inhabitants an idle and base Generation, About 450 Children belong to the School, but seldom frequent it, because they generally go abroad a fishing with their Parents. Seldom above 400 come to Church, whereas there are about 1500 Inhabitants. It is a pleasant place, deliciously seated among Trees of a considerable bigness. Thus far we have spoken of the Province Belligamme, and its Churches, unto which belong likewise Copay and Pontour, containing about 800 School-boys, and 2000 Souls. The Children in these Schools are distinguish'd into several Forms, according to their respective degrees of Proficiency; so that those who have learn'd (for instance) the Creed, and Our Father, teach those that scarce know to say Our Father. Among these Boys, they have some they call Merinhos, who take an account of such as are absent, and return them to the Master, or the Head Merinho.

C H A P. XLVI.

The second, third and fourth Provinces, with their respective Churches, belonging to Jafnapatnam. The Isles of Jafnapatnam. Vast number of Christians. The Author's Zeal in promoting the Christian Religion.

Navacouli.*

THE second Province of Jafnapatnam is Tenmarache, which contains five Churches, with the Villages thereunto belonging. The first is the Church Navacouli, seated in a pleasant Plain abounding in Cattel and Fruit; as the Woods afford great store of Apes and Monkys, and all sorts of Venison and Wild Fowl. Both the Church and adjacent House are only of Clay, and cover'd with Palm-leaves. The School is frequented by 400 Children, and the Church by 7 or 800 Auditors.

of Chavagatzery.*

An hour from Navacouli stands the Church of Chavagatzery, the biggest of the whole Province, and the adjacent House, very strong and well-built, having a pleasant Prospect towards the Sea, with fine Gardens, well stor'd with all sorts of Indian Fruits. They abound in Fish, for they live upon Husbandry and Fishing. The School is frequented by 1000 Children, who are instructed by two Masters and an Usher, and the Church by betwixt 2 and 3000 Souls.

Cathay.*

The Church Cathay is an hour from Chavagatzery, through sandy and difficult Ways, but full of Ponds stor'd with Wild-ducks; besides which they abound in Snipes, Herns, Indian Ravens, and all sorts of small Birds. The Church and House are only of Clay, and cover'd with Leaves, like that of Navacouli. The School has 550 Children, and the Church 11 or 1200 Auditors.

Betwixt Cathay and the Church Waranni are sandy and difficult Ways. The Church stands in the midst of a small Wood of Areek, Coco, Palm, Banano's, Mango's, Cajon and Guavo-Trees. This place affords, besides the ordinary Melons, the most delicious Water-Melons in the Indies. The Church is but slenderly built, and enclosed with a Wall of Earth, as is likewise the House; yet has it divers spacious Apartments, and a handsome Entrance. The School has about 800 Children, and the Church 2500 Auditors.

The last Church of Tenmarache is that of Ilondi Matual, unto which belongs the Village of Nagar Kojel, famous for a large Pagode that stood there formerly. The Church is only of Clay, but the adja-

Baldus. adjacent House of Stone, unto which you ascend by steps; it has three large Apartments, a neat Entrance, and a fair Prospect. Hereabouts are great numbers of Peacocks, and sometimes they see some Elephants in this Tract of Land. The Company also maintains here some tame Elephants, as in divers other places, they being separated at some distance for the better conveniency of their Fodder. Unto this School belong about 650 Children, and to the Church 1100 or 1200 Auditors.

The Province since Wadde-marache.

The third Province is call'd Wadde-marache, having only three Churches. It affords such plenty of Pasture, of Cows, Sheep, Goats, Fowl, Pigeons, and Partridges, that you may buy a Sheep for 8 d. or 10 d. 60 Eggs for 3 d. and four good Pullets for a Fanam, or 5 d.

The Church Catavelli.

The first Church is call'd Catavelli; the Church and adjacent House are both of Brick, the last having a Summer-house on the top of it, from whence you have a delightful Prospect into the Plain. The School has 600 Children, and the Church 1000 or 1200 Auditors.

The second Church is Oreputti; the Village is inhabited by a set of Vagabonds and Thieves, of the Family of the Nalloas, not much inclin'd to Religion. The School is frequented by 690 Children, and the Church by 8 or 900 Auditors less or more. The Children are taught here to make their Letters in the Sand.

The Church Paretiture is the finest and largest of this Province, call'd by the Portugueses, Funta das Pedras, or the Rocky Point. Paretiture signifies in the Malabar Tongue as much as Cottons Harbour, from the great quantity of Cotton that grows thereabouts on small Trees. Not long ago, whilst we were engag'd in War with the English, a Fort was order'd to be erected here. During the War with Portugal, the Dutch carried off from hence one of their Priests, and plunder'd Manaar at the same time. Hereabouts also happen'd a smart Engagement betwixt the Portugueses and us, wherein we were hard put to it, and lost among others Capt. John Hooghfaen. During the Siege of Japna, patnam the Portugueses expected the landing of their Succours in this place.

may ride safe at Anchor for 7 or 8 Months, but they must take care to depart before the Northern Mousson, which renders this Shore very dangerous: So soon as any Ships are discover'd at Sea, a Flag is put out on a long Pole for their Direction. The Church was much decay'd, but has been repair'd of late. Just before the Church stands a tall Tamarin Tree, which affording a very agreeable Shadow in the heat of the day, the People are often instructed by the Minister to the number of 3000. The School has about 1000 Children.

The last and furthestmost Province is call'd Patchiarapalle, which has four Churches, and as many Schools. This Province is very sandy and unwholesom, wants good Water, and is much infested by the Elephants, by reason of the vast quantity of wild Palm-Trees that grow here, and afford Food to the poorer sort of Inhabitants, tho the Elephants throw down some hundreds every year, being very greedy after the Fruit when it comes to Maturity. At a certain season of the year the Children are seiz'd here with a certain Swelling in the Belly and Groin, which sweeps away a good number of them. They are also afflicted with certain Fevers (like those of Manaar) which regulate their Fits according to the Moon, and kill in a little time. The Itch and Small-pox are also very common here: The Inhabitants being very poor, and feeding most generally upon unwholesom Diet, such as dry'd Fish, Pon-nates, Kekenges, and a little Rice. As this Province borders upon Raja Singa's Country, so they are subject to the Incursions of the Cingaleses, which is the reason that the House belonging to the Church of Poelepolay (the first in this Province) is surrounded with a high Wall with Port-holes in the nature of a Redoubt. The School has about 300 Children, and the Church 600 Auditors. Here are certain Women who have a way to play upon Earthen Vessels or Mugs (call'd Callangs) by blowing into them as into a Trumpet. This Province affords a kind of Wood call'd Jagers-Wood (or Hunters-wood) which for its goodness is transported to the Coast of Coromandel.

Baldern

The Elephants throwing down a Palm tree

The Church
Mogomale
I. C.

Two good hours from Poolepolay stands the Church of Mogomale in a Wood, with an adjacent House, both well built; the School has about 450 Children, and the Church 500 Auditors.

The Church
Tambanne
I. C.

The Church Tambanne is the largest and best seated in the whole Province. The School has 600 Children, and the Church 900 Auditors.

The Church
Muispatto
I. C.

Muispatto is the last Church, about a day's Journey from Jajnapatnam, near the Head of the River call'd Pajjo Seco, or the Dry Passage; where we have a Palenka guarded by some Soldiers. The Church-House is provided with Port-holes for its Defence, but the Church is mean and small. The School has no more than 215 Children, and the Church scarce 350 Auditors.

Thus far of Jajnapatnam, and its Provinces, Churches and Schools. We will now pass over into the adjacent Isles, which are six in number.

The first of these Isles is

The first of these Isles is Ourature, which has three Churches, viz. Aleputti, Welane and S. John, of Ourature, all which have together about 800 School-boys, and 2600 Auditors. This Isle has been subject to great Floods, both before and in the time of the Portugueses, to such a degree that the People were forced to save themselves on the tops of the Trees. Of this we saw an Instance in the year 1658. when a most furious Tempest, accompanied by a Hurricane, raised the Waters beyond the Shore to such a height, that it broke into the Water-Gate of the Castle, throwing down every thing that stood in the way; the Tiles were all blown from the Houses, the Trees tore up by the Roots, and unspeakable damage done both to Men and Cattle. After the fury of the Tempest was somewhat allay'd, several Fishes were taken in the Church-porch, which had been carried along with the Water over the Cortin. This Isle has plenty of Fish and Stags: It produces also a certain small Root call'd Saye, us'd by the Dyers to dye Red Cloths. They make also very good Butter here, and have store of Larks and some Sea-gulls.

The Isle of Ourature and Caradiva are separated by the River, in the middle whereof lies the Fort Cays (or Hams-deel) of which we have spoken before.

This Island was lost by a Mistake.

From this Isle the Elephants are embark'd by means of a Bridge, and transported to Coromandel and Bengale. This Isle is supposed to produce the best Saye in the Indies. It has a well built Church and House belonging to it of Stone; the Church was finish'd in my time, as was that of Ourature, which was set on fire by the Portugueses. The School is frequented by 490 Children, and the Church by 1000 or 1100 Persons.

Somewhat further into the Sea to the right as you sail to the Isle Pongardiva, lies a little Island call'd Ilha Deserta, i. e. the Desert Island, by the Portugueses. This Isle as well as that of Carativa, abounds in Serpents, and furnishes our Ships with Fuel.

Pongardiva is a large Isle, but the Ground being rocky, produces but little for the sustenance of Mankind, except Stags, Hares and Peacocks in great quantities; they abound also in Fish, and especially in large Oysters, which are better to stew than to be eaten raw. The Men are generally much taller here than in any other part of the Indies.

Vol. III.

The School has 200 Children, and the Church 800 Auditors.

The Isle Analativa is small, but produces vast plenty of Oysters. The Inhabitants of both Sexes amount to about 800, and 200 Children. It has a little Church and convenient House near it. It was formerly call'd Donna Clara, from a certain Lady that liv'd there, and was Mistress of it in the time of the Portugueses. They still shew there a Chair wherein she used to sit, which is big enough to hold conveniently two Persons at once.

The Island Nainativa has got its Name from the great number of Jackals that are found there; of which more anon. It is very small, and inhabited by Brabmans turn'd Christians, who lead very sober Lives. The School has 70 Children, and the Church 300 Auditors. The Church is very small, yet has an adjacent House fit to lodge Strangers in.

Nindundiva, or the Long Isle, from its length, which is about six Leagues, is call'd Nindundiva, or Ilha das Vacas, i. e. the Cow Island, by the Portugueses, because abundance of Cattel are transported thither from Ton-day, which makes Cattel so cheap there that you may buy a good Cow for four Dutch Shillings (or half a Rixdollar) but their Oxen and Cows are not near so big as those on the Continent of Jafnapatnam. Oftentimes a Mortality happens among the Cattel, because the Ground being hot and dry, produces divers venomous Herbs, which they feed upon. The Inhabitants are very poor, and live upon miserable Diet: I remember that being once eight days in this Isle, I and my Company could scarce get Provisions for our Sustenance. The Isle is of difficult access, because the Shore is rocky, and has no Bays, but only a few narrow Creeks, where there is no coming in except in very calm Weather; otherwise the Sea beats with such violence against the Rocks, that there is no coming near them, tho there be sometimes five or six fathom Water. For which reason there is no coming at it except in the calm Seasons, which happen twice a year at the change of the Moussons: For the South-wind forces you upon the Rocks, and with the North-wind the Shore is too shallow to approach it. The Portugueses had formerly a Fort here, the Ruins whereof are to be seen to this day. They also brought some Horses into this Isle, which multiplying in time produc'd a certain kind of Horses that are very small, but hardy and very fit to travel on stony and rocky grounds: They live in the Wilderness, and are taken by forcing them unto the Bank of a River or Pond, where they catch them in Snares or Ropes. This Isle produces also a certain kind of Goats, out of which they take Bezoar Stones, but they are none of the best. It has about 900 Inhabitants, and 170 Children.

Spring.

It is very remarkable that there is no fresh Water in all this Isle, except what is found in one place among the Rocks, being above half a mile in Circuit. If we may credit the Inhabitants, these Rocks were split by a Thunderbolt, which occasion'd these Springs, some whereof have not above half a foot, others a foot deep Water: The entire Rocks arising betwixt these Springs have often cast Men and Beasts down the Precipices.

There are some other Islands near this Shore, but being very small and not inhabited (as the Palesiva, and the two Brothers, since call'd Hoorn and Enchuy-sin) are not worth our particular Observation.

In the year 1663. I and my Colleague Mr. John à Breyt sent the following account to Mr. Maatzuyker, General of the Indies for our Company, viz. That in Jafnapatnam were at that time 15012 Children under the Tuition of the respective School-masters there, being all Natives; not reckoning those of Manaar and the Country of the Wannias, where in my Visitation 1665. in March and April, I found in those of Poenery, Polue-raincatti, Peringale, Manstotte, Nanatom, and Aripou, all Churches belonging to the Wannias, and in the Churches of Manaar, viz. Totavalli Karsel, Irkelampatti, Tellimanaar, Peixale, the Fishers and City Churches, 1315 Children of the Natives. Such as were come to Age of maturity amounted in the Wannias to 4533, and in the Isle of Manaar to 3520, not including 214 Slaves lately converted, who had already learn'd certain forms of Prayers. According to the Church-Registers (call'd here Patolas) in the year 1663. there were of Christian Men and Women in the Kingdom of Jafnapatnam 62558, not including the Slaves, whereof there were 2587. The number of the baptiz'd Children from 1658, till 1661, viz. in three years and a half, in the Churches of Jafnapatnam amounted to 5799 Children, and 36 that were come to Age of Maturity. During that time were married 2158 Couples, not reckoning those baptiz'd and married in the Low-Dutch and Portuguese Churches. At the time of my departure the number of the Children in the Schools was risen to 18000, and that of the baptized Children in 1663 to 12387. From the year 1658, till 1661. the whole burden of visiting all the before-mention'd Churches lay upon my Shoulders, till Mr. Breyt was join'd with me, who dying in his return to Holland (his Corps being inter'd at the Cape of Good Hope) 1665. Mr. Bartholomew Heyne succeeded in his place.

In the Churches of Jafnapatnam the Ten Commandments written in large Malabar Characters, are hung up on a Table, on both sides whereof are the Our Father, and the Creed. Every Sunday the People come to Church about Ten a Clock, and after they have sung a Psalm, the School-master reads a Sermon in the Malabar Language, for which purpose a certain number of Sermons are allotted to each Church, to be read in the absence of the Minister. This done, they conclude with singing another Psalm.

But the greatest Trouble that belongs to a Minister in these parts, is the Instruction to be given both to young and old by way of mouth, which is best done by way of Question and Answer, which makes the deepest Impression into the Minds of these tender Christians. Besides, as the Malabar Tongue is so difficult to attain to, that none of our Ministers dare pretend to the Perfection of it; so on the other hand, they may learn without much trouble, as much as is requisite for the instructing them in the main Points of our Religion. Add to this, that our Ministers undergo much more Fatigue in their Stations than the Romish Ecclesiasticks, who preach very seldom; and each Church having its peculiar Attendant, they are not oblig'd to travel from place to place as we do. Besides, that they bring the Portuguese Language commonly along with them, which ours are forc'd to learn upon the spot, not without great difficulty; not to mention several other Disadvantages on our side, sufficient to convince those who extol the Merits of the Romish Clergy upon that score, and vilify ours: these I would have consider, that at this time there are no more than two or three Ministers belonging to all these Churches, which had no less than forty in the time of the Portuguese; and we have three Sermons every Sunday, and one in the Week; besides the constant Visitations of the Churches in the Country.

Before my departure, I took care to have the next following Pieces translated (the same being revis'd by me before) out of the Portuguese into the Malabar, by Francis de Fonseca, a Member of the Reform'd Churches.

I had abundance of other Sermons by me in the Portuguese Language, but for want of a good Interpreter (whom I mention'd before, having his hands full with the rest) the same was fain to be defer'd till another opportunity, tho at the same time I never thought it convenient to overcharge these People with many Books, pursuant to the Opinion of Mr. John Maatzuyker our General, in his Letter sent to me from Batavia, Sept. 18. 1662.

CHAP. XLVII.

The Nature and Qualifications of the Inhabitants of Jaſaapatnam. The Bellales, and their manner of living. The Brahmans, their Doctrines ſhewn and refuted.

Qualifications of the Inhabitants of Jaſaapatnam.

IT is time to ſay ſome thing of the Inhabitants of Jaſaapatnam; which done, we will return to Batecalo, and ſo leaving the Iſle we will turn our ſelves another way.

In Ceylon are divers Clans, or Families, as well as on the Coaſt of Coromandel. The Generation of the Bellales is the chiefſt here ſince Chriſtianity has been introduc'd, the Brahmans challenging the firſt rank among the Pagans.

The Habit of the Bellales.

The Bellales wear a kind of Garment from above the Navel, turning betwixt the Legs like a pair of Drawers. They alſo make uſe of Scripous (or Soles) tied to the bottom of the feet with Leather Straps, the upper part of the feet being bare, to prevent their ſweating. Upon the Belly they have a kind of a Bag (call'd Maddi) being part of their Garment roll'd together, wherein they keep their Aceek and Betel, and ſome Paper to make uſe of upon occaſion. On the right ſide they carry a kind of a Knife in a Sheaf, and an Iron Pen pointed with Silver, as is likewiſe the Sheath, in which they keep alſo a piece of Steel to ſharpen their Knife upon. They make holes in their Ears from their Infancy, which being adorn'd with Golden Pendants, draw them down to their Shoulders. They live upon Huſbandry, and are rich in

Are rich in Cattel.

Cattel, ſuch as Cows, Oxen for the Plow, Sheep, Goats and Buſſlers. Their Habitations are both convenient and neat, with pleaſant Gardens, well planted with Betel, and furniſh'd with excellent Springs, which furniſh them (during the dry Summer Seafon) with Water for the watering of the Gardens. Their Harveſt is in January and February; their Winter, or rainy Seafon being in November and December. In ſome places, viz. in the low marſhy Grounds, they have Harveſt twice a year: They thręſh their Corn (after the manner of the Iſraelites) with Oxen, not muffled; theſe tread the Seed out of the Ears.

During the rainy Seafon it rains with ſuch violence, that the Fields are all overflow'd; and I remember that in my time a conſiderable part of the Corrin of the Caſtle was waſh'd away by the Rains. This continues for two months, and Great it happens oftentimes, that for eight months after it rains not above three times, which is the reaſon that they are oblig'd even to water the Coco-Trees till they are ſix years old. If you dig about two foot deep you meet with rocky ground, ſo that if you will have a Spring you muſt cut them out of the Ground rocks. Rocks with vaſt Charge.

The before-mention'd Bellales make likewiſe Butter, but not after the ſame manner as we do in Holland. They take a kind of a Mill made like a Star at the bottom, this they roll betwixt both hands (as we do with our Chocolate) till the Butter comes. Some of our Dutch Women make alſo good Cheeſe, but it is not regarded among the Inhabitants; but Butter is in great eſteem among them as well as among the Moors, nay the Family of Commetty uſe Butter like Drink. Milk turn'd to Curds (call'd by them Tayr) is alſo in great requeſt with them, and uſed like a cooling Medicine in Fevers, and the Small-Pox, which are very frequent here.

Their Cattel they keep both day and night in the Field, tho' towards night they drive them into a certain Encloſure. They are never houſ'd in the Winter, but feed in the Grounds where the Corn firſt ſprouts forth, and afterwards are fed with Hay till Harveſt time. If the Cattel happen to break into a Neighbour's Field, the Owner is oblig'd to make good the Damage. The Bellales are generally the richeſt of the Country; they don't marry except in their own Family, and commonly in the Spring; as the Romans did formerly in May, and the Persians in the Spring: if it happens to be a fruitful Year, they are the more inclined to marry. They are very litigious, and will go to Law for a Trifle, because they are constantly envious at one another.

The Brahmans living in Jafnapatnam, or any other part of the Indies, are for the most part Men of great Morality, sober, clean, industrious, civil, obliging, and very moderate both in eating and drinking; they use no strong Liquors, wash or bathe twice a day, eat nothing that has had or may have Life, yet are much addicted (like all the rest of the Indians) to Pleasure. Notwithstanding they are Christians, they carry still certain Beads, and (as Rogierius observes, fol. 71.) like those of Coromandel, never marry out of their Families, but frequently their Brothers and Sisters Children; tho' else they are great Enemies to Incest, but excuse this near Alliance by the great Value they put upon their Generation, which they deduce from Bramma, and some Learned Men from Abraham and Keturah, whose Children, according to try.*

Tho they bear the Name of Christians, and know how to discourse rationally of the Ten Commandments, and the other Points of the Christian Doctrine, they still retain many of their Pagan Superstitions. If you tell them of the Christian Liberty in Victuals and Drinks, they reply, that they are not ignorant of it, but as the Essence of Christianity does not consist in eating and drinking, so they do not think themselves oblig'd to feed upon such things as are contrary to their Nature and Education, being from their Infancy used to much tenderer Food, which agrees best with their Constitution, and makes them generally live to a great Age.

They are not ignorant in the Course of Their years, in calculating the Eclipses of the Sun and Moon, know the seven Stars, which they call Arramien, i. e. Six-fishes, because, say they, we see no more than six. They understand also the Names of the Planets, and chiefest of the fixed Stars, but this must be understood from the most Learned among them.

Tho we shall treat in particular hereafter of the Errors of the Pagans, yet can I not pass by here in silence, what I have observ'd my self concerning their Opinion of the Creation of the World, its Age, and Transmigration of the Soul. In the Year 1665, after I had catechiz'd the People after Sermon in the Church of Parititure, happening to discourse concerning the Creation and Age of the World; some of the Indians affirm'd that the World had stood 4864 Years since their Kaligam or fourth Period. For they have four Periods, the first called Creinagam, the second Treitagam, the third Dmaparugam, and the fourth Kaligam. And whereas the Indians in Coromandel did in the Year 1639, compute no more than 4739 Years since the Creation of the World, I told 'em that they follow'd the Footsteps of the Chineſes, who in their Computations made no great account of 100 Years less or more, which made 'em smile. I told 'em further, that there was no certain Computation from the beginning of the World, except what was founded upon the Holy Scripture; and that in the Year 1665 (according to the Jewish Computation) the World had stood 5425 Years. Concerning the Origin of the Soul, I found them of the same Opinion with the Great Rabbi, viz. That all Souls were created in the beginning, and kept till they were to be communicated to certain Bodies. Unto which they have added the Pythagorean Tradition of the Transmigration of the Soul.

I remember that at a certain time, as I was walking with some of them, and endeavouring to refute this Opinion; they objected that it was impossible for a Child to be born Blind, Dumb or Lame, without having receiv'd a Soul that had been guilty of very gross Sins. For, said they, since the Child has not committed any Sins, and God does not punish any Body without sinning, this must be attributed to the Sins committed by the Soul whilst yet in another Body, and now entered into the Child. Unto which I reply'd in our Saviour's Words, out of John 9. 1. when his Disciples ask'd him concerning the blind Man from his Birth, Neither had this Man sinned nor his Parents, but that the Works of God should be made manifest in him. Whence it seems that the Jews were somewhat infected with this Tradition, mention whereof is also made by Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 11. and de Bello Judaeo, l. 2. c. 8. The Words of Herod. Mat. 14. 2. when he says concerning Christ, This is John the Baptist, he is risen from the Dead, intimate the same, as likewise what the Jews said concerning Christ, Mat. 16. 13, 14. some that he was John the Baptist, some Elias, and others Jeremias. Hence Elias (commonly call'd Levita) in his Book Tibi, and the other Cabalists of the Jews were of Opinion, that the Souls pass thro three distinct Bodies, which they pretend to evince from the Words of Job 33. 29. Lo! all these things worketh God twice or thrice thro one Man. Thus the Jews affirm that the Soul of Adam was translated into the Body of David, and afterwards into that of the Messiah; which Error having been introduced into Palestine by Antiochus's Philosophers, the Jewish Doctors did not stick to maintain that the Souls of sinful Men did transmigrate into the Bodies of Beasts, according to the degrees or heinousness of their Crimes; whereas it is manifest, that a rational Soul can't fix its Habitation but in the Body instructed with proper Organs, whereby it exerts its Operations; and the Scripture tells us expressly, that the Soul and Spirit returns to God who gave it; besides many other Arguments I alledged to them upon this Head against their Opinion.

The learned Possius is of opinion, that this Error took its beginning from the true Tradition of the Resurrection of the Dead, which was spread even among the Druids in Gaul, according to Cesar, lib. 6. with this difference however, that the Pythagoreans affirm the Souls to transmigrate even into the Bodies of Beasts; whereas the first restrain it only to the Bodies of Men, which made them face Death with an undaunted Courage, according to Lucan lib. 1.

In ferrum mens prona viris, animaeque ca-

Appian says of the ancient Germans among other things, that they despised Death in hopes of another Life; and Thomas Avion an Englishman assures us, that the same had been found in Virginia. Joseph Acosta says the same of Peru and Mexico; and the same is related of Guinea, of the Chineſes, the ancient Egyptians and Geses. The Pythagoreans say of Atthalides, that his Soul before it entered the Body of Pythagoras, transmigrated into three several other Bodies, first into that of

All the Indian Pagans are infected with this erroneous Opinion, as we shall see more at large, hereafter: but what is more surprizing is, that the Sadduces among the Jews, who had so much Veneration for the Books of Moses, should deny the Immortality of the Soul; when it is said in Gen. 1. 16. That the Soul of Man was not created, like material Substances, but was part of the Spirit of God. The same say all the Gentiles, as Hermes, Zoroaster, Chalcidius and Epicharmis. Cicero in Somnio Scip. says, There is a near Relation betwixt God and our Souls. Seneca in his Letter to Lucilius tells him, That the Souls are in Heaven; and speaking of the deceased Son of Marcia, he says, in meliori Statu est, he is in a better State. The Turks, and Persians, and Mahomet in his Alcoran acknowledg the Immortality of the Soul; which put these Christians to the blush, who affirm that the Souls of the Wicked are annihilated, or what others assert, That the Souls rest in the Matter till the Day of Judgement.

Marriages of the Bellales and Brahmans. Divers Circumstances observed upon that account. Families, Degrees, and Handicraftsmen of Jainapatnam. The Taking and Description of Trinquenemale.

Marriage-Customs.

IN the preceding Chapter we told you concerning the Marriages of the Bellales, and how the Brahmans often marry their Brothers and Sisters Children. Among some of the Christians in Ceylon obtains a certain Custom to this day, to tie the Tali or Bracelet of the Bride about the Bridegroom's Neck, a thing introduced by the Pagans, and imitated by the Christians: for as Rogerius observes, the Inhabitants of the Coast of Coromandel look upon it as a Ceremony so necessary towards the Confirmation of the Marriage, that whenever the Husband dies, the Tali he wore about his Neck on his Marriage-Day is to be burnt with him.

As Maidens without a good Portion are a very bad Commodity here, hence it is that frequent Collections are made to help the poorer sort to Husbands. They are of Opinion, that a single Man is but half a Man; nay that those who neglect or lose any time in propagating their own Kind, are not far different from a Murderer and a Destroyer of Human Kind (according to the opinion of Plato, which was likewise encourag'd among the Athenians and Romans) which is the reason they often marry their Daughters at 10 and 11 Years of Age, and nothing is more frequent than to see them bring forth Children at 13 or 14.

Weddings.

After they have been three times claimed from the Pulpit, the Marriage Ceremony is perform'd by the Minister; the House where the Wedding is kept being generally adorn'd with a kind of Triumphal Arch raised without Doors, made of Fig-tree Branches, Flowers, Pomegranates, and such like. The richer sort seldom fail to give a good Entertainment to their Friends, of Venison, Hares, Partridges, Fish, Fruits, Preserves, &c. and the Evening is spent in dancing, singing, and divers other Diversions. However strong Liquors are never made use of on such Occasions, unless the Hollanders (who can't well be merry without them) bring some along with them. These Marriage-Diversions continue sometimes four or five days successively.

I remember that during my Residence here, sometimes Children of eight or nine Years of Age would have engaged in mutual Promises of Marriage, in mine and their Friends Presence; which I always opposed, fearing, not without reason, that they might repent their Bargain, before they came to a marriageable Age. For the rest they constantly observe this Custom, that the Female is younger than the Bridegroom; nay they seldom will chuse a Maid, that has already had her Monthly Times: this Custom is so strictly observed on the Coast of Coromandel, that if a Brahman's Daughter remains unmarried till that time, she must lay aside all hopes of it for the future.

The learned Selden shews out of Rabbi Moses Maimonides, that the Jewish High Priests were not allow'd to marry a Maiden, unless she was under 12 Years of Age; and the ancient Romans commonly married their Daughters at 10, 11 or 12 Years

Years of Age. It is sufficiently known what Moses says, in relation to the Marks of Virginity, Deut. 12. 17. which to this day is followed by the Moors of Fez and Morocco. If they happen to die without Issue, the Mother's Portion returns to her Friends, the rest to the Husband's. One laudable Custom they have, which is, that scarce ever Children marry here without the consent of their Parents; a Custom not only agreeable to the express Command of God, express'd in divers Places of the Scripture, and the Practice of all Ages even among the Pagans, but also consonant to the Civil Constitutions, and the Decrees of the Council of Lateran and other Councils, which declare a Marriage betwixt Raptorem and Raptam invalid in it self.

The Tribe or Family of the Chivias, use formerly to attend the Service of the King of Jafnapatnam, but now do all sorts of Drudgery, as carrying of Water and Wood for the Dutch Inhabitants; they make use also of them for Littermen, 10 or 12 of them being sometimes employed at a time, to carry a good bulky Hollander, 10, 20, nay 30 Leagues in a Litter. However as they are defended from Courtiers, so they are too proud to carry any ordinary Person, who must be contented to be carried by the ordinary Coelys or Labourers, who live all over the Country; whereas the Chivias inhabit in the District of the Church of Chundecouli.

Those of the Tribe of the Parruas do not live in such great Numbers in Jafnapatnam, as they do about Tutecoryn; they apply themselves to the Sea, and especially in diving for Sea-Horse Teeth and Pearls. They generally speak Portuguese, and are an active sort of People.

The Chittis live for the most part upon the Linen Manufacture and Traffick, the word Chitty signifying as much as a Merchant; they are a crafty Generation. Each of these Tribes does not marry into any other, besides their own, nay commonly in the same Family. Besides which, each Handicraftsman educates his Son to the same Trade he is of; thus a Weaver's Son follows the Weaving-Trade, as the Smith's Son does that of a Smith.

The Tribe of the Carreas live upon Fishing, which they perform with monstrous large Nets; they inhabit near the Sea-shore of Jafnapatnam, and the Banks of the Salt-River. Those of the Tribe of the Mokhuas are likewise Fishermen.

The Nallouas are generally Slaves to the Bellales, and much blacker than the rest. Their Business is to gather the Liquor that flows out of the Coco-Trees, call'd Suyri and Eumak by the Indians, to dig the Ground, tend the Cattel, water the Trees, and such like Drudgeries, as is commonly done also by the Coelys or ordinary Labourers. They are a nasty Generation, you may smell them at a good distance, not unlike the Hottentots on the Cape of Good Hope.

The Parreas are the most despicable of all, their Employment being to carry out Dung and such like filthy things, they feed upon Rats and Mice.

It is observable, that the Tribes of the higher Rank look upon the inferior Ones with a great deal of Scorn, these being obliged to salute the others in the Streets with deep Reverence, and other Ceremonies to shew their Submission. On the other hand, all the Men of what Rank or Quality soever, exercise a great Authority over their Wives, whom they rarely honour so far as to eat with them, but commonly dine alone. None of all these Tribes eat Cows Flesh, which is the reason that no Cows are killed but by the Dutch, the Cow being look'd upon among the rest as a Sacred Creature, as it was formerly among the Egyptians *, of which more hereafter.

Tho their Tribes are very numerous, yet do they relate to some few Families, from whence they take their Original, like the Branches from the Stem of a Tree. The same was practis'd among the antient Egyptians, who distinguish'd their Nation into four Head Tribes, viz. the Priests, the Soldiers, the Artisans and Handicraftsmen, and the Sheep and Cowherds. Just as now-a-days some of the European Nations are distinguish'd into four Estates, viz. Noblemen, Patricians or Gentlemen, Citizens, and the Common People.

For the rest, the generality of the Inhabitants of the Kingdom of Jafnapatnam are naturally ingenious, and have a strong Memory; they are very sober and moderate in their Diet, and (except the Nallouas and Parreas) very clean in their Apparel, not quarrelsome, but very free with their Tongue.

Their general Vice is Fornication and Adultery, especially among the young Men, as the old Ones are much addicted to Superstitions, as to the choice of certain Days (whereof something was said before concerning Raja Singa) the Cries of Birds, and such like things used among the antient Romans. Hence it is that the Portugueses in those Parts have a Proverb to this day, I know ho) did come in my way this day.

Their Superstition.

Thus on the Coast of Coromandel, they look upon it as fortunate, if they see a certain red Bird, with a white Ring about his Neck. John van Twist in his Description of Gufuratte, tells us of the Natives there, that they look upon it as a good Sign, if they meet an Elephant or Camel laden or unloaden, a Horse without a Burden, or a Cow or Buffler with Water on their Backs, for without a Load they were accounted unfortunate; a Ram or Dog with a piece of Meat in his Mouth, a Cat passing to the right hand of them: they also reckon it fortunate, if they meet any Body that carries Meat, Milk and Butter, or if a Cock crosses the way.

It is certain, that the Observations of the Cries and Flights of the Birds have not only been usual among the antient Romans, but also the Jews, with several other such like Superstitions, Predictions, asking Advice from the Devil, the finding out of stolen or lost Goods, &c. for Necromancy was forbid, Isa. 8. 19. Incantations, Acts 19. 15. Observations of the Cries of the Birds, Ezek. 21. 21. the choice of certain Days, Esth. 3. 7. & 9. 24. the consulting of Woods, Hof. 4. 12. besides which, the Predictions from the different Appearance of the Water, Air, Fire and Earth, out of certain Union of Characters or Numbers (called Cabala) Chiromancy, Astrology, Inspections into the Magic Glass, and such like Diabolical Illusions, described more at large by Peucerus in his Treatise, de variis Divinationum generibus.

*Lawyers
in Jafnapatnam.*

Besides the Artisans and Handicraftsmen, whereof there is great Plenty in Jafnapatnam, they have certain Persons who apply themselves to the Law; and in the high Court of Justice, composed of Hollanders and Indians, were set always (besides the Modeliers) a certain Person well versed in the Laws and Constitutions of his Native Country. They have also their Advocates, who make very long Speeches in their Pleadings.

Their Physicians.

Neither are they destitute of Physicians, such as they are; for to speak Truth they are more than Empiricks, who practise according to certain Books and Traditions, transmitted to them by their Ancestors, and confirm'd to them by their own Experience. They know not what Anatomy is, and very little of the nature of purging Medicines, which are not often used in this hot Climate: However when a Purge is to be given (whether a Potion or Pills) the Composition is always made of fresh Herbs; and if it works too strong, they mix some powdered Pepper with Water, and apply it to the Navel in the nature of an Ointment. I can tell it by my own experience, that it is a good Remedy against the Belly-ach and Looseness.

They have also good Store of Surgeons and Barbers, the last carry always a small Looking-glass along with them, their Razors are thicker on the back than ours; they not only shave your Beard and Head, but also pare your Hand and Toe Nails, and cleanse your Ears.

Weavers are here in abundance. These fit flat upon the Ground, their Feet being plac'd in a Hole dug for that purpose, whilst they are at work.

Callico-Printers or Painters are numberless here, who have a way of preparing their Colours, that they never go out by washing, tho those printed at Jafnapatnam are not near so good as those of the Coast of Coromandel, and especially those done at Majulipatan.

They are excellent Workmen in Ivory and Ebony Wood, as likewise in Gold and Silver, and will come with their Tools (which are but few) to work in the Houses of the Dutch. They are exactly well versed in the Essaying of Gold.

They are as well provided with Smiths, Carpenters and Bricklayers, as most Places in Europe, tho a Carpenter or Bricklayer gets not above five or six Pence a day.

Having thus given you a full account of the Kingdom of Jafnapatnam, we will now go from thence along the Seashore to Trinquemale, taken 1639 by Mr. Anthony Caan, which might have been done before whilst Mr. Adam Westermold was in Ceylon (there being no more than 50 Men in Garifon) had not Raja Singa bent his Thoughts upon Batecalo, or as some will have it upon Matecalo. Trinquemale has a most excellent Harbour, (as you may see by the Draught) nay to speak the Truth, the best and largest in the whole Isle of Ceylon, there being more secure riding at anchor here, than in the Harbours of Belligamme, Gale or Columbo.

This Place was several times relinquish'd and rebuilt by our Company, especially during our War with the English, it being not thought convenient to leave so good a Harbour, and so conveniently seated for the interrupting all Correspondence betwixt Foreigners and Raja Singa, to the Discretion of an Enemy;

nemy; tho the repairing of it (during my stay in Ceylon) under Captain Peter Wajh, cost us abundance of People, that were swept away by a Phrenical Distemper, which made them drown themselves in the Sea. Some of their Bodies being open'd, certain Worms were found in the Substance of the Brains, occasion'd questionless by the Violence of the Heat, the continual Labour, Watching, and the feeding upon Salt-Provisions; but more especially by the cold Night-Fogs. After which time it was strengthened with some additional Fortifications, as appears by Captain Peter du Poi's Letter, dated the 5th of Octob. 1667. from Macassar in the Isle of Celebes.

"I was once more order'd to sail with some Forces to Trinquenemale, to take once more possession of that Harbour and Bay for our Company, which I did accordingly with good Success; and having reafortify'd the Place with four Bastions, and reduc'd the circumjacent Inhabitants to our Subjection, I left a sufficient Garrison there, and so return'd to Columbo.

From Trinquenemale you travel by the way of Capello to Batecalo, the first place conquer'd by the Dutch in this Island, whereof we have given you the best account we were able, not questioning but that in case we should once live in Peace with the King of Candy (who is very old, almost doting, and much addicted to strong Liquor) our Countrymen will be much better acquainted with the Inland Countries than they have been hitherto.

According to the last Letter I receiv'd from Tuncocoryn, dated Decemb. 20. 1668. there had been lately an Insurrection in the Isle of Ceylon, so that they were forced to draw their Forces together out of Saffragam and Mannekewarre, but was appeased since, tho the Forces were not as yet dismissed.

C H A P. XLIX.

Natural History of Ceylon. Their Pagodes, Convents, Monks. Manners, Habit and Oeconomy of the Cingaleſes.

HAVING hitherto taken a view of those Places of Ceylon that are under the Jurisdiction of the Dutch Company, we will now take a turn to Candy, the Imperial Residence, as the most proper place to be inform'd concerning the real Constitution of this Isle, and its Inhabitants.

The City of Candy.

The City of Candy is seated about 30 Leagues from the Sea-side, and 9 from Vintane up the River of Trinquemale, about 21 Leagues by Land from Matecalo, and 9 from the Sea-shore, where the Emperor has his Docks for building and refitting his Ships and Gallies. The other Cities of Ceylon being not described in any Books, we must also pass by in silence here. All over the Isle you see abundance of very splendid Pagodes. The Foundation of that of Vintane has no less than 130 foot in Circumference; it is of a great height, and gilt on the top; it is oval on the bottom, and arises into a four-corner'd Point like a Pyramid. The Great Pagode betwixt Gale and Matecalo is also much celebrated, serving for a Light-house to Ships as well as that of Trinquemale. In the large high Pagode before-mention'd stands an Idol representing a Man with a naked Sword in his hand, lifting up his Arm, as if he were ready to strike. To this Idol the Cingaleſes pay their Reverence, and offer their Sacrifices upon all Emergencies, or in time of Sickneſs; for which reason they keep a Basket in every House, wherein they gather such Provisions as they are to sacrifice. They believe that the World will not have an end so long as that Pagode stands. Some worship an Elephant's Head of Wood or Stone, to obtain Wisdom. They adorn their Idols with Flowers. These Elephants Heads are plac'd sometimes on Trees in the High-ways, sometimes in little Brick Houses or Chappels. You see also frequently in the high Road certain heaps of Stones, Earth or Dung, upon which each Passenger throws something as he passes by.

And Idols.

Just by Belligamme I saw the Figure of a Man at least six Yards high, cut in a Rock about half a yard deep, who us'd to be worship'd by the Cingaleſes.

Near it is a high-peak'd Mountain, accounted the highest in the Indies, call'd Pico de Adam, or Adam's Peak; because they are of opinion, that here stood formerly the Paradise, where Adam was created: they also tell you, that the Print of the Foot of Adam is to be seen to this day in the Rock, the Draught whereof is kept in the Imperial Court. Unto this Rock a vast number of People flock from far distant places, to see this sacred Relick, tho the Mountain is of very difficult access, nay (if we may credit Maffaeus the Jesuit) quite inaccessible, unless by means of certain Iron Chains and Iron Spikes fastened to the Rocks.

Some are of opinion that they reverence the Chamberlain of the Queen Candace in this place, who according to some Historians, but especially Dorotheus Bishop of Tyrus (a Man equally famous for his Learning and Sanctity under Constantine the Great) preach'd the Gospel in the Happy Arabia, Erythraea and Taprobana.

There are also divers Convents in Ceylon, and a great number of Brahman and Priests, who are in great Veneration among the common People; they never eat any thing that has been living, or is capable of producing any living Substance, as Eggs, &c. Their Friars wear yellow Habits, with their Heads shaven all over, for which reason they never appear in the Streets without Umbrello's, and Beads in their hands, muttering out certain Prayers as they go along. Their Convents have divers Galleries and Chappels, wherein are placed the Statutes of several Men and Women, who, as they say, have led holy Lives. These are adorn'd with Gold and Silver Apparel, and attended with burning Lamps and Wax-Candles day and night, plac'd upon Altars: The Candlesticks being supported by naked Boys artificially carved. The Friars have their certain hours for Prayers, which they perform in these Chappels.

They have also their publick Processions: The Head or Abbot of the Convent being mounted on a fine Elephant, sumptuously harness'd with an Umbrello over his Head, marches along the Street in great Pomp, under the sound of Horns, Trumpets, and other such such sort of Musick, making an odd kind of Harmony, accompany'd by a great number of Men, Women and Children; the Maidens of Quality dance all along before the Elephant naked down to the middle, their Heads, Arms and Ears adorn'd with Golden Bracelets and Jewels; the Garments which cover their under parts are of different Colours. They pay their daily Devotions to a certain Idol call'd Sambaja, by prostrating themselves upon the ground, and afterwards clasping their hands together over their Heads. But concerning the Religious Worship of the Cingalese we shall have occasion to say more in the following Treatise, which effect differs very little from the Malabars and those of Coromandel, except that they are not altogether such Bigots, the Emperor of Ceylon allowing Liberty of Conscience to all Nations. The Cingalese are not so stubborn, but that many of them have been without much difficulty converted to the Roman Faith, and since that to the Reformed Religion.

The Genius of the Cingalese.

For the rest the Cingalese are naturally active and ingenious, and good Workmen in Gold, Silver, Ivory, Ebony, Iron Works, &c. Arms inlaid with Silver, eloquent, nimble, courageous, fit for Warlike Exploits, sober and watchful. They march one single Man after another, by reason of the many narrow Lanes in this Country; their Arms are a Half-pike, their Drums are small, but make a great noise, which may be heard at three Leagues distance in the Mountains; they are best in the pursuit of a routed Enemy. Since they have conversed so much with the Portugueses and other European Nations, they are grown so cunning that they must not be too much trusted, nor despised.

Incest is so common a Vice among them, that when Husbands have occasion to leave their Wives for some time, they recommend the Conjugal Duty to be perform'd by their own Brothers. I remember a certain Woman at Gale, who had Confidence enough to complain of the want of Duty in her Husband's Brother upon that account. The like happen'd in my time at Jafnapatnam, which had been likely to be punish'd with Death, had not at my Intercession, and in

The Habits.

in regard of the tender beginnings of Christianity, the same been pass'd by for that time.

The Cingalese are in Shape and Manners not unlike the Malabars, with long hanging Ears, but not so black. The Dress of the Men is a Vest call'd Ropillo, of Woolen or Linen Cloth; their under Garment is a piece of Linen wrapt about the middle, and drawn through both their Legs, like a pair of Breeches: On their Heads they wear a kind of red Caps, such as we call Rock Caps, which they look upon as a singular Ornament, and in their Ears Rings and precious Stones. The Hilt of their Swords or Scymeters are commonly of Silver, Ivory, or Gold, with flaming Blades.

The common People appear for the most part naked, having only a piece of Cloth wrapt round the middle to cover their Privy Parts. The Women go with their Breasts uncover'd, being generally well limb'd: Instead of a Head-dress they have a way of tying their Hair together like a Cap. They wear Golden or Silver Necklaces about their Necks, and Rings on their Fingers and Toes.

The Cingalese as well as the Malabars are much addicted to Idleness and Pleasures, and insist much upon their Peditgree. They marry as many Wives as they think fit, as well as the Mahometans, of which there live a considerable number in this Isle. They marry their Daughters at 10 or 11 years of Age, a Custom not to be rooted out among them, they being very fond of the Virginity of their Wives. They bury their Dead after the manner of the Pagans.

In their Houses they are excessive neat, Their use instead of Trenchards and Table. concom. Cloths the Leaves of Fig-trees; their Spoons are made of Coco Nutshells, and their drinking Vessels of Earth, with hollow Pipes, through which they pour (like the Moors) the Drink into the Mouth without touching their Lips; for as the Cingalese and Malabars insist much upon their Noble Descent, so they will neither eat nor drink with those of an inferior Rank; nay many of them are so proud as not to eat with their own Wives.

The most current Coin here are the Silver Larys, each whereof is worth about 10 d. a Fanam is only 5 d. tho they have Golden and Silver Fanams; a Pagode was formerly no more than 84 Stivers, but is since raised to 120, or six Dutch Gilders; as well in Ceylon as Malabar, two Golden Fanams at 5 d. a piece make a Laryn.

CHAP. L.

Fertility of Ceylon. A Description of the Cinnamon and Snakewood. A strange Tree.

Fertility of Ceylon.

THE Isle of Ceylon is very fertile in Rice, and all sorts of Fruits, as Ananas, Cocoas, the best Oranges, Lemmons, and Citrons, exceeding by far those of Spain and Portugal; Fig-trees, Cajouves, Grapes, Potato's, Quiavos, Papajes and Pomgranats. You have here fresh Grapes the whole year round, except in the three Winter or rainy Months. It abounds also in Sugar-reeds, and Mulberry-trees, which produce a good quantity of Silk; as in Ginger, Pepper, Cardamum, Tobacco, wild Palm-trees, affording vast quantities of a kind of Sugar, and the Juice call'd Suyri their ordinary Drink. They are stor'd also with Calabass Trees, Cotton Trees, Areck Trees, Portuguese Figs, Mangos of divers sorts, long Pepper, Melons, Water-Melons, Onions, and Garlick. Since the settling of the Dutch here, they have also propagated with good success Cabbages, Asparagus, Carrots and Radishes: But the Helen or the Bride in Contest of this Isle is the finest and purest Cinnamon, which growing only in this Island, no wonder if we have disputed the entire Possession thereof for so many years with the Portugueses.

This precious Spice is call'd by the Cingalese Cweneo potto, and the Tree Curindo-gas, some of which are of a great bulk, their Leaves resembling those of the Lemmon Trees, but not quite so broad; the Blossom is white and of an agreeable scent, which produces a yellowish Fruit, not unlike a small Olive, out of which the Inhabitants press an Oil not much differing both in Colour and Virtue from that of Nutmegs, but in smell like the Cinnamon it self.

The Cinnamon-Tree has a double Bark, the outward Bark being taken off with a crooked Knife; the inward Rind is cut with a Knife first round the Tree, and then in length, which being expos'd to the Sun-beams in the Fields, shrinks together into such small Rolls as we see them in Europe. The Trees that are thus peel'd perish, instead whereof the Fruits that fall upon the Ground produce other Cinnamon-Trees. The Wood is very white, and used by the Inhabitants for building. It is observable that these Cinnamon-Trees don't grow all over Ceylon, but only in some certain places: For in the whole Kingdom of Jafnapatnam, and the Isle of Manaar, none of these Trees are to be seen, but only beyond the River Chilau, in the Country about Negumbo, and the Inland Countries, as likewise near Gale. These Trees seldom grow together, but are generally seen in Woods mixt with other Trees. Whilst I was Minister at Gale, some of my Slaves us'd now and then to bring some Cinnamon Wood among the rest into the Kitchen, which when put into the Fire emitted a very odoriferous scent.

It is further worth taking notice of, that whereas according to the Judgment of the Naturalists and Physicians, the Cinnamon is very hot, yet does the Root of the Tree produce not only a Water smelling exactly like Camphyr, but also the strongest scented Camphyr it self: I have several pieces of it, which smell so strong that I am scarce able to endure it. Out of the Cinnamon Wood, whilst yet green, they distill a Water of an agreeable smell, and very wholesom to our Bodies. The Natives make out of the outward Bark of these Trees curious Cabinets: I have such a one by me of a considerable bigness, which was presented me by Major Peter du Pon 1665. just upon my departure from Ceylon.

Three sorts of Cinnamon.

The East-Indies produce three different sorts of Cinnamon. 1. Is the finest Cinnamon call'd Canel Fino by the Portuguese, being the same that is taken from very young, or at least not very old Trees. 2. The coarse Cinnamon call'd Canel Grosso by the Portuguese, taken from very thick and old Trees. And, 3. The Canel de Ato, or wild Cinnamon, which grows likewise on the Coast of Maabar, but is in no esteem, for whereas a Baar of Ceylonese Cinnamon is sold for 50 or 60 Rixdollars, the wild Cinnamon yields not above 10 or 12. Tho I have heard some of the most ingenious of the Natives affirm, that the wild Cinnamon might be much meliorated, and made fit for use: The Dutch Company is now, through God's Blessing, in the possession of the Cinnamon of all kinds, as likewise of all the Spices, viz. of the Nutmegs, Mace and Cloves, except the Pepper, which grows in several places.

The Snake-wood or Lignum Colubrinum, The Snake-wood grows most frequently in the Isle of Ceylon; it is white inclining to yellow, very hard, and of a bitter taste; it is in great request among the Indians, and accounted a good Remedy against several Distempers: They powder it, and rub the whole Body with it to cure the Itch. They also take an Ounce of powder'd Snake-wood in Water or Wine against the Colick, burning Fevers, and other Distempers, but especially against the Stings of the Serpents, of which there are many in this Island.

The Cingalese Naturalists say that the Virtue of the Snake-wood was first discover'd by a certain small Creature call'd Quil, or Quirpele, by the Portuguese, being of the bigness of our Ferrets, wherewith we catch the Rabbits; of this kind the Indians keep many in their Houses, partly for Sport, partly to catch Rats and Mice with. This Creature having a natural Antipathy against the Snakes and Serpents, whenever it is stung by them runs to the Snake-wood, and after having eaten of it, is cur'd of its Wound. Marcellus de Boscbbouwer, a Person in great esteem in Ceylon, relates, that he has several times seen this Quirpele engag'd with Snakes, and among the rest one that vanquish'd a Serpent; but being wounded run to the next Wood, and having eaten some of this Snake-wood, return'd in half an hour to the place, where its vanquish'd Enemy lay extended dead upon the ground. The Cingalese call the Root of this Tree Nay Lelli, unto which they attribute a singular Virtue for the Cure of divers Distempers.

There grows a strange Tree in the Isle of Ceylon call'd the Root-tree, because its Branches turn to the ground like Ropes, where taking Root again, they produce a Tree that spreads in a short time over a spacious Tract of Ground. Ceylon produces also Tamarind-Trees of a considerable bulk, the Fruit whereof is accounted an excellent Remedy against the Scurvy and Dropsy. There grows another Tree in Ceylon like our Noli me tangere; for if you go to touch it, it moves backwards, and gives way to your hand.

For the rest, Ceylon is sufficiently provided with Medicinal Herbs, and they cure

CHAP. LI.

Great number of Elephants in Ceylon: Are very pernicious. Divers Instances of it. How they take the Elephants. Their Bufflers, Tygers, Bears, Birds, Fishes, Crocodiles and Porcupines, or Sea-hogs.

THE Isle of Ceylon abounds in all sorts of four-leg'd Creatures, Birds, Fishes, Stones and certain Products of the Sea, of each whereof we must say something.

Among the four-leg'd Beasts the Elephant challenges the first Rank; of these there are great numbers here, and so pernicious, that it is not safe travelling without some Soldiers with their Drums and Kettles, the noise whereof frightens these Creatures: They are most dangerous towards Evening when they are hungry; for the Coleys or Littermen often run away at the sight of an Elephant, leaving those they carry to shift for themselves.

I remember that in my time, a Portuguese Reform'd Minister, nam'd John Ferreira d'Almeyda, travelling with his Wife from Gale to Columbo, the Litter-Carriers (according to their Custom) ran away at the sight of an Elephant, who did however not the least harm, but laying his Trunk upon the Woman's Palankin or Litter, went away: But things of that nature happen not always alike.

I observ'd once as I was travelling from Manaar to Jafnapatnam, that the Elephants had done considerable mischief hereabouts, and during the rainy Season had render'd the Ways almost unpassable. We had the good fortune to escape narrowly the danger of an Elephant who kill'd a certain Negro, one of the Commanders of the Elephant-Hunters, in a place we had pass'd not long before.

At Mature are vast Stables, where the wild Elephants are tam'd, and afterwards sold to the Moors of Bengale and Coromandel. They take the Elephants near Mature in the following manner: They fix abundance of large Stakes or Trunks of Trees in the ground, so as to leave the Entrance wide enough, but growing narrower within by degrees; in these they have certain Traps, and the wild Elephants being decoy'd by the tame ones into these Enclosures, are catch'd in the Traps or Snares, like as we do in our decoying Ponds. They are very hard to be tam'd, and require sometimes four whole Months before they can be brought to lie down: All this while they must be carried twice a day to some River or other to swim. This is done by putting a wild Elephant betwixt two tame ones, who take such care of the other, that they hit him from both sides with their Trunks, till they make him pliable, and at last quite tame.

It often happens that the young Elephants are taken in following the old ones. These are very unlucky: I remember, that one time as several of us were talking together, one of these young Elephants came sily and push'd with his back-side against one of our Company, that he was ready to fall upon his Nose.

They feed upon green Herbs and Leaves of Fig-trees, Coco, and other Trees; neither do they refuse Areek and Sugar. At a certain time of the year an Oil issues out of the Heads of the old Elephants when they run mad, and oftentimes kill their Carnak or Guides. The Ceylonefe Elephants are accounted the largest and best in the Indies, and, if you will believe the Natives, are ador'd by the other Elephants.

Horses (great Enemies of the Elephants) were first brought from abroad into this Isle. The Portugese having some years since sent Horses into the Isle de Vacas, they are multiply'd to such a degree, that you may see them feed in Herds of 60, 70, 80, or 100.

Of Bufflers they have a great store in Ceylon; I have seen whole Herds of them of 100 and more feeding in the Countries of Chilau and Madampe, which were but indifferently peopled at that time. They have also Hedg-Hogs, Oxen, Cows, Bulls, Sheep, Goats, Stags, Does,

Elks,

How they take the Elephants.

The Catching of Eliphants on the Island s on the Island of CEYLON.

Baldaus. Elks, tame and wild Boars, Hares and Partridges, Peacocks and Apes in abundance.

Tygers and Bears. The Woods here produce also some ravenous Beasts, as Tygers, tho I never saw any, but had a Grey-hound given me by a Portuguese, who bore the marks of a Tyger's Claws on his Buttocks. Bears I have seen both in Jafnapatnam and Manaar; I saw once five or six young ones drowned in Manaar by the Inhabitants, who had found them at Mantotte, and thought fit to take this course with them to prevent their increase.

Jackals. They abound also in Jackals, a Creature very greedy after Mens Flesh, for which reason they cover their Graves with great Stones; they sometimes take them with Grey-hounds, but when they are hard put to it, they piss, which emits so nauseous a scent that the Hounds can't endure it. The Flesh of the Jackals is given with good success by the Physicians of the Country to cure the Consumption. Towards the Evening the Jackals meet and make a most dreadful noise, and will some times fall upon Passengers. In my time a Caffer who was in drink had his Teeth eaten out by the Jackals. The Jackal is not unlike a Fox, and has exactly such a Tail. The Malabars call the Jackals Adirivis. I saw but one Leopard in the Isle of Ceylon, and not one Unicorn or Rhinoceros.

Crows. Ceylon affords vast quantities of Birds, call'd by the Inhabitants by peculiar Names. Crows you shall see by thousands about Noon upon the Houses, but they are so cunning as not easily to be shot except through a hole or small Window. Towards night they leave the Towns, and retire to the Trees in the Country, and in the morning early look about for Prey. If one of them happens to be kill'd, the rest make a most terrible Outcry.

All sorts of Fowl and Birds. There are certain Birds in Ceylon call'd Mimbos by the Portuguese, who often make bold with the young Chickens; they have also Owls that make a dreadful noise in the night-time. They abound in Geese, Herons, wild and tame Ducks, Peacocks, Pigeons, Turtles, Partridges, Parrots, of most delicious colours; Peewits, Swallows, Bats, &c. Among the rest here is a certain Bird which builds his Nest hanging on the Branches of the Trees: They have also abundance of fine singing Birds, Nightingals and Larks in abundance, Sea-gulls, Water-snipes, Bees, Fire-flies, Gnats and Locusts.

Ceylon produces great plenty of Fish, Fishes. as Cacap, Plaice, Crabs, Pikes, King-fishes, Sail-fishes, Craw-fishes, Haddockes, Galleon-fishes, Sharks, Orados, Sardins, large Smelts, Bat-fishes, Seals, Oysters, Muscles, Shrimps, Pampus, Barbels, Bomtos, Corquados, &c.

Among the Amphibious Creatures, the Crocodiles, Kaiman or Crocodile, call'd Lagarto by the Portuguese, is very frequent here; some of which are 18 foot long. They have four Feet with crooked Claws, their Skin cover'd with Scales, which are so hard upon the Back, that they are Musquet proof; so that they are not vulnerable except in the Belly and Eyes: Their under Jaws are unmovable, but they have sharp Teeth: Their Back-bones being without Joints, they can't turn short, whence the best way to escape them, is to get away from them by many windings and turnings. 'Tis generally believ'd here that the Crocodile has a Stone or rather Bone in the Head, which given in Powder is an excellent Remedy against the Stone. The Bones of the Sharks are accounted very good against the same Distemper.

Mr. Rocbefort says, that in some of the Rivers of the Isles of America are certain Crocodiles that smell like Musk, I have with amazement seen Crocodiles lying upon the Water like Logs of Wood, with their Eyes shut; and if they happen to meet with a Prey, they leap at it on a sudden, like an Arrow from the Bow.

Vincent le Blanc tells us a story of a Burgermaster's Servant of Alexandria, who passing near the River-side was devour'd by a Crocodile which he took for a Log of Wood swimming upon the Water. They say that they have a white Fat, which is an excellent Remedy against sharp Humours that settle in any part of the Body. In Jafnapatnam there are many Crocodiles in the Fens, Ponds and Lakes, which if they happen to dry up in the Summer, they dig holes to live in; we were often visited by them in our Camp before Jafnapatnam, but they did no mischief. The Chinese make a dainty Dish of the young Crocodiles.

In the Isle of Manaar are great numbers of very large Porcupines, or Sea-hogs; they have very sharp Teeth, and their Flesh is fit for Food; the Females have Breasts and Milk, they come often ashore and feed upon Herbs.

Serpents of Ceylon. Remedies against their Stings. An odd Story of a Serpent-Catcher. Precious Stones, Products of the Sea. Amber-Grease, its Goodness.

Serpents are very common all over the Isle of Ceylon: The Sea-Serpents are sometimes 8, 9, or 10 yards long. The Land-Serpents call'd Ratcatchers are also very large, live on the tops of the Houses, but are harmless Creatures. The most dangerous are those call'd Cobres Capellos by the Portugueses, which frequently used to kill People whilst I liv'd in Jafnapatnam. So soon as any body is stung or wounded by these Serpents, they apply the Adder-stone to the Wound, and give the Patient some Milk. Our Chyrurgeon Albert van Lambergen writ to me 1666. that being stung by a Serpent, he became blind, but after some time recover'd his sight. A Parishioner belonging to the Church of Manipay, as he was mending the top of the Church, happen'd to be wounded by a Serpent that lay hid among a heap of Leaves, and died soon after. I saw once two Serpents twisted round one another sporting under the Wall of the same Church, which I order'd to be cut to pieces by a Soldier. Such of the Inhabitants as retain still some Remnants of Paganism, will not allow the Serpents to be kill'd.

The Malabars call the Serpents Pambó and Naga, and give their Cattel and Children their Names; nay they feed them because they should do them no harm. The Serpents come frequently into the Houses, especially in the rainy season. During my Abode at Jafnapatnam two Dogs were stung to death in the House, and I have seen them sometimes pass up stairs over the Beds. Another time a Serpent pass'd so near my Wife in the House, that he touch'd her Leg with the Tail, and was afterwards kill'd by the Servants.

There is also here a kind of Adders call'd Vipers by the Portugueses, they are speckled and very venomous. Whilst I liv'd at Jafnapatnam, a certain High-German Soldier belonging to the Garison (commonly known by the Name of the Serpent-Catcher) being sent for by Mr. Anthony Pavilion Governor of Coromandel, to take a certain Cobra Capel, that was in his Lodging-room; he came accordingly, and with his Hat only before his Face, laid hold with his other hand of the Serpent, without receiving the least harm; he did handle the Creature afterwards in our Presence, and not only carried it away in his Snaplack, but also used to sleep near it. I suspecting some Witchcraft in the matter, talk'd to him seriously about it; but he assured me, that nothing was done but by natural means, and that he always carried the Head and Heart of a Serpent about him: wherewith I was forced to rest satisfy'd, he being not willing to discover the whole Mystery.

Among the Inhabitants of the Coast of Coromandel, and the Cingalese and Malabars, are certain Fellows, who have an Art of making the Serpents stand upright and dance before them, which they perform by certain enchanting Songs. Those that are to take an Oath in those parts, put one of their Hands into an Earthen Vessel, wherein is a Serpent: if they escape without being wounded, they are supposed to swear true; but if not, on the contrary.

Remedies against the Stings of Serpents.

Upon this Occasion I can't forget to mention some Remedys used against the Stings of Serpents. First of all it is requisite to bind the affected Part above and below the Wound, to prevent the Poison from being communicated to the Mass of Blood, and afterwards hold it over or as near to the Flame as it is possible. I would have every body that goes to the East-Indies, to provide himself with some Orvietan, Theriac, Mithridate, Confection of Aikermes, Balsam of Peru, Rue, Scordium, Scorzonera, Angelic, and Contrabierwa Roots, these being great Cordials and Antidotes.

They must keep to a cooling Diet, and avoid purging and bleeding, but instead thereof make use of bathing to open the Pores of the Body. The Peel of Lemons or Citrons taken fresh from the Tree, is accounted an excellent Remedy, and fasting Spittle applied to the Wound. If you can take the Serpent that has given the Wound, bruise the Head, and apply it to the affected part. However the Adder Stone surpasses all the rest, but is often adulterated. The right one raises no Bubbles upon the Water, and sticks close to the Lips, if put to the Mouth.

The Serpents of Ceylon are not altogether so large as those of Java and Banda: at Batavia there was once taken a Serpent, which had swallowed an entire Stag of a large Size; and one taken at Banda had done the same with a Negro Woman.

Besides these Serpents, Ceylon produces several sorts of other crawling Creatures, as Thousand Feet, called Millepie by the Portuguese, which are sometimes 7 Inches long; Scorpions, Spiders of a prodigious Bigness, Frogs, Tortoises, Toads, &c. Ceylon also affords divers precious Stones, as Sapphirs, Rubies, Topazes, Garnets, &c. Some say it also produces Gold, Silver, Iron, and other Metals, but that their Kings will not allow these Mines to be dug. This seems not improbable, it being certain that Iron has been bought out of the Country. It affords also Chrystal in abundance. The Commodities chiefly vented here by the Portuguese, were colour'd Stuffs of all sorts, Velvets, Silks, Red Caps, Porcelain Spices, Amfira or Opium, China Root, Campyr, Musk, Sandel wood, Lead, Copper, Tin, Saltpeter, Brimstone, gilt Looking-Glasses, glass Bottles, painted Callicoes of Suratte and Coromandel, all which are still in vogue here.

Comm:ties sold here.

The Isle of Ceylon has besides Fish, several Products of the Sea. Of the Pearls and Pearl-fishery we have spoken before, in the Description of Tatecorrym. Ambergreece is found here sometimes near the Sea-shore, in good large pieces and of the best kind: they call it Panabam-bar in the Maldiva Islands. This precious Drug was altogether unknown to Hippocrates, Dioscorides and Galen, and to this day its true Origin is a Riddle to us; tho some will have it to be the Seed of the Whales, others a certain fine Earth, others a certain Pitch or Rosin, growing at the bottom of the Sea, and forced thence to the Shore by Tempests. Certain it is, that it is generally found after stormy Weather. Mr. John Huygan van Linschoten mentions a piece of Ambergreece, taken up near the Cape Comoryn, 1555, which weighed 30 Quintals. It's said, that the Birds are very fond of the Scent of it, and the Prints of the Bills of Birds have sometimes been perceived in the Amber, and is accounted a certain Sign of its Goodness.

Amber-greece.

Its Origin.

Mr. Kochford in his Natural History of the American Islands, says, that the Amber there, when first taken, has so nauseous a Scent, that the Birds are drawn towards it as by the Smell of a Carcion: He says, it smells like rank Bacon.

reference. The Amber is of different kinds; the black (the worst of all) is found near the Isle of Mauritius; next is the White, and the Grey the best of all. In some parts of America there is a kind of Amber, they call the foxed Amber, because it is swallowed and vomited up again by the Foxes without any Alteration, except that it loses something of its Scent. The best Ambergreece is of an Ash Colour, like Ashes mix'd with Wax. It is adulterated with Wax, Rosin and Pitch; to know the real Goodness of it, you must thrust a hot Needle into it, and by the Smell of the Moisture that adheres to it, you may judge of its Goodness: You may also lay a small quantity of Amber upon a hot Knife; if it be good, it will melt immediately like Wax; and provided the Knife be very hot, it will quite evaporate without leaving the least Dregs behind. Scaliger, Garcias, Monard, Fernandes Lopes, Clusius, and Rochesford have written of the Ambergreece, its Medicinal Virtues we will leave to the Judgment of the Physicians.

The Sea about Ceylon produces likewise whole Coral Trees, some Branches whereof curiously grown I preserve in my Study. It affords also certain Horns of Sea-Horses, called Chankos, which are frequently transported to Bengale, besides divers other sorts of Horns and Shells (but not so curiously twisted as those of Amboyna) Sea-Apples, Sea-Stars, and such like.

THE IDOLATRY OF THE East-India Pagans,

CHAP. I.

The general Consent of all Nations concerning the Existence of God. Divers Sects of the Brahmans. Their Opinion concerning the Creation. The Idols Ixora and Quivelinga.

The Existence of a God.

THE Existence of a God or supreme Being, is so firmly rooted in the Heart of Mankind, that there is no Nation in the World but what has acknowledged the same. What is alledged to the contrary by some, of the Chilenses, Tapujars, Brasilians, Madagascarians, as also of the Inhabitants of Florida, the Caribee Islands; and especially of the Cape of Good Hope, must rather be attributed to the want of Knowledge of those Authors, than real Truth. Of this I was sufficiently convinced 1666. when I tarried three Months at the Cape of Good Hope, where I found these Barbarians to perform their Religious Service in the Night time, which I had no Opportunity to observe in 1665, when I came that way before.

What is said of Diagoras, Theodorus, Cyrenaicus, Bion, Evemerus, Lucianus, Epicurus, and especially of Protagoras, Abderites and Socrates, and their Denial of the Existence of God, being to be understood only of the Plurality of Gods, which was always rejected by the wiser sort among the Pagans; whence it is that we meet with the Titles of Ens Entium, the Being of all Beings, Ens primum, the first Being, Primus motor & vis motrix, the first moving Cause and Substance, in their Writings.

This being laid down as a fundamental Rule, we will proceed to give an account of the Idolatry of the Pagans inhabiting the Coast of Malabar and the Indies, on both sides of the Cape Comorin, viz. at Tutecoryn, Trevanor, Conilang, &c.

Caleculang, Cocbin, Cranganor, Calecut, Cananor, as also on the Coast of Coromandel, and the Isle of Ceylon. According to Rogerius, the Brahmans are distinguish'd into six Sects, viz. Weistnowas, Seiria, Smaerta, Schaerwacka, Pasenda and Tscheltea; and the Benjans of Gufuratte into no less than 63: but in the forementioned parts, the Brahmans are divided into four head Sects.

It is of
mans.

The first are the Conrawack, who use neither Fire, nor Candles, nor cold Water, for fear it should contain some living Creatures; they don't pass the Streets unless they be swept before with a Broom, which they always carry with them, for fear of treading upon any thing that is living. They believe neither God nor Providence, but that all things are produced by Chance.

The second Sect is called Samarath, they actually believe a G-d.

The third Bisnou, who call their God Ram. They have a Fast which begins in August, and holds 40 days.

The fourth Sect is that of the Goegii, who have no Habitations of their own, but sleep in the Night-time in the Churches; they walk generally naked, having only a Cloth to cover their Privities, and besmear themselves all over with Ashes. They believe a God (whom they call Bruyn) the Creator of the Universe, who is in every thing, whether Man or Beast (tho he can't be seen by the Creature) gives Light to Sun and Moon, and annihilates what and when he pleases. They say, that such as die in their Faith, go directly to their God Bruyn: they do not burn, but bury their dead. Whoever embraces their Sect, is obliged to take near a Pound of Cowdung every day among his ordinary Food, for six Months successively, the Cow being accounted sacred, and her Dung the purest thing among them. They are very superstitious: a Cart, Buffler or Ass without a Load, a Dog empty mouth'd, a Hegoat, Ape, a Goldsmith, Carpenter, Barber, Taylor, Smith, Cottonweaver, a Widow, a Burial, or some body going to a Burial, are altogether ill Omens to them; as an Elephant, Camel, an Horse without a Burden, a Cow, an Ox and Buffler laden with Water, pretends good Luck in their Opinion. Some acknowledge one Vishnou for their supreme God, but the most one Ixora; we will first treat of Ixora, and afterwards of Vishnou and Bramma.

See Rogerius, Texeira, Carolinus, John van Twist, &c.

The Brahmans have a very odd Opinion of the Creation of the World (of which more hereafter) They say that this World will diminish by degrees, till it comes to a Drop of Water, which is the Ixoretta or Divinity it self: After that it shall encrease again, when Ixoretta crying out aloud, Quen, quen, will make it turn again into a single drop of Dew; this will make it revive again, first into a Mustard-Seed Corn, then turn to a Pearl, and lastly into an Egg, containing the five Elements. This Egg they say is to have seven distinct Shells or Partitions like an Onion, whence will break forth the Fire and Air upwards, and the others downwards; and the Egg being thereby broken into two pieces, the upper part produced the Heavens, as the under part did the Earth; and because the Egg had seven Shells, which by the Division thereof made 14 half ones, the seven uppermost Parts furnished the matter for seven Heavens, as the seven undermost did for as many Worlds. An unpardonable Contradiction, when they themselves acknowledg their Bramma, and implore him as the Creator of Heavens and Earth; and how incongruous is it, to make the Ixoretta or Divinity subject to decrease?

They further add, that at the opening of the before said Egg, there appear'd a Thred drawn all along the middle, which join'd the 14 upper and under Worlds: Ixoretta then taking his Place in the highest Sphere of the Heavens, there arose at the same time a Mountain on the Earth, named Calaja, on the top of which stood a Triangular Substance (Triconia Sacra) which produced a round Substance, called Quivelinga, i. e. the Members of Generation of both Sexes; which Quivelinga they say, is Ixoretta or the Divinity: for finding that all living Creatures were procreated by the carnal Copulation of Men and Women, they revered this Quivelinga, as the Original of all created things, and adorned him in their Temples with the best sweet Herbs and Flowers. They have a certain religious Order called Jogii, who wear the Figure of this Quivelinga, either of Wood or Copper, about the Neck, and offer him daily the best of their Victuals. Rogerius speaks to the same purpose of the Lingam, i. e. Membrum virile in Muliebri, as the Ixora or Eswara is represented in their Pagodes.

What Quivelinga was.

St. Austin * tells us something like this of the Priapus, which used to be carried in Procession in Honour of Bacchus, thro the Cities of Italy, and that the Matrons used to crown his Membrum virile virile with Garlands. I have read in several Authors of known Integrity, and speak it upon the Credit of divers People yet living, that the Canarins, and Inhabitants about Goa, do carry their Brides to such a Priapus, in order to deliver them of their Virginity. The whole matter whereof I will for Modesties sake relate in Latin: Sponsa magno comitatu multaque cum pompa inter plausus ac sonos musicos ducitur ad Idolum, quod aenea virga vel ferrea, vel eburnea prominente praeditum conspicitur, & ad hanc nudata vultu: Sponsa a Matre vel a proximis Consanguineis vebementer impellitur, quod cum absque gravi dolore fieri nequeat, illi qui adfunt, cantando & saltando sponsae debiles voces opprimant, si quae est, quae dolorem immensum verita, hoc modo Virginitate privari recusat, blandis Consanguineorum verbis ad Idolum paulatim adducitur, atque ad id a Matre tandem (invita quamvis) adigitur, donec Virginitatem amiserit; postea Sponsa domum redens Sponsus traditur, qui de hoc praese suscepro Labore sibi maxime gratulatur.

Baal Phegor seems to have been the Priapus of the Jews. Jerom in his Commentary upon the Prophet Hosea, says, That the Jewish Women worshipped Baal Phegor, ob obsecrans magnitudinem Membri, quem nos Priapus possumus appellare.

The Brahmans will indeed not allow of this Interpretation, alledging that they adore under this, the Circular Figure which is infinite, whereas the Signification of the word sufficiently contradicts them. Quivelinga being composed out of the word Linga or Lingam, i. e. the Manly Yard, and Quiven, the same with Ixora; and the Figure carried by the Jogii, expressly represents the Conjunction of the Members of both Sexes.

Quivelinga then (as we said before) is of a Circular Figure, which being enclosed in three distinct Kinds or Shells, which they say are transmuted into three Gods, viz. Bramma, Vishnum and Quiven; the first and hardest produces Bramma, the second Vishnum, and the innermost Quiven. Quivelinga being thus despoil'd of his Shells, was burnt to Ashes by Fire, and fix'd in the Triangle: Quivelinga being thereby become a thing without Sense or Motion, it was requisite it should be guarded by some body; which Bramma and Vishnum refusing to do, Quiven undertook the Task, and constantly attending Quivelinga with Prayers and Sacrifices of Flowers, deserved thereby to be ranked above his Brothers, and obtain'd the Title of the Great God, as their Poets call him. The Brahmans say, that Bramma, Vishnum, and Quiven or Ixora, are commissioned by the First Being to rule the World in the Nature of his Viceroy. They say Ixora resides in Calaja, Vishnum in the Milk-Sea, and Bramma in Sattialogam, or the highest Place in Heaven, of which more hereafter.

IXORA is as bright and white as Milk, with three Eyes, two whereof are plac'd as those of other Men, and the third in the Front, being so full of Fire, that it consumes every thing it looks upon. His Stature is immense; for Bramma being desirous to see his Head, soar'd up high into the Earth, but could not reach it. Vishnum (whom they call the God of Inventions and Changes) having the same Curiosity to see his Feet, which reach'd deep into the Ground, transform'd himself into a Hog, the better to dig up the Earth, but could likewise not obtain his Wish. For, say they, Ixora is of so vast an extent, that the Serpent Bategu (which is so long as to compass the seven Worlds and the seven Seas) was not big enough to serve him for a Bracelet. I heard a Pagan once ridicule a Brahman, because he put the Figure of Ixora in his Chamber; whereas according to their Opinion, it was much larger than the Serpent Bategu.

Ixora has no less than 16 Hands, wherewith he holds the following things, As Pan

He has also about his Neck three Chains, one whereof being intermix'd with Roses and other Flowers, affords an odoriferous Scent. The second is made of the Heads of Bramma; for they say, that Bramma dies and revives every year, and that Ixora gathering his Heads as often as he dies, had made this Chain of it. The third is made of the Bones of

Baldau.

The Idol Ixora

Chatti, one of Ixora's Wives. For it is so be known that he has two Wives, one named Griega or the Goddess of the Seas, whom he always carries in his Hairlocks; the other this Chatti, otherwise called Paramejveri, who they say dies and revives once a Year; and as often as she dies, he takes one of her Bones, which are put into this Chain. He carries also the same Beads as the Brahmans do, his whole Body being besmear'd with Ashes, and thus rides in Triumph thro' Calaja, upon an Ox named Irixapatan, unto whom they offer certain Sacrifices.

His Attendants are called Pudas, Pixaros and Pes. Pudas is represented like a fat and short Person, with a large Paunch, without a Beard, having Serpents hanging down with their Tails from his Head. He wears a Bracelet on his left Arm, and two others about his Thighs, made of Serpents, and a Staff in his Right Hand. The Pes and Pixaros are represented much taller, with burning Torches in their Hands in the Night-time.

They say that Bramma has created the Universe, Vishnum governs it, and Ixora kills and puts a Period to every thing. They further add, that Ixora has communicated part of his Substance to his Wife Paramejveri, alias Parvati, and she again to him; so that they are both Hermaphrodites, and Ixora is sometimes represented as such; and Rogierius, lib. 2. says, that the Brahmans call their Ixora, Arabanari, i. e. a Manwife. There are however a certain sort of Brahmans called Tirimimpi, who are so far different from the rest, that they won't as much as cast an Eye upon a Woman; for which reason as often as they pass thro' the Streets, they have certain Persons, who bid the Women go out of the way. Thus the Hierophantes of Athens, and the Priests of the Goddess Cybele among the Rogierius * mentions another sort of Brabmans, call'd Sausiazii, who renounce all Worldly Pleasures, abstain from Women, and even the Betel (tho generally used all over the Indies) eat but once a day, have no fix'd Habitations, use nothing but earthen Vessels, and live upon Alms. The fundamental Rules of their Sect being to withstand Lust, Anger, Covetousness, Pride, the Pleasures of the World, and Revenge.

A strict sort of Brahmani

CHAP. III.

Contest betwixt Bramma, Vistnum and Ixora, who is obliged to be a Mendicant twelve Years. A Child produced out of the Blood of Vistnum, occasions new Differences.

THE Residence of Ixora is upon the Silver Mount Cajaja, to the South of the famous Mountain Mahameru, being a most delicious Place, planted with all sorts of Trees, that bear Fruit all the Year round. The Roses and other Flowers send forth a most odoriferous Scent, and the Pond at the Foot of the Mount is enclosed with pleasant Walks of Trees, that afford an agreeable Shade, whilst the Peacocks and divers other Birds entertain the Ear with their Harmonious Noise, as the Beautiful Women do the Eyes. The circumjacent Woods are inhabited by a certain People, called Mumis or Rixis, who avoiding the Conversation of others, spend their time in offering daily Sacrifices to their God.

It is observable, that tho these Pagans are generally black themselves, yet do they represent these Rixis to be of a fair Complexion, with long white Beards, and long Garments hanging crosswise, from about the Neck down over the Breast. They are in such esteem among them, that they believe, that whom they bless are blessed, and whom they curse are cursed.

Within the Mountain lives another Generation, call'd Jexaquimvera and Quendra, who are free from all Troubles, spend their Days in continual Contemplations, Praises and Prayers to God. Round about the Mountain stand 7 Ladders, by which you ascend to a spacious Plain, in the middle whereof is a Bell of Silver, and a square Table, surrounded with nine precious Stones of divers Colours. Upon this Table lies a Silver Rose called Tamara Pua, which contains two Women as bright and fair as a Pearl;

one is called Brigafiri, i. e. the Lady of the Mouth, the other Tarafiri, i. e. the Lady of the Tongue, because they praise God with the Mouth and Tongue. In the Center of this Rose is the Triangle, (mentioned in the 1st Chap.) of Quivelinga, which they say is the permanent Residence of God.

Ixora being one time diverting himself in this Cajaja or Paradise, with Pudas, Pes and Pixajos, let fall some Words, intimating him to be the greatest in all the World; which Bramma and Vistnum not able to brook, a Contest arose about the Precedency, to decide which Ixora told them, that which of the two could take a full view of him from Head to Foot, should be accounted the Greatest.

Bramma hereupon got upon his Bird Annam (whereof more anon) and passed up into the Air, to get Sight of Ixora's Head, whilst Vistnum transforming himself into a Hog, dug into the Ground, to come at his Feet: whilst he was thus employed, meeting with a most poisonous Serpent, he was so startled at it, that he desisted from his Enterprize. This Story is related more at large by several of the Malabar Poets.

Bramma on the other hand, resolute in his Designs, soared very high into the Air, when being met by three Flowers, they ask'd him whither he was a going; he replied, to get sight of the Head of Ixora; they told him, his Labour was in vain, by reason of the vast distance, which made Bramma change his Resolution: but at the same time desired the Flowers to tell Ixora, that he was prevented from coming so high as his Head, by a sudden Giddiness in his Brains, which which they promis'd, and did accordingly; but Ixora being sensible of the Deceit, did with his Chakra or Scymeter, cut off one of the four Heads of Bramma, and curst the Flowers. Out of the Blood of Bramma's Head, came forth a Man with 500 Heads and 1000 Hands, named Sagatravacaxen. The day on which Bramma's Head was cut off, was ever after looked upon as ominous, and named Pongalacha, i. e. Dies infestus; whence arose the Proverb of a thing that is never to be done, It shall be as Pongalacha.

The three Flowers were curst, viz. That one of them should grow upon a Dunghil, and be cut down there; the other to be turn'd into a Crow, and the third into a Cow.

The Brabmans further say, That Ixora to expiate the Crime he had committed by cutting off the Head of Bramma, turn'd Mendicant as the Jogii do, with Bramma's Skull in his Hand, till the same should be filled with Alms; whence arose that Custom practis'd to this Day, that he who kills a Brabman, must beg Alms for 12 years in the Skull of the Brabman killed by his Hands. Ixora therefore beg'd Alms for 12 Years; for tho he receiv'd sufficient Alms, yet by the fiery Rays that darted from his Eye in his Forehead, it was all consumed and turned to Ashes in an instant.

One day as he was gathering Alms among the before said Mumis, their Wives came running with whole Ladles of Blood to fill the Skull; but not being able to sustain the Glance of his Eyes, they were so surpris'd, that they let slip not only their Ladles, but also their Clothes. The Mumis seeing their Wives naked, did fall Pellmell upon Ixora; one attack'd him with an Ax, which he seized and got up into the Air; another would have killed him with a Serpent, which he took in his Hands, without receiving any harm. Then they brought a furious Tyger to devour him, this he killed and flec'd, and made a Garment of the Skin; then they set upon him a wild Elephant, who underwent the same Fate, his Hide serving him afterwards for a Cloke; this Ax, Serpent, Tyger, and Elephants, are the same Trophies he holds in his Hands.

Vishnum willing to deliver Ixora, appear'd to the Mumis in the shape of a most beautiful Virgin, which occasion'd such a Surprize to them, that the Men (as their Wives had done before) fell into a Trance, and Ixora spill'd his Seed upon the Ground, which Vishnum with his Hand form'd into a Child.

Ixora being towards the end of the 12th year, quite tired with his Mendicant Life, had recourse to Vishnum, who commiserating his Condition, put out the fiery Eye, that consumed all the Alms in the Skull; which done, Vishnum wounded himself in one of his Fingers, and fill'd the Skull with the Blood, which put an end to his Pilgrimage, but gave birth to the Order of the Jogii, who in the Memory of Ixora's Pilgrimage, lead a Mendicant Life to this Day.

Out of the Blood of Vishnum a Child was procreated, called Vareu, which occasion'd new Contests, Bramma challenging it as his own, because it was begot in his Skull, Vishnum because it came forth out of his Blood, and Ixora because it came out of his Hands. To reconcile this Difference, Devaindra, a King of the aerial Spirits, perswaded them to relinquish their Pretensions by joint Consent; which they having consented to, Devaindra educated the Child at Devalagam, where becoming a famous Bowman, he protect'd that Place against Sagatravacaxen, who, as we told before, being the Product of Bramma's Head, had 500 Heads and 1000 Hands. Afterwards Ixora returned to Calaja his former Residence.

It is observable, that if one of their Kings dies, they tie his Hands and Feet, when certain Soldiers come to threaten him with their Sticks; which Affront, they believe is a means to expiate the Trespasses committed by him in his Lifetime against his Subjects.

Baldew. Quenavady was born in the Wood by Piragu, with an Elephant's Head and Face, the rest of his Body being like other Men. For Ixora walking one time with his Lady Parameseri towards the Wood Piragu, she saw an Elephant sporting with a Female of the same kind, and so raised her Appetite, that she desir'd Ixora to be both transf-form'd into Elephants; which being done accordingly, they ate of a certain Fruit in the Wood, which made them quite frenzical, so that they made the same noise, overturn'd the Trees, threw up the Sand with their Trunks, and did all the other Actions of Elephants, not excepting even their Copulation. The Quenavady's Ornament.

Female having conceiv'd immediately, brought forth this Child with the Elephant's Head and Face, and soon after they resumed their own Shape. Parameseri tried to give suck to this young Monster, but being in danger of having her Breast torn in pieces by it, she deliver'd it up to Ixora, who had it brought up in Calaja.

A Description of him. This Quenavady had the Hand, Teeth and Face of an Elephant, with large hanging Ears, and ugly Lips, with red Pimples all over the Face: His Hair is long (like his Father's) tied about with a Serpent or Adder, with a Crescent or Half-moon on his Fore-head, and four Hands, besides the Trunk; the rest of his Body like other Men, but shining like Gold, with a large Paunch tied about with a red piece of Stuff: He wears also the Girdle of the Brahmans, and on his Feet divers Gold Rings and Bells.

They tell you another Story of Ixora, viz. That being one time inebriated with the Sury, or Juice of the Coco-Tree, and having Carnal Copulation with Parameseri, a small quantity of Ixora's Seed was spilt upon the ground, and afterwards cover'd with Earth by Parameseri; this produc'd a Palm-tree. Ixora coming soon after into the Wood, and seeing the young Tree, cut off the top thereof with his Chacra, or Weapon. The Liquor which issued thence so well pleased Ixora, that he took a good quantity of it in his Cup he always carried along with him, and having drank his full share, ty'd up the Tree, and so return'd to Calaja. He repeated this so often, that Parameseri finding him always return in Drink

Difference
betwixt Quenavady and Superbennia.

It seems somewhat odd, that the Brahmins who pretend so much to Sobriety, should make their Supreme God a Drunkard, when they are so nice in this Point, that they will never make use of our Ink, for fear there should be some Wine in it. Thus the Samoyns of Calecut kill'd his own Brother-in-law because he was drunk, and the King of Cochin did the same to a Company of drunken Nairos.

They further tell us of this Isora, that he caus'd his Son Quenavady to be castrated, because he once, whilst yet in his Mother's Arms, touch'd her Privy-Parts with his Trunk: others say he actually enjoy'd her; which is the reason the Malabars say that the Elephants have no Testicles.

It is to this Quenavady the Pagan Artisans, Workmen, &c. offer the first-fruits of their Labour. After they have revered and offer'd Sacrifices to him for 12 years, he moves one of his Ears, as a sign that they must continue the same; which being done 12 other years, he shakes the other Ear, to give them to understand that he requires still more at their hands; if they hold on 12 years longer, he opens his Eyes and grants their Requests.

Isora being at a certain time desirous to try the Agility of his two Sons Quenavady and Superbennia, offer'd a very fine Fig as a Reward to him who should carry the day. Quenavady having a very thick Skin, and riding only upon a Mouse, whereas Superbennia had 6 Faces and 12 Arms, and rid upon a Peacock, being sufficiently convinc'd that his Brother would carry the Prize, took his opportunity whilst the other was riding round the Calaja, to turn short and so lay hold of the Fig. Superbennia having taken his turn, pursuant to the Wager, and not finding the Fig, did fall upon Quenavady so furiously, that he beat out one of his Teeth: But Isora giving Superbennia another Fig, the difference was soon ended. But not knowing what to do with the Tooth, he gave it to Vishnou, desiring him to restore it to Quenavady, which he did accordingly by putting it into a Fig which he gave to his Nephew, who as he was going to eat the Fig found the Tooth, which he turn'd into a nice writing Pen, and kept it to write his Poetry with.

Baldern.

For the rest Quenavady is represented as very voracious, for they say he could devour the whole World; nor is he to be satiated but in the Sugar-Sea call'd Jexucadibil, which is of a vast extent, and always boiling-hot, having in the midst a Mount compos'd of 9 very fine Stones, with a Plain on the top, deliciously seated, in the Center whereof stands the Tree Luola, inclosed with a row of precious Stones curiously wrought. In this Enclosure is a Structure of the finest red Coral, cover'd with precious Stones: The Doors whereof, as well as the Avenues to the place, are guarded by a good force of the Pudas, who spend their time in holy Meditations and Prayers in the Company of a good number of Women; who sing to the Praise of God. Close about the Tree Luola are Seats of Gold, and a Table made of the most precious Stone call'd Bairacalle, upon which stand a bright shining Mouse, and a Rose, in the Leaves whereof are written 14 Letters or Characters. This is the Residence of Quenavady, who rides upon the said Mouse.

The Sugar-
Sea.

He has on each side of him a most beautiful Woman, who are continually employ'd to lade Sugar mixt with Honey into his Mouth; and for fear he should be tir'd with the same Diet, good store of Asses (Indian Cakes) fried in Butter-milk, Butter, and divers other Provisions, stand always before him. The Hills near it afford also Figs, Grapes, Coco Nuts, and all other sorts of the best Fruits, as well as Roses and other Flowers; the Musicians that attend divert him with Fiddles, Trumpets, Flutes, Hautboys, and other Musical Instruments, as many Women are employ'd to make rich Incenses, and to anoint his Body with Sandal Wood, Civet, Musk, and to offer all sorts of odoriferous Flowers.

The Malabars celebrate yearly the Memory of their deceased Friends with great Pomp and vast Charge, according to their Abilities. The Kings upon this occasion entertain the Brahmins (who are in high esteem there, as being the Interpreters of their Pedam or Law-book) magnificently, and distribute Money after the Feast. And because in the 15, nay 20 Leagues for it, and take their full share; for tho they value themselves much for abstaining from Flesh, Fish, Eggs, Wine and other strong Liquors, yet will they make themselves a full amends with such Victuals as are allowable by their Constitution.

CHAP. V.

Of the other Children of Ixora. A Coco-Nut in the Head of an Ape. Siri Hanuman born an Ape. Reviv'd from the dead. Combat betwixt Superbennia and Quenavady. His cursing of the Moon.

THE next to Quenavady, is styled Egajourubum, or the true God, represented with an Elephant's Head, and 11 Hands. He is only to be worship'd by the Brabmans, tho others also sacrifice to him, but must at the same time abstain from Flesh, Fish, Eggs and Wine. Next to him comes Cruxi, whose Origin is related thus: Paramesceri Ixora's Spouse having anointed her Body with Oil and Saffron, and washing her self in a Pond, did form from the Impurities of her Body a living Man; Ixora seeing him at a distance, and believing him to be her Lover, hastned thither, and struck with his Weapon his Head off at the foot of the Mountain Calaja, which was turn'd into a Coco-Tree, whence it is that the Indians say, that the print of a Man's Face was fix'd in the Coco-Nut. Paramesceri being sorely afflicted at her Son's Death, Ixora pleaded his Ignorance, and to comfort her in her Affliction, cut off the Head of a white Elephant, which he put upon the Shoulders of her dead Son, and so restor'd him to life again. He is represented with an Elephant's Head and two Hands.

Ixora had also another Son, named Siri Hanuman, by Paramesceri, which was born an Ape. Ixora it seems was a most celebrated Dancer, and used frequently to shew his Activity in the presence of the Celestial Spirits, as well as his Spouse Paramesceri, who was so active in dancing, that one time when she had lost her Ear-Jewel out of one Ear, she took it up with two Toes of her Feet, and put it in her Ear again, to the incredible surprize of the Spectators. Hence perhaps arose the Custom used among the Ladies of the Nairos, who whilst they are dancing at a certain Feast celebrated in honour of one their Idols, let on a sudden slip all their Clothes, and remain naked. But to return to Ixora: Having invited many of the Celestial Spirits to see him dance, Paramesceri happen'd to see two Apes sport together in the adjacent Wood; the desir'd Ixora to transform both her and him into Apes, which done, they leapt about in the Wood till coming to a Bambo-Tree, Paramesceri then conceiv'd an Ape. In the mean time the Celestial Spirits being come, according to invitation, and among them Jeexa, Quinnora and Quendra, and finding their Host abroad, they sent the Wind (as the nimblest of all) to find out Ixora, who having told him his Errand, they both resum'd their former shapes.

Paramesceri being now alham'd of her Burden, requested the Wind to convey the Ape into the Womb of Anbema, one of the Ladies of the Celestial Spirits; and so they return'd home, where Ixora danc'd to the admiration of the whole Assembly. Anbema afterwards brought forth an Ape as white as Ixora himself, who being endow'd with peculiar Virtues by his Father, performed many noted Exploits; of which more hereafter in the History of Siri Rama.

Two odd Stories they tell of this Ape: Odd Stories First, That being one time very hungry, of the Ape and taking the Sun for a dainty bit, he Siri Hanu- was endeavouring to leap up towards it, man. but was beat back by the Iron Weapon of Ixora, who gave him a good knock on the Pate, but without any harm, whence he got the Name of Hanuman. The other is, That meeting one time with a white Elephant call'd Acrapadia, on which was mounted Devaindra King of the Celestial Spirits, a Quarrel arose betwixt them, in which Hanuman was slain: His Father the Wind being afflicted at his Death, hid his Face under ground, so that the Inhabitants of the Earth being ready to perish for want of Air in the extremity of Heat, they address'd themselves to Ixora, who restor'd Hanuman to life, and recal'd the Wind above ground.

Thus the Wind was ador'd as a God both by the Greeks and Romans. The Athenians erected a Temple to the Wind, as Augustus did in France; the Phenicians did the same. This Ape has divers celebrated Pagodes erected to him by the Indians. We read in the Portuguese Histories, that in 1554, when they plunder'd the famous Pagode upon the Adams Mount in Ceylon, they found an Ape's Tooth, (the most sacred Relick of the Pagans of Pegu, Ceylon, Malabar, Bengale, Coromandel and Bishnagar) enclosed in a Box set with precious Stones, which they carried to Goa; some of the Indian Princes offer'd 700000 Ducats to redeem it, but it was not accepted of, by reason the Bishop of Goa oppos'd it.

Another Son of Ixora was call'd Superbenna, with 6 Faces and 12 Hands, the occasion whereof happened thus: Parameswari being one day employ'd in washing her self in a Cistern, 6 Weavers happen'd to pass by, who inflam'd with Lust, look'd very wishfully at her; this having the same effect upon her, she conceiv'd the same instant: but fearing Ixora's Anger, she threw it out with her Spittle upon the ground, which turning in an instant into a Child with 6 Faces and 12 Hands, much resembling in all other respects the 6 Weavers, they took it along with them, and educated it in all manner of Accomplishments. One time being ingag'd in a Dispute with Ixora, he was so taken with his Wit, that he receiv'd him for his Son, assign'd him a Place at Calaja, and presented him with a Peacock to ride upon.

Before I conclude this Chapter, I must tell you one thing more of Quenavady. Returning one day pretty late at night from a Banquet, when the Moon was not very light, it being only the 4th day after the New Moon in August, with his Umbrella in one hand, in the other a Poem, and some Cakes under his Arm, he ran unwarily against a Post with such violence, that he fell upon the ground and dropt not only his Umbrella, but also his Poems and Cakes: As he was most concern'd for the last, so he took a good bite or two of them before he rose again, or look'd for his Book and Umbrella. The Moon seeing this pleasant Spectacle, could not forbear laughing; which Quenavady perceiving, broke out into this Curse, Who ever, O Moon, shall see thee for the future upon this day in August, shall be damnify'd in his Privities. Hence it is that the Pagans will not stir abroad the 4th of August after Sun-set, nay even not on the 5th, for fear of partaking of this Curse; and if any one is oblig'd to stay without doors, he covers his Face, and even will not look into the Water for fear of seeing the Moon, tho they see the St. Thomas Christians, the Jews and Mahometans look upon it at the same time without the least detriment.

CHAP. VI.

Ixora's Daughter, and the Origin of the Small-Pox: Fear of the Malabars of that Distemper. Their Pagode Amadyri plunder'd by the King of Cochinchina. She comes to Coulang.

A Certain Giant named Racxada (of which more anon) having liv'd 12 years with Bramma, he receiv'd among many other Presents a Book from him, and some Bracelets, as also the Virtue of being invulnerable. The Natives of Coromandel believe these Giants to have been Children of the Brabman Cassiopa by his Wife Aditi, just as the Jews say that Lilith brought forth Devils begott by Adam. Darida finding himself th above the common rank of Men, Strength bestow'd upon him by Es would needs challenge Ixora, who knowing his Strength sent against him a certain

Female named Sorga, who cut off one of his Heads (for besides his true Head, he had many others, but only in appearance) but Darida returning the next day, reiterated his Boasts, when Ixora engag'd five holy Women, call'd Chamundigai by the Malabars, in his Quarrel, who cut off his false Heads; but all to no purpose, so that Darida persisting in his Insolence, Ixora Darida consulted with Vishnum, what to do in this exigency. Whilst they were debating the matter, Vishnum sent forth from his Body a certain matter (call'd Bixa by the Malabars) which entering that of Ixora, pass'd again thro the Eye on his Front,

A Description of Ixora's Daughter.

Front, and falling upon the ground produc'd in an instant a Female, which Ixora acknowledging for his Daughter, gave her the Name of Patragali Pagode.

This Daughter had 8 Faces, 16 Hands as black as a Coal, with large round Eyes, her Teeth like the Tusks of a Boar: In lieu of Pendants she has two Elephants in her Ears, and Serpents about her Body instead of a Garment; her Hair-locks are Peacocks Tails, in her Hand she carries a Sword, a Trident, a large Porcelain Bafon, another Vessel call'd Capala by the Malabars, a Scymiter call'd Mautegam, a Hanger call'd Carutela, an Arrow, a Weapon call'd Cona, a Rope, an Ape with an Iron Wheel.

This Monster was no sooner born, but she went to revenge her Father's Quarrel, and fighting for seven days successively, she cut off 7 of his imaginary Heads; but finding all her Endeavours in vain, and that Darida was not vulnerable as long as he kept the Book and Bracelets given him by Bramma, she apply'd her self to Sorga, intreating her to take upon her the Habit of a Beggar, and by that means endeavour to get the before said things into her hands. Accordingly Sorga took the opportunity to ask Alms of Darida, when he was at some distance from his House, who told her, that if she would go to his House his Wife would answer her desire, which if she did not, he would do it himself. Sorga then went to his House, and ask'd his Wife for the Bracelets and Book in her Husband's Name, who freely delivering the same, she brought them instantly to Patragali. Darida having thus lost his best Treasures, wherein Bramma had enclosed all his Happiness, and thereby being bereav'd of his former Strength, was soon after engag'd again, and had his true Head cut off by Patragali.

Being much exalted by this Victory, she came strait to Ixora, who being then just undress'd leapt into a Cistern, for fear of being seen by Patragali, from whence he gave her some Flesh and Blood; but finding her not satisfied thus, he order'd her to hold out her Bafon, and cutting off one of his Fingers he fill'd it with his own Blood; but Patragali continuing still unsatisfied, took one of her Golden Chains (composed of small pieces like Pepper Corns) and threw it into his Face, which raising in his Face great numbers of Pimples, or small Ulcers, he cry'd out with great surprize, Bafuri, i. e. O you revengeful Woman! and desiring her to desist, created two young Men named Birapatrem and Quetraguele, whom he bestow'd upon her, and thus pacified her Anger; but to rid his hand of her for the future, he presented her with a Vessel of Sandal Wood, ordering her to go with it into the World, and to reside (tho unknown) among the Mortals, and to require Vows and Sacrifices at their hands.

The Pagans therefore imagining that it is Patragali sends the Small-Pox among the People, leave the Patient so soon as he is seiz'd with it; and hence perhaps it is, that they have a certain Idol representing a Female with a Child laying his Arms about her Neck, and imploring her Assistance. They deliver up these Patients to the care of the Comaras, a Fraternity belonging to the Pagode of Patragali; these offer the Blood of some Cocks and other Sacrifices to the Gods in behalf of the Sick; and for the rest give them only some Cannies, or Rice boil'd in Water; and leaving them for the rest to their own disposal, more die for want of good looking after, than by the Violence of the Distemper; nay sometimes are kill'd by Comaras, who inherit all their Moveables.

We told you before, that Ixora call'd his Daughter Bafuri, which to this day signifies the Small-Pox among the Malabars, which they say is the Sword of Patragali, and for that reason endeavour to mitigate her Wrath by Sacrifices, wherein they follow the footsteps of the antient Greeks.

They say that Patragali has her chief Residence in the Great Pagode of Cranganor, call'd the Pagode of Pilgrims, from the vast number of Zealots that flock thither; and as this brings in a Revenue of many thousand Fanams to the King of Cranganor, so the King of Cochin, who fain would have had a share in the Booty, did post some Forces on the PASSES, who rob'd and plunder'd the Pilgrims, intending by this means to oblige them to resort to the Pagode built in the Kingdom of Palsuri under his Jurisdiction. Thus the old King of Cochin did plunder and rob the famous Pagode of Ammadivi, of all its Treasure, at the head of a Body of 10000 Men, and afterwards laugh'd at them into the bargain, saying that he had taken it only as his Inheritance, as being the Son and Heir of the Idol; just as Dionysius the Sicilian Tyrant did with Jupiter and Esculapius.

But to return to Patragali; she was no sooner got out into the Main with her Vessel of Sandal-wood, but being attack'd by some Fisher-men and Ape-Hunters, was forc'd to return to Calaja, where finding Ixora overwhelm'd with Sleep, she overturn'd his Bedstead, which awakening him, she told him her Disaster; whereupon being endow'd with new Vigor by Ixora, she return'd to her Vessel, and having defeated the Ape-Hunters, and landed safely on the South-side of Coulang (a City of Malabar) the Queen thereof sent for her to Court, and entertain'd her there for 12 years as her own Daughter.

The Lord of Cauleta (a Country 7 Leagues to the North of Calecut) then desiring Patrágali in Marriage for his Son, the same was concluded, and she taken home, where she liv'd for 12 years without ever cohabiting with her Husband, as boasting her self to be the Daughter of Ixora. Atendora speaks of a certain Idol in China with a Child hanging about her Neck, which the Jesuits would fain persuade the World to have been intended for the Virgin Mary, tho it seems much more probable, that it was intended for this Patrágali. What Mr. Le Blanc tells us of the Female Idol of Calecut, seems very suspicious to me.

Patrágali's Father and Mother suffer Shipwrack. She sends her Husband to sell her Jewels, and goes in quest after him. Nine several Adventures which happen to her. The rest of Ixora his Children, their Adventures. What further becomes of Paramécéri.

Afterwards Patrágali's Father and Mother-in-law being embark'd aboard a Ship with all their Riches, in order to traffick with them in Foreign Countries, they were attack'd at Sea by the Ape-hunters, who sinking their Ships, they lost all their Riches. Patrágali then gave her Golden Foot-rings to her Husband to sell them, who departed accordingly, but meeting upon the Road a Goldsmith (a Highway-man of Pandy) he under pretence of viewing the Rings, entertain'd the Husband, till by several By-ways they brought him to Pandy. Here the pretended Goldsmith (who had not long before stoln just such Rings from the Queen of Pandy) accus'd Patrágali of the Robbery, who was put in Prison, and afterwards empal'd alive on a Palm-tree. The Goldsmith's Wife having an aversion to so foul a Fact, upbraided her Husband with it, who kill'd and buried her near a Well.

Patrágali having staid six days without hearing any News from her Husband, resolv'd to go in search after him.

The first thing she met with was a Pigeon, which she ask'd, whether she had seen her Husband? The Pigeon reply'd, she had seen him go that way, but not return. In recompence whereof Patrágali gave her this Blessing, That she should never want Water in February (being the driest season here) and presented her with a piece of her Chain, which she threw about her Neck, (the Turtles have such a Ring about the Neck.)

Patrágali following the way shewn her by the Pigeon, met with another Bird, of whom having enquir'd as she did before of the Pigeon, she receiv'd the same Answer, which made her bestow a Tuft upon his Head, being perhaps the same we call the Piewet in our Country, call'd Carpenteiro by the Portuguese.

Afterwards Patrágali coming to a Man-go-Tree, she ask'd the same Question; but receiving no Answer, she curst it, that for the future the dead Corps should be burnt with no other Wood, and that all Vessels built of that Wood, should rot and be worm-eaten at Sea.

Meeting next a Cow, she was kick'd by her hindermost Legs; which she resented so ill, that she gave her this Curse, That of her four Teats one should be for the use of the Pagode, the other for the Prince of the Country, the third for the Owner, and the fourth only for her Calf; that they should make Drums of her Skin, and that consequently she should be subject to Blows both dead and alive.

The fifth she met with being a Naira, or Soldier of Malabar, this Fellow had dug a hole, and having cover'd the same with some Twigs and Sand, Patrágali fell into it as she pass'd along; he gave him this Curse, that he should be call'd Coward all his life-time.

The next was a Naira, or a Nairo's Daughter, who being ask'd by her, whether she had not seen her Husband? she clapt her Hands, saying in scornful tone, What are you running after you: Husband? I have not seen him. She gave him this Curse, That she should be married to a Nairo, a Coward, who as soon as he turn'd Soldier should leave her in 40 days after.

She then coming to a Jaguo-Tree, she ask'd after her Husband again: the Tree bowing its Twigs, furnished her with some of its Milky Liquor (as this Tree does if you cut any of its Twigs) she bestow'd this Blessing upon it, That its Fruits should be highly esteem'd by the Kings and Princes, and that tho' its Stem might corrupt, it should continue to bear Fruit (as in effect it does) and that they should employ its Wood in making their Cymbals call'd Tabelyne, and the Statues of their Idols.

The eighth she met with was a Polia, a Man of mean Extraction, who not going out of her way (as they usually do) she told him, that he should not be admitted into the Houses of Persons of Quality from October till February.

The last she met with was a Parrea, likewise a Person of low Birth; but having paid her the usual Reverence, she admir'd at his Civility, which made her ask him, Whether he did know her? He reply'd, that he took notice of her Swines Tusks, and the Elephants in her Ears; which so pleased her, that she told him, he should drink of the Liquor of the Palm-tree (which in effect they do when they gather it) and that he and his Family should feed upon Cow's Flesh. Then tracing the way shew'd her by the Parrea, she found her Husband empal'd upon the Palm-tree; which being too high for her, she obtain'd by her Prayers that the Palm-tree broke, and so deliver'd her Husband, whom she brought to Life again.

Patragali now burning of Revenge to punish the Murderers of her Husband, address'd her self to Ixora, who having furnish'd her with a strong Body of Raxaxos, or Devils (having been wicked Men in their life-time) she enter'd the Territories of Pandy, and at last kill'd the King and the Goldsmith. His Wife she reviv'd from the dead, who having brought forth a Son, she granted him a Privilege to work in the Pagodes, and to receive to himself the tenth part of all the Gold he should make use of, the fourth in 10 of what he should work for the King, and as much as he could get from private Persons.

We told you before of the Pagode of Patragali in Cranganor, where besides her Statue stands that of a large Man in Marble, which the Brabmans knock every day with Hammers upon the Head, to keep it from growing too big.

Thus much of Ixora's Children, who were, properly speaking, only four in number (Suprabennia being only an adopted Son) we must also go on in the Story of Paramesceri his Spouse and her Origin. Jecxa Paje, a King of the Peringales had four Daughters, the eldest whereof was Paramesceri, otherwise call'd Parvati; Sarossodi and Gojatris the second and third being married to Bramma, and Pagode Siri to Vistnum. Their Father being desirous to see his Daughters in their full Glory, invited Bramma and Vistnum to a most magnificent Feast. Vistnum asking him whether he had invited Ixora, he answer'd, No, (Ixora being then in his Mendicant State) but afterwards considering the matter, he invited him at last, which Ixora took so hainously, that he resolv'd to spoil the Feast.

The Day appointed for the Feast being come, Siri Pagode came in great Pomp in a stately Chariot made of nine most precious Stones, most artificially wrought, her self being adorn'd with numberless Jewels and Pearls, and attended by a splendid Retinue of Servants and Musicians: Sarossodi and Gojatris the other two Sisters appear'd with the same Splendor. Paramesceri in the mean while having obtain'd leave to go to the Feast from Ixora, he order'd her to put on her best Apparel, and gave her his Serpents, his Umbrella of Peacocks Tails, his Chain of Bones, his Tygers Skin, and Elephants Hide; thus equip'd she mounted upon an Ox, and with a large Attendance of Drummers, and Pudas and Pixares, came to her Father's Palace, where being met at the Gates by her Sisters and the other Guests, these seeing her Equipage much below what they expected, instead of welcoming her as they ought to have done, burst out into laughter, which so vexed Paramesceri, that without more ado she return'd to Calaja, where she gave an account of what Treatment she had met with, because her Sisters appear'd at the Feast in a most sumptuous Equipage, their Apparel being cover'd all over with precious Stones and Pearls, whereas she who was the eldest Sister, and married to Ixora, had been despis'd for her mean Appearance.

Ixora mov'd at the just Complaints of his Spouse, sent his Son Quenavady to spoil the Feast. Vistnum being well acquainted with Quenavady's Temper, order'd good store of Cakes to be set before him in the Hall, which pleased him so well, that he soon forgot his Father's Orders. Ixora wondering at Quenevady's long stay, sent his Brother Superbennia upon the same Errand; Vishnum knowing him not to be diverted with Trifles, sent out to him some ingenious Persons, who entertain'd him so well with subtle Discourses and Arguments, that he likewise neglected his Father's Commands.

At last Ixora finding both his Sons to stay behind, order'd his Daughter Patragali thither; Vishnum no sooner heard of her coming, but he commanded a most delicious Banquet to be set before her in the Hall, through which she was to pass, which so diverted her Senses, that she soon forgot what she came about.

Ixora finding all these Endeavours to prove ineffectual, resolv'd to go thither in Person; which Vishnum no sooner got notice of, but he told King Jecxa Prajava his Father-in-law, that not being able to cope with Ixora, he would retire with his Wife; and Bramma doing the same, the Sun and the Moon (two of the Guests) staid only behind: Ixora coming to his Father-in-law's Palace, upbraided him with the Contempt he had put upon him and his Wife Paramejveri, and so taking him by the Hair full of Anger, there came forth at the same instant a stout Warrior arm'd Cap-a-pee (like the Mars of the antient Pagans) call'd Virapatron by the Malabars, who cut off Jecxa Prajava's Head, the Hands of the God of the Five, and beat out the Teeth of the Sun. What Rogierius says concerning Jecxa Prajava's having got a Goats Head instead of the other, and that the Moon also got a good banging, I could never learn either from these Pagans themselves, or from the Portuguese Histories.

CHAP. I.

The Idol Vishnum, and his Transformation into a Fish. Mats Altar. Another Transformation of Vishnum. An Account of the Milk-Sea. Cauram's Altar.

*Vishnum's Descent
dence.*

Vishnum* the second in rank among the Gods next to Ixora, is also descended from Quivelinga. He is of a black Colour, with one Head, and four Hands; he resides on the Sugar-Sea, and governs the World sleeping. Instead of a Bed, he reposes upon a noted Serpent call'd Annatam, with five Heads; two whereof serve him for Pillars, one for a Bolster, and two under his Hams. This Serpent, as they say, being once in the humour to try the Power of Vishnum, got a sixth Head, which Vishnum no sooner saw, but he got another Hand to lay upon the Head, and the Serpent having got a seventh Head, he got likewise another Hand; so that, as the Serpents Heads did grow to the number of a thousand, his Hands encreased in proportion; whence it is that they look upon the Serpents as Celestial Spirits, keep them in great Veneration, and never kill them, tho they are often hurt by them. Thus the Serpents were reckoned by the antient Lithuanians, Samogitians, Prussians and Egyptians.

They tell us further, that Vishnum wears a Print of a Foot upon his Breast: For one Ricxi Sirmelstena being desirous to know which of the three was the most Potent God, came to Calaja, and gave Ixora a good Box on the Ear, who transform'd him into a Stone; but having after 12 years recover'd his Life, he did the same to Bramma, who let him go without doing him any harm. Then coming to Vishnum, and finding him upon his Bed, he set his foot upon his Breast, which Vishnum fix'd there, so that he was forced to continue there 100 years.

Vishnum had two Wives, one call'd vishnum's Leximi alias Lactemi, and Siri Pagode Wives before-mention'd. The first Vishnum found in the Milk-Sea, in a Rose of 108 large and 1008 lesser Leaves; her chief business is to scratch his Head. The other is call'd Pumi Divi, i. e. the Goddess of Heaven, in whose Lap he lays his Feet, which she is to rub with her Hands.

They attribute no less than ten several Transformations to Vishnum, nine whereof they say are accomplish'd already, but the tenth is to come. Father Kircher the Jesuit * mentions the same to have been related to him by Father Hen. Roth an Austin Frier; and Rogerius says likewise something of them: but as under these ten Transformations are hid the chief Mysteries of the Pagan Religion on both sides of the Ganges, so we will treat of them at large with this Precaution, that these Pagans often give divers Names to the jant, Gentives and Malabars: So, tho they acknowledg the same Ixora, Bramma and Vishnum, some of them call'd Ixora Mabex, or Mahadeum, Bramma, Bruma or Ram, and Vishnum Bexuo, &c. which seems to intimate as if they had a certain respect to the Trinity; just as the Chineſes worship three Divine Attributes under the Name of Puffa, and the Greeks placed the three Charities near the Throne of Jupiter; and if the Modern Jews were not quite obstinate in their denial of the Trinity, they might be convinc'd by their own Rabbies, Rabbi Isaac, Rabbi Judas Nagi, and Rabbi Simeon.

The first Transformation was into a Fish, occasion'd by Raxiata alias Adivem, who having carried away the Law-book of the inferior Gods call'd Devagal or Dewetas, hid himself at the bottom of the Sea. The inferior Gods making their Complaints to Vishnum, he transform'd himself into that ravenous Fish the Shark, and thus diving to the bottom of the Sea, laid hold of Raxiata, otherwise call'd Seremiacen, and Sancaſoor by the Benjans, kill'd him, and seiz'd the Law-book, divided into four parts; the first whereof treated of the Souls of the Blessed, the second of the vagabond Souls, the third of good Works, the fourth of bad Works. But what Rogierius says, l. 1. c. 3. viz. that the fourth part is lost, I could never be convinc'd of. The Fish is call'd Mas or Matbia, tho the Malabars and Benjans call it Zecxia. The Benjans tell us, that these Books were stoln from Bramma, but the Malabars from the Dewetas, or inferior Gods. The Benjans say that Bramma was transform'd into a Fish, whereas the Malabars ascribe it to Vishnum. The Benjans call these Transmutations Altars; so that according to their supposition Mas Altar being the first, has now stood 2500 years.

Upon this occasion I must agree with Rogierius, when he says, l. 2. c. 3. that he could not dive into the Mysteries of the Transformations, because I am certain that it cost me a great deal of trouble before I could attain to the knowledge thereof, and that not without the Assistance of a certain Brabman, who coming from Bengale settled at Jafnapatnam; and as I frequently convers'd with him, so I often used to discourse with him concerning the Animadversions made upon this Head by Rogierius: He being afterwards converted to the Christian Faith, and baptized in the Church of Panarpon, and our Discourse running upon the Transformations of Vishnum, he told me that this

Pedam, or Law-book, being inclosed in a Chanke, or Sea-horse's Horn, the same was found out by Vishnum; whence it is that they say the Prints of the Fingers are to be seen in these Horns to this day; and that they have put the Saccaram or Sword, and the Chanks or Horn into his Hands, as you see in the preceding Draught, tho some ascribe the same to Bramma.

But before we enter further upon the Description of the Transmutations, we must add certain Preliminaries as tending to the Explanation thereof.

All these Transformations were perform'd in four different times or spaces: The first call'd Kortefinge by the Benjans, they say continued 1728000 years. The second Tretafinge 1296000 years: The third Duaperfinge 8064000 years: The fourth Kalifinge 4032000 years, being the same term of time we now live in; so that according to their Computation at Suratte there were in 1657, at least 4758 years elapsed of this last term of Time. For it is to be known, that the Benjans, and most other Pagans, Egyptians, Chineſes and Japoneſes, differ several 1000 of years in their Computations from ours. And to convince you that the Benjans have the same years with ours, it is to be observ'd, that they as well as we divide their Years into 12 Months, amounting in the whole to 360 days in the year; and to make amends for our odd days, they have thirteen Months in every fourth Year, yet so that the 13th Month hath no more than 16 days. And it is further their opinion, that after the expiration of this last term of Time of 4032000 years, the World shall be renew'd. In which Point they follow in some measure the Footsteps of Plato, who allow'd no less than 36000 years before the Sun could pass through the 360 deg. of the Zodiack; tho they make their Annu magnus, as the antient Pagans call'd it,

Interea magnum Sol circumvolvitur Annum *.

l. 3. Æneid.

The Pagans on the Coast of Coromandel and Malabar call these four terms of time, Critagom, Treitagom, Dwaparagom, and Kaligom; where it is to be observ'd, that according to the Computation of the Pagans, and the Gentives of Suratte, there are in this year 1670 elapsed 4771. whereas those of Coromandel compute 4770, being only one year's difference: but finding in 1665, that the Inhabitants of Jafnapatnam computed then the 4864th year year of the last Term; I told them that they did not stand for 100 years less or more, whereat they smiled.

But it is time we should now proceed to the second Transformation. The 33 Gods and the Adives held an Assembly in the Milk-Sea, to consult how to get into their possession the Ambrosia, call'd by some Amuritam and Amortam, by others Amratam. Some say that Ixora and Vishnum having call'd together all the good and evil Spirits, enter'd upon a Debate, how to find out something endu'd with such a Virtue as to make Men live without Victuals or Drink, and without danger of Death, or being tir'd. Whereupon it being agreed, that they should turn the Mount Abamervu (call'd Merowwa by Rogerius) like the Turners do, and instead of a Rope make use of the Serpent Harugu, call'd Sescha by the Brahmans, being of so vast a bulk, as to enclose the seven Worlds and Seas; accordingly they began their Turners-work, but finding the Mount immovable, they address'd themselves to a noted Ape call'd Baly (of whom more anon in the History of Siri Rama) by whose Assistance the Mount began to stir; and meeting at the same time with a beautiful Woman named Dara, they bestow'd her upon Baly as a Reward for his Services. But continuing their Work, the Mount by turning round tumbld into the Sea; so that being destitute of all means to recover it thence, they were forced to have recourse to Vishnum, who taking the shape of a Tortoise, dived to the bottom, and brought the Mount up on his Back. Here it was that Vishnum met with the beautiful Macha Lecxemi, whom he married afterwards. But the Mount being exceeding high, Vishnum took the shape of a Bird, and flew round about it, till it was brought lower. This Story seems to have some relation to the Fable of Mount Atlas, and what is said Heb. 1. that God bears up the World.

The Gods and the Adives then continuing their Work, did light upon some Poison, which being too strong for them they sent to Ixora, but were still in pursuit after the Ambrosia, which they intended to present to their Great King Deva Indra (who was then very sick) firnamed Quiera Navam, because his whole Body was cover'd with Manly Tards, in revenge of the Adultery he committed with the Wife of the Great Rixi Quendama: For Deva Indra being extremely in love with the said Lady, transform'd himself into a Cock, and coming to her House in the night-time, began to crow most briskly. Rixi thinking, it had been near break of Day, got out of his Bed, and whilst he was going to an adjacent Pond to perform his usual Devotions, Deva Indra took the opportunity to enjoy his Wife. Rixi returning from his Devotion, and perceiving the Cheat, transmuted his Wife into a Stone, and laid the other Punishment upon her Lover.

By this time the Adives having seiz'd upon the Ambrosia without giving a share to the Gods, these made their Applications to Vishnum, who thereupon taking the shape of a most beautiful Nymph, sat down at Table with the Adives, when their Attendants were just ready to distribute the Ambrosia among them. Being all extremely enamour'd with her Beauty, every one courted her for his Spouse. To decide the matter she told them, that they should put the Ambrosia into her Hand, and with their Eyes shut and Hands ty'd behind them, but their Mouths open, receive every one their share of the Ambrosia; and that he upon whom she should pitch for her Husband, should be the last. This being done accordingly, she seiz'd upon the Ambrosia, and carried it to the Gods. But whilst they were all opening their Mouths to receive the said Ambrosia, Ravaben (who had assum'd the shape of one of the Gods) shew'd his Boars Tusks, which Vishnum seeing gave him such a powerful Blow, that his Head flew from his Shoulders; whence the Adives, whatever shape they assume, always retain their Tusks. However Vishnum throwing the Body and Head into the Air, the same were transform'd into two Planets, call'd Rabu and Quendaum. Rogerius calls them, Ragou and Ketou, which in the Malabar signifies as much as Caput and Cauda, or the Dragon's Head and Tail. But here the Brahmans commit an Error in Astronomy, for they have no Planets, but a fixed Sidus consisting of 31 Stars on the North-side without the Zodiac; where the Moon passing from South to North, and again from the North to South, goes through this Ecliptick-Line, being the same the Sun passes through every year, and the Moon every Month in the year; for when she takes her Course from South to North, the place where she passes through the Ecliptick-Line is call'd the Dragon's Head, as the place of the said Line through which she passes in her return from North to South is call'd the Dragon's Tail; hence it is, that (according to Rogervius) these Pagans say that there is an Antipathy betwixt Sun and Moon, and Ragou and Ketou, and when they see an Eclipse of the Sun or Moon, that they are fighting with Ragou and Ketou, or that they are devour'd by them.

The inferior Gods employ part of the Ambrosia they had got in restoring their Great God to Health, and removing the Manly Members from his Body, instead whereof he got as many Eyes. Baldass.

The before-mentioned Poison taken out of the Mount Maham, being so virulent, that whatever it touch'd was consum'd to Ashes, was given to Ixora in the presence of Paramesceri his Spouse, who dreading the Effects thereof, clapt her Hand to his Throat to prevent him from swallowing it, and laying the other Hand upon his Mouth for fear he should spue it out again and set the World on fire, mingling at the same time her Prayers (Nila candamre accerem) with her Endeavours, the Poison forc'd its way through Ixora's Ear, and was in an instant transform'd into a Devil, call'd Canda Carna Pixaxo. The Prints of Paramefceri's Finger left three black spots on Ixora's Throat, whence he got the Surname of Nili Candaon, i. e. Black Throat, or Black Head.

Different Relation of the Benjans and Gentives of the second Transformation.

The Benjans and Gentives give a different Relation of this second Transformation. They say that the Sea being swoln with Pride, broke out in these words; Who is it that can compare with the Riches contain'd in my Azure Marble Vaults? Here it is the Moon has fix'd her Habitation; the Water of Tamarith, which renders those that drink it immortal, is inclosed in my Bosom. The Elephant with his seven Trunks, and the seven-headed Horse dwell in the Depths, which produce black, white and red Coral in vast quantity. The Great God of Heaven being exasperated at this Vanity, commanded the Giant and the four-headed God Bramma to go to the River

Siam Boerwesty, near which lies the Golden Mount Aceperwat seated in the Center of the Earth, and 40000 Leagues high, and to remove the said Mount into the Sea, by winding the Serpent Signage about it, and thereby force the Sea to cast out her Treasure, which had render'd her so vainglorious. This being put in Execution accordingly, the Sea call out the following fourteen things. 1. The Mony call'd Leefemy. 2. The most precious Jewel Confenchmany, or the Carbuncle, which carries a Lustre like the Full-Moon. 3. The Tree Paertfatig. 4. The Vessel Silxeren, with the Water of Sora. 5. Doflor Dannewanter. 6. Indemademæn. 7. The white Cow of Plenty call'd Camdoga. 8. The immortal Water call'd Amarith. 9. The Elephant with seven Trunks, Hiera Wanneffy. 10. The beauteous Female Dancer, Remba. 11. The seven-headed Horse Exmoghora. 12. The Bow Demok. 13. The Horn Chiank. And, 14. The Poison Sakar. This done, the Sea began to abate of its Pride, the Mount and Serpent had their peculiar places assign'd them, and the Treasures of the Sea were distributed to different Places and Persons. Thus far of the second Transformation, containing 2500 years of the first term of Time.

CHAP. II.

Vistnum transform'd into a Hog: Waras his Altar. Some Reflections upon the Fables of the Pagans. Vistnum's fourth Transformation into half a Man, and half a Lion.

The third Transformation.

A Certain Adiren, named Renniaczem, was of such vast length, that taking up the Earth he roll'd it together like an Anchor-Cable, and carried it upon his Shoulders to the infernal places call'd Padalas, whilst Vistnum was asleep in his Bed. He no sooner heard of the Presumption of this Adiren, but he assum'd the shape of a Hog, and digging with his Snout through the Earth, till he came to the Padalas, kill'd the Robber, and taking the Earth upon his Tusks, fix'd it in its former place. Hence it is, that in the Pagode call'd Adi Warraba, in the City of Trimotram, not far from Sinzi, there is to be seen the Head of a Hog, which the Brahmans say was the Product of the Earth, and is reverenc'd as the true Idol of Vistnum in memory of this Transformation.

The Benjans and Gentives of Indostan and Suratte give us the following account of it. During the first term of Time, say they, the World was so over-burden'd with Sin, that the Serpent of 1000 Heads unable to bear the weight thereof any longer, withdrew her self from underneath it, whereby the World, together with Men and Beasts, were cast into and perish'd in the depth of the Sea. Bramma addressing himself to the Great God, desir'd him to retrieve the World out of the Abyss of the Sea, which he willingly granted. Whereupon Vistnum assum'd the shape of a Boar's Head, with Tusks as big as an Elephant's Trunk, white all over his Body, with four Arms and Hands, having in one Hand a great Sword call'd Godda, and in the other a Book, as likewise a Horn and round Tjicker. Thus transform'd, he threw himself into the Sea, being at first no bigger than a Man's Finger, but increas'd before he reach'd the bottom to such a degree, that in case case the Earth had been plac'd on the surface of the Water, and he stood upon it, his Head would have touch'd the Stars. Coming to the bottom of the Sea, he kill'd the dreadful Giant Hirnak, whose Blood ting'd the whole Sea with red. Vishnum having trampled him under his Feet, lifted with his Tusks the Earth out of the Sea, and placing the Tortoise upon the Water, and the Serpent with a thousand Heads upon the Tortoise, he retir'd to his Residence, and Bramma with one word created a new Generation of Men. This Transformation comprehends 2700 years, in the first Period of time.

This Story seems to intimate, that these Pagans have heard something of the Deluge, considering especially that

Saldous. the Benjans do live nearer to the Borders of Persia and Armenia than the rest of the Indians; there being also mention made of the Giants, Gen. 6. 4. and it is very probable, that the antient Pagans were not quite ignorant of the History of the Deluge, which they afterwards ushered into the World, under divers peculiar Deluges, as for instance the Diluvium Ogygium, which happen'd in Attica, and Deucalion's Deluge in Thessaly; and the Prometheus of the antient Pagans, is by most Criticks taken for the same with Noah.

But we come to the fourth Transformation; yet before we enter upon the Particulars thereof, we must add something more relating to the third Transformation. The Earth being restored to its former Station, Vishnum upon an exact view found it something inclining to the South, which Vishnum not being able to remedy, he address'd himself to a certain Saint of very low Stature, nam'd

* l.a.c. 19. Rixi Agassia (Rogerius * calls him Agassia) who having laid his holy Book upon that part inclining to the South, put it into a just Equilibrium.

Vishnum walking with this Agassia near the Seaside, the Sea asked Vishnum, Who it was that walk'd with him? Vishnum replied, He is a Saint who is going to restore the Earth to its true Balance. Whereupon the Sea, scorning his low Stature (he being not above the height of a joint of a Finger) wetted him with its Waves; which Affront being highly resent'd by Agassia, he took some of the Seawater in his hand, and beginning to drink, did not desist till he had drunk up the whole Sea: Demetas and Rixis seeing the Sea thus exhausted, interceded with Agassia not to rob the World of so singular a Benefit, and prevail'd upon him so far, that he pisset out again all the Water he had drunken before; and this is the reason their Philosophers alledg for the Saltness of the Sea.

Agassia after having restored the balance of the Earth, took his leave of Vishnum, who to prevent the like for the future, order'd the Great Serpent to wind herself about the seven Worlds and seven Seas; and for more Securities sake, appointed 8 Guardians to watch over it, call'd in the Malabar by the following Names: 1. Indra the King of the Celestial Spirits. 2. Vanni the God of Fire. 3. Padurpati King of the evil Spirits. 4. Nirurdi King of the infernal Spirits. 5. Varuma the God of the Sea. 6. Maril the God of the Winds. 7. Cubera the God of Riches, called otherwise Bassironnem. 8. Ixananam or Ixora himself; hence it is that you see frequently eight Stones placed at the Entrance of, and about their Pagodes.

The fourth Transformation into half a Lion and half a Man was occasioned thus: During the first Period of Time, a certain Gyant Hirrenkessop (as the Benjans call him, but the Malabars Keniauxen) having been forced to abscond for 12 years on the account of Bramma, afterwards made the following Request to him: Majest Potent Bramma, grant me the Favour to make me a great Monarch upon Earth, and bestow this further Blessing upon me, that I may not be killed either by Day or by Night, either within or without my House, either by Heaven, Earth, Sun or Moon, by Thunder, Lightning, Stars or Comets, neither by Clouds, Winds, Hail, Snow or Rains, or Birds, Beasts, Men, Devils, Fishes or Water; not by Serpents, Adders, Poison, Sword, Arrows or any other Weapons. Bramma having granted the Gyant's request, he soon made himself Master of the whole Earth, and overcome with Pride at his Success, issued out a Mandate, that no body should be adored but himself, under the forfeiture of the Lives of such as should contravene it. Things continuing in this State for some Years, the Brahmans began to murmur, that they should be oblig'd to adore any terrestrial Power, tho never so great, to the prejudice of the celestial Spirits; they resolv'd therefore to make their Supplications to Vishnum, imploring him to deliver them from the Oppressions of this Tyrant, who gave them for answer, That the Giant should have shortly a Son born, who should be their Deliverer, and till then they must have Patience.

Within 10 Months after Naackseu, the Giants Wife, brought forth a Son nam'd Prellade, who when he was five years old was put to a Schoolmaster; being one time sent for by his Father, his Master instruct'd him how to pronounce his Father's Name in short writing, which was Irenia, but instead thereof the Boy said Ary, being the abbreviated Name of Vishnum. The Master astonish'd put his Hand upon his Mouth, bidding him to forbear, for fear of being the occasion of his own Death; but the more he forbid him, the more the Boy persisted in saying Ary, Ary, instead of Irenia.

The Schoolmaster not knowing what to do, brought him to his Father, telling him, That his Son would not pronounce his Name, which he had taken so much pains to teach him. The Father asking him the reason, reason, the Boy answered, Your Name is not the true Name, but the other is the Truth it self. His Father asking further, What is Truth? The Son answered, Vishnum who fills the 14 Worlds is the Truth. What Benefit, said the Father, do you receive from Vishnum? And what Benefit, replied the Son, shall I receive by yours? The Giant told him, Whoever repeats my Name, shall be blessed with Riches, Honour, Dignities and Life. How, says the Son, can you give Life and Riches? Yes I can, replied the Giant, and will convince you immediately, it being in my Power to take away your Life. That will scarce happen, answered the Son, according to your Providence and Discretion. What is Providence and Discretion? asked the Giant.

Baldau.

Baldew. That is the Eternal Divine Name of Vistnum, replied the Son, the Creator of the 14 Worlds. The Father asking him, Where is this Name to be found? The Son answered, In every thing both in Heaven and Earth, every thing being filled with Vistnum. What, replied the Father, and is Vistnum also in this Pillar? Yes, replied the Son, and likewise in you and me. The Giant not longer able to contain himself, told him, Boy, because thou insistest thus upon the Name of Vistnum, I will beat your Brains out with this Stick; but if thou wilt pronounce my Name, thou shalt neither die, neither be beaten. That won't be, says the Boy, for your Names sake, because God has ordered it otherwise. But I will spoil that Ordinance, replied the Giant, and with that struck with his golden Staff at the Boy, who, hiding himself behind the Pillar, implor'd the Name of Vistnum. The Giant turning again with more Fury than ever against the Son, struck with such Violence that the Pillar burst and produced a Monster, half a Man, half a Lion, an Hermaphrodite, with Breasts both above and below, breathing Fire and Flames out of its Nostrils.

The Benjans say, that the Giant did erect a red hot Pillar to tie his Son to, telling him at the same time, Let us see who can deliver you out of my Hands. The Son then invoking the assistance of Vistnum, the Pillar burst, and forth came the Monster. All the Standers by were amazed at this Spectacle, and the Giant himself trembled for fear. Vistnum resolving to revenge his own Quarrel, and at the same time not to break the Promise made by Bramma to the Giant, laid hold of the Giant, and hurrying him under Ground directly under the Threshold of his own House, and keeping him there till Sunset, tore his Body in pieces, thereby fulfilling Bramma's Promise, that he should not be killed within nor without his House, neither in Heaven nor upon Earth, neither by Beasts, Birds, Sword, Wind, Rain, Hail. The Giant's Son succeeding his Father in the Empire, ruled with great applause for many succeeding years.

Thus ended the fourth Transformation of the first Period of time, called Kortefinge by the Benjans, comprehending in all 1728000 years; for tho all these Transformations were transacted within the time of 7700 years and three days, the rest, viz. 1720000 years, 360 days, must be supposed to have been the Intervals of these Transactions.

CHAP. III.

The fifth Transformation of Vistnum into a Brahman. Great Plenty under Mavalv. The Request of the transformed Vistnum. Prassaram's Altar and Birth. He kills Reneca his Mother. Raja Inder's Cow of Plenty. Prassaram's great Actions.

W Hilst Mavalv (called Belragie by the Benjans and Gentives) ruled the World, the Inhabitants thereof were so plentifully provided with every thing by his Bounty, that Poverty was a thing unknown among human Race. Vistnum perceiving that as the case then stood, there were no different degrees, nor any dependance in the World either on God or Man, resolved to divest Mavalv (by Fraud) of the Government of the World.

With this Intention Vistnum assumed the Shape of a Brahman, and appearing in a Mendicant Posture before Mavalv, he asked him, who he was, and upon what Errand he came? The pretended Brahman replied, Having heard of your Charity I am come to crave some Alms. Mavalv answer'd, I who have granted the Requests of many Kings and Princes, will not deny thee, let it be what it will, whether Kingdoms, Money, Honours, or whatever else you can ask. The Brahman replied, my aim is not at such mighty things, but after all, for fear of Denial, I beg of you to promise me, without exception to grant my Request. Mavalv answering that he would, the Brahman begged him to confirm it with an Oath.

Mavalv being just upon the point of confirming it by Oath, the Planet Venus (who stood just by) told him, And is it customary to swear to the giving of Alms? which Mavalv being not in the least moved at, swore to the Brahman, who told him, I am not covetous of Kingdoms or Provinces, my Desire is confined to three Foot of Ground, where I may erect a Hut, where to lay up my Books, Umbrella and Drinking-Cup;

Cup; I beg you therefore to pour some of your Water upon the Ground. For it is a custom among these Pagans, that whenever they dispose of or sell any thing, they confirm their Promise or Bargain, by pouring some Water upon the Ground, part whereof the Buyer catches with his Hands and drinks, in confirmation of the Bargain; just as Jacob desired Joseph to lay his Hand under his Hips, when he was going to make him his Promise upon Oath, Gen. 47. 29. & 24. 2. where the Hips (according to some Interpreters) are taken pro partibus generationis, in quibus circumcisionis signum dabatur.

Maundy told him, Ask a Kingdom and I will grant it. The Brahman replied, Were I a King, I must punish Criminals,

Baldem. which I could not do without trespassing the Ruins of the Order of the Brahmins; wherefore I desire no more than three Foot of Ground. Maval replied, that will not be enough to build you a House upon. I want no House, said the Brahman, having neither Wife nor Children, I desire only three Foot of Ground, which you can't refuse without being perjured. Maval telling the Brahman that he never broke his Promise, and ordering Venus to bring him some Water, she desired him not to pour the Water upon the Brahman, whom she looked upon as an Impostor. Maval replied, Of what consequence can three Foot of Ground be? Take heed, answered Venus, for this is Vishnum himself, who is come in disguise to deceive you. Maval returned, I have not sinned against Vishnum, and therefore have no reason to fear him. Notwithstanding which Venus continued to persuade him by many Arguments, not to trust him: But Maval persisting in his Resolution, told her, Let come on it what will, if it should cost me my Life, I will not break my Oath. Then taking the Vessel with the Water, he bid the Brahman to hold up his Hands, which Venus perceiving, she held Maval's Arms, desiring him not to pour out the Water; but Maval pushing back her Hand, bid the Brahman a second time to hold up his Hands. Venus then changing her Shape, stopp'd the Pipe of the Vessel, which Maval endeavouring to loosen with a Twig, he hurt Venus's one Eye, whence she got the Name of Chueren. Then Water coming out of the Spout of the Vessel, the Brahman did drink. This done, Maval order'd him to measure the three Foot of ground where he pleased. Vishnum having by this time reassumed his own Shape, he covered the whole Earth with one of his Feet, and with the other the Paradise called Sargalogam. Whilst Vishnum was extending his Foot, Bramma poured Water upon it, which produced the River Ganges, so highly celebrated among the Indians and other Pagans. Vishnum having thus measured two Foot, Maval told him, he might also take the third, which he did by measuring the inferiour Region, called Pada-las, and thus became Master of the whole World.

Vishnum Master of the World.

The Gentives add, that this Brahman (whom they call Vanam, i. e. a black Dwarf, and Rogierius calls him Barmasari, i. e. a young Brahman, by the Name of Wamara *) set his Left Foot upon Maval's Breast or Head, and thus kick'd him thro the Ground into the infernal Region, whereof he made him King. But Maval's Wife upbraiding Vishnum with Ingratitude, he carried her to her Husband, and as a Reward of his Piety bestowed upon him the Government of the place of Darkness, Vishnum himself remaining with him nine days to guard the Entrance thereof. Rogierius calls this Maval a Devil, named Belli, and says, that whilst the Waters of the Ganges were flowing from above over Isora's Head, and risen out of the Hip of a Saint, 60000 Men were brought to life. This Fable had questionless its Origin from the want of Knowledge of the true source of the River Ganges, for which reason they generally stile it the Heavenly River.

Maval being not satisfy'd with his present Station, made his Complaint to Vishnum, who told him, that in regard he had been a charitable Person, a Man of Truth and without Sin, he would constitute him King of the Paradise. Maval making a deep Reverence (called by them Sambaja) returned for answer, It is not my ambition to reign, being only affected with the Hardships of my former Subjects, who have no body now to provide them with Necessaries, as I used to do. Vishnum replied, The poor shall serve the rich, and be maintained by them; so that he that will work, shall want for nothing. I will also constitute you the Doorkeeper of the Paradise, so that no body shall enter there without thy Knowledge. But replied Maval, how shall I then be able to judg at such a distance, how you deal with Mankind upon Earth? I will, answered Vishnum, assign you a certain Place in Heaven, from whence you may overlook the Earth; and so made him Doorkeeper of the Paradise.

Accordingly Vishnum distinguished <sup>3 sorts of</sup> Mankind into three sorts, Rich, Poor and Middle-sized, which were to have a Reciprocal Dependence on one another, That such as had lived piously and done Acts of Charity should be received after their Death, and live in Plenty and Splendor; but such as did otherwise, should after their Decease be transform'd again into Slaves and Drudges, to do Penance for their former Sins, till by their good Works they should merit Paradise, which they were not to enter however without Maval's Consent. He also constituted a Feast (called Ona by the Malabari) to be celebrated yearly in August, when they spend several days together in feasting and other sorts of Di-

The sixth Transformation happened thus : After the appearing of Hanuman mentioned in the 5th Chap. Part 1. one Bramani and Bramani being joined in Wedlock, did for a considerable time lead a pious and contented Life near the River Bewa ; but the Woman being barren (a thing much despised among the Benjans) they resolved to retire into some Desert, there to implore God's Assistance. Having thus for some time led a Vagabond Life, they came to a certain Pagode built in a Forest, near which stood a very fine Tree, under the Shade whereof they reposed themselves for some time, and sent forth their Prayers upon their bended Knees. After some time finding their Prayers ineffectual, the Woman told her Husband, that they ought to leave this shady Place, and in lieu thereof to expose themselves to the Injuries of the Sun, Rains and Storms, to try whether perhaps by this Humiliation and Penance, God might be prevailed upon to bless them with Children. They persevered in this Austerity and continual Prayers for some longer time, but in vain ; the Woman growing beyond all Patience, told her Husband, that being quite weary of Life, she desired him to fast with her, till thereby they could put a Period to their miserable Life. Accordingly having spent nine days without eating or drinking, Vishnum appear'd to them in the Shape of a Child, asking them, what was the occasion of their Mortification and fervent Prayers. The Woman answered, All our Prayers are directed to Vishnum, to bless me with such a handsome Child as thee. Vishnum replied, And do you instead of Gold and Silver desire Children, who commonly prove the Toils of Life ? Bramani answered, all the Riches and Pleasures of this World are not so valuable to me, as a Son of my own, so well shap'd as thy self. Vishnum replied, Your Prayers are heard, and as you have three several times mortify'd your Bodies, so three Sons shall be born thee successively ; and so he vanished.

Being both exhausted with Fasting, they died soon after ; but the Soul of Bramani was infused into the Body of the new-born Reneca, and that of Bramani into the Body of the new-born Bramani, surnamed Siamdicbemi, who being come to their riper Years, were join'd together in Marriage ; Reneca's Sister being at the same time married to the Great Raja Sesraarsum, who had 1000 Arms.

Siamdicbemi retir'd with Reneca to a Solitude, near the River Ganges, where they built a Hut of Straw, with an Intention to live upon the Fruits of the Earth, and pass their time in praying to Vishnum.

It was not long before Reneca (pursuant to the Promise made by Vishnum) brought forth a beautiful Son, unto whom she gave the Name of Prassaram, who being carefully educated under the Tuition of his Father, did in his 12th year interpret the most abstruse Characters that could be laid before him. His Mother having received a certain Cloth from Vishnum, which keeping Water as well as any Earthen Vessel, Reneca going to fetch Water one time out of the River Ganges, she happen'd to see the great Raja Sesraarsum with his Spouse (her Sister) a hunting near the River side. Reneca asked one of his Attendants, who it was, and being answered, that it was Raja Sesraarsum with his Queen, she advanced towards them ; but finding that her Sister took no notice of her, she sat down in a very melancholy Posture upon the Bank of the Gange, complaining of the vast difference there was betwixt her Sister and her.

Alas, said she, she is a Queen, and I a poor Brahman's Wife ; she is possessed of Riches, Honour and Plenty, and I know nothing but Want and Misery.

She was then a going to fill her Cloth with Water, but found it, to her great Astonishment, leaky ; and being afraid to return home, staid abroad till after Sunset. Siamdicbemi surpriz'd at her long stay, look'd out at the Doors, and finding her sitting in a melancholy Posture, ask'd her whether she had brought no Water ; but she answering, she had not, and giving him the reason for it, he told her, that he was certain she had uttered some Expressions contrary to his Zeal and Piety ; and being exasperated to the highest degree, commanded his Son Prassaram to cut off his Mother's Head with an Ax. Prassaram would have excused himself, but finding his Father resolute, he was forced to obey, and cut off his Mother's Neck. The Father being highly taken with the Obedience of his Son, told him, that he should ask him what he pleased, and it should be granted him. I faw a certain Jogy, or Mendicant, at Columbo, whole Arms were grown together over his Head, by fitting in that Pofture.

Soon after it happen'd, that the before-mention'd King Raja Sefbraarum, coming, to give a Vifit to his Brother-in-law with a great Retinue, he was fo faft afleep, that all the noife of the Hounds, Horns and Drums could not awaken him: his Wife Reneca therefore having roused her Husband, by fprinkling fome warm Water upon his Head, he arofe; when Raja faluting the Brahman, told him, that the Fame of his Piety had induced him and his Retinue to come to fup, and to take a Nights Lodging with him.

The Brahman Siamdichemi, being much concern'd how to provide for fo many 1000 Perfons, at laft confider'd of the white Cow, called Camdoga, belonging to Raja Inder, which furnifhes thofe that have her in their poffeffion with every thing they wifh for. Having therefore defired Inder to fend him the faid Cow, he granted his Request; and the Cow being fent down, the Brahman defired Raja and his Attendants to fit down at Supper, which was ferved with fuch Variety and Plenty, that Raja, who was come upon no other account than to ridicule his Brother in Law's Poverty, flood amazed thereat; and further to try his Ability, ask'd him, to prefent him with fome Jewels; which the Brahman having prefented him with (much beyond what could be expected) Raja ask'd him for fome Clothes and Money for his People, which being likewife brought him by his Brother-in-law, he refolv'd alfo to ftay the next day; and being ferved at Table with the fame Plenty as before, he ftayed alfo the third day; when meeting with the fame Entertainment, he was amazed to find out whence all this Plenty of Provilions, Clothes and Riches could come in a place, where he expected fo little, efpecially fince he obferv'd that all was brought out of the Brahman's Hut, which was not big enough to hold half the quantity. This made him order fome of his Spies to take particular notice, whether there was not a Vault underground, from whence thefe things were brought. The Spies watching all Opportunities to fatisfy their Mafter's Curiofity, found at laft that a fender white Cow did bring forth all thefe things (which fhe threw out of her Stomach) whereof immediate notice was given to Raja.

The next Morning as he was taking his Leave from the Brahman, being ask'd by him, whether he was defirous of any thing elfe, he told him, that he wanted nothing more, but only the white Cow he had feen in his Hut; the Brahman replied, that being not his own, he was not in his difpofal. And, faid Raja, will you deny me fo fmall a Request, after you have heap'd fo many Obligations upon me before? What I did before, faid the Brahman, was in my own Power, but this is not. How, replied Raja, don't you know that it is in my Power to take her againft your Will? and then calling to fome of his Followers, he commanded them to fetch the white Cow out of the Hut. The Brahman feeing this beloved white Cow thus fnatched from him, told her at parting, Dear Camdoga, muft I thus leave you, how can I anfwer this to Raja Inder your Mafter? revenge thyfelf at once both of thine and mine Enemies. The Cow Camdoga no fooner heard thefe Words, but affuming a fhape three times bigger than her own, fhe laid about her with her Horns to that degree, that fhe kill'd and trod under Foot feveral thoufand of Raja's People; which done, fhe flew like Lightning up into the Air to her own Mafter. Raja exasperated at the Slaughter of his Men, and burning with Revenge, returned to the Hut of the Brahman, where they kill'd and left him wallowing in his Blood. The unfortunate Reneca, unwilling to outlive her Husband, fet fire to the Hut, and burnt herfelf with his dead Carcafe.

Camdoga in the mean while meeting with Praffaram not far from her Mafter's Houfe, told him what had happen'd, who declar'd he would revenge the fame 21 times upon all the Ketteris (a wicked Generation) and thus making the beft of his way with his Perzy, Bow and Arrow, he penetrated into the middle of Raja's Troops, and kill'd him with all his Praffaram Guards; thence travelling through the World, he kill'd all the Ketteris he met with, but could not do it fo effectually, but that fome efcap'd his Fury, who multiplying by degrees, he was forc'd to renew his Revenge againft them, which he did 21 times, till they were quite rooted out from the face of the Earth.

Baldew. By this time Vishnum remembering his Promise made to Prassaram's Parents, viz. that they were to be blest with three Sons, he commanded Bramba (the God with four Heads) to send down from Heaven the Souls of Siamdicbemi and Reneca, and to convey them into the Bodies of Ragia d'Afferat, and his Wife Couzila (slain among the Ketteriis) unto whom he had made a Promise of exalting their Posterity.

The Malabars say that this Transformation was made by Vishnum in the shape of Siri Parexi Rama. For the Rixi living in the Deserts, being no longer able to endure the Oppressions from the Neighbouring Kings, offer'd their Sacrifices to Vishnum, desiring his Assistance against them. A certain famous Rixi named Para Jara, sacrificing one day to Vishnum, he appear'd in the shape of a Child, and assisted at the Ceremony of the Sacrifice; which done, Parexi Rama took up an Ax and kill'd 44 Kings, who used to infest of their Territories. Siri Parexi Rama being afterwards desirous to erect certain Temples, and not finding sufficient room for that purpose (because the Sea then touch'd the Mount Gatte) he offer'd his Sacrifice, when a Sieve appearing to him (such as they use to cleanse the Rice with) he found that as often as he did shake it, the Sea retreated backwards from the Shore; but whilst he was doing it a third time, Varrinem the God of the Sea, having transform'd himself into Pisnires (call'd by them Carreas) gnaw'd the Sieve in pieces. However Siri Rama built 108 Temples, and erected as many Stones near them, from Mangalor to the Cape Comorin, much reverenc'd to this day by the Indians.

In the mean while the Fishermen of that Coast making their Complaints to Parexi Rama, that by this means they had been bereav'd of their Subsistence, he constituted them his Guards of the Temples he had built, with a sufficient allowance for their Maintenance; so that these Fishermen being thus become Brabmans, they used always to wear a Thred of a Fishing-Net about their Necks whilst they were performing their Sacrifices, and introduc'd that Custom among the Pagans, for a new-married Couple to go a fishing with a Linen Cloth instead of a Net.

Parexi Rama being one time employ'd The Origin of the Brahman. in his Solitude in sacrificing to the Gods, Siri Rama (or Vishnum) appear'd in the shape of a Man; which Parexi Rama taking notice of, his Jealousy was rais'd to such a height, that he would needs enter into a single Combat with him; but being prevented by the Rixii, they discover'd themselves to one another, and entering into a strict Friendship, Parexi Rama presented his Bow to Siri Rama, who return'd to the Atik-Sea.

How Ram got his Bride Sytha.

The Story try his Sincerity, took away one of the Flowers, and afterwards charged him with want of Duty; Rawan ignorant of the Deceit, counted his Flowers, and finding no more than 99, would have torn out one of his Eyes to complete the number of 100. But Ixora stopping his Hand, told him, that having now had a sufficient proof of his Integrity, he should ask what he pleased and he would be sure to grant it: Rawan then asked a share with Ixora in the Government of the World; which being granted him by Ixora, Rawan nevertheless continued his daily Devotions, and being ask'd the reason by Ixora, he told him, that he would not desist from his Prayers, till he had given him 10 Heads and 20 Arms, which being likewise granted by Ixora, he fix'd his Residence in the Country of Lanka, in the famous Isle of Ceylon, call'd by others Sanka, who also say that he built seven Palaces there of Gold, Silver, Steel, Iron, and other Metals.

Having thus rul'd for some thousand years over all the Neighbouring Kings, he became so proud, as to force his Subjects to worship him instead of Ixora; which they were forced to do for 25 years, till being quite tir'd out of all Patience by his Tyranny, they emplor'd Ixora to deliver them from Rawan, that so they might recover their former freedom of adoring him.

About that time there liv'd a certain Ragie named Dasserat, or Desservatha, or Decxareda. This King having three Wives, one of them named Cousila, after some time brought forth a Son named Ram by the Brabman Wissivoe, who encreased daily in Wisdom and Understanding, beyond what could be expected from his tender years. His second Wife Keggy (call'd Kaisha by the Malabars) brought forth another Son named Barrat; and Somettery, or Somittra, the third Wife, Lekeman and Setteroukan. The Malabars say, that these four Sons were born from these three Women by the means of four Pills.

Vishnum being thus brought into the World in the shape of a Ram, was educated by the Brabmans in all manner of Wisdom and Knowledge. There happen'd to live at that time a certain Ragie named Sannek, in the Country of Sian-nak, who having fix'd a prodigious strong Bow in a certain Enclosure made for that purpose, issued his Proclamation, to encourage all such as would venture to draw and break the said Bow, offering his Daughter Sytha with a great Portion as a Reward to him who should accomplish it. This being likewise come to the Ears of the Brabmans, Ram solicited his Tutor to let him try his Strength, which the Master not without some Reluctancy having consented to, he went along with him under the Notion of his Servant, and coming to Rag. Sannek's Court heard him offer the same Reward to any one that could manage and break the Bow, telling them, that he who would enter the List should take the Vessel with Betel, which was offer'd by his own hand.

Immediately after he saw the before-mentioned Rawan with 10 Heads take the Betel, and boasting of his Strength, told them that no body but him should pretend to Sytha: then drawing the Bow with his utmost Strength, he let slip the Sinew, which striking his Thumb off he fell into a Sound. Divers other Ragies try'd to mange the same Bow, but finding their Strength fail them were forced to desist.

The Betel being next brought to the Brabmans, among whom stood Ram, he at last obtain'd leave from his Master to accept of the Betel, which he did accordingly, and entering the List, found a tall Mast or Poll fix'd in the Center of the Court, on the top whereof was a Fish, and at the bottom a Cistern with Water, wherein plainly appear'd the shade of the Fish. Ram then drew the Bow with such violence, that he not only shot the Fish into several parts, but also broke the Bow to pieces.

The Bride rejoic'd at his Success, presented him with a whole Dish full of Jewels, as did all the rest there present proportionable to their Abilities: His Parents being also sent for to partake of the Honours done to their Son, they came with their other three Sons, who married the three Daughters of Raja Sannek, viz. Barrat married Onnemela, Lekeman Sekhy, and Setteroukan Lila.

Ram then desir'd to return to his Native Country; which being granted, not without great reluctance, he went back with his Father, Mother and three Brothers, with their Wives, where his Father deliver'd up the Kingdom to him; but having receiv'd a Wound in his Thumb, which prov'd very painful to him, it was healed at last by his Wife, in acknowledgment of which Benefit he told her, that he would grant her whatever she would ask: She then desir'd her Husband to send his three Sons, Ram, Lekeman (call'd otherwife Laafmana, s f s s s s 2 and

Ram in the mean while travelling along the River Ganges to Poushewattivan, where after a month's stay, whilst the Brothers were busy in erecting the Huts, Lekeman us'd to go every day to gather Fruit for their Subsistence; he being a very handsome Person, and got upon a Tree to gather some Fruits, was esp'y'd by a certain Woman named Souppennehia (and Churpanag by the Malabars) the Sister of Rawan, and Widow of one Vivali (kill'd in Rawan's Service) who being come to wash her self in the Ganges, told him, That she looking upon him as the handsomest Person in the World, she must be miserable for ever unless he would vouchsafe to love her, which if he refus'd, she would turn her Love into Hatred, when he must prepare to engage with her in single Combat. Lekeman reply'd, That his Love being fix'd in another place, he could not oblige her, and that to fight with her would not turn to his Honour. O unfortunate Man! cry'd she, how little best thou acquainted with my Strength! if I can't enjoy thee, I will have thy Life before I part from this place. Lekeman then considering whom he had to do with, told her, that tho he was willing, it was not in his power, she being of the Family of the Rachet, and he of the Tribe of the Bram-Kettrijs; but that if she would go to his Brother Ram's Hut, which was not far thence, and obtain his Consent, he would not be backward to gratify her desire. She no sooner came to Ram's Hut, but he knew her at first sight, and looking upon this as a fit opportunity to revenge the Affront he had receiv'd of Rawan, he gave her a Letter directed to his Brother Lekeman, wherein he order'd him to cut off those Parts in which her Strength was lodg'd. Thus she left Ram well satisfied, hastening to her pretended Bridegroom, whom she found busy in gathering of Fruit, and delivering the Letter to him, bid him read his Brother's Consent. But Lekeman understanding his Brother's intention, ran towards her, and under pretence of taking her up in his Arms, cut off her Nose and Ears, wherein her Strength was lodg'd.

Thus mortified she went away, threatening Revenge to the two Brothers, and making the best of her way to her Brother Rawan's Palace; but lighting by chance upon an Uncle's House of hers named Char, who commanded 10000 Horse, she stop'd there, and being ask'd how she came so defac'd, she told them that some Robbers near the Ganges had treated her in this manner.

The youngest of her Uncles order'd immediately 300 Horse to be in readiness to march with him to the Ganges, where they attack'd Ram's Habitation with such fury, that Lekeman was put under no small Consternation; but Ram defended his Habitation so courageously, that he kill'd most of the Horse-men with his Bow call'd Dienmoekbaanne, with their Leader. Char had no sooner receiv'd Intelligence of this Defeat, but putting himself at the head of the remaining 9700 Horse, he march'd to the same place, but with no better success, being slain by Ram with all his Forces.

Souppennehia having been an Eye-witness of this Defeat at a distance, made all the haste could to come to her Brother Rawan, who having ask'd her the reason, she told him, that meeting with a very beauteous Woman near the River Ganges, she endeavour'd to persuade her to come along with her, with an intention to present her to him; but being overtaken by her Husband and his Brother, they had so mortify'd her in that manner as they now saw her. Rawan highly exasperated at this usage, bid her to shew him the place where it happen'd, which she did accordingly, and at the same time gave him an account of what had happen'd to her Uncle and the 10000 Horse-men.

Rawan thus fore-warn'd, assum'd the shape of a Stag with two Heads, and so did feed near Ram's Hut, the better to surprise him with the first opportunity; but being esp'y'd by Syba Ram's Wife, she was so much taken with his bright Skin, that she desir'd her Husband to shoot him, and to make her a Vest of his Skin. Ram told her that the same could not be done without danger; but the persisting in her Intreaties, he consented, yet under Condition, that she and his Brother Lekeman should not pass three certain Circles he made with Chalk cross the Hut. Then Rawan pursuing his Journey came to the Mountain Resmokperwat, where he met with the Apes with Bears Heads, call'd Hanuman, Suckerige, Anget and Siamboemt; and Sytha dropping her Ring, the same was taken up by Hanuman.

In the mean time Ram returning home-wards, and meeting with his Brother Lekeman by the way, they both came to the Hut, but to their great surprize found Sytha gone. Ram in a most violent Rage upbraided his Brother with leaving the Hut, but having understood the reason they resolv'd to go in quest of Sytha.

As they were passing through a very long subterraneous Passage, they met with a certain Giant at his Devotion, who being surpriz'd to see them, Ram told him, that the desire of finding out his Spouse had brought him through this dangerous place, asking him, whether he had not heard any thing of her: He answer'd, that he had seen a Giant flying through the Air, holding a Woman upon his Hand. Ram further enquiring what way they were gone, he answer'd, towards the Country of Dekendesa.

Ram verily believing this to be Sytha, blest'd the Giant, and pursuing his Journey to the Mount Resmokperwat, met with the before-mention'd Apes with Bears Heads, where Hanuman prostrating himself at his Feet, ask'd him, What brought him to this remote part of the World? Ram answer'd, To look after his Spouse.

Hanuman reply'd, I saw a Giant pass through the Air with a Woman sitting upon his Hand, who drop'd this Earring. Ram infinitely joyc'd at the sight thereof (knowing it to be his Wife's) ask'd him, what way they had taken?

Hanuman reply'd, To the Country of Lanka in the Isle of Ceylon; and at the same time offering his Service for the recovery of his Spouse, he entreated the Ape Suckerige to assist him in this Enterprize; promising him, that in case they succeeded, Ram should restore to him his Wife and his Estate in the Valley of Kieckenda, taken from him by his Brother Bael: But Suckerige remember'd his Brother's Strength, how he had worsted the Giant Rawan, and held his Head two Months under his Arms (before the Government of the World was committed to him by Vishnum) besides several other Giants told him, that Ram being only of a middle Stature, was not likely to conquer him.

Hanuman however persisting in his Persuasions, and extolling the Power of Ram, Suckerige asked a Token, viz. that he should shoot his Arrow thro some of the Branches of the Trees, whilst they were agitated by the Wind. Lekeman having understood his Request, spoke to his Brother Ram, who bidding them shut their Eyes, he shot at once with his Arrow thro seven Trees, and at the same time order'd Suckerige to challenge his Brother Bael in his Name; which being done accordingly, Bael appear'd, and in a scornful Tone told Ram, that he would cut off his Head at one Stroke; whereat Ram being exasperated to the highest degree, he drew his Bow, sent his Arrow through his Body, and restor'd the Valley of Kieckenda to Suckerige, and with it his Wife.

Ram having now taken a Resolution to stay with his Brother in the Mountain, sent Hanuman, Anget, Suckerige and Sucking, Chieftains of the Apes, into the Valley of Quicxinta (as the Malabars call it) not far from the Valley of Kieckenda, in quest of his Spouse. Hanuman being ready to depart with his Company, gave him his Ring as a token to shew to his Spouse Sytha: Accordingly they set out on their Journey, taking two different Roads, two and two together; but not meeting with Sytha, they met at a certain place near the Sea-side full of Despair at their ill success. However Hanuman bid them have a good Heart, telling them, that Ceylon lying opposite to them cross the Seas, he would according to the Power granted him by Vishnum fly over the Sea into Ceylon, where Rawan kept his Residence.

Hanuman being at last in disguise, arriv'd in the Isle of Ceylon, met with ten Female Giants that were appointed her Guard by Rawan in the Air: These refusing him Passage, he assum'd the shape of a Fly, and thus escaping their Hands, advanced to the Shore of Ceylon; but being there met by a huge Giant who stop'd his Passage, was forc'd to resume his own Body of an Ape, and so to engage the Giant, who seeing him to fight so courageously, commended his Bravery, telling him, that he should succeed in what he desir'd. Hanuman answering, that he came only to look for his Master Ram's Wife: The Giant reply'd, She is kept by the most Potent Rawan in a Garden under a Sysem-Tree.

Hanuman then pursuing his Journey, and being extremely tir'd, did fall into a sound upon the Sea-shore; where having slept 18 hours, and forgotten the Name of the place assign'd him by the Giant, he transform'd himself into a Cat, and running through all the Houses and Corners of Ceylon, but without success, at last happen'd to light upon the top of Rawan's House, from whence espying the Tree where Sytha was kept, he advanced towards it; but whilst he was in doubt whether it were Sytha or not, he saw Rawan coming towards her, and renewing his Courtship, offering all his Territories and Treasures in case she would consent to be his Wife; but Sytha reply'd, that being Ram's alone, she would never encourage his Addresses, threatening to consume him by Fire if he persisted in his Demands.

Rawan was no sooner gone, but Hanuman dropt the Ring given him by Ram into Sytha's Lap, who burst out into Tears, imagining that Ram had been kill'd by some of the Giants; but Hanuman throwing himself at her Feet, told her that Ram was in good health, and had sent him to look after her. Sytha still questioning the truth, Hanuman told her that the Ring was given him as a token to her, yet not with an intention to bring her to him, but only to learn News of her. Then haste away, reply'd she, and desire Ram to deliver me out of the hands of the Tyrant Rawan.

Hanuman went his way, but considering with himself, he would not forsake Lanka without leaving behind him some Remembrances of his having been there, he return'd to Sytha, asking her leave to gather some Fruits, which she deny'd, telling him, that he would be unfortunate in his Enterprize, if he fed upon any other Fruit but what he found upon the ground: Well, said Hanuman, and so laying hold of the next Fruit-Tree, and tearing it up by the root he eat the Fruit, the same he did to most of the other Trees in the Garden, except that where Sytha was plac'd. The Gardiner seeing the next Morning what havoc Hanuman had made, told his Master what happen'd, who being incensed to the highest degree, order'd 10000 Giants to kill this Ape. Hanuman seeing them advancing against him, laid hold of one of the biggest Trees, and made such havoc among these Giants, that scarce one of them escap'd.

Rawan no sooner heard of this Defeat, but he sent 25000 more to revenge the Quarrel of their Conrades; but these having undergone the same fate, he sent his youngest Son at the head of 12000 of the choicest Giants, who put Hanuman so hard to it, that they made him reel several times; but his Strength being continually renew'd by Ram's care, he at first slew Rawan's youngest Son, and at last the whole Army.

Mandory Rawan's Spouse did all that lay in her power to persuade her Husband to deliver up Sytha to Ram, for fear of losing his whole Estate; but Rawan was so far from hearkening to her Counsel, that he issued a Proclamation, that he who thought himself the strongest Man in the Isle of Ceylon should engage with the Ape: But there being no body who durst compare for Strength with Rawan's eldest Son, named Inderfiet, (who formerly had vanquish'd Raja Inder) he order'd him, that whenever he was a going to shoot his Arrow, he should utter certain words taught him by Bramma, which had that effect as to turn the Arrow into a Serpent, and to entangle his Adversary.

Inderfiet thus bold with hopes, advanc'd at the head of his Giants against Hanuman, who laid so bravely about him, that he made the Giants shrink, which Inderfiet perceiving, let fly his Arrow against Hanuman, which being in an instant transform'd into a Serpent, was torn to pieces by Hanuman; which Inderjiet seeing, he flew like Lightning thro the Air to the holy Bramma, upbraided him with Deceitfulness, and threatening him with no less than the loss of his Life, unless he shew'd him the right way of vanquishing his Enemy.

Bramma being put to such a nonplus, hastened to Hanuman, and calling himself at his Feet beg'd of him not to oppose Inderjiet's Arrow, as wanting not means to protect himself against his Attempts by divers other ways. Hanuman taking Compassion of Bramma granted his Request, who then told Inderjiet, that by his Charms he had so order'd the matter as to render his Arrow more effectual than before. Inderjiet encourag'd by his Promise, sent forth his Arrow against Hanuman a second time, which turning into a Serpent stuck so close to his Limbs, that the Giants had sufficient opportunity to exercise their Weapons upon him, tho he receiv'd no more harm by it than if he had been touch'd with a Feather. However they carried him before the ten headed Rawan, who ask'd him by what means he was become invulnerable: Hanuman reply'd, By Ram's Blessing, whose Wife thou hast carried away, which if thou dost not restore forthwith, thy whole Country shall be laid desolate.

This Story seems to have some relation to that of Samson.

Rawan exasperated at this Answer, commanded 10000 Giants to kill him, but finding their Endeavours prove unsuccessful, he ask'd Hanuman by what means he might be bereav'd of his Strength: He reply'd, If you dip my Tail in Oil, wrap it in Cotton, and then set it on fire, all my Strength will vanish in an instant. Rawan believing the matter, put it in Execution, notwithstanding which Hanuman pull'd the Serpent to pieces like a piece of Thred, kill'd most of the Giants, and set fire to the Houses. This done, he took his leave of Sytha, who gave him one of her Bracelets as a token, to shew Ram that he had seen her, charging him at the same time not to look back till he had past the Seas, else he would be in great danger. Hanuman strictly observ'd this Rule till he came to the Sea-shore, when approaching on a sudden to a great Flame, he look'd back, and the Flame reaching his Tail, he was glad to run into the Sea to extinguish the Fire.

Then taking his course through the Air, he pass'd the Seas, and meeting with his Comrades, told them what had happen'd, who thence made the best of their way to the Mountain Rasmohpaw; and having shew'd Sytha's Bracelets to Ram, who immediately order'd Suckery, Lord of the Valley of Kiechenda, to summon all the Apes under his Jurisdiction to arm against Rawan, he accordingly appear'd under their 18 Kings, each whereof appear'd at the head of 20000 Apes, amounting in all to 360000 Apes.

Ram and his Brother Lekeman march'd at the head of this powerful Army to the Sea-side directly opposite to the Isle of Ceylon, where Ram having spent three days in fasting and praying, to open a Passage for his Forces through the Sea, but in vain, he drew his Bow threatening the Sea to reduce it into such narrow Bounds, that where then was nothing to be seen but Water, the Terrestrial Creatures should sport upon the pleasant Sands without danger. The Waves of the Sea thereupon humbling themselves before Ram, told him, that to open him a Passage through the depth could not be done without a total Destruction of a vast number of Fishes, but that there was in his Army a certain Ape call'd Siehem, endow'd with such a Quality by his Master the holy Narfy, that whatever Stone he should only touch, would swim on the surface of the Water like Wood. Accordingly Ram order'd a vast quantity of Stones to be brought from the neighbouring Mountains, which being only touch'd by Siehem, and then thrown into the Sea, did swim upon the Surface thereof, and making a Bridge of 100 Leagues in length, afforded an easy Passage for his whole Army.

The Inhabitants of Lanka or Ceylon being soon alarm'd by the noise of their Drums, and other Warlike Instruments, Rawan's Wife intreated her Husband to take a view of that prodigious Army from the top of his House, whom Ram no sooner spy'd at a distance, but with his Arrow he shot off his ten Crowns from his ten Heads. His Wife laying hold of this opportunity, exhorted him once more to deliver up Sytha to Ram, who, says she, can with the same Arrow which took off your ten Crowns, also take off your ten Heads.

But Rawan persisting in his Resolution not to part with Sytha, Ram told his Brother Lekeman, that to leave nothing unattempted to reduce Rawan to Reason, they would dispatch the Ape Anget to him to demand Sytha, and in case of refusal, to tell him now, that they were were come to destroy all with Fire and Sword.

Rawan being advertis'd of his arrival, call'd together all his Giants, (among whom was his Brother Debrichbern) and having caus'd 10 Statues to be made with 10 Heads like himself, he took his place in the midst of them: Anget coming boldly into the Room, ask'd what Monsters these were, and which of them was Rawan himself? Whereat Rawan being highly exasperated, ask'd who it was that dares affront him thus, threatening to make him repent his boldness. Anget reply'd, Were I not here in the quality of an Ambassador, I would try my Strength with thee, being sent by Ram to let thee know, that he did not come with this Army to destroy thy Subjects, but to recover his Wife Sytha; which if thou refusest to do, he declares himself innocent of all the Effusion of Blood that shall ensue. But Rawan answering, that he was resolv'd not to deliver her; Anget brought this Answer to Ram.

Rawan's Brother comes over to Ram.

At the same time Rawan's Brother, with five of his chief Counsellors, finding him not in a capacity to cope with so powerful an Army, assum'd the shape of Apes, and throwing themselves at the Feet of Ram, crav'd his Mercy and Protection.

The Apes of Ram's Army taking them for Spies, handled them very roughly at first coming into the Camp; and Hanuman or Hanneman especially, would have dissuaded him from having the least concern with them, but were appeas'd by Ram, when he told them that he knew them to be Men of Honour and Probity.

By this time Rawan had arm'd 10000 of his boldest Giants to attack Ram's Camp; but these being soon defeated, he sent 18000 more, who having undergone the same fate, he sent 30000 more; and these also succeeding no better, he sent 50000 more, who were all routed like the rest.

Then Rawan's eldest Son entreating his Father to let him engage alone against the whole Camp of Ram, he could not consent to his Request; but having convinced his Father of the Advantages he had lately got by the Instructions of Bramma, he put him at the head of 10000 of his choicest Giants. With these Troops being advanc'd to Ram's Camp, he encourag'd them to fight bravely, whilst he soaring up into the Air did hide himself behind one of the Wheels of the Chariot of the Sun, till coming directly over

Ram's Camp, he sent forth one of his Magical Arrows, which turning immediately into a Serpent, sent forth such a vast number of other Serpents among the Apes, that their Arms and Legs being quite entangled, they were knock'd down on all sides by the Giants.

Ram not a little surpriz'd at this Disaster, ask'd Rawan's Brother what was best to be done; who told him, that if he would send for his wing'd Garroude, the Serpents would vanish in an instant. Ram following his Advice, Garroude no sooner appear'd but the Serpents vanish'd, and the Apes fought it out bravely with the Giants.

In the mean while Ram having advis'd with his Council how to attack Inderfiet, Rawan's eldest Son in the Air, and Lekeman having offer'd his Service, he got upon Hanuman's Back, who carrying him up into the Air, Inderfiet sent a shower of Arrows against him; but these being repuls'd by Lekeman's Shield, and Inderfiet seeing him advance towards him, threw away his Bow and Arrows, and laying hold likewise of his Sword and Buckler, a most furious Combat ensued, which remain'd dubious for some time, till Lekeman giving him a Blow on his Neck cut off his Head at one stroke, which dropt down before his Father's Feet. Mandory slain.

Being resolv'd to make his utmost Efforts, he crav'd the Assistance of his Brother, a most famous Giant, nam'd Coukeringb (or Kompacarna, as Rogierus * * C. 3.

calls him after the Malabars) this Giant used to spend his whole Life in sleeping, except one day when he appear'd in his full Activity, and to spend his time in filling his Belly with Victuals for the whole succeeding year. It being then in the third Month of his sleep, Rawan call'd to him aloud, Brother Coukeringb, rouze, rouze, and come to my Assistance, or else we are lost! Coukeringb asking him half asleep, what was the matter? Rawan told him, that being attack'd by a vast Body of Apes under the Command of one Ram, who had kill'd two of his Sons, and no less than seven Generals, with 200000 Giants, he had no other means left to relieve himself and his Subjects from Destruction, but to implore his Aid. Haldeu. unfortunate, Rawan, to have entangl'd thy self in an unjust War against an Army headed by the Divine Ram; I have foreseen it in my Sleep, that the same will turn to the Destruction of thy self and thy Country.

Rawan stood amaz'd, but full of Despair, told his Brother, That if it was his fate (written in his Forehead) to die by the hands of Ram, it was in vain to avoid it, desiring once more his Assistance. The Giant reply'd, My Life is at your Service, and so ordering his Chariot drawn by ten pair of Ases to be got ready, put himself at the head of Rawan's Army compos'd of Giants. Ram in the mean while understanding that the great Giant was coming against him, he appointed some thousand of Apes to throw upon him the tops of the Rocks, which they did accordingly, tho in vain, the Giant piercing the Mount that was thrown upon him with his Arrow, notwithstanding it had 100 Leagues in compass.

This made Ram ask Bebickbem, Rawan's Brother, by what means the Giant Coukeeringh might be vanquish'd. Bebickbem reply'd, You must retreat three Paces backwards; that can't be, answer'd Ram, because I am defend'd of the Race of the Ketteris, who dare not retreat under pain of Banishment. But there is no other Remedy, return'd Bebickbem; but the best Advice I can give you is, to descend from your Chariot, and let the same be carried three Paces backwards. This being approv'd by Ram, was done accordingly, so that whilst the Giant was making a most horrid slaughter among the Apes, he shot his Head off, which falling upon the ground shook the Earth as if a whole Mountain had tumbled down, a whole River of blood as black as Pitch gushing out of his Veins.

The Giant Coukeeringh slain.

Notwithstanding this the Trunk of his Body continued to make a great slaughter among the Apes; so that Ram being again oblig'd to have recourse to Rawan's Brother, he told him, that if he sent out a Party of Apes to get a blue Cloth died with Indigo, and therewith cover'd the Body, it would become immovable. In the mean while the Trunk of the Giant continued to make great havoc among the Apes, but to little purpose, they being reviv'd (by the Aspect of Ram) as fast as they were kill'd.

By this time the blue Cloth being brought was thrown upon the Trunk, which in an instant remain'd as unmovable as a Stone in the Field. Rawan seeing himself

thus reduc'd to despair, had recourse to the Goddess Bowanni, unto whom he offer'd a Sacrifice of fresh Butter, Sandalwood, Flowers and Spices, imploring her Aid against Ram with such fervency, that it is believ'd he would have obtain'd his Request, had not the Ape Hanuman defiled the Sacrifice by throwing one of the dead Carcases of the slain Giants upon the Altar, erected in a deep hole for this Sacrifice.

Rawan thus drove to the last extremity, put himself again at the head of his Forces, and like a desperate Person slew all the Apes he met in his way, forcing all the Hills before him the Apes threw in his way, till Ram drawing his Bow shot off nine of his Heads; and then calling to him aloud, Rawan said he, desist from Bloodshed, return me my Sytha, and I will heal thy Wounds, and restore thee thy Heads and Kingdom, without which thou wilt certainly lose all. But Rawan replying, that if Fate had so ordain'd it, he would rather lose his 10 Heads also than Sytha. Ram shot likewise his tenth Head off: But perceiving that the Headless Body laid still about him with its 24 Arms, he threw some Water upon it, and muttering out certain words, made it as immovable as a Stone.

Mandory was no sooner inform'd of her Husband's Death, but she threw her self at Ram's Feet, bewailing his Obstinacy, notwithstanding the many forebodes of his Fall, an unfortunate Raven and a doleful Owl having settl'd upon his House, with very dreadful Lamentations and Outcries, the fore-runners of his Misfortune. As I have, added she, been innocent of what has happen'd, so I hope you won't deny me my Protection: Ram bid her be satisfied, ordering her at the same time to pass seven times through the smoke of the Fire kept at Tchie, to purify her self, and renew her Virginity, which done he would marry her to her Husband's Brother Bebickbem, who accordingly was put into Rawan's place. Then Ram being carried in his Rose Litter to the Tree Sysem, where Sytha was kept a Prisoner, she embrac'd him, returning him a million of Thanks for her Deliverance. The next thing Ram did, was to give his Apes slain in the late Engagement; and so march'd back over the same Bridge that had carried him into Ceylon. Being come to the opposite Shore, he order'd the Stones to be carried to the place whence they had been taken, and marching to the Valley of Kickenda, he would there have taken his leave of Suckery; but he refusing refusing to part with him thus, would needs accompany him with all his Forces as far as the Village of Baratpoeri, where Ram was receiv'd by his Father, Mother and Brother, with great Demonstrations of Joy, the sweet-scented Rose-Water, Saffron, Betel, and other Perfumes, being lavishly bestow'd upon him and all those that had attended him home.

Ram having bestow'd his Blessing upon Suckery he return'd home, but Hanuman staid with him. He reign'd in Peace 11 years after his return, and begat two Sons, Lan and Chus. Then taking his opportunity when he had sent Hanuman out of the way, he ascended into Heaven with the Inhabitants of the Earth, except his two Sons.

The Malabars say, that Ram being jealous of Sytha, would have murder'd her, had she not cleared her self by the Fire and a solemn Oath. Another time being again seiz'd with a Jealousy, because she had Raman's Picture drawn upon a piece of Board, she purg'd her self by putting her Hand into a Vessel fill'd with Serpents.

They further add, That her Husband being become extreme jealous, caus'd her to be thrown before the Elephants, and afterwards before the Tygers, but she escaped without the least harm. They say, that when Hanuman saw Ram ascend into Heaven, he cry'd aloud to him, O Divine Ram! what have I done, that you will leave me behind! Ram answer'd, Hanuman, be not dissatisfied, thou shalt never die, and many Pagodes shall be erected to thy Memory. Farewel.

Thus ended the second Period of Time, which, according to the Computation of the Benjans, contains a Million and 296000, whereof Ram reign'd 2000. This second Period is call'd Trisagom by the Malabars, and Tretanike by the Benjans.

The eighth Altar. The Parents, Birth and Education of Kifna. His miraculous Deliverance. Ragia Kans endeavours to murder him. Kifna turns a Shepherd, and flies with his Company to Goggel.

*The eighth Year for
mable.*

AS the eighth Transformation of Vishnum is accounted of the greatest moment above the rest; for, say the Pagans, in all the others Vishnum appear'd in the World with some part of his Divinity, but in this he carried along with him the whole Substance of it, so that he left his place vacant in Heaven: This Transformation happen'd with the beginning of the third Period of Time; and, according to the relation of the Benjans, was thus.

One Ragia Kans living in the City of Mottera, 25 Cos from Agra, upon the River Siemmena, had a young Sister named Deuki. About 3 Cos higher up the same River liv'd a certain Brabman named Wassendew in the City of Goggel. The said Deuki being arriv'd to a marriageable Age, her Brother Ragia Kans look'd out for a Husband for her; but meeting with none for his purpose in that City, he sent to the City of Goggel, where his Messenger hearing of the Worth and Piety of Wassendew, the same was at his Recommendation married to him when he was only 19, and she no more than 12 years of Age.

The said Ragia having understood that there was among his Subjects a certain Brabman, named Narret all skill'd in Chiromancy (a thing in high esteem among the Pagans *) he sent for him, desiring him to look into his Sister's Hands, and to foretel, without dissembling the matter, what good or bad Fortune was like to befall her. The Brabman having view'd her Hand, told the King, that according to the Lines of her Hand she was to bring forth six Sons, and one Daughter, the youngest of whom will not only take away thy Kingdom, but also thy Life.

The King being not a little surpriz'd at this Prophecy, order'd the said Deuki and her Husband to be imprison'd in a strong Castle, and that all the Children begotten upon her Body should be kill'd immediately. Accordingly the Midwife brought the new-born Babes to her Brother, who beat out the Brains of six of them (viz. five Sons and one Daughter) against a Stone. Afterwards understanding that she was with Child with the seventh, he enclosed her in a Room with Iron Doors, and appointed her a Guard of 100 Soldiers, with strict Orders that the Child as soon as it was born should be brought to him. Baldass. occasion I can't but observe, that this as well as the ensuing part of the Story of Kisna seems to have a near relation to the History of the Birth of our Saviour, his flight into Egypt, the Murder of the innocent Children by Herod, Christ's Miracles and Ascension, &c.

* The 8th day of the decreasing Moon.

The time of her Reckoning being expir'd on the day * Aethen, of the Month

Souwanne, this unfortunate Lady being overwhelm'd with Grief, she brought forth a Son about Midnight without the least Pain, whose Face was as bright as the Full Moon; but as she had occasion to rejoice at the Birth of so fine a Child, his Fate put her into incredible Affliction: But Vishnum (whose Divine Virtue was infused into this Child) comforted his Mother,

Mother, telling her, that he would find means to escape the hands of his Uncle, and deliver her out of her Prison. Then speaking to his Father, Pray, says he, carry me to Goggel on the other side of the River Siemmena to the Brahman Nen, whose Wife being lately brought to Bed of a Daughter, exchange me for her, and leave the rest to my disposal.

Wassendeuw answer'd, how is it possible to remove thee out of a Chamber so closely guarded and kept, that not the least thing could pass in or out? Kisna (this was the Child's Name) reply'd, the Doors shall be open'd to thee, and the Guards so overcome with Sleep, that nothing shall stop thy free Passage; he had no sooner spoken these words but the seven Doors open'd themselves, so that Wassendeuw took the Child and carried him off without the least hinderance. But coming to the River Siemmena directly opposite to Goggel, Kisna's Father perceiving the Current to be very strong (it being in the midst of the rainy Season) and not knowing which way to pass it, Kisna commanded the Water to give way on both sides to his Father, who accordingly pass'd dry-footed cross the River, being all the way guarded by a Serpent that held her Head over the Child to serve it instead of an Umbrella. The Benjans call this Serpent Sickenasy. Coming to the Brahman's House, the Door open'd it self, and finding the Brahman and his Wife asleep, he exchange'd his Son for their Daughter, which he carried along with him to the Castle. In short, the Water afforded him once more a free Passage, and finding the Doors of the Castle open, and the Guards asleep, he lock'd them after him, and deliver'd the Girl to his Wife.

The Guards hearing the Child cry soon after, enter'd the Chamber, snatch'd it from the unfortunate Parents, and brought it to Ragia Kans, who finding it a Girl, upbraided the Brahman with want of Skill, yet for fear of the worst, was going to strike the Head against a Stone; but the Child slipping out of his hands flew up into the Air, and told him, It was in vain to attempt to murder her, since he that was to take away his Head and his Kingdom, to revenge the Death of his five Brothers and a Sister, was safe at Goggel. This said, it flew up high into the Air, where it was turn'd into Lightning by Vistnum, a thing never seen before in the World.

Ragia Kans not a little surpriz'd at this Accident, consulted all his Friends what he had best to do in this Emergency; but none being able to advise him to any purpose, whilst he was very melancholy and ruminating upon the oddness of the thing, he understood that the pious Brahman Nen who liv'd at Goggel, had a most beautiful Son, which put it into his head, whether it might not perhaps be he who was to take Revenge of him for his Tyrannies. At last, to make sure work, he resolv'd to have the Child kill'd; but not thinking it safe to undertake so heinous a thing bare-fac'd (for fear of the common People) he made his Applications to his eldest Sister Postena, enjoying her as the tender'd his Life, to go with some Presents to this Brahman's House, and to endeavour to kill this Child, by anointing her Teats with Poison.

Accordingly coming with considerable Presents to the Child's Mother at Goggel, she with'd her much Joy, and taking the Child in her Lap, she gave ample Recommendations of its Beauty, and then kissing and playing with the Child, laid it to her Breast: But this Child being proof against all Poison, did suck away not only all her Milk, but likewise the Blood out of her Veins, till she dropt down dead upon the spot.

Ragia sorely afflicted with this News, releas'd his Sister Deuki and her Husband, asking his Sister's Pardon for his having pretended to thwart the immutable Decrees of Destiny, and desiring that all past things might be buried in Oblivion. However, as the Child at Goggel lay constantly in his Head, he advis'd with his Vixier, or Chief Minister, upon the matter: He told him, that there liv'd a certain Giant named Sekasor at Mottora, who had the Gift of transforming himself into a Cart and Oxen, by which means he might carry the Child into the Air and murder it. The King pursuant to his Advice, sent for the said Sekasor, who at his request crossing the River Siemmena, when he came near the City of Goggel, transform'd himself into a little neat Cart, drawn by two white Oxen with gilt Horns; and passing thus through the Streets of the City, at last stop'd near the Brahman Nen his Door. One of the neighbouring Women having just at that time Kisna in her Arms at the Door, set the Child upon the said Cart, which was no sooner done, but Sekasor flew with the Child up into the Air. The Mother amaz'd at this Spectacle, cry'd out aloud, O Vistnum protect my Child! Her Prayers were heard; for Kisna, when he saw himself high in the Air, assum'd the shape and strength of a Giant, and

Baldau. gave such a Blow near the Giant's Heart, that he beat the Breath out of his Body; then reassuming his former shape of a Child, got upon his dead Carcase, and so fell down with it upon the ground. His Parents being Eye-witnesses of the Deliverance of their supposed Son, were so surpriz'd thereat, that looking upon him as something extraordinary sent them from Heaven, they sacrificed to the Gods, and gave abundance of Alms to the Poor.

Ragia Kans finding himself disappointed in his hopes, had recourse once more to his most trusty Counsellors: one of them told him, that there was a certain Deyt, or Giant, named Turnavent, who being endow'd with the Virtue of transforming himself into a Whirlwind, the King engag'd him on his side, in order to carry the Child into the Air. Kisna, who heard the Whirlwind rolling cross the River Siemmena towards the City of Goggel, being then in his Mother's Lap at the Door, roll'd down upon the ground; whence the Whirlwind snatching him up into the Air, his Parents stood amaz'd at so strange a Spectacle, imploring Vishnum for his Assistance.

Kisna being carried to a vast height by the Wind, assum'd the shape of a Man, and taking the Giant Turnavent by the Throat, turn'd his Neck round; and then reassuming his former shape, got upon the dead Carcase of the Giant, and fell down along with it upon the ground just before his Parents Door, to the great Amazement of the Inhabitants of Goggel, who could not but look upon this Accident as miraculous, or that had something of Divine in it.

Kisna in the mean while remaining upon the Giant's Back, cry'd most vehemently; his Mother laid him to her Breast, but he not ceasing to cry, she laid him in a hanging Cradle; notwithstanding which he continued crying, till his Mother having recounted to him the Story of Ram (as related before) he leap'd out of the Cradle, and taking the shape of Ram with his Bow and Arrow, he cry'd out, Lekeman, let us go after Rawan and deliver Sytha. His Mother being ready to prostrate her self at his Feet, he soon reasum'd his former shape, and encreased miraculously both in Strength and Wildom.

It happen'd one time that his Mother did bring upon the Table a Golden Dish with Rice Milk, and some Herbs dress'd after the way of the Benjans, which Kisna seeing, he told her he could not eat it unless these things were all mix'd together, which she did accordingly: but Kisna tasting it, desir'd her to separate them again; his Mother answering him that it was not in human Power so to do, he laid his Hand over the Dish and separated them immediately, to the astonishment of his Parents.

His Father being a Brabman of the Cowherds, maintain'd his Family by breeding of Cattel, which, since the bringing of Kisna into the House, was encreased to 900000.

His Mother being one time busy in churning, he ask'd her for a little Butter: she gave him a little, but not thinking that enough, he ask'd for more, which she refusing, he took the opportunity whilst she was gone out of the way to take away some. His Mother returning ask'd Kisna what was become of the Butter? He answer'd, that the Cats and Rats had eat it. But the Mother not thus satisfied, look'd into Kisna's Mouth, where she had a view of the whole World with its Waters, Forests, Mountains, &c. enclos'd in a blue Circle. The Mother astonish'd at so strange a Spectacle, yet soon recover'd her self, when she saw Kisna return to his Childish Shape and Game again; so taking up a Twig, threaten'd to strike him, but he running out of the Town the pursu'd him, but not being able to overtake him, he stood still at last, when she gave him three or four Blows, urging him still to tell her what was become of the Butter; he persisted in his former story, that the Cats and Rats had eaten it. She took all the Ropes belonging to the 199000 Cows, endeavouring to tie them together in Knots; but notwithstanding all her Endeavours, the Knots would not tie, till Kisna finding her much out of humour at this Disappointment, he permitted the Ropes to be knotted, and himself to be ty'd with the Ropes; but his Mother finding him cry bitterly, she releas'd him soon after.

Another time his Mother being gone to milk the Cows, order'd him to hold a Stick in his hand to make the Cows stand still whilst she was a milking; but finding she had left her Brass Vessel, wherein she used to gather her Milk behind, and not daring to send Kisna, he told her he would soon find a way to fetch the Vessel without stirring from the place, and so extending one of his Arms so far as to reach the Vessel, he gave it to his Mother, and so reasum'd the shape of a Child.

In the mean while Ragia Kans being inform'd inform'd that the Inhabitants of Goggel increas'd considerably in Riches (for Kisna's sake) he order'd his Governor to load them with heavy Taxes; which being done accordingly with the utmost Severity, they advis'd with Kisna whether they had not best remove with their Cattel to the fertile Valleys of the Mountain of Perwet. Kisna approving their Proposition, perswaded his Parents to do the same, so that they transported all their Moveables and Cattel to the most fertile Vallies about the Mount Perwet, or

Ooden Perwet, near the River Siemmena; here they fix'd their Habitations in a certain Village call'd Brindawink, seated in the midst of most pleasant Pasturages, planted with Trees, and so abounding in Grass, that those vast Herds of Cattel were not able to consume it. Kisna was so well pleas'd with the place, that he clad himself after their fashion, with a Garland of Peacocks Feathers upon his Woolen Cap, and a Flute to play away the rest of the Cowherds.

CHAP. VI.

Further Designs of Ragia Kans against Kisna by the means of certain Giants, Raja Inder and Bramha. Kisna produces a Pearl-Tree, and is made a King of the Cowherds.

Ragia Kans highly exasperated at this removal of his Subjects, summon'd a certain Giant nam'd Bacassar, who having the virtue of transforming himself into a Hern, he sent him to carry away Kisna, which he did accordingly; and having carry'd him up into the Air, endeavour'd to swallow him, but Kisna transforming himself into a fiery Flame burnt the Hern to Ashes, and he return'd to his Parents without receiving the least harm. The News thereof having soon reach'd the Ears of Ragia Kans, he sent another Giant nam'd Wickeraak, who transforming himself into the shape of a Boy, came to Kisna as he was looking after the Cattel in the field, and engag'd in a wrestling Match among the other Boys, not questioning by this means but to draw Kisna into the Game, and so make an end of him: But Kisna (who was not ignorant of his Design) challeng'd him, and as they were wrestling gave him such a kick upon his Breast, that he tumbld down dead upon the spot.

Ragia Kans finding himself once more disappointed in his Aim, sent the dreadful Giant Agasor, whose Entrails were all Fire. This Giant having laid himself close to the Cowherds Huts, open'd his dreadful Jaws, so that the uppermost reach'd up to the Skies, his Teeth representing like Coco-trees, and his Throat like the Entrance of the Huts. Kisna knowing the Deceit, drove his Cattel to his own Stables, but the rest went straitways with their Cattel into the Giant's Throat; which the Giant no sooner perceiv'd, but he shut his Teeth, so that the poor Wretches finding themselves in the midst of Fire and Flames, apply'd themselves to Kisna, who was got among them on purpose to make himself an Instrument of their Deliverance: he bid them not to despair, and then extending himself with all his might, made the Giant to burst in pieces, and thus open'd a Passage for the rest to escape the Flames.

This miraculous Deliverance being soon spread all over the neighbouring Country, Ragia Kans entreated the Giant Dawanneel (who had the power of transforming himself into a Flame) to destroy Kisna: Accordingly he came to the place where Kisna and his Companions were feeding the Cattel, and setting all (not excepting even the Trees and Grass) into a light Flame, the Cowherds fled to Kisna (who was at some distance) for help, which he promis'd them in an instant, and so advancing towards the Giant, took and held him round the middle, till he forc'd him to swallow all the Fire again.

Ragia Kans almost reduc'd to despair, had recourse to the Giant Kasep, who having assum'd the shape of an Afs of a prodigious bigness, advanc'd towards the Cowherds with a dreadful Countenance; who being terrified at so dreadful an Aspect, left Kisna alone, who was so far from being surpriz'd at this monstrous sight, that he laid by his Pipe, and advancing towards the Afs, who came open-mouth'd upon him, endeavour'd to take him by one of his hindermost heels, but the Afs gave him so terrible a kick with

Baldæus. his Foot, that he threw him 8 or 10 yards high into the Air. Kisna finding himself thus roughly handled, thought fit to assume the shape of a Giant, and so taking the Afs by the hinder Leg, did swing him three or four times about his Head, and then throwing him against the ground squeeze'd the Breath out of his Body.

The God Bramha being not ignorant of what had pass'd, and curious to know whether Kisna was not endow'd with some Divine Virtue, took his opportunity, and carried off all the Cattel belonging to Kisna and the other Cowherds; who running to Kisna and imploring his Assistance, he bid them shut their Eyes, which they had no sooner done, but he produc'd the same number of Cattel they had lost. Bramha came about a year after and brought back all the Cattel, asking his Pardon for what was past. Kisna told Bramha that he had better keep within his own bounds; and causing the Cattel he had produc'd to vanish immediately, he kept them brought back by Bramha.

Another time, all the Cattel just after they had been drinking about Noon out of the River Siemmena, fell dead on a sudden upon the ground: Kisna surpriz'd at this Accident, and knowing that Garroude having lately dislodg'd the monstrous Serpent Kallinaegh from her Dam call'd Rammene Drepek, he shrewdly suspected that she had taken to this River, and infected the same with her Venom: Then getting upon a Palm-tree, he assum'd his white and black Skin, and two more Arms and Hands; and sending for Garroude, order'd him to go to Bramha, and to demand of him the things taken out of the Sea in the times of Couram, and left in his Custody till his return. Garroude hastening to Bramha, brought back to Kisna the Cbianko, or Horn, the beautiful Woman Lekfemy, and the Jewel Consenkmany. This done, he took the Horn in one hand, a piece of Iron in the second, another Weapon in the third, and a Flower in the fourth hand. Thus equipp'd, he leapt into the River in the presence of his Companions, and diving to the bottom, met with the Wife of some of the Attendants belonging to the Serpent Kallinaegh, who ask'd him what had brought him thither, fore-warning him to retreat in time, before he should be seen by the Serpent, which questionless would devour him in an instant. Kisna reply'd, that being come on purpose to find out the Serpent, he desir'd

he might be shew'd him; which they refusing to do, he turn'd his Eyes on all sides, and at last espying the Serpent he awaken'd him out of his sleep, bidding him to leave this River unless he would pay for it with Death. The Serpent Kallinaegh swelling with Rage flew upon Kisna, and beat him backwards; but he recovering himself, squeeze'd the Serpent's Head to that degree, that not knowing what to do he twist'd himself about his Body: but Kisna encreas'd the bulk of Body in such a manner, that the Serpent ready to burst, was forc'd to let go his hold, being ready to drop down dead for want of Strength. Kisna then got on the top of his Neck, and putting an Awl through his Nostrils, rid upon him as if he had been on horse-back. The Wife and Attendants of the Serpent finding him quite out of breath, intreated Kisna to spare his Life, promising to quit the River immediately. But Kallinaegh not willing to consent to what they had offer'd, still endeavour'd to get rid of Kisna; but finding all his Endeavours in vain, and that Kisna's Body increas'd every minute in weight, he was glad to approve of what had been offer'd by his Wife. Kisna having pardon'd his Offence, told him, that he would double his Strength (because he had been engag'd against a God) and that Garroude should not any more disturb him in his Den, provided he would leave this River, and for the future never hurt either Men or Beasts.

The Serpent with his Wife and Attendants having paid their Reverence three times to Kisna, left the River Siemmena; and Kisna arising on a sudden above the surface of the Water, reassum'd his own shape, and coming ashore blew his Horn, by the sound whereof all the Cattel were in an instant restor'd to Life.

All these Miracles wrought by Kisna had such an influence upon the Cowherds, that they consult'd all possible means to pay him due Reverence. One among the rest told him, You know that Raja Inder, the King of Heavens and the blessed Souls, keeps an annual Feast in the Mountain of Ooden Perwet with the Believers; and since we have no less Obligations to Kisna, let us make also a Feast to his Honour, and invite him to the said Mountain. This being approv'd of by a general Consent, they prepar'd a most splendid Feast, which they celebrated with such demonstrations of Joy, that the Noise thereof coming to Inder's Ears, and and looking upon it with a jealous Eye, call'd together the Rains (disposed in twelve peculiar places) ordering them to pour down their Waters upon the Fields and Cottages of these Cowherds: They were ready to obey, and pour'd forth such prodigious showers of Rain, that the Fields being all laid under Water, Men and Beasts were upon the point of being drown'd. The Cowherds highly surpriz'd at the oddness of the thing (it being in the dry Mousson) had once more recourse to Kisna, who order'd them to get up to the top of the Mount Ooden Perwet till the Rains ceased; and they had no sooner obey'd his Orders, but he took the whole Mountain, with Cattel, Men and all upon his little Finger, and lifted them up seven times higher than the Waters could rise.

The Rains finding their Endeavours frustrated, return'd to Inder, and told him, that they had pour'd down their Waters seven days and nights without intermission, but in vain, there being a certain Person in those parts who could lift the whole Mountain with his little Finger into the Air. Raja Inder then perceiving his Error, came to Kisna to make his Excuse, and dismounting from his Elephant, beg'd forgiveness for having attempted any thing against him, pleading his ignorance, and as a token of his Repentance, presented him with the Cam-doga, or Cow of Plenty, which Kisna was pleas'd to accept of, and pardon'd his fault.

Not long after Kisna coming home one day, found his Mother busy in putting some Pearls on a String; he ask'd her from what Tree she had gather'd them; but she answering, that she never knew Pearls to grow on Trees, but only in Oyster-shells, Kisna took one of the biggest, which he had no sooner put into the ground, but they saw a Pearl-Tree sprout forth full of the most exquisite Pearls. The Mother standing amaz'd, and ready to worship him, he caus'd the Tree to vanish immediately.

Makes sport with the Women.

Soon after some of the Cowherds and their Wives as they were walking in the Forest, agreed to wash themselves in the River; Kisna espying them at a distance, secretly got all their Clothes, and getting upon an adjacent Palm-tree, had his sport to see them coming naked out of the Water without being able to find their Clothes: They were not a little surpriz'd at first, but looking up and seeing Kisna in the Palm-tree, they desir'd him to restore their Clothes, which he told them (to try the Modesty of the Women) he would, provided they would come underneath the Tree; but they excusing the matter, he threw the Women their Clothes.

Baldau.

At a certain time Kisna taking a walk with the other Cowherds, they chose him their King, and every one had his place assign'd him under the new King. There liv'd among them a certain charitable Brahman, whose Wife (without the knowledge of her Husband) paid her daily Devotions to Kisna, who sent two of his Messengers to let her know, that being dispos'd to make merry at her House with some of his Companions, he should provide something for their Entertainment. The Messengers meeting with the Brahman told him the Message, who told them, that he knew nothing of Kisna, neither would he make any Entertainment for him. With this Answer they return'd to Kisna, who chiding them for their mistake, bid them speak to the Woman; which being done accordingly, she no sooner heard the Name of Kisna, but making a low Reverence, to work she went, and having dress'd five or six good Dishes with a handsom Desert, she carried them her self to Kisna, begging him to accept of what she was unworthy to offer, which he did, and gave her his Blessing; that as long as she liv'd she should want for nothing, and that after her Decease her Soul should not transigrate * into another Body; but that being purified by him, she should go directly to Heaven.

* These Pagans look upon it as a singular Blessing when their Souls are not to enter into other Bodies.

Kisna with his Companions having feasted plentifully upon what the Brahman's Wife had brought them, as they were returning home met with some Milkmaids, unto whom Kisna told, that they must not pass by without paying Toll to him, who was King of the Place. The Maids not thinking he had been in earnest went on their ways; but Kisna with his Stick breaking their Milk Vessels, one of them was so exasperated thereat, that she made Complaint thereof to his Mother, who calling him to an account for this Outrage, he deny'd the matter; but his Mother believing the contrary told him, that he had broken the Peace, and that if it should come to Ragia's Ear, he might be punish'd for it: He reply'd, I did not know I had done them any wrong; but as for Ragia Kan's Anger I don't fear it, tho he knew it to morrow.

It happen'd not long after, that in a certain Moonshiny Night in the Month Alfour (in which begins the New Year)

Uuuu

Baldew. Kifna with some of his Companions were diverting themselves with their Pipes in an adjacent Wood; and Kifna especially play'd so charmingly upon his Flute, that the Women in the Village being awaken'd by the sound of this Harmony, came running into the Wood to partake of their Divertisements. Kifna ask'd them whether they were not afraid to come into the Wood at that time of night? They answer'd, That their Ears and Hearts had been so touch'd with his melodious Harmony, that they were not able to stay at home: So Kifna gave them a Tune or two, which so surpriz'd them, that most of them stood amaz'd, gazing all the while at his Beauty, whilst others pass their time in dancing. This they continued till midnight, when having bestow'd his Blessing upon the Women he sent them home, he and his Companions passing their time in the same Jollities all night till break of day.

C H A P. VII.

A further account of the Designs of Ragia Kans, who is kill'd at last by Kifna. New Decrees against Kifna, which prove ineffectual. His other Miracles.

Ragia Kans being more and more alarm'd at these Miracles, sent for his chief Minister named Panjewello, and his two chief Generals nam'd Siannoor and Mofik, to consult with them how to rid his hands of Kifna: Panjewello told him, that all clandestine means having prov'd to no purpose hitherto, he knew no other way than to engage the strongest of all the Giants (named Keby) against him.

Ragia approving his Advice, sent accordingly the said Giant, who meeting with Kifna, ask'd him where he was going? Where I please, reply'd Kifna: Ho ho, answer'd the Giant Keby, I will take care of that, and so was going to lay his great Paws upon him; but Kifna taking him by the Throat, did not let go his hold till he had squeez'd the Breath out of his Body; which done, Kifna put his Hand into his Throat, and pulling his Heart out, first laid it upon his Mouth, and afterwards threw it to the Ravens.

Ragia Kans being now put to the last shift, a certain Brahman named Naret, advis'd the King to invite Kifna with his Followers to a Feast, and so to have him kill'd at Table. Ragia approving his Counsel, sent Messengers to invite them accordingly, but they were so far from granting their request, that they desir'd Kifna's Parents not to let him go, who with Tears in their Eyes beg'd him to stay at home; but Kifna refusing to hearken to their Advice, order'd his Chariot to be got ready, and taking his Father, his eldest Brother and Mother along with him, went forward to Goggel upon the River Siemmensa opposite to Mottera.

Here it was that Akeror one of the King's Messengers, bathing himself in the River, and diving three times successively (after the manner of the Benjamins) saw Kifna under Water seated upon his Throne; which Apparition being seen by him again in the same state above Water, he could not forbear to break out into these words: O holy Kifna! thou beest truly God in human Shape, because thou appearest both under and above Water; a sign thou beest present in all places, a Quality belonging only to the Gods! Pardon me for having invited thee to this Feast. Kifna told him he was sensible it was not his fault, and din'd with him the same day in a Garden Akeror had just near the Bank of the River.

After Dinner they pass'd the River, but had not gone far before they met the King's Washerwoman with a pack of Clothes on his Back; some of the Company of Kifna having a mind to divert themselves, push'd one another against the Washerwoman, who giving them foul Language, Kifna bid his Companions to thresh him handsomely, which they did.

Ragia Kans exasperated to the highest degree at this usage of his Servant, resolv'd to declare open Enmity against Kifna. Not long after Kifna meeting upon the Road a Barber, he presented him (according to the Custom of that Country) a Looking-glass to look in, and pair'd his Nails; the Barbers in the Eastern Countries always pairing the Nails on the Hands and Toes after they have shav'd the Beard. Kifna gave him his Blessing, telling him, that his Soul should directly go to God without being transplanted into another Body.

As they were entering the City they were met by a Gardiner's Wife, who used to serve Ragia Kans with Flowers: This Woman prostrating her self at Kisna's Feet, said, O Divine Man! having never seen anything so beautiful as thy self, I offer to thee these Flowers design'd for Ragia Kans, thinking my self much more oblig'd to your Divinity than his Majesty, entreating thee not to despise my Cottage, but to take up thy Lodging there for this night. Then presenting Kisna with a Garland of Flowers, he took up his Lodgings in the House, being welcom'd by the Husband in the most devout manner in the World, who declar'd himself unworthy of receiving so great a Guest, and serv'd Kisna and his Company at Table, who at parting bestow'd his Blessing upon him, viz. That they should never want, and their Souls go directly to Heaven.

Being advanc'd a little further, they met a poor Cripple or lame Woman, having a Vessel fill'd with Spices, sweet-scented Oils, Sandel-wood, Saffron, Civet and other Perfumes. Kisna making a halt, she made a certain sign with her Finger on his Forehead, casting the rest upon his Head. Kisna asking her what it was she would ask him? The Woman reply'd, Nothing but the use of my Limbs. Kisna then setting his Foot upon hers, and taking her by the hand, raised her from the ground, and not only restor'd her Limbs, but also renew'd her Age, so that instead of a wrinkly tawny Skin, she got a fresh and fair one in an instant. At her request Kisna and his Company lodg'd the following night in her House.

Kills 10 Courtiers.

The next following day Kisna and his Company walking through the Streets of Mottera, they were shew'd the strong Bow, which none of the Giants had been able to manage; but Kisna broke the String of it at the first pull. Thence they walk'd towards the Court, where the Courtiers were expecting the coming of the King: these seeing a whole Troop of Country Fellows, would not allow them Entrance into the Court; but pushing Kisna back roughly, he struck 10 of 'em (among whom were two Colonels) down to the ground, so that they expir'd at his Feet, and their Souls were convey'd immediately to Heaven, a Favour he bestow'd upon the Souls of all such as were slain by his hands.

Ragia Kans being inform'd of all these Transactions, and almost reduc'd to despair, order'd a Turret to be erected upon the Back of an Elephant, furnish'd with two warlike Engines, to be manag'd by as many Men. He order'd the Guide of the Elephant, that as soon as he saw Kisna coming to the Castle, he should send out the Elephant to trample him under feet, or else endeavour to kill him by the means of the Engines.

Baldew.

The following day Kisna going towards the Court, the Guides set loose the Elephant upon him; but Kisna not only stop't him in his full Career, but also putting his Foot against his Trunk, pull'd out both of his Teeth; afterwards seizing him by the Tail, swung him three or four times round his Head, and then dash'd his Head against the Stones. Ragia now finding himself reduc'd to the last extremity, and enrag'd with Anger, address'd himself to his two renown'd Generals Kansjandoor and Moslick, telling them that since they had eaten his Bread so many years, it was now time to shew their Fidelity and Bravery, and to deliver him from his mortal Enemy.

Kills an Elephant.

Accordingly they having sent a Challenge to Kisna, he appear'd at the appointed time and place, where a most fierce Combat ensu'd, which remain'd dubious for three hours, till at last Kisna threw them (one after another) with such a prodigious force to the ground, that the Blood, and with it their Souls gush'd out of their Mouths.

Kills two Generals.

During the Combat Ragia Kans happening to look over the Wall of the Castle, no sooner saw Kisna, but he thought he heard a Voice telling him, that he was the Person who should at once take away his Life and his Crown. He was scarce return'd into his Apartment, when News being brought him of the death of his two Generals, he commanded every one to betake themselves to their Arms, to fight against Kisna, offering a great Reward to any that could deliver him up into his hands either dead or alive. Accordingly the whole City rose up in Arms, and engag'd Kisna without the Castle Gates, but were not able to conquer this invincible Hero.

Runs a whole Body of Men.

For Ragia Kans having in the mean while order'd Kisna's Parents to be whipt with Siamboken, or bra's Scourges, in his presence; Kisna (according to his Omniscency) being not ignorant of the matter, leap'd over the Wall into the Palace, where finding Ragia Kans sitting upon his Throne, he got hold of his Head, and press'd it to the ground till he broke his Neck, and to consummate the matter, gave him three or four terrible Blows which beat out his Brains.

Baldau.

The next thing he did, was to send his eldest Brother to deliver their Parents from their Captivity, who finding the Guards fled, brought them to Kisna, where they receiv'd one another with mutual Embraces; Kisna declaring his Sorrow for their Sufferings upon his account, and these declaring themselves amply rewarded with the sight of his Person. Kisna having put Ongefeen Ragia Kan's Father in his stead, return'd with his Parents, Brothers and Companions to their usual Habitations, where he put himself under the Tuition of a certain learned Brahman, having chosen a certain poor Scholar named Sedammia for his Attendant at School to carry his Books and Writings.

Kisna under the Tuition of a Brahman.

There liv'd at that time at Mottera a certain Merchant, a Relation of Kisna's Mother, whose Daughter call'd Contabe married to Ragia Dandou, King of Efenapour, had brought forth five Sons; the First-born whereof his Father had obtain'd by his Prayers to Inder the King of the Celestial Spirits, the second from Bramma, the third from the Wind, and the two last from the famous Hero Effenocomaer.

The five Brothers did at a certain time undertake a Journey with their Mother to Mottera, to visit their Grandfather, where they contracted something of Acquaintance with Kisna, and frequently revered him. About the same time the Women of Goggel, and of the Village inhabited by the Cowherds, were very earnest in their Solicitations for Kisna's return, without which they said they neither could nor would eat or drink.

Jerasanda resolves to revenge Ragia Kams Death.

In the mean while the five Brothers having receiv'd the unwelcome News of their Father's Illness, were forc'd to return to Efenapour; and the fatal Exit of Ragia Kans and so many of his Giants being come to the Ears of Jerasjanda his Brother-in-law, he resolv'd to revenge the fame to the utmost of his Power. Accordingly having gather'd a Body of 95000 chosen Horle, he laid Siege to Mottera; but Kisna having by his frequent Sallies quite ruin'd his Army, took him Prisoner at last, but knowing that he had by his constant Prayers obtain'd from Bramma that he should live 100 years and at last be kill'd by one Rhijm, he releas'd his Prisoner, who having soon gather'd another Army, besieg'd Mottera a second time, and was worsted again as before by Kisna. The same he continued to do sixteen times, till all his People being slain in the Wars, he pass'd thro' all the Corners of the World to raise new Forces; and meeting with the famous Giant Sialinder, he put him at the head of his Forces, and so forc'd the Siege of Mottera a 17th time.

Le sixteen times worsted by Kisna.

The situation of Kisna's House was such as to be plainly discover'd in the Camp, as from thence he had a full Prospect of their Army. Kisna having posted his Brother at the Entrance of his House, he happen'd to be seen by the Enemy's General, who mistaking him for Kisna, advanced towards the House: Kisna who saw him coming at a distance, considering with himself, that in case he should fall by his hands, his Soul must go straitways to Heaven (a favour he thought him unworthy of) run out of the back-door, making the best of his way to a Cave of a certain Brahman about 4 Cos from Mottera; this Man had by his continued Prayers obtain'd from Bramma, that if any one should disturb him in his Devotions, the same should be consumed to Ashes. Kisna being not ignorant of this, and seeing his Adversary pursuing him, enter'd the said Cave, and throwing a piece of Cloth over the Brahman's Head shelter'd himself behind it. The Giant who follow'd his Footsteps, soon after enter'd the Cave, and finding the Brahman cover'd with a piece of Cloth, gave him two or three sound Boxes on the Ear, telling him, that he should take that as a Reward for his care in hiding Kisna in his Cave. Retreat, Retreat, said the Brahman, before I uncover my Face, unless thou wilt be consumed by Fire. Then taking away the Cloth, the Giant was immediately in a Flame, and burnt to Ashes. Kisna return'd to Mottera, and having routed Ragia Kans Brother's Forces, he took him Prisoner; but in respect of Bramma's Promise, dismiss'd him soon after.

Kisna in the mean while considering that Jerasjanda was to live 100 years, and that consequently he would not lay aside his Designs against Mottera, it happen'd that Wissucbre the Son of Bramma being come from Heaven to give Kisna a Visit, and asking him what it was he would request of him? He answer'd, Build me a City in all respects like that of Mottera; which he did accordingly the same night in an adjacent Island, being altogether like that of Mottera, except that this was of Gold instead of Stone. Kisna being inform'd thereof by Wissucbre himself, over-whelm'd the Inhabhabitants of Mottera with so heavy a Sleep, that (unknown to them) he carried them with all their Cattel, and Ragia Ongefeen their King to this new City, unto which he gave the Name of Davarca, leaving Sedamma his old School-fellow and Attendant behind him in a certain Village, which since has got the Name Sedammapoer; which done, he return'd with his Brother to Mottera.

By this time the Giant Sialinder having gather'd a vast Army, sat down before Mottera; but Kisna and his Brother after having kill'd a great number of the Enemy, feigning a Retreat, were pursu'd by Sialinder's Forces, till coming to a high Mountain they vanish'd, and retir'd to the City Davarca; and Sialinder being thereby become Master of Mottera, settled his Residence there.

In the mean while Kisna's School-fellow being married was grown so poor, that he was forced to sell his Clothes to buy Victuals. Being almost reduc'd to despair, his Wife advis'd him to take a Journey to his old School-fellow Kisna, who she did not question would commiserate his Condition. How is this possible, reply'd the Husband, being quite naked and not fit to appear before any body? Kisna, answered the Wife, does not despise the poor, go and take a handful of Kam * along with thee for a Present.

The Husband follow'd his Wife's Advice, and went to Davarca, who was no sooner entred the Street where Kisna liv'd, but being discover'd by him from a Window, he came out to meet and embrace him, and carrying him into his House order'd him to be wash'd and provided with new Clothes. Kisna ask'd him whether he had brought him any Presents. Being a poor Man, reply'd Sedamma, I had nothing to give but this, which my Wife sent to thee, in hopes that the Gods would not refuse the meanest Present. Kisna receiv'd it kindly, and put it in a Corner of a Cottage belonging to one of his Neighbours; and at the same instant Sedamma's Cottage was turn'd into a spacious Palace: His Wife was much surpriz'd at this change, but imagining that it was done by Kisna, she search'd all the Corners of the House, and where-ever the turn'd her Face found such a vast quantity of Gold and Silver, and of Ropias, that she had sufficient wherewithal to provide her self with Servants, provisions and every thing in proportion to the Grandeur of her Palace. Sedamma being ignorant of what had happen'd, return'd full of Melancholy from Kisna, ruminating upon the Road whether he had not best leave his Wife and Children; but soon recollecting himself, that he ought not to lay the whole Burden upon his Wife's Shoulders, and despair of God's Mercy, he made the best of his way homeward: but approaching the Village, he was amaz'd to see the Change that had happen'd since his departure, which made him suspect he had mis'd his way; but finding by some undeniable Circumstances that he was in the right, he went into the Village, where finding instead of a Cottage of Straw a Royal Palace, he stood astonish'd, not knowing which way to turn, till being discover'd by his Wife out of a Window, she sent one of the Servants to desire him to enter; which he did, and being kindly receiv'd by his Wife and Children, he ask'd the exact time of this sudden Change, which happening (as far as they could guess) precisely at the same time he presented the Seed, they paid their Devotions to Kisna, distributed Alms among the Poor, and liv'd in great plenty for a long time after.

CHAP. VIII.

A King's Daughter in love with Kisna, sends him word of it. Kisna delivers 16000 Royal Virgins, and cures the Leprosy.

Sometime after Ragia Bhiemeck King of Poerap had a Son and Daughter born him, the first named Rochemey, the other Rochemy, who being grown up, the Father was very desirous to have his Daughter well match'd before his Death. Among others he consult'd with upon this matter, there was a certain Brabman named Naret, much celebrated for his Wisdom and Learning, who being desir'd by the King to inspect his Daughter's Hands, and to foretel him by the Art of Chiromancy, who should be her Husband; Naret having taken a full view of the Lineaments of her Right-hand, told her, Blessed Virgin! who best ordain'd

Baldew. to be the Spouse of the holy Kifna. The Father rejoic'd thereat to the highest degree, told this good News to his Son, who being of a contrary Sentiment, reply'd that he would never suffer so beautiful a Creature to be married to a Country Clown.

Rochemy design'd for Kifna.

He oppos'd to her Brother.

It is to be observ'd, that the Soul of Sytha Ram's Spouse being transplanted into the Body of this Virgin, in order to be espoused to Kifna; this young Lady was not sensible thereof, for which reason she had resolv'd to think of no body else but Kifna: which her Brother being resolv'd to prevent, he sent to the Giant the King of Mottera, that in case he was inclin'd to marry his Sister he should come with all speed, his Father intending to marry her to Kifna. The Giant ravish'd at this joyful News, order'd a most magnificent Equipage of Elephants, Camels, Horses, Oxen and Chariots to be got ready, and attended with Trumpets, Hautboys, Kettledrums, and other Musical Instruments, and a numerous Retinue, set out from Mottera.

No sooner were they come within two days Journey to Rochemy's Father's Residence, when she, not knowing what to do in this Exigency, thought fit to give notice thereof to Kifna by a Letter, which she order'd one of her Servants to deliver to the first Brachman she met, in order to carry it to Kifna; the Contents whereof were as follows.

Rochemy's Letter to Kifna.

"HOLY Kifna! worthy to be belov'd of me and all the World: Being resolv'd to be no body's but only yours as long as I have Breath to draw, I thought fit to let you know, that my old Father likewise wishes nothing more than to see that happy day; but my Brother, who has more Ambition than Piety, having sent for the Giant of Mottera to marry me, and being come within two days Journey of our Residence, I desire you to provide against their Attempts, nothing being able to resist your Divine Power.

Your Highness's always devoted,

ROCHEMY.

The Servant having brought a Brachman to the Princess, she by a Present of a Golden Dish fill'd with Ropias, and a promise of more if he perform'd his Errand, engag'd him to undertake the Task: Accordingly he went full speed for 3 Cos, when being somewhat tir'd he sat down under a shady Tree, to refresh himself with a draught of cool Water, and falling asleep, was carried by Kifna to Davarca. The Brachman awaking out of his sleep, and finding himself at Davarca, soon guess'd the truth, and going strait to Kifna's House, deliver'd the Letter at his Feet. Kifna had no sooner read the Letter, but assuming the shape of a Man with four Arms, and taking his Bow and Arrow, he got upon his Cow with the Brachman, and so set out on their Journey from Davarca.

In the mean time the Giant approaching to the Residence of his pretended Spouse, was met by her Brother, and conducted into the Palace; and Kifna arriving soon after near the City, rested himself under the shade of a Tree near a Pagode, whence he sent the Brachman to Rochemy to give notice of his arrival, who rewarded him with vast Presents for his Fidelity.

Rochemy knowing that her Brother was in the Evening to make a Cavalcade with her pretended Bridegroom through the City (according to the Custom of the Benjans) she resolv'd to lay hold of this opportunity to escape their hands: For this purpose she entreated her Father, that being now arrived to the Age of nine years, she might offer her Sacrifice to the Goddess Rohani. The Father having granted her Request, she took a Dish full of Pearls, and with two of her Attendants went towards the Pagode, whither her pretended Bridegroom and her Brother would needs accompany her, but staid without the Temple whilst she perform'd her Sacrifice; which done, she came out of the Temple near the Door, where she knew Kifna had plac'd himself, who no sooner saw her appear, but he took her up and carried her away.

At the Outcry of her Maids the pretended Bridegroom came with his whole Attendants to snatch her from him, but Kifna receiv'd them so courageously with his Bow and Arrows, that they were forced to retreat with the loss of several thousands of their best Men. Rochemy's Brother seeing the Bridegroom defeated, would nevertheless try his Strength with Kifna, and coming up with him was a going to cleave his Head with his Scymeter; but Kifna having disarm'd him threw him upon the ground, and after having given him some blows, ty'd him Neck and Heels together under his Cart, and so made his Entry into Davarca, where he was receiv'd with all imaginable Demonstrations of Joy. Rochemy's Brother was was releas'd at her request, and Kisna consummated his Marriage with great Pomp in the City of Davarca.

Sometime after it happen'd, that a very strong Elephant being seiz'd by a Crocodile in a certain Cistern or Pond where the Elephants us'd to drink, a furious Combat ensu'd, which put all the Elephants that were Spectators thereof into no small Confusion. At last seeing they were not able to assist their Companions, and press'd with Hunger, they went away, and left the poor Elephant in the lurch. He seeing himself thus destitute kept on struggling with the Crocodile, sending up at the same time his Prayers to Vishnum to deliver him from the Jaws of the Crocodile.

But it being then the time of Kisna's appearing upon Earth, he heard his Prayers after 20 days, and sending for Garroude to carry him immediately to the Pond, he threw his Weapon at the Crocodile, and cutting off his Neck releas'd the Elephant, who kneeling before Kisna, he told him he should ask what he pleas'd, and it should be granted him. Nothing, reply'd the Elephant, but that I may go immediately to Heaven, being quite weary of this World. Kisna granting his Request, took him into his Palankin, or Litter, and carrying him to Heaven, order'd Garroude to convey him immediately back to Davarca.

About the same time one Ragia Boetsaenpat having two Wives named Somuta and Surisa, the first brought forth a Son named Droe, and the other one named Raspoeter; but Surisa being most belov'd by her Husband, Somuta when her Son Droe was about five years of Age, sent him very neatly dress'd to pay his Respect to his Father, who being extremely delighted with him, highly caress'd and set him in his Lap. Surisa having got notice thereof, sent immediately her Son to the King, whilst she remain'd at some distance to observe what pass'd. But the King being so much taken with Droe, that he scarce look'd at the other; Surisa enter'd the Room, and upbraiding him with Ingratitude, made him send away Droe and take her Son in his Lap.

Droe exasperated to the highest degree at this Affront, went away without making his Reverence; and making his Complaint to his Mother, told her, that he was resolv'd to retire into a Desert to spend his time in Prayers. The Mother did all she could to dissuade him from it, but in vain; for taking the next opportunity of his Mother's absence, he got privately out of the House. He had scarce travell'd 2 Cos from the City, when being met by the Learned Brahman Naret, he ask'd him whither he was going? He answer'd, As young as I am, I have taken a Resolution to retire from the World, where I find there remains nothing but Malice and Envy: Then relating all that happen'd to him, he told him, that he was resolv'd to pass his days in the Desert.

Go on my Son, reply'd Naret, thou wilt be heard by Kisna: Then going forward, he came to a Forest, where seeing a Mango-Tree, he repos'd himself under its shade, and spent three days and nights in Tears, Prayers and Fasting. Kisna mov'd with Compassion at his tender Age, appear'd to him, asking what made him pray with so much Fervency? Droe prostrating himself at the feet of Kisna said, O Divine Kisna! my Request to thee is, "That the Affront given me by Surisa may turn upon their Heads, that she may be a Slave to my Mother, that I may succeed my Father in the Kingdom, and after my Death be plac'd in some pleasant place you shall choose for me.

Kisna answer'd, Thy Prayer is granted, go return to thy Parents, Surisa shall live a Slave to thy Mother, thou shalt succeed thy Father in the Throne, and after thy Death I will place thee in the Heavens in the form of a Star, that shall remain for ever in the Firmament, and serve the Mariners for a Guide. Droe having paid his Reverence to Kisna, return'd full of Joy to his Father's Palace. The old King, who had been almost distracted at his absence, receiv'd him with more than ordinary Satisfaction, and for ever after shew'd so much Affection to his Mother, that Surisa was in comparison of her no more than a Slave, and after some years surrender'd the Kingdom to him. He rul'd very fortunately for many years, and after his Death was plac'd among the Stars, being the same the Benjans call to this day Droe Katara, i. e. Stella Polaris, or the North-Star.

Droe, or the North-Star.

It happen'd some time after, that Ragia Nerkaeur, a most Potent Monarch, having conquer'd 16000 Kings, kept them close Prisoners with their Wives and Daughters; these offer'd their constant Prayers to Kisna for their delivery from this Oppression. Kisna considering that they having spent these three years in Prayer, it would be high time to deliver them, sent for Garroude, whom he order'd to carry him to Nietskanda, where he was

was no sooner arriv'd, but he told the King Nerkaseur, that unless he releas'd the Royal Captives, he must pay for it with his Head. The King answering Kisna with Threats, they prepar'd both sides for a Combat: For Kisna having kill'd those that were sent against him, the King himself at the head of a strong Troop, attack'd Kisna with great fury, who kill'd every Man of them except the Ragia, who persisting in his Obstinacy, had at last his Head cut off by Kisna, who releas'd all the Prisoners in an instant, and among them 16000 Royal Virgins, who prostrating themselves at his feet, he gave them leave to return to their Parents, or where else they pleas'd: But they desir'd to stay with him, imploring his Protection, which being granted by Kisna, he carried them to Devacca, where he built a Seraglio for their Reception, wherein each Lady had her own Apartment.

*Kisna delivers

In the Country of Ammaramo liv'd a certain zealous Ragia named Amarich, who having publish'd a general Fast by beat of Drum (according to the Custom of that Country) the same was observ'd with the utmost Strictness. It happen'd that the Brabman Doerwassa passing that way the same day, he was invited by the said King to stay there till the next day after the Fast-day.

The Brabman complying with the King's Request, he sent for some of his chief Brabmans to know the exact hour when they might begin to eat: These having consulted their Books, and told the King, that the just time would be two hours after Sun-rising; he invited the beforemention'd Brabman against that time to a Collation. But the Brabman missing the appointed hour, the King went to the River to wash himself; but finding after his return, that the Brabman was not come yet, he advis'd with four of his Brabmans what was best to be done, who told him, that if he let slip this lucky hour all his Fasting would avail him nothing, advising him at the same time to take only a little Water and a Leaf of the Tully-Tree, till the Brabman should come.

This Brabman Doerwassa having a Prophetick Spirit, was not ignorant that the King had eaten something in his absence, and therefore went to the King, asking him why he had put such an Affront upon him? The Ragia was for excusing the matter, but to no purpose; for the Brabman going out of the doors gave him this Curse, That he might from head to foot be cover'd with Boils and the Leprosy; which being fulfill'd in an instant upon the unfortunate King, he pray'd to Kisna to deliver him from this Evil, but in vain, his Evil encreasing every day, so that at last being quite tir'd with Life, he resolv'd to put a Period to it by Fire. Every thing being got in readiness for this purpose, Kisna appear'd to him, asking what was his Request? He reply'd, to be freed from my Distemper. Kisna cur'd him not only of his Leprosy, but also turn'd the same into a Fiery Wheel, which following the Brabman Doerwassa where ever he went, put him into such a fright, that he offer'd his Prayers to Ragia Inder to deliver him of this Fire: but Ragia Inder telling him, that he must apply himself to him who was the Author thereof, he made his Applications to Bramma, from whom having receiv'd the same Answer, he implor'd the Assistance of Kisna, begging him to pardon his sudden Passion, and to deliver him from the Evil he had been pleas'd to lay upon him. Kisna chiding him for his unruly Passion, advis'd him to lay the same aside for the future, and then deliver'd him from the Plague of the Fiery Wheel.

The Origin and Qualifications of Droepeti. She binds up the Wound of Kisna. Sufferer forc'd out of his Kingdom. Droepeti exil'd with her Brothers, and fed by the Sun. They come to Court. Their further Transactions.

IN the Country of Estenapour liv'd a certain Ragia named Pandouw, whose Wife was call'd Droendy: His Brother nam'd Deuderaes being blind, had a Wife call'd Sendary, and by her a hundred Sons, the eldest whereof was named Derfende.

In the Country of Ransaan liv'd at the same time a certain King nam'd Droepet, whose Daughter was reputed the most beautiful Woman that ever was seen. Ragia Pandouw happening to die left behind him five Sons, the eldest of which which succeeding him in the Throne, one of the other four was put to School to a certain Brahman, to be instructed in all matters relating to their Divinity. The Daughter of Ragia Droepeti being now come to a marriageable Age, her Father was not a little solicitous how to bestow his Daughter to the best advantage: For this purpose he sent his Messengers to invite the neighbouring Kings and the chiefest Brahmans to a great Feast, and caus'd a long 'Tall to be erected, with a strong Bow underneath, and a Fish on the top, in the same manner as we have mentioned before in the Story of Ram.

Aerling joins Droepeti by flouting.

Kisna appearing here among the rest, yet would not attempt the Bow, having promised his Assistance (upon this account) to a certain Brahman named Aerling, he manag'd the Bow with that dexterity, that he shot down the Fish, and receiv'd a fine Necklace of Pearl from the hands of his Bride.

Candoga's wife.

One time Droepeti seeing a Cow pass through the Fields with five Bulls following her, she stood amaz'd at the Novelty of the thing, as she thought; this coming to the Ears of Candoga the Cow of Plenty, she was so offended thereat, that she told her she would make her to be thus pursu'd by five Men. The King entertain'd his Guests with a splendid Feast, but the Bridegroom having made a Vow not to enjoy his Bride till after his return home, they came no sooner to his own House-door, but being met by his Mother, he told her that he had brought something along with him: Then, reply'd the Mother, your two Brothers must each have his share: That can't be, return'd Aerling, for it is a Woman. That signifies nothing, answer'd the Mother, what I have once said is impossible to be recall'd. Aerling full of Grief told his Brothers what had happen'd, who abominating the matter, communicated the same to Droepeti.

Kisna's Finger ty'd up with a piece of Golden Stuff.

It happen'd afterwards, that Kisna having invited the Panspendans with her Mother, and Droepeti to dine with him at Davarca, as they were walking after Dinner in the Field, Kisna had a mind to cut some Sugar-Reeds; but cutting his Finger, all the Standers-by call'd for some Linen Rags to tie it up: But Droepeti immediately tearing a piece of her Golden Brocado'd Gown, she ty'd it about his Finger. Kisna (according to his Omniscency) knowing how many Threds there were in the piece she had torn off, viz. 999. he told her that she should have as many Garments of Cloth of Gold as there were Threds in it. They then took their leave, and the Kisna knew well that Droepeti was still a Virgin, yet he took notice of it.

Saidau.

After their return home, one Senhem, Brother-in-law to Droepeti, began to be much out of humour, alledging, that Sussuster was not the rightful Heir of the Throne; for, said he, tho' Deuteræus by reason of his Blindness might be incapable of the Government, and therefore Pandow was put in his stead, yet after his Decease Sussuster his Son could not succeed him, the right of Inheritance of the Crown belonging to the eldest of the hundred Sons of Deuteræus, and consequently to Derfiende his eldest Son. This gave occasion to pitch upon some way to restore Derfiende to his right; and knowing that Sussuster was much addicted to play at Dice, they look'd upon this as the best means to encompass their Design: Sussuster having been for some time a Favourite of Kisna, grew so ambitious as to despise him at last. Kisna remembering this Affront, whilst he was playing with Derfiende, so order'd the matter that Sussuster lost all his ready Money, whereby being egg'd on more and more to recover his loss, he at last threw at all, and lost his Estate and Kingdom.

Sussuster and Derfiende play for the Crown.

It had happen'd some time before, that Derfiende being in Sussuster's Palace, look'd into Droepeti's her Apartment, which being pav'd with Glass (a thing he never had seen before) he took it for Water, and would not venture to go in. Droepeti perceiving his Error, told him, How, Are the Sons like the Father? Is the whole Family blind? which put Derfiende into such a rage, that he swore he would revenge it with the first opportunity.

Derfiende remembering his Oath, whilst they were at play purpos'd to set as much Money against Droepeti as he would desire; which being agreed to, Derfiende won that Stake likewise. Things being come to this pass, he propos'd to Sussuster that he would lay all he had got of him at one Stake, provided he would engage, that in case he did win it, he would choose a voluntary Exile for 12 years. Sussuster in hopes of better fortune, consenting to the Proposition, they threw the Dice, but Fortune frowning again upon Sussuster, Derfiende remain'd in Possession of all.

By this time Derfiende remembering the Affront Droepeti put upon him in her Apartment, order'd her to be stripp'd stark naked, and to expose her to the

The distressed Droepeti reduc'd to this extremity, implo'r'd Kisna's Assistance to relieve her from the shame she was likely to undergo, putting him in mind of his Bounty after she had torn her Garments for his sake. In the mean time the Servants being employ'd in undressing Droepeti, they had no sooner pull'd off one of her Garments, but another succeeded in an instant; which continuing thus 999 times, they were seiz'd with such an Astonishment, that they entreated Derfende to desist, lest Kisna should give him some severe proofs of his Anger; which had such an influence upon Derfende, that he dismiss'd her without any further harm.

Is deliver'd by Kisna.

The time of the appointed Exile now approaching, the five Brothers with their Mother Sendary and Droepeti left their Native Country; but beginning to want Provision upon the Road, Droepeti paid her Devotions to the Sun to supply their Wants. The Sun commiserating their Condition, fill'd them every morning a Vessel with Victuals, sufficient to feed 1000 Men. At last coming to a certain Village call'd Widoenougan, they lodg'd in the House of one Widoenougarre, where she left her Morher, who was grown so decrepit, that she was not able to follow them.

Thence wandring through vast Deserts without meeting either with Man or Beast, they at last came to a pleasant River, where whilst they were reposing themselves, they saw a certain famous and learned Brabman named Derwasa, walking along the Bank of it at the head of 1000 Brabmans his Followers; who being not ignorant (by his Skill) who they were, after the usual Salute immediately address'd himself to Sussuster, telling him, that he and his Company had a mind to take a Dinner with him, which Sussuster approving (trusting to the Bounty of the Sun, and the Brabmans Piety) he desir'd them to come, which they promised to do as soon as they had wash'd themselves in the River.

Droepeti understanding what had happen'd, had recourse to the Vessel, but finding it empty, knew not what to do, but advis'd them to have recourse to Kisna's Bounty: Accordingly they sent forth their joint and fervent Prayers to Kisna, but finding no relief, and the time of the Brabmans coming being near at hand, they resolv'd rather than to be expos'd to such Shame and Confusion as this, to make a large Wood Fire, and therein to put a Period to their miserable Life.

They went to work immediately, and having gather'd a sufficient quantity of Wood, Droepeti was shewing the rest the way, and these following to tread in her footsteps.

Kisna then seeing their Constancy stopt them, and asking what was their Grievance? Sussuster reply'd, O Kisna! who knowest every thing, thou canst not be ignorant of what has happen'd to us to day! Kisna answer'd, Let me see the Vessel that was presented you by the Sun; which being produc'd, Kisna view'd it on all sides, and finding a Grain of Rice on the brim he eat it, and by its multiplying Power gave it such a Virtue, that it not only satisfied him, but also the Brabman and his 1000 Followers, who thank'd Naccod, the youngest Brother of Sussuster (who was sent to bring them to Dinner) that tho they had not the least Appetite to eat since they had been washing in the River, yet they thank'd his Brother for his good Intentions.

This unfortunate Company having thus wander'd for nine years through the Deserts, at last resolv'd to try their fortune at the Court of King Weraart, of the Tribe of the Ketterijs in the Country of Messedes. Sussuster being the first that went to King Weraart, being demanded who he was? he ask'd the King whether he had not heard of the five Brothers Panspendaons? The King replying, he had; he told the King, that he had serv'd them as their Historian, and that if the King would receive him in the same Station, he would relate to him the Adventures of that King, how he had lost his Kingdom at Dice, &c. The King pleas'd with his Proposition, order'd him to stay at Court. The second Brother encourag'd by his Success, address'd himself likewise to the King, telling him that he had serv'd Sussuster in the quality of a Cook, who ordering him to dress a Dish of Meat, he did it accordingly, and pleas'd the King so well, that he made him his head Cook.

The third, who was an excellent Bowman, thought fit to lay his Bow and Arrows aside; and appearing in the Presence of the King without any Weapon, told him, that he had serv'd Sussuster in his Prosperity in the quality of a Brabman, but being now forced to bear his share in the Misfortunes of his Master, he came to shelter himself under his Royal Protection. The King being taken with his Discourse, receiv'd him into his Service. The fourth, after having paid his Reverence to the King, told him, that he had been Gentleman of the Horse to Suffuster, in which Station he was receiv'd by the King. The fifth Brother not knowing what to say in his own behalf, told the King, that he had been Shepherd to him, in which Station he was likewise receiv'd by King Weraart.

Droepeti being now alone, made likewise her Applications to the King, alledging that having serv'd in the quality of a Maid of Honour in the Court of Suffuster, she hoped to be receiv'd among the Ladies of the Court, which was willingly granted her. Having thus continued two years in their respective Stations, they began to revive their hopes of seeing their Native Country again, there being but one year more to the end of their Exile.

But Dorjiende finding the time of their Exile near expiring, sent out certain famous Wrestlers to try their Skill with them. These passing through several Countries, had vanquish'd many of the Ragias, and in scorn carried their Pictures ty'd to their Knees: Coming at last to King Weraart's Court, they challeng'd and kill'd the King's Brother-in-law, and were for doing the same to the King, who rather than hazard his Person, offer'd them his Picture to be carried in Triumph upon their Knees. But Suffuster being inform'd of the matter, told him, that such a piece of Cowardice being unworthy of the Name of the Ketteris, he advis'd him to match him with his head Cook, whom, as he said, he had often seen wrestle stoutly at the Court of Suffuster. The King extremely pleas'd at this Proposition, ask'd the Cook, whether he durst engage with one of these famous Wrestlers; who having answer'd, Yes, and the appointed time being come, they went to it bravely, and held it for a considerable time with equal Advantage, till at last the Cook found means to twist his Arms back, and setting his Foot against his Rump, threw him backwards, and kill'd him upon the spot.

Dorjiende had no sooner heard this unwelcome News, but he sent his Uncle with 200000 Horse into King Weraart's Country, to drive away all the Cattel; which being done accordingly, and notice thereof given to King Weraart, he put himself at the head of 600000 Horse, and overtaking the Enemy in a great Plain, a bloody Battel ensued, but his Forces being routed he was taken Prisoner by the Enemy.

The Prince overwhelm'd with Tears, engag'd the Cook who had so lately obtain'd the Victory, to go in pursuit of the Enemy, who coming in sight of them cry'd aloud, Halt you Robbers, release the King, or this day shall be your last; they laugh'd at this madness, till seeing him lay about him with his Weapons amongst the hindermost, they turn'd their Arms against him; but the Cook assisted by Kisna's Strength, slew the whole Army, except one whom he sent to Dorjiende to carry him the News of this Defeat.

He had no sooner receiv'd these dismal Tidings, but he told him, certainly these are the Panpendaons, go and put thy self at the head of 6000 chosen Horse to revenge our Quarrel: Accordingly he enter'd King Weraart's Territories, making great havock among Men and Beasts, without the least opposition, Weraart not daring to oppose his Forces (that consisted only of 200 Horse) to so powerful an Enemy. Suffuster vex'd at his Cowardice, told him, that if he did not think fit to hazard his Person, he should give leave to the Prince and his Governour the Brahman, to go along with what Forces he had in quest of the Enemy; which the King not refusing, the Prince and the Brahman went after the Enemy in their Chariot; and finding them in Battel array ready to receive them, the Prince was so frighten'd thereat, that the Brahman was forc'd to tie him in the Chariot, and cover him with a Cloth: Then the Brahman attack'd the Enemy with such fury, that notwithstanding the inequality of their number, he slew them all (after a bloody Engagement) upon the spot, except their General, who being made a Prisoner, the Brahman gave him three or four sound boxes on the Ear, telling him, that he should go to his King to carry him the good News, but have a care how he ever came there again. The Brahman was so humble as to bestow both all the Honour of the Victory, and the Booty upon the Prince, who willing enough to accept of the fame, made his Entry in a triumphant manner into the City.

Not long after King Weraart playing at Tables with one of his Nobles, made his boast of the late Victory obtain'd by his Son, which Suffuster not able to brook, told the King, That what he boasted of did not belong to his Son, but to the Brahman. The King hearing him say these words, threw the Dice with such violence into the Tables, that one of them flew into or give the least Provisions, he return'd in a very melancholy Posture. His Wife bid him not despair, telling him, that Kisna knowing their Poverty, would accept the Will for the Deed; and so ordering him to go into the Garden to gather such Herbs as were there, and allow'd them to eat (for the Brahmans dare not eat all sorts of Herbs or Roots, as for instance, the Beets, because they are red, and resemble Blood) which being done, she dress'd them, and having awaken'd Kisna, offer'd it to him upon a Pysang Leaf; Kisna ask'd them, Have you nothing else? I suppos'd you would have made some Cakes: The Woman answer'd, that their Poverty being such as not to permit them to do it; Kisna bid her look backwards, where seeing in a Corner a fine Basket of Fruits and Sweetmeats, she prostrated her self at his Feet.

Thus feasting together, Kisna ask'd them after Dinner, what they request'd of him? The Brahman reply'd, "No-thing, but that I may serve and love thee with a sincere Heart, that I may never cease to pray to thee, and that when my Soul and Body must be parted, my Zeal for thee may nevertheless continue with me. Kisna reply'd, All this shall be granted thee, and because thou hast prefer'd Piety before Riches, you shall likewise have your full share of them. He had no sooner spoken these words, but the Brahman's Cottage was in an instant chang'd into a magnificent Structure; and Kisna presented them with as much Gold as was sufficient to maintain them in great plenty all their life-time.

Kisna after having once more imparted his Blessing to his Host, departed, taking his way towards the Castle of Derfiende, it being then just three hours before Sunset, the usual time for the Kings in the Eastern Countries to give Audience to their Subjects. Kisna was receiv'd with a great deal of Reverence by some of the Court; but the King looking upon him with an indifferent Eye, ask'd him, When he came into the City, and why he would not pay him a Visit before the poor Brahman? Kisna reply'd, Riches are of no value to me, the meanest Cottage of a Believer I prefer before the most sumptuous Palace of a King: And why then, said the King, would you come to Court? I did come, reply'd Kisna, in the Name of the Panspendaons, to demand thy Kingdom, their 12 years Exile being now expir'd. The King answer'd, I know them not, neither will I deliver the Kingdom. Kisna told him, that if he would not, he should at least allot a Village for their Maintenance: I will not give them the breadth of a foot, answer'd Derfiende; then prepare your self, said Kisna, you must fight for it.

The Panspendaons hearing this Answer, prepar'd for a vigorous War; and having engag'd King Weraart, and the potent Ragia Droepet (Droepet's Father) in their Quarrel, with four other Kings, they attack'd Derfiende, who having drawn up his Horse in a great Plain, a fierce Battle ensu'd, which lasted 18 days, Kisna fighting in a Chariot drawn by Oxen.

In Derfiende his Army was a famous Warrior named Caran, who having (by his constant Prayers) obtain'd a prodigious Strength from Kisna, did perform Wonders in his Chariot: Kisna espying him at some distance, order'd Erfsiende (who sat with him in the same Chariot) to break the Wheel of Caran's Chariot, which being done accordingly by a strong Arrow, Caran came down out of his Chariot, but whilst he was busy in mending the Wheel, was by the same Erfsiende shot with an Arrow into the Breast: He drawing the Arrow out of the Wound, cry'd out to Kisna, And is this the Reward thou givest me for so many Offerings? Kisna answer'd, Have Patience; my Will is to deliver thee out of this troublesome World, and to allow thee a place in Heaven, whither I am going to meet all the Believers (my time upon Earth being almost expir'd) after I have purged the World of the wicked. Caran was no sooner slain, but the Victory declar'd against Derfiende, whose Forces were all slain upon the spot (as were King Weraart, and King Droepet on the other side) and among them Derfiende himself, with his 99 Brothers. Thus the Panspendaons being restor'd to the Kingdom, they pay'd their constant Devotions to Kisna, who from thence return'd to Davareda.

All this while Droepeti had liv'd without the knowledge of any Man; but Peace and Quietness being now restor'd in the Kingdom, the five Brothers were concerting all possible means how to enjoy Droepeti, without Incest. At last a certain Brahman named Wissumna, propos'd the following Expedient. The Year, said he, has 360 days, which divided into five equal parts, each amounts to two Months and 12 days: And it being your Mother's Will that the five Brothers should have an equal share in

This being approv'd of by the joint Consent of the five Brothers, it was further agreed, That he who should transgress his limited time, should be banish'd for 12 years. But Suffijster willing to appease the Gods by Sacrifices, in consideration of the great Effusion of Blood occasion'd by his Restauration, consulted the Goegys (a certain Order of the Brabmans) who advis'd him to institute a solemn Feast, offer Sacrifices, be liberal to the Poor, and to maintain a certain number of learned Brabmans, to read and explain their holy Writings. Suffijster obey'd, and perform'd every thing with all imaginable exactness, ordering a Hole to be dig'd, which he fill'd with Sugar, Butter, Sandelwood, Milk, Rice and Betel, and offer'd Roses, Flowers, Spices, and other rich Incense.

This done, he invited Kisna to a sumptuous Feast ; and asking him, what Acknowledgment he was able to pay him for the many Favours he had receiv'd at his hands, Kisna answer'd, Take a white Horse with black Ears and a yellow Tail, and fasten a Paper on his Head with the following Lines written in Golden Characters : " Whoever meets me and " lets me pass unmolested, shall worship " me and Kisna, who will reward their " Piety ; but whoever stops me, let him " prepare to fight. He further told him, that he should give him his Brother Eysende for his Companion, his intention being to purge the World of the wicked, during that short time he had to stay as yet upon Earth. The King obey'd, and having presented his Brother with a Chariot, and put him at the head of a good Body of Horse, he took his leave of Kisna, who went his way, the Horse leading the Van without a Guide.

This Horse pass'd through many Kingdoms, where every one that did read the Inscription, pay'd Reverence to Kisna: But coming into the Territories of Sin, who having receiv'd several signal Deliverances from Kisna, seiz'd upon the Hiorfe, by that means to engage Kijina to come to his Court: Accordingly Kijina (who knew his Intention) visited him in his Court, where being revered and presented by the King, he gave him his Blessing, and so set forward again to the King of Sudannewa.

This King flopping the Horse wou-

Hence he travell'd to the impious King Amfalauf, who stopping the Host, and bringing his Forces to fight against him, were all slain upon the spot. Next coming to King Salkauf, he follow'd the footsteps of Amfalauf, and had the same Fate. Afterwards they came to Mottaw, the Residence of the famous Giant Ragat Jerasfingh, who had been formerly defeated no less than 18 times by Kisno. This Giant having fortified Mottaw with high and strong Walls, drew out his Forces into the Field, himself being cover'd with a Cuirsas, or Armour, that was both Sword and Shot-proof. Both Armies engag'd one another with such fury, that the like had never been seen before, with such various Success, that it remain'd dubious who was likely to be the Vanquisher, the Night putting an end to the Battel for that time.

In this posture they seated themselves near the Pagode, where the Giant us'd to wash himself, who coming thither ask'd them, What is it you two devout Men desire? ask and you shall have it, be it what it will. Kifna reply'd That, Kings were apt to perform much more than they intended to promise. The Giant answer'd, that was never his Custom, desiring them to ask what they pleas'd, it should be granted: The dispos'd Kifna then ask'd the King to give him his Hand as a token of his Sincerity, which the King having done accordingly, All that we ask of thee, said he, is, that whenever thou engagest again against Kishna, thou shalt not put on thy shot-free Armour. The King (tho suspecting the matter) answer'd, Well, since I have given my word it shall be done, provided that he who engages in a single Combat with me shall bring no Bow and Arrow; but if he will fight with a Gors*, or try his Skill with me in wrestling, I am ready to answer him.

* A kind of Indian Weapon.

Kishna and Ersiende disappear'd without answering one word, and Ersiende's Skill lying chiefly in his Bow, he engag'd Ersiende's Brother (a famous Wrestler) in his stead. The Combat was so equal, that the night parting them they refer'd the whole Decision of the Quarrel till next day; being both equally tir'd with wrestling, they fought with the Gors the next day; they engag'd most furiously all the day, giving one another most terrible Blows, but with equal advantage, so that night approaching, they were forced to defer the final Decision till the third day: Then it was that the Giant exerting all his Force, gave such frequent and terrible Blows to Rhijm Ersiende's Brother, that being ready to faint, he was knock'd down several times: But imploring Kishna's Assistance, he was endow'd with new Vigor, so that recovering his Strength, he attack'd the Giant Jerasingh afresh, and at last laying hold on his Legs, tore him asunder, with his Entrails hanging down upon the ground. Kishna's Forces seeing this Spectacle, attack'd his Army, and slew them all upon the spot.

The Giant Jerasingh kill'd.

Kishna in his return being met by Sussister, was entertain'd by him in a Garden without the City, Ersiende at the same time presenting him with a Garland of Flowers. Kishna being highly satisfied with him, said, Desire what you think fit. But Ersiende excusing himself, Kishna told him, That his time upon Earth being near expir'd, he intended to grant him whatever request he could make. Then, reply'd Ersiende, bestow one of your Wives upon me. Kishna answer'd, Take my Chariot and go to Davarca, visit all the Chambers of my Seraglio, and which of the Ladies thou findest without me, take her for thy own. Ersiende went instantly to the Seraglio at Davarca, and entering the first Chamber found Kishna talking with the Lady; then going to the second, he found him there likewise; and so in the third, fourth, and all the rest: Being struck with Amazement, he return'd to the Garden where he had left Kishna, and prostrating himself, said, O Kishna, thou best the true

God, and present every where, pardon my Errors! Kishna giving him his Blessing, told him, he should persevere in his Prayers, and so return'd to Davarca.

Baldew.

Kishna afterwards seeing the Cowherds multiply to 56 Karool (each Karool making 100 Lak, each whereof is 100000) or 56000000 living Souls, and that they had encreas'd as well in Iniquity as well as in Number, he was highly incens'd against them, declaring that he would root them out, not by his or other Mens hands, but their own.

Vast Increase of the Cowherds.

It happen'd that a great number of them being invited to a Feast where Kishna was also present, they were so full of wantonness, as to stamp upon the precious Flowers call'd Mossou and Cassomba (affording a most delicious Tincture for dying) with their Feet. Not contented thus, it being a Moonshiny Night, they contriv'd to ridicule the famous Prophet Ruchi, whom they saw sitting very thoughtfully under a Tree. For this purpose they put a Basket under a certain Man's Clothes, dress'd like a Woman, and carrying her to Ruchi, ask'd him, whether this Woman was to bring forth a Male or Female Child? He not minding them the first time, they pull'd him by the Arm, and ask'd him the same Question in a very rude manner a second time; when being as it were awaken'd out of his Pensiveness, he told them, he should bring forth an Iron Bar which should break all their Skulls. He had no sooner said these words, but the disguis'd Man was seiz'd with most intolerable Pains, which did not cease till he had brought forth an Iron Bar. Being amaz'd at so odd an Accident, they had recourse to Kishna, who order'd them to go to the Village of Perwatpatang, seated upon the River, where they should find a Stone, wherewith they must rub the Iron Bar till it was reduc'd to Powder, and then throw it into the River. They did as they were order'd, but no sooner had they thrown the Powder of the Iron into the Water, but the whole River was fill'd with Reeds or small Canes, as if it had been a Forest: They gave an account of it to Kishna, who told them it was well.

It happen'd upon another Festival, that the young Tribe being merry together, one of the Company took up one of these Reeds from the ground, and striking another over the Head in jest, he saw him drop down dead before his Feet: The Friends of the deceased taking up another such Reed, struck the other young Fellow over the Head, who wife falling down dead, his Friends did the same to them, and so one to another, till they were all kill'd, according to the Prediction of Ruchi the Brahman.

Kisna having now fulfill'd his Office in rooting out Wickedness among Man, sent for the Paspendaons and Droepers, and their Mother to Davarca, where he told them, that having selected them as well as his Wives from the rest, he would have them go to the Mount Hemaansfel Perwet, whence they should be taken up into Heaven. Accordingly they went with Kisna's 16000 Wives to the said Mount, the Peak whereof nobody could reach but Sussijster; however they were all together drawn up insensibly through the Air into Heaven.

Kisna knowing that his time was come to leave the Earth, he took a handful of Dust, and throwing it over the City, their Golden Streets and Houses were in an instant transmuted into Straw, Dirt, Wood and Stones; which done, he ascended strait to Heaven. The Pagans are unanimously of opinion, that in case the whole Sea was fill'd with Ink, and the Earth made of Paper, and all the Inhabitants of the Terrestrial Globe were only employ'd in writing, they would not be sufficient to give an exact account of all the Miracles wrought by Kisna in 100 years time, in the third Period of the World call'd Duaperfinge, containing 864000 Years.

The same is said of Christ, John. 21. 25.

The ninth Appearance of Vishnum in the shape of Boudha or Bodhe. His tenth Transformation into a flying Horse, call'd Kallenkyn. The Origin and Actions of Bramma.

The ninth Appearance.

THE Benjans tell us of Bodhe, that he has neither Father nor Mother, that he is invisible, but whenever he appears it is with four Arms: He spends his whole time in praying with a dejected Countenance to the Great God (call'd Mahadeum by the Benjans) and that after having continued 26430 years without performing any Miracles, his time is expir'd upon Earth, being the time we now live in, according to the Computation of the Pagans. For pursuant to the Computation of the Benjans at Swatte, there were in the year of Christ 1649, pass'd 4750 years, and consequently 21680 years to come.

What is said of this Idol concerning his being born without Father and Mother, and his Invisibility, seems to have some relation to what they may perhaps have heard of Christ, as his four Arms intimate his Power, a thing frequently attributed to the Pagan Gods; just as the ancient Poets made their Giants with a hundred Hands. The Jesuit Kircher attributes likewise four Heads (but erroneously) to this Bodhe (call'd Bhavani by others) and says, that by his four Arms they would represent the four Elements. What the said Jesuit relates of Ramzander the Son of Bal, who came from Heaven to deliver his People from the Oppression of the Giants and Tyrants, seems to be a Confirmation of what we said before concerning some obscure Remnants of Knowledge among these Pagans of Christ.

The Benjans tell us, that Kallenkyn is a white wing'd Horse, standing upon three feet only in Heaven, holding one of the foremost Legs up without intermission. They say, that at the beginning of this Transformation the Benjans shall live piously and happily, but by degrees turn to all manner of Impiety and Wickedness for 40570 years: Then, say they, this Horse is to trample upon the Earth with his right fore Leg with such a force, that the Serpent Signagie being no longer able to bear the World, the Tortoise finding the whole Burden laid on her Back, will run to the Sea and drown the World, which is to be the Conclusion of the last Period of the World; after which the first is to begin again: For it is observable, that all the Eastern Pagans believe the Eternity of the World, allowing only some Changes from one time to another.

The Whiteness of this Horse intimates the Cleanness, its Wings the Activity and Agility, and the Horse it self the Strength of the God Vishnum; it being certain, that tho most of the Indian Pagans, and especially the Malabars, are black themselves, yet they have a peculiar esteem for the white Colour, as may be seen in the White Cow of Plenty, call'd the whole Race of Families and Tribes shall be confounded. They say there shall but two pious Kings be remaining upon Earth at that time, viz. the Kings of Vappi, and of Asari.

Thus much of the God Ixora and Vistnum; we must also say something of the third, viz. Kramma, who owes his Origin to Quwclunga. Rogervius deduces

Thales and the Stoicks, who acknowledg'd the Water either the Principal or the Nourisher of every thing.

The Creation of the World.

The chief things attributed to Bramma by these Pagans are, that he has not only created the World, but also determines the Duration and Times of all created Matters: And as they also acknowledge him the Son of God, and the Supreme Governor of Angels, nay even ascribe to him a human Nature; so it is evident, that these Attributes must have their Origin from what they have heard (tho perhaps confusedly) of Jesus Christ the Son of God.

They represent it with four Heads, but say he lost one by Ixora's means to punish his Pride. Hence it is that the Brahmans now adays have no more than three Books of the Vedam, the fourth which treated of God being lost.

For the first of these Books treated of God, and of the Origin and Beginning of the Universe. The second, of those who have the Government and Management thereof. The third, of Morality and true Virtue. The fourth of the Ceremonials in their Temples, and Sacrifices. These four Books of the Vedam are by them call'd Roggo Vedam, Jadura Vedam, Sama Vedam, and Tarawana Vedam; and by the Malabars, Icca, Iciyxa, Saman, and Adaravan. The loss of this first Part is highly lamented by the Brahmans. They also attribute to him the Preservation of all created things; whence the modern Brahmans ascribe all the good or bad Fortune which befalls Mortals here upon Earth to the Direction of Bramma, who they say has also prefix'd every living Creature his time of Life and Drath.

They further say, that not only the several Worlds, but also the different Families and Tribes have their Origin from

The Origin of the 14 Worlds.

Bramma. The Super-aereal World they say came out of his Brains or Face; for these Pagans acknowledge certain Celestial Orbs, with Aristotle. The second World they say did come out of his Eyes; the third out of his Mouth, the fourth out of his left Ear, the fifth out of his Tongue and Gums; the sixth out of his Heart, the 7th out of his Belly, the 8th out of his Privy Parts, the 9th out of his left Thigh, the 10th out of his Knees, the 11th out of his Heels, the 12th out of the Toes of his right Foot, the 13th out of the Ball of his left Foot, and the 14th out of the Air that surrounded him.

The Brahmans say they are the Product of his Brains, and the Nairos or Soldiers, of his Feet; as the Exastri (a sort of Kings) are out of his Arm, Baldæus which is the reason that they never make the same low Bows before their Kings as their other Subjects, but have the Privilege of sitting down in their Preference. Unto these 14 Worlds as many divers sorts of People attribute their Origin: 1. Such as are endow'd with Wisdom. 2. Those that are provident in their Actions. 3. Those that are eloquent. 4. Such as are cunning and designing. 5. Drunkards and Gluttons. 6. The Generous and Brave. 7. The Idle and Lazy. 8. Whore-masters and voluptuous Persons. 9. Labourers, Artisans, and Handicrafts Men. 10. Peasants and Gardiners. 11. The Parreas, and other sorts of nasty People, who they say came out of the Heels of Bramma. 12. Thieves, Murderers and Robbers. 13. Those that oppress the Poor. 14. Those endow'd with peculiar Qualities, and an active Spirit. They further say, that they can judge by the Physiognomy of a Person, what part of Bramma he was come from. Of the Worlds and the seven Seas we shall say more presently.

The Malabars say, Bramma has two Wives, Sarossody and Quiatry, who are both barren. The first being his own Daughter, has given occasion to a Proverb among the Malabars, You must not do like Bramma. The Equipage, or rather Carriage of Bramma is a certain Bird, call'd Annam by the Malabars; for these Pagans attribute to every one of their Gods a certain Horse or Carriage call'd Wabanam, which carries them from place to place. They further say, that this Bird Annam, if Milk mix'd with Water be set before him, he will drink the Milk without touching the Water, an Emblem of such as know how to distinguish Good from Evil.

They relate many other fabulous things, as for instance, That Bramma after a Period of many Ages, is to die and be reviv'd; that he has certain Deputies or Assistants, the chief of whom is Dewendra, the Head of all the Governors of the seven Worlds which are beyond our World, met below the Heavens, or Bramma's Residence: In these Worlds (say they) the Believers live after their Death. They allow that some things of lesser moment, such as Herbs, Cucumbers, &c. have been created by others, but that all things of moment owe their Origin to Bramma, who lost one of his four Heads, because he had told a Lie to Ixora, and several such Absurdities more.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Creation, Quality and Division of the World, according to the Opinion of the Learned Heathens.

7 Sols.

THE Benjans and Malabars constitute God the Creator of the Universe, for they frequently give God the Title of Creator of Heaven and Earth. We told you in the preceding Chapter, that they attribute the Creation of the World to Bramma; whereunto we will now add, that they say, the Power of creating the World was communicated to him by Vishnum. They believe with Epicurus and Mesrodorus, more than one World, of which before; besides which they make seven great Seas. 1. The Water-Sea. 2. The Milk-Sea. 3. The Cream-Sea. 4. The Butter-Sea. 5. The Salt-Sea. 6. The Sugar-Sea. 7. The Wine-Sea. The Paradise they place in the Water-Sea; the Priests and Jogyes belong to the Milk-Sea; the Voluptuous in the Cream-Sea; the Fortunate and Blessed in the Butter-Sea; the Merciful in the Salt-Sea; those who are Liberal in giving Alms in the Sugar-Sea, and those that live in great Plenty in the Wine-Sea.

Notwithstanding this general Opinion, the Brahmans maintain, that the World was produc'd from an Egg; of which opinion it seems were also the antient Egyptians, the Thebeans, Orpheus, Plato, and the Persians.

The Malabars look for the Origin of all things in the Privy Member of their God, which being too large, he could not enjoy his Wife Chatti, wherefore he was forced to cut it into 18 pieces, which turn'd into divers sorts of Arms; but the Blood which issued thence produc'd the Sun, Moon, and Stars; and some few drops falling upon the ground, the Roses, and other sorts of Flowers: But all living Creatures, both rational and irrational, were brought forth by Ixora's cohabiting with Chatti.

The Brahmans further are infected with a ridiculous Opinion, that the World is not round but flat; and that consequently the Terrestrial Globe is not enclos'd in, or surrounded by the Air, but limit its Extent by the Horizon that is obvious to our sight; for they maintain, that the Heavens are the uppermost half, and the Earth the lowermost of the Egg-shell; whence it is that they consider the Heavens as immovable, and the Motion of the Sun, Moon and Stars (unto whom they attribute peculiar Souls) to be like the Fishes at Sea in the day from East to West, and in the night from the West (not below but along the edge of the Horizon) to the North, and so again to the East. If you object, that according to their Supposition, the Sun must never cease to shine: They answer, that to the North there is a vast ridge of Mountains call'd Mabameru or Mercouma, behind which the Sun, Moon and Stars withdraw from our sight. They add, that the World rests upon an Ox, who when he has a mind to ease himself, he throws the World from one of his Horns to the other, which occasions what we call Earthquakes.

They are also grossly mistaken in the Computation of the Extent of the Earth, which the Brahmans say, is from North to South 100000 Joxenas; whereas it is beyond all doubt, that the whole Circumference of the Globe amounts to no more than 5400 Germ. Miles, reckoning 15 of these Miles to a Degree, of which there are 360. They also constitute no less than five Elements, adding the Heavens to the rest; in which point they follow the footsteps of Aristotle, who calls the Heavens the first Element. These five Elements both the Brahmans and Benjans reverence like Gods, because, say they, they enter into the Composition of every thing upon Earth; whence they allot every one of them his peculiar Wahanam, or Horse. They have also invented no less than seven Padallas, as they call them, or subterranean places (not unlike the Purgatory and Limbus Patrum of our Modern Roman Catholics) which inferior Worlds are known among them by these following Names, Adela, Bidela, Sudela, Taladelam, Sadelam, Mabadelam and Padelam; and are inhabited by Men who receive no other Light but what certain Serpents carrying very bright Stones on their Heads afford them.

The Opinion of these Pagans concerning the Soul, and its Transmigration. The Form, Structure, Splendour and Revenues of their Pagodes or Temples. Of the Ceremony of washing of these Pagans.

The Pythagorean Transmigration of the Souls.

THE modern Brahmans, in imitation of the ancient Egyptians, Thracians, Druids and Germans, believe, that the Souls were not such from Eternity, but created by God, and kept as part of his Essence, till after the Creation of the Earth, they were infus'd either into Men or Beasts. Concerning the Pythagorean Doctrine of the Transmigration of Souls (so generally receiv'd among the modern Pagans) we have had occasion to speak before in the Description of Ceylon; we will only add in this Place, that the Malabars say on this Head, They are of opinion, that this Transmigration of the Souls from one Body into another is inflicted by God as a Punishment for our Sins, which continues till they are either conveyed into Heaven or Hell; they say, there is a certain Judge, nam'd Chitra Putta, who judges of the Actions of Mankind when they lie upon their Deathbed, and determines according to their past Actions, whether the Soul of the deceas'd shall transmigrate into a Dog, Cat, Crow, Cow, King, Brahman, Serpent, &c. So that in case a Person in his Life-time has done a notorious Injustice to another, his Soul shall be transplanted into the Body of a Slave of the offended Party. The Reason why they abstain with so much Strictness from all sorts of Meat, is no other, than that they are afraid, as Tertullian expresses it, that in feeding upon a piece of Beef, they may eat a piece of their Father or Grandfather.

The Building of their Pagodes.

These Pagans have their Pagodes or Temples erected to the Honour of their Idols; in the choice of the Places, and manner of the Building, they follow rather their Instinct or pretended Inspiration, than any general Rule or Method. These Pagodes are on the Coast of Malabar most commonly built of Marble, and on the Coast of Coromandel of very large square Stone; such is the most celebrated Pagode at Rammanakojel, a vast Structure, and endow'd with vast Revenues, by the great conflux of Pilgrims that continually resort thither, of which I have been an eye-witness myself.

The Pagodes of the Malabars are generally cover'd with Copper, adorn'd with Balls gilt on the top; within and without stand their Idols with many Heads and Arms, surrounded on all sides with Serpents. The Pagode is enclosed by a Brick-wall, for the Reception of the People, who don't enter the Pagode, but perform their Worship in the Court, as the Jews did in the Hall of Solomon. Hence it is that the Gates are well guarded, being commonly either of Marble or covered with Brass, with the Figures of Elephants, Tygres, Bears and Lyons upon them; and on the Frontispiece many dreadful Heads of Lions with Hogs Tusks, representing the Idol Patagali, Ixora's Daughter.

These Pagodes are not only maintain'd by the Presents that are constantly made, but have also a constant Revenue from the Customs of all Commodities bought or sold, an exact account whereof may be seen in Rogerijs, l. 2. c. 10. These Pagans have also a great Reverence for their Pagodes; whence it is that they will not enter a Pagode with their Seripous or Slippers: and they always have their Cisterns at the Entrance of the Pagodes to cleanse themselves before they enter; just as the same is practis'd among the modern Mahometans in their Mosques, and as the Jews had the Brass Sea belonging to the Temple for the Levites to wash themselves in. Linscoten mentions, that the Pagan Priests in Calecut besprinkle those that are entering the Pagode with Holy Water, like our Roman Catholics. The Pagans in Coromandel have abundance of small Pagodes on these Places, where they burn their dead, whereof I took particular notice at Negapatan; and in Bantam the richer sort maintain frequently small Chappels for their private use. Of the Pagodes in Pegu, see Casp. Balbi; of those of Japan, Caron and Ameyda; and of those of China Ferdinand Pimbo.

Their Custom of washing themselves daily, seems not only to be introduced for the cleansing and cooling of their Bodies, but chiefly for the purifying of 'em from their Sins; for as these Pagans make a Distinction betwixt venial and mortal Sins, they regulate their washing accordingly. The first they are cleansed of by dipping the Head under Water, whereas to purify themselves of the others (viz. such as include the Loss of Life or Family, and fall under the Cognizance of the Civil Magistrates) they dive the whole Body under Water: Their Constitutions (being to them the same as our ten Commandments) are:

1. That those of an inferior Rank must not touch those of a superior Quality, and the greater the Difference the more is the Distance; whence the inferior People cry out in the Streets Tintelas, i. e. don't make your self unclean, and those of superior Rank Popo, Give way; for if any of the common sort happen to touch a Person of a high Rank, he becomes unclean, and must wash himself with Water.

2. Those that touch a dead Carcase, nay even any of the deceased Kindred, within fifteen days after, become unclean.

3. Those that touch a Woman in Childbed, or the Child;

4. Or a Woman that has her Monthly Times, till the fourth day.

5. All such as are become unclean, if they touch another he becomes so likewise.

6. If one that is unclean eats Rice before he has cleansed himself, he loses the Advantage of his Family, and commits a mortal Sin.

7. Persons of Quality commit a mortal Sin, if they eat Rice boil'd by one of an inferior Rank.

8. The same it is, if he lies with a Woman of a low extraction.

9. The Brahmans, tho all of the same Tribe, yet are not permitted to eat with one another; thus if any one touches with his Right Hand (wherewith he eats) his Neighbour, it is a venial Sin, because that Hand is unclean by touching the Rice; the same it is, if the Figleaf (which they use instead of a Twine thred) touches his that sits next to him: but if but one single Grain of Rice should happen to fall upon the Figleaf of the others, he must not eat it, without committing a mortal Sin.

10. Immediately after Dinner or Supper, they take away the Figleaves, and the least Grain of Rice that perhaps may be fallen upon the Ground, which is laid up together in a certain place, because all the Remnants are unclean. The Place where they have eaten, they purify with Cows Dung; and if the least Grain of Rice should be left behind, he that touches it, becomes unclean immediately on that part of his Body which touch'd it, which must be purify'd by Water. Thus if any body puts his Finger into the Mouth, nay if two Persons of a different Rank meet at a Cistern, if but one Drop of Water that has touch'd the Body of him that is of an inferior Degree, happens to fall upon him of a superior Rank, he becomes unclean, and is guilty of a venial Sin.

Their Ceremonies observ'd in washing are: First of all they fancy, that the Stone on the edge of the Cistern is Bramma, the Place where they wash is Vishnum, and the Cistern it self Isora. They enter the Cistern quite naked (their Privities being cover'd only with a Leaf) and write with their Fingers the Syllable om in the Water, and then with three Fingers cast up a little Water into the Air, intimating, that Isora, Vishnum and Bramma have bath'd themselves there; at the same time pronouncing these Words, Tottum quencia bitten pava, i. e. By the touching of this Water I have cast away my Sin. Then parting the Water with both their Hands, they dip their Hands in it, and thereby believe themselves cleansed from all their Sins committed by touching. Afterwards they cast some Water with both Hands towards the 8 parts of the World, as a Sacrifice to the eight Guardians thereof, say the Siri Pagode, wash their Faces three times successively, saying, Purify me; this done, they throw likewise some Water towards Heaven, as a Sacrifice to the Sun; and having wash'd their Hands and Feet, take a small Quantity of the Ashes of Cowdung in the left Hand, which being mix'd with a little Water, they say Sudamaga, i. e. be clean. Furthermore, as they suppose the Left Hand to be the Earth, and the Right the Heavens, and the inside of the Hand the Place of Propagation; they lay the Right Hand close upon the Left, saying, Let this be the end of the World; and as they believe that at the end of the World, Ixoretta is to be transformed into an Egg, they imagine that the Concavity betwixt their two Hands represents the said Egg, whence (after having paused a while) they take away the Right Hand, saying, Heaven and Earth are separated; and then write with the Forefinger of the Right Hand in the Ashes contain'd in the Left, the two Syllables ja ra, intimating the Contest betwixt the Fire and Air in the Egg, in carrying the Heavens to the top, and the Earth underneath. This done, they lay their Hands below the

Navel, on the upper orifice of the Stomach, upon the Breast, Front, Head, and Crown of the Head, and afterwards upon the inferior Parts of the Body; they likewise touch the Eyes, Ears, Feet and Heels with their Fingers, extending now and then their Hands, as if they were going to give something: they likewise shew their empty Hands to the eight Guardians of the World; and afterwards besmearing themselves with Ashes with three Fingers of the Right Hand (in honour of Bramma, Vishnum and Ixora) on the Breast, Front and Shoulders, they then reckon themselves clear and purified of all their Sins. If you ask them, what makes them use all these Ceremonies, they give for answer, That they have two different Laws, viz. the Carma and Nhana, one whereof contains Instructions for the inward Service of God, the other for the exterior or Ceremonial part. They add, that Parexi Rama, when he made the Sea recede from the Coast of Malabar, did recommend in a most peculiar manner the observance of the Carma to the Malabars, whence Malabar to this day retains the Name of Carma pumi, i. e. the Country of Carma.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the Holy Ashes used in anointing themselves, and of their Festivals.

THE Ashes of Cowdung are a thing in such request among the Indian-Pagans, that they with it besmear every Morning, their Front, Breast and Shoulders; every King maintains in his Court a certain Person, who every day early in the Morning exposes a good quantity of these Ashes upon a Fig-leaf in the Market-place, when every one that pleases comes and takes some part thereof for his use; of these Ashes they also offer daily Sacrifices to their Gods. The Jogyes attend constantly near the Pagodes, with a whole Bag full of these Ashes, which they distribute to the People, who in return give them some Alms. They always appear besmear'd with these Ashes, in which consists a great part of their Holiness, their God Ixora being also besmear'd with these Ashes; the reason whereof, as they relate it, is this.

We told you before, that Ixora or Quiven, having undertaken to keep Quivenga, the Ashes which settled within the Shell, render'd Ixora immortal. Vishnum being desirous to enjoy the same Prerogative, seiz'd upon a Cow, and carrying her to Calaja, Ixora's Residence, he snatch'd away some of these Ashes; which Ixora perceiving, he struck out several of her Teeth by a Blow he gave her, which falling upon the Earth, produc'd a kind of large Water Melons, call'd Abobacus by the Portugueses. However Vishnum keeping close behind his Cow, he gather'd the next Dung, and burnt it to Ashes; whence it is that to this day these Pagans have so great a Veneration for the Cowdung, that they believe it purifies every thing upon Earth. The said Cow brought forth a Bull calf, unto which Ixora gave the Name of Irixipaten, and used him instead of a Horse. The Malabar Women, tho otherwise pretty cleanly, yet are so intoxicated to this Superstition, that they cleanse their Chambers and their Cisterns with Cowdung.

The Samoryn or King of Calecut washes himself every day before Dinner; and when he goes to the Pagode, the way from the Cistern to the Pagode is cover'd with Cowdung, upon which they strow Roses and other Flowers; besides that two Women each with a Pot of Cowdung mix'd with Water, walk just before him; and the Place where he dines is afterwards constantly cleansed with Cowdung. They relate farther of the Cow, that Quenevady and Superbennia did sit betwixt her Horns, the Sun and Moon in her Eyes, Bramma's two Wives in her Ears, Ixora in her Nose, Vishnum in her Tongue, in her Thighs the Rixii, the four Books of the Vedam in her four Legs; that her Milk is the true Ambrosia or Amortam, and her Piss the Tirtam, or the Water fit to purify themselves from their Sins: whence it is, that when they see a Cow ready to piss, they catch it with their Hands, drink a little of it, and with the rest wash their Faces. As these Pagan Kings claim the Patronage of Cows, so the Samoryn of Calecut is attended every Morning early by six Boys, all over besmear'd with fresh Cowdung, with Garlands of Flowers on their Heads; as soon as the Samoryn rises, they pay

Andeum. pay him Reverence, who orders them immediately to give the Flowers to the Cows, which they do.

They have not the same regard for the Bulls and Oxen, tho they make a Bull the Father or Author of the Royal Family of the Exastri, from whence the Kings of Cochin, Cranganor, Cananor, and others are descended; they relate, that all the Males of this Family being extinct, a Woman of the same Tribe being begot with Child by a Bull, revived the said Family.

Opinion of the Malabars of the Cowdung.

The Malabars alledg the following reason for the Ashes of the Cow-dung; They say that the Lingam (i.e. membrum virile) of Ixora, before it was cut in pieces, being so long that it reach'd up to his Forehead, let fly some few Drops of Seed, which happening to light into his fiery eye in the Front, was burnt to Ashes immediately. Hence it is that in Canara, betwixt Cananor and Mangalor, there are to be found a certain Order of pretended holy religious Men, living constantly in the Pagodes. These appear in the Streets quite naked, and making a noise by the ringing of a Bell they carry along with them, the Women (without distinction of Age or Quality, even to the Queens) come running out to touch their Privy Members.

That the Egyptians, and after them the Jews, had a peculiar Veneration for Cows and Calves, is sufficiently evident from many Passages in the Scripture; and the Ashes of the Red Cow are mention'd, Heb. 9. 13. & Numb. ch. 19.

Besides this Purification, these Pagans have also their meritorious Acts of Piety; some of the Jogis carry Iron Collars about their Necks, walk constantly with Iron Fetters and Chains, and have Iron Nails with the Points inwards in their wooden Slippers or Sandels. Some have been known to ty themselves with Ropes to a Tree, till they expired in great Torments.

I saw 1657, one of these Jogys at Columbo, whose Arms were grown together over his Head, a Posture he had chosen out of Devotion. Others of this Order never sleep, but pray incessantly; of this kind are also to be found in Japan and China.

Another meritorious Act of the Pagans is the visiting their celebrated Pagodes and other holy Places (like the Pilgrimages of the Romanists) as the famous Pagode Rammanakojel, the Adams Mountain in Ceylon, and divers other Places at Suratte, Davara, Mottera, Casi, Bengale, and Ayotia, 12 Leagues from Casi; for which reason it is, that the rich erect Pagodes, Jans (call'd Anmalams) and Cisterns for the Convenience of the travelling Men and Beasts.

The Malabars have a peculiar way to merit the forgiving of their Sins; there grows a certain Stone call'd Talagamma on one side of the Mount Mahamere, near a Riverside (which the Jogys always carry about them) somewhereof contain Gold, and are then called Fernia Querpan; one of these carry'd in a Vessel, and in another the five following things belonging to the Cow, viz. the Cream, Milk, Butter, Piss, and Dung mix'd together, call'd by them Panchaviam Wine, and afterwards put into the other Vessel, wherein lies the Talagamma, and given to any Person whilst he recites the Vedamantiram (a Prayer of five words) purchases Pardon for all Sins, destroys his Enemies, reconciles him to his Friends, and procures Riches. This Prayer is in high Veneration among the Brahmans, which they use constantly when they are sitting down to eat, but no body dares to say it in the Streets: The five Words are Panesua, Apanesua, Vinesua, Udanesua, and Sumanesua; the first signifies the Soul or Spirit, the second the Posteriors, where the Excrements are discharg'd; the third the Hearing; the fourth Seeing; the fifth the Smelling.

They have also their Festivals: one of their most remarkable Festivals of these Pagans, is celebrated in Honour of Vishnum or Ixora; tho the Malabars solemnize certain Festivals, as that in Honour of Ixora's Spouses, which are not regarded by other Brahmans, which beginning the 8th of Jan. continues for nine days, the Ceremonies may be seen in Rogervius, l. 2. c. 12. The Feasts celebrated in Honour of Ixora and Vishnum, are call'd Trenaca and Panduga. The Gentives, Malabars, and Inhabitants of Coromandel also solemnize a Feast to the Memory of the Nativity of Vishnum, and his Transformation into Kishna in August, when they adorn their Houses with all sorts of Greens, which seems to have some Resemblance to our Christmasts: They also use another Feast to the Honour of Vishnum, in remembrance of the 16000 Virgins; it begins the eighth day after the Full Moon in Oct. They have also a Feast in Honour of Vishnum's Spouse, call'd Lasceni by those of Coromandel; this is celebrated by the Brahmans Wives in September, for nine days, when they pray pray for the long Life of their Husbands, and to obtain Riches. They have also two other Feasts in July and November. They observe besides this certain days, as Sacred and Fortunate, as the First day of every Month, the day of the Solstice, when the Sun turns from the North to the South.

They pay every Morning their Reverence to the Sun, and having wash'd themselves three times, they threw the Water with their Hands upwards, to prevent (as they say) the evil Spirits from keeping the Sun betwixt the Mountains. The New Year they begin with the New Moon in April, as the modern Jews in the Month Abib. They call the New Years Feast Samwatjaradi Panduga, Panduga signifying as much as a Feast, and Samwatjaram a Year, as Adi is the first day of the Month; for they have twelve Months in the Year, viz. April call'd Thefram, May Weiwicam, June Jestam, July Adadam, August Spawanam, September Badrapadam, October Ajnyam, November Carticam, December Margisaram, January Ponjam, February Magam, March Palgowam. And because these 12 Months are not equivalent to the Months of the Sun, they have every third Year a Leap-year, consisting of 13 Months, which we have only once every four Years.

Besides the Names of every Month, and of every day in the Week, the Malabars have a peculiar Name for each day in every Month. They have also peculiar Names for each Year, as far as sixty Years, unto which they add the Word Samwatjaram, signifying a Year, which however is often left out for Brevities sake; then they say Prabawa the First, Pinawa the Second, &c. Tjaja the sixtieth, meaning the Samwatjaram or Year. They compute by 60 years, just as the Greeks do by their Olympiads; they also name the Days of every Week (like the ancient Pagans) after the Planets; thus Suria signifies to them the Sun, and Jendra the Moon, whence they call Suria Waram the Sunday, and the Monday Jendra Waram.

They divide each day into 30 Hours, just as the Gentives divide their Day and Night into 60 Hours, some whereof they account fortunate, and some unfortunate. Of the Pagan Feasts you may consult Cavalinus, chap. 22.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Fastdays of the Pagans, and their Origin. Their Marriages and solemn Oaths; Ceremonies used with their Sick and Dead.

AS the Pagans pray constantly thrice a day, viz. in the Morning, about Noon (when they repose themselves) and in the Evening, so they have their solemn Fastdays; one of these is call'd Egadexi, which Word (in their Learned Language, call'd Samoscrad, or Hanscret, as Kircher styles it, which is in the same esteem among the Malabars, as the Latin in Europe) signifies as much as eleven, or the eleventh, because it is kept the eleventh day after the full Moon, and again the eleventh day after the new Moon; so that they have two of these Fasts every Month, viz. one every 15 days, when they abstain from eating all the day long, or at least till four or five a Clock in the Afternoon, when they must not feed upon Flesh, or Fish, or Rice, but only upon Fruits, Pease, Beans, Milk, and such like, and not drink the least strong Liquor.

The Origin of this Fast-day is ridiculous enough. They tell you, that a young Fellow much addicted to Venery, going one night very late to visit his Mistress, could not light on a Boat to ferry him over the River; however, being resolv'd not to depart, he staid there all night, and did fall asleep, without having eaten any thing all that day: Next morning early passing the River, as he was going to his Mistress's House, he met with a Camel just at Sun-rising, at which throwing a Stone it hit accidentally upon some Flowers, and cast them from the Stalks upon the ground, and so he came to his Mistress.

After some years happening to die, and being carried before Chitrapuren, he could not produce any good Works he had perform'd in his Life-time to intitle himself to the Paradise, except this his accidental fasting, and the throwing down of the Flowers at Sun-rising, which he interpreted as a Sacrifice intended for the Sun. Chitrapuren after a long hearing condemn'd him to the infernal Regions;

gions; yet in consideration of his fasting on the 11th day after the Full-Moon, having the favour granted him of abiding for some days in the Paradise, he was ask'd, what Paradise he would choose? He answer'd, The Woman's Paradise. Being convey'd thither accordingly, as he was in Bed the next night with one of the Ladies, he broke out into most dreadful Ejulations; and being ask'd by his Bedfellow the reason, he reply'd, Because I have so short a time to stay in this Paradise. The Woman who had taken a liking to him, told him, that he should rise early in the Morning, wash himself all over, and at the Gate watch the coming of the Servants of Ixora, who were then going into the Wood of Rofes, to gather Flowers for their Master; she bad him to crowd in among them, and having gather'd the most odoriferous Flowers he could find, offer them as a Present to Ixora. He follow'd the Woman's Advice, and having gather'd the most sweet-scented Flowers he could, offer'd them to Ixora, who extremely pleas'd with this Present, ask'd Chitraputren who this young Man was? he told him; he was a Person condemn'd to the infernal Punishments: But Ixora order'd him to remain in Paradise with the same Woman, and to gather Flowers for him. Now because this young Man got into Paradise by his fasting, the Pagans fast upon the before-mention'd 11th day

The second Fast.

They have another Fast call'd Quiverasiri, which deduces its Origin from Quiven (the same as Ixora) and Rasiri, i. e. the Night, signifying as much as a Night-fast, or Quivens night: It falls out in February, and being one of their establish'd Fasts, is kept with a great deal of strictness, they being forbid either to eat or drink, or to sleep all that night, which they spend in rehearsing the Fictions of their Gods, and walking round the Pagodes till Day-break, when they sacrifice to the Idol, and give Alms to the Poor; which done, the Fast is ended.

Its Origin.

The Origin of this Fast they ascribe to one Beri, a famous Hunter, who going one Evening abroad to shoot some Birds, got upon a certain Tree near a Cistern, call'd Cuola, the Leaves whereof smell as sweet as Flowers: Being very eager at the sport, he tarried upon the Tree all night, and to pass away his time without sleeping, he pull'd off constantly the Flowers of the Tree, which he throwing one after another upon the ground, one of them did fall upon Quivelinga, who happen'd just to lie under the Tree without Beri's knowledg, who return'd to his own home the next Morning.

Some years after the said Beri happening to die, and being carried before Chitraputren the Judge of the dead, he found upon Examination, that having committed many Crimes in his Life-time by killing the wild Beasts, he was condemn'd to the infernal Regions. But as Jewen or Jamma the Chieftain of the Devils and his Company were hurrying him along, they were met by Ixora, who being inform'd of his fasting all the night long upon the Tree Cuola, and his offering of the Flowers to Quivelinga, he deliver'd him immediately out of the Devil's hands, and sent him into Paradise.

Some tell a different Story upon this head, viz. That Beri perceiving a Tyger under the Tree, was forced to remain upon the Tree all night without eating any Victuals: They also tell you the Dialogue betwixt Beri and the Tyger; Beri it seems told the Tyger, that whereas he was not able to fast above three days, he desir'd him to let him go unmolested to his House, where he would take leave of his Wife and return again. The Tyger reply'd, No; for, said he, if I let thee come down safely, thou wilt certainly kill me with thy Bow and Arrow, which thou didst leave under the Tree whilst thou wast climbing up to fetch a Pigeon thou hadst shot before. But Beri taking an Oath by Ixora that he would return, the Tyger let him pass. Beri being return'd home, told his Wife what had happen'd, and that he must return to the Tree where the Tyger staid for his coming: The Woman offer'd to go in his stead, and so did his Children to be devour'd by the Tyger, alledging, that without him they should be depriv'd of all Subsistence. But Beri not approving their choice, they went all together to the Tyger, unto whom Beri said, Pursuant to his Oath he was come to be devour'd by him: But the Woman entreating the Tyger to devour her in his stead, as not being able to subsist without him, and the Children making the same Petition to him, the Tyger was put to such a Nonplus, that he did not know what to choose; but whilst he was ruminating upon the matter, Ixora threw a Net over them, and so drew them all into Paradise.

The third Fast call'd Tirinadira, is The third kept only by the Women, having got its Name from the 27th day of the 9th Month; on which day Canteven the God of Love, being kill'd by Ixora, the Women were so griev'd thereat, that they its Origin, would would not touch the least Eatables all that day; and ever since keep a Fast on the 27th of December in memory of this Disaster, being much about the same time we celebrate the Feast of our Saviour's Nativity. They say the reason why Isora kill'd this Canteven, or Cupid, was because the last was fallen in love with Paramefceri, Isora's Spouse, for which reason he burnt him to Ashes with his fiery Eye on the Forehead. But the Brabmans say that Isora being for a considerable time employ'd in holy matters, and thereby become forgetful of Paramefceri, she address herself to Canteven, to infuse into her Husband fresh Sentiments of Love; but she afterwards no sooner understood his Death, than she died for Grief: Being however brought to Life at the Foot of the Mount Timana (where she staid for sometime after to do Penance, and thence got the Name of the Daughter of the Mount Timana) Isora appear'd to her, promising to continue his Conjugal Love hereafter. Paramefceri took this Opportunity to desire Isora to revive Cupid from the Dead, with this addition, that he should remain immortal for ever after; whence they say, that Cupid reigns all over the World by the Strength of Imagination in both Sexes; by which they seem to intimate, that as the Inclination to Love ceases in old Persons, it is constantly reviv'd in the young ones, and so will continue as long as the World stands.

The fourth

They have another famous Fast, called Masapafsa, from the Word Masa (which in the high Malabar Tongue signifies a Mouth) and Upada a Fast, being the most sacred of all their Fasts, beginning with the last day of October.

Such as keep this Fast, having first wash'd and dress'd themselves very clean, repair to the Pagode of Vistnum; and the next day being the 19th of Novemb. after having chang'd their Clothes, go round the said Temple early in the Morning 101 times, and the most devoted 1001 times. The same they repeat every day during the whole November and December, muttering all the while by themselves the Words Naraina and Aquanama, Surnames belonging to Vistnum. All this while they must eat nothing but Milk and Figs, neither look upon a Woman, and think or speak of nothing but what relates unto Vistnum. The next following year they take the same course, beginning with the 1st day of Decemb. and continuing till the 10th of Jan. in all 40 Days. The third Year they begin with the 1st of Jan. and continue the same Devotions till the 10th of Feb. and thus the same successively for nine years longer, till the Number of 12 years being compleated, they obtain a general Pardon for all their Trespases.

Baldus.

Concerning their Marriages, Polygamy and some other matters relating to this purpose, we have had occasion to say something already in the Description of Ceylon: we will now give an account of such things as were not mention'd, or at least not circumstantially in that Place. The first is, that the Brabmans are not only at liberty to marry as many Wives as they think fit (a Privilege they always enjoy'd, as may be seen out of their ancient Records, call'd Poranes) but also may choose their Wives out of four different Tribes, just as the Levites enjoy'd the Privilege of marrying in what Tribe they thought fit among the Jews.

Their Marriages.

As to their Marriage Ceremonies, some precede the Marriage it self, some are concomitant to it, and the rest follow it.

Marriage-Ceremonies.

The first thing they observe is, to consult an Astrologer about the Position of the Planets, and the Time or Hour, when it is fortunate for the Bride to be married; for which reason they also consult on what day of the Month, and under what Conjunction the Bridegroom is born. Next they apply themselves to a Brabman or Priest, who for four days successively before the Wedding, burns a little Rice and Butter mix'd with Eggs for a Sacrifice. The time of the solemn Promise or Engagement approaching, they light a large Waxcandle, and put some Rice upon the Table of Quenevady, the huge devouring Elephant before-mention'd. This done, the Bridegroom throws a Necklace or Taly, with some Gold fasten'd to it, about the Bride's Neck, as a Token that the Engagement is now made; whence the Malabars call Marriage Quitba, i. e. an Obligation. The Wife after the Death of her Husband, always breaks this Necklace, as a Token that the Obligation is dissolv'd, after which the Bride fasts 15 days.

After the Copulation is perform'd, they entertain their Friends at a feast; but the young Couple are not bedded till about eight or ten days after: for before they can actually cohabit, they must attend a fortunate Conjunction of the Planets; and before they enter the Bedchamber, perform their Prayers at the Door, in the Company of a Priest, who gives them his Blessing. The next fol-

following day, the new married Couple take a piece of Cloth, cut at one end, wherewith they go a fishing in a River; the first Fish they take, they touch on the Head with a great deal of Reverence, and according as they take more or less Fishes, they shall have few or more Children; if they catch nothing, the Woman is to prove barren.

As the chief reason why they marry so young among the Brabmans, is their Fondness of a Maidenhead, so on the other hand nothing is more despicable among them than a Maiden come to a full Age, which has introduc'd the Custom of begging Portions for Maidens that they may be married in time.

The Indian Kings that are not Brabmans never marry, but only keep certain Mistresses, whose Children don't inherit, nay can't as much as challenge the least Prerogative, in respect of their Nobility; so that here obtains the Axiom, Fructus sequitur ventrem. The Kings Sisters are generally marry'd to some other Sovereign Princes, who must fast 15 days before Marriage. The Nairos have likewise no settled Marriages, whence their Wives are stiled Parascevi, i.e. Women for many. The Brabmans take as much care to couple a Bull and a Cow together, as other People do in marrying their Children.

Their manner of taking an Oath.

These Pagans perform their solemn Oaths near a Pagode, and the Brabmans of Coromandel in the Presence of a Priest, near a holy Fire, just as the Romans use to do in the Presence of their Priests, the Athenians before the Altar, and the Arcadians during the Sacrifice. These Pagans being ready to take an Oath near the Pagode, they put three Fingers of the Right Hand, viz. the Thumb, the next, and the Middle Finger, into an Earthen Vessel fill'd with melted Butter; this done, they put a Leaf into the same Butter, which they tie close round their three Fingers: after three days the said Leaf is taken off in the Presence of the King or Prince of the Country; if his Fingers are not burnt, his Adversary suffers Punishment, but if he proves hurt, he is sure to be punish'd.

They have another way of taking an Oath, no less dangerous than the former; he that takes the Oath is oblig'd to swim cross the River betwixt Cochin and Cranaganor, which is full of Crocodiles; and if he that has taken the Oath escapes without hurt, he is supposed to have taken a just Oath.

In Cannara they have another way, for they put some Adders and a Lemon into an Earthen Vessel; and if he that takes the Oath, takes the Citron out of the Vessel, without receiving any harm, he has truly sworn. The Inhabitants of Formosa when they take an Oath, break only a Straw to pieces.

Whenever any body falls sick, the Patient need not fear to be disturb'd with such Physick, Bleeding, Clysters, and such like, their chief Remedy consisting in Fasting, sometimes more than is convenient. They also send forth continual Prayers, to obtain a happy Transmigration of the Soul, and exhort the Patient to rehearse continually the Name of God, and when his Strength fails, his Friends repeat the same in his Presence; because the Brabmans are of opinion, that he who dies with the Name of God in his Mouth, goes directly to the Paradise: For the same reason they also distribute Alms to the Poor. If they give the Patient any Medicines, they are generally Laxatives of fresh Herbs, a little Milk Cassia (or Rice and Water boild together) a little Saffron, Ginger, or Leeks.

When the Patient is near expiring, they reiterate their Prayers, besprinkling them with Holy Water of the River Ganges; for they say, that the infernal Judg sends his Servants to torment them at that time, and that they send forth their Prayers to Vishnum, to send one of his Servants to deliver the dying Person out of their Clutches.

After their Decease they wash the Corps, afterwards shave his Beard, stop his Mouth with Betel and Lime, wrap him in a Shroud, and last of all close his Eyes. Of the burning of their Dead we have spoken before, in the Description of the Funeral Ceremony of the Prince of Ceylon, and Rogerius * has given a more ample account of the whole matter. Some of these Pagans bury their Dead near their Habitations, and without the Cities (like the Athenians and Romans) and cover them with great Stones, for fear the Jackalls and other Wild Beasts, should dig them up and devour them.

They fast and shave their Heads for their deceas'd Friends; and if they be of Royal Extraction, all the Subjects are oblig'd to have their Heads shav'd. In Malabar the next Relations don't stir out of Doors for 15 days, sleep only on Mats upon the Ground, and don't assist at the usual Sacrifices. When I mention Fasting, I mean that they only eat a little Rice at Noon. After 7 days they send for for the Barber, who having cleans'd the House with Milk and Cowpiss, and the Persons belonging to it, they gather up the Ashes of the deceas'd Person, after the Expiration of the 15 days; and having put the same into an Urn, they throw it with great Lamentations into the River, the Sea, or any other Water: This done, they purify the Place where the Corps was burnt, and plant there a Fig-tree. Afterwards changing their Clothes, and being cleans'd by repeated Washings, they put an end to the Mourning, except the next Heir, who continues in Mourning a whole Year, during which he abstains from Flesh, Fish, Eggs, Wine, nay even from their beloved Betch. No Person must touch his Head, neither must he cohabit with his Wife: Besides which, he is obliged to perform daily the following Ceremony; He takes a small quantity of boil'd Rice, made up in form of a little Ball, this he lays upon a Figleaf spread upon the Ground without the House-door, and taking part of another Figleaf, he bends it together, fancying all the while, that the Deceas'd is there present to eat the Riceball; then taking a little Rice mix'd with Butter in both his Hands, he turns his Face about, as if he were looking to put it into the Mouth of the deceas'd Person. This done, the Standers by clap their Hands together, a Signal to the Crows (of which there are vast Numbers in Malabar) to come to take the Ball of Rice, prepar'd for the de-ceas'd Person; which if the Crows do, the Heir is at Liberty to go to his Dinner, but if they don't, it is look'd upon as an ill Omen, and the whole Ceremony consider'd as fruitless.

At the Conclusion of the Mourning, the Relations of the deceas'd are invited to a splendid Feast, where however they must not eat either Flesh, Fish or Eggs, and none but the richer sort are invited to partake of it. This they repeat once a Year, on the same day the deceas'd died, to the Memory of their Friend. I will not enlarge my self in this Place upon that most barbarous Custom of some of these Pagans, for the Wives to burn themselves alive with the dead Carcases of their Husbands, a thing still practis'd in the most populous City of Pandi; for when the Funeral Ceremony of Vinepi Naigne, the Prince of the Country, was solemniz'd with great Pomp, 300 of his Wives did precipitate themselves alive (under the Sound of Drums and Trumpets) into the same Hole fill'd with burning Oil, Butter, and other combustible Matter, which burn'd both his and their Bodies to Ashes. We conclude with a hearty Wish, that these poor Wretches, quite entangled in the Darknefs of Paganism, may thro his Mercy, and with the Assistance of such Magistrates as ought to keep a watchful eye over their Actions, be in time brought to the true Knowledge of the Gospel.
